"One thing the exhibitor playing the serial can depend upon—"Shadows of Jungle" will grip and hold any audience. It possesses that element of curiosity and sensation that makes one desire to know the outcome of each episode. Because of this fact, and because of the magnitude of the production, it will draw capacity crowds in whatever theatre it may be offered as an attraction."

"Judgment" Is Given Premier

"Judgment," the specatcle romantic super-feature, dealing with the romance of English royalty, was given its metropolitan premier showing at the New York Theatre, in New York, on Friday, Jan. 20. The showing was held under the auspices of Rialto Productions, Inc., of which S. J. Stebbins is vice-president and manager.

Weiss Brothers Have Unique Theatre Plan for Bible Film

Louis Weiss, one of the moving picture spirits of Artclass Pictures Corporation, has made public the details of an unusual scheme for the presentation of the Old Testament film production which this organization controls. In addition to the regular presentation of this picture in a leading Broadway theatre, it is planned to place it in theatres in two widely separated sections of New York City, the three runs to be operated simultaneously. The theatres which will house the Bible offering away from Broadway will be located on the East side of New York and in the thickly congested district of the Bronx; in other words on the upper and lower East Side of the City.

The special versions of the Old Testament shown in the theatres off Broadway will carry foreword and subtitles constructed in the language most commonly used in these sections and will carry a particular appeal to the Jewish and Italian races. The musical setting will also be in keeping with the character of the presentation. It is believed to be the first time that a motion picture production has ever been shown simultaneously in three leading theatres in New York City in the manner described herein.

Louis Weiss also announced this week the engagement of the famous portrait painter and decorator, Mark Toby, for the development of several original ideas in the matter of photographic backgrounds for the showing of this film on Broadway.

Buyers Clamor for Rights to C. B. C.'s Carnival Comedies

Responses are coming in from all parts of the country and inquiries have been received from almost every important buyer, according to C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, regarding Carnival Comedies series. In addition to the sales already made on these comedies, which features Polly Moran, the Mack Sennett comedienne, and "Smiling" Bill Jones and his beauties, another sale was made this week to Federated Exchange of Baltimore.

The name of the first comedy has been changed from "Polly's Busted Romance" to "Nell's Busted Romance."

Selig Goes to Extreme Putting Thrills in "The Jungle Goddess"

Selig's efforts to give "The Jungle Goddess," his new 15 episode wild-animal serial, a universal appeal has resulted in a succession of thrillers according to Export & Import Film Co., Inc., world distributors of this picture.

"Sacrificed to the Lions" is the title of the first episode, in which a balloon flight is the basis for the opening of the story. A scene where little Vonda Phelps, crouching in the lap of a giant stone god, is attacked by a score of lions offers a thrilling spectacle.

Episode two is entitled "The City of Blind Waters" and takes Truman Van Dyffe and Elinor Feld to a mystic South African City where a poisoned stream has put a curse on the surrounding country. In this episode Selig has employed all the "mystery" angles which go to popularize his serials. The big thrill in this episode takes place when Elinor Field, who has been set adrift in a small frail canoe, is whirled into the rapids of the stream and drawn toward a hundred foot waterfall. "Mike," the chimpanzee, makes a perilous rescue of the girl as the boat goes over the falls.

The third episode is "Saved by the Great Ape," punctuated by a chase in which an army of lions take part and a duel to death between a leopard and a giant ape.

The photography of "The Jungle Goddess' is' said to be of extraordinary nature. This part of the work is being done by Harry Neuman and Ed. Beesley. Gabe Pollack is technical director.

"Ten Nights" Sets Another Record

When De Luxe Exchange of Philadelphia, distributors in that territory of Arrow's miracle picture, "Ten Nights In A Barroom," consented to a second week's run of that production at Carr & Schad's Arcadia Theatre, in Reading, Pa., they established another record. The continued showing marked the first instance in the history of theatricals in that city where a motion picture theatre was forced to prolong the run of any picture for more than a week. The picture shattered all box office records there.

The picture is slated to open next week at the Globe Theatre in Boston, Mass., for an indefinite run; Columbus, O.; Chester, Pa., and several other players. This production now holds the distinction of having broken every house record wherever it has been shown.

Exceptional Closes Deal With American Releasing Corporation for Features

The newly formed American Releasing Corporation will distribute the Exceptional Pictures Corporation feature, "Jungle Adventures," made by Martin Johnson, Alexander Beyfuss and A. S. Kirkpatrick, president and vice-president, respectively, of Exceptional, closed the deal this week with Walter Greene, president of the new company.

While no official information was available, it was persistently rumored in film circles this week that the American Releasing Company will distribute all the Exceptional product, excepting "His Nibs," which "His Nibs" Syndicate is handling. It is expected that the other Chic Sale and Otis Skinner feature, "Mister Antonio," will be released by Mr. Greene's corporation.

"Jungle Adventures" was given its world premier at the New York Capitol Theatre, where it was enthusiastically praised.

Work Starts on Next Curwood

Arrow Film Corporation announced this week that production on the successor of the James Oliver Curwood-Pine Tree Pictures Corporation feature, "The Girl from Porcupine," has been started. The title of the next picture is being carefully guarded. Announcement of the director and cast is expected to be made next week.

Russell Clark Gets Wholesale Number of Queries on Features

Russell Clark, who is in personal charge of the distribution of Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., is exceedingly optimistic concerning the future status of the independent market and as evidence of the growing demand for state rights pictures points enthusiastically to the unusual large number of inquiries he has received from exchanges and exhibitors seeking information on productions his firm is releasing. Mr. Clark stated this week that the Edison Film-Turino version of "The Two Orphans" has struck a popular chord with exhibitors who realize the box office value of an established melodramatic success backed by a good and entertaining story, carefully picturized.

Another Russell Clark picture attracting considerable favorable comment among showmen is "The Offenders," the Margery Wilson feature, presented by Fenwicke L. Holmes. Percy Helton, who won much attention for his work in "The Miracle Man," is one of the all-star players who appear in this picture, featuring Margery Wilson. Miss Katherine Eggleston, who wrote the story for Munsey's Magazine, also is responsible for the scenario.

Another picture this firm is releasing is "The Love Slave," produced by the Herz Film Corporation. Lucy Doraine is starred.

Vaudevillians Seek Lincoln

Elmo Lincoln, now making personal appearances in conjunction with the serial "Adventures of Tarzan" in which he is the central figure, has recived several offers from vaudeville managers bidding for his services at the conclusion of his personal appearance tour in the various exchange centres. The managers are desirous of routing Lincoln over one of the leading two-a-day circuits in a novelty act. Lincoln is now appearing in Philadelphia.

Regal-Fischer Corporation Is Newest Distributing Firm

A new distributing corporation made its appearance in the State rights market this week in the Regal-Fischer Corporation of which David G. Fischer, known as producer and distributor, will be Vice President and Manager. At present the firm will deal only in finished pictures.

The firm already has acquired several productions, the first of which, a foreign feature of seven reels, was "dogged" in Baltimore several weeks ago and proved to be a big box office success. The picture deals with the story of Esther, and is said by those who have seen it to be one of the biggest spectacles brought to this country. It is entitled "Persecution."

A sales force has been assembled and will work out of the home office on the tenth floor of Loew's Building, New York.

Buys Franchise

Federated Film Exchange of Baltimore purchased a franchise for Amalgamated productions, released by East Coast Productions, Inc., for Delaware, Virginia, Maryland and District of Columbia. P. Oletsky of Federated closed the deal with Lester Scott, Jr., who represents East Coast Productions, Inc.

Broadway Theatre for Independents

Perhaps no more interesting an announcement to State rights picture distributors has been made in the past three years than that of Harry Warner, of Warner Brothers, who this week officially confirmed the report that his firm expects to build a beautiful motion picture theatre in the center of the theatrical district of New York, dedicated exclusively to the exhibition of independent productions of merit. The house is to be located at the corner of Broadway and West 42nd street.

Mr. Warner, in discussing the story, stated that the deal had been on for more than a year and would have been closed last summer but for the reluctance of the owner of a small tract of land on the site wanted. However, this owner has now surrendered, and a first-run house for independent pictures on Broadway is now a sure thing. The house will be open to all high-class independent pictures.

"School Days" Breaking Records for Demand for Initial Showings

First run bookings on Warner Brothers' Harry Rapf version of Gus Edwards' famous "School Days" are setting a record, according to returns received at the State rights department of The Moving Picture World this week. Simultaneous with the announcement that Joe Plunkettt, managing director of the New York Strand Theatre, had booked the William Nigh-directed feature into that house for the week beginning Sunday, Jan. 29, came word from Boston that Sam Grand who is distributing the picture in New England, has secured day and date engagements at the Modern, Beacon and Olympia theatres in that city for the same week. First runs are also booked for Dayton, Cincinnati, Toledo, Louisville, and other large cities.

That "School Days" is a business-getter is apparently the belief of exhibitors in general, for the State rights department of this journal this week received six different inquiries from theatre men who sought the names of local exchanges handling the picture. The editor of this department also received three telegrams from exhibitors in Memphis, Salt Lake City and Minneapolis who sought detail information concerning the production.

Joe Plunkett when seen by a representative of the Moving Picture World, went into detail concerning his plans for presentation of the picture. Mr. Plunkett, as keen a showman as there is in this country, is preparing a prologue that, in the opinion of the writer, will be the talk of that main stem of showdom, Broadway. He is also preparing a musical program that will tend to strengthen the already conceded mighty drawing power of the picture.

Inquiries were made this week concerning the plans of the Warners for Wesley Barry who has been signed to make two more pictures for that firm. The pictures are "From Rags to Riches" and "Little Heroes of the Street," both well known melodramas. William Nigh will probably direct both pictures. "School Days" was given its Pennsylvania premier at the Third Street Theatre, Easton, Pa., on Jan. 9, and staged with a school prologue in which local talent was used, it proved a record breaker. Harry Warner and Harry Rapf and Eddie Bonns attended the premier.

Between You and Me

THE Fred Beauvais picture, "The Lonely Trail," was not booked into Shubert's 44th Street Theatre in New York recently by a State rights firm. As a matter of fact the film was virtually turned over to Jules Hurtig, of the theatrical firm of Hurtig & Seamon, who produce burlesque and legitimate shows. It was Mr. Hurtig who secured the Shubert booking. So far as the State rights market is concerned the picture is not even existing, for it is a foregone conclusion that exhibitors of the country will not use such a film. However, Hurtig will in all probability show the picture in conjunction with his burlesque shows, which are ever ready to grab something along the lines of "The Lonely Trail."

Two directors who have not turned out anything worthwhile for four years but who still manage to promenade along the White Way in duke fashion, are trying to interest outside money in a production proposition, offering to star the daughters of two prospects. It's never occurred to these gentlemen that the days when such a stunt made an impression have long passed away.

Warner's Broadway theatre project is one of the biggest things attempted by an independent concern. It is indeed a big thing for the State rights distributor who has been crying for such a house for the past three years. Five well-known distributors already have offered to invest money in the proposition, but the Warners are not seeking outside money.

Ruppert and Huston, owners of the New York American League Baseball Club, are interested, according to a reliable report, in a State rights production venture starring a notable star. The company is said to have been formed and the star is known, but her identity will be disclosed as soon as certain incidental details have been satisfactorily gone over.

Joe Plunkett, managing director of the Strand Theatre in New York, is perhaps the most enthusiastic big house booster of State rights pictures in New York. Joe never misses a good State rights bet and is always happy to look at any picture a distributor feels is consistent with the caliber of productions shown at the Strand. Last week Joe booked "School Days," with Wesley Barry, the Warner Brothers' Harry Rapf production, for a showing at that house during the week of January 23.

Burma Film Company, of Rangoon, Burma, has three features, "Manug a Village Maiden," "Love and Liquor," and "Taintalone," ready for distribution and writes to this office seeking the names of American independent distributors desirous of handling the productions.

Merit Distributing

M. J. Mintz, director of sales of the Synchronized Scenario Music Company, announces that negotiations have been concluded whereby the Merit Film Corporation, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York City, has acquired the exclusive distribution rights of Synchronized Scenario Music Service in the territory comprising New York State up to and including Albany; also the Northern part of New Jersey.

Gets Big Tie-up

The Warner Brothers feature, "Ashamed of Parents'," written by Charles K. Harris and titled by Eddie Bonns and Louis Marangella, inspired a big commercial tieup during a run at the Terminal theatre in Newark, N. J., last week. The stunt involved a full-page "ad" section in which local merchants co-operated by taking space notifying readers that they would "never be ashamed of their parents if the took them" to the stores mentioned.

Envoy Increase Capital

In order to expand its activities in the independent field, Envoy Pictures Corporation this week announced an increase in its capitalization from $800,000 to $3,000,000. Under its enlarged program Envoy will cover the entire field of motion picture entertainment. Through a subsidiary company it will release a number of German spectacles, as well as a number of other features. It will also handle a series of Harry Williams comedy dramas and illustrated cartoons by "Bugs" Baer.

The officers of the corporation are: President, Otto Kloth; Vice President, C. H. Ferrell; Treasurer, George Rudolph, and Secretary, M. Kloth.

Many Pictures on Arrow Card for Next Month

Arrow Film Corporation this week announces the completion and titles of a number of new releases. The next Eddie Lyons' comedy will be "My Mistake," a two-reeler. Jack Hoxie, whose popularity as Western star is increasing daily and whose pictures seem to be in unusually big demand, will appear in "Desert's Crucible," directed by Roy Clements. With Hoxie in this picture also appear Claude Payton and Mlle. Andree Tourneur, a relative of Maurice Tourneur, the director.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger is sparing no effort to hasten the return of the state rights market to normalcy and is furnishing the field with subjects, which, in his belief, should reap a harvest for the exhibitor at the box office.

Feature Film Ltd. Purchases

It was inadvertently stated in this section last week that Famous Players Lasky Corporation had acquired the Australasian rights to the Broadway comedies distributed by Arrow Film Corporation. As a matter of fact Famous Players bought them for Feature Films, Inc., of Australasia, which will look after the distribution of the pictures in that territory.

Exceptional Stars Meet

Chic Sale, who is featured in "His Nibs," and Otis Skinner, who is to star in "Mister Antonio," both exceptional Pictures Corporation features, met in Indianapolis, last week. Both were booked in that city.

Probable Gross of "Ten Nights" Fixed at Three Millions by Arrow

Arrow Film Corporation this week made public its estimate on the amount its officials expect the L. Case Russell screen version of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" will gross in theatres of this country. The estimate is based on territorial grosses fixed by trained and experienced showmen.

One of those who is skilled in picture values and who is also in exploitation, is said to have given his deliberate opinion that this year "Ten Nights in a Barroom" may at least gross $3,000,000.

Conservative Estimate

This is said by Arrow to be a conservative estimate and will probably be exceeded. It is difficult to restrain encomiums when writing about the extraordinary success of "Ten Nights in a Barroom," said the Arrow publicity purveyor in issuing the statement.

All this is in favor of the State Right method of distribution and exploitation and incidentally an independent production. All these elements are combined to produce this remarkable success which has not been duplicated by the program method nor probably can be because the fundamental elements of success are lacking.

Trade Is Cleaning House—Kosch

Newsy Observations of the Trade

THE entire trade is discussing the aggressive action of the Independent Producers and Distributors Association in ridding the State rights field of dishonest and crooked operatives and at the same time deal a death blow to "film piracy." Harry Kosch, the I. P. D. A. attorney, is a fighter and can be dependent upon to fulfill the important duties placed on his shoulders. The editor of this department interviewed Mr. Kosch in New York the other day and was strongly impressed by the enthusiasm displayed by this enterprising attorney.

"The time for definite and drastic action has come," he started off. "We have permitted these crooked individuals to operate altogether too long. The trouble has been that some of us have trusted too much, even after we had been victimized. There are claims against these persons aggregating sums of many thousands of dollars. Many worthless checks have been given by persons who knew at the time they submitted them that they were not worth the paper on which they were written. We will spare no effort to see that these persons either make good their checks or suffer the consequences.

"We have been too lenient, and because of that fact we have blinded ourselves to an evil that should have been eliminated years ago. But it isn't too late. No, sir; this is the opportune time to clean house and we are determined to see that these crooks get their walking papers and keep moving away from our progressive industry. This is a period of reconstruction. Our industry is undergoing constructive changes and what better time is there than the present to right existing wrong?

"There is not a single reliable exchange in this country that does not agree with our association that this clean-up is absolutely necessary. The presence of these crooked dealers jeopardize other exchanges in their territory; their illegitimate activities have the tendency of discouraging patronage of the State rights exchanges. For that reason—but that is only one of the many—the exchangemen are co-operating with the I. P. D. A. in seeing that justice is done."

Mr. Kosch is right in his statement concerning the attitude of local exchanges. Many of them already have written this office commending the action of the I. P. D. A. and offering their services in running down the disreputable operatives. Exhibitors throughout the country accept the movement as a timely one and a public demonstration from the trade in general that the interests of the theatre man shall at all times be protected.

"Exhibitors, producers and distributors in general seem to be of the opinion that the coming year will see the film industry back to a state of normalcy. Everybody appears to feel that way, but not everybody is making an effort to bring about the needed readjustment." So said David G. Fischer, who this week announced the formation of the Regal-Fischer Corporation which will handle State rights pictures. In voicing his opinion, Mr. Fischer is putting down in plain words precisely what a few distributors are doing.

Carewe, Fineman, Zeidman and Schrock Leave to Start Production on First Picture

Edwin Carewe, one of the best known directors, left on Saturday for the Coast in company with B. F. Fineman, Benny Zeidman and Raymond Schrock, preparatory to the production of the initial feature this syndicate will make under the firm name of Edwin Carewe Pictures Corporation, which was incorporated last week under the laws of the State of New York. The first story will feature a blizzard. Mr. Schrock, who wrote the scenario for "Burn 'Em Up Barnes,' the initial Johnny Hines' production, will furnish the scenario. Affiliated Distributors, Inc., of which C. C. Burr is president, will state right the productions, which will be received with wide open arms by the trade in general, for Mr. Carewe has to his list a long string of successes and is a thorough showman.

Edwin Carewe Pictures Corporation is an independent concern, having as its officers, B. F. Fineman, president; Benny Zeidman, vice president; Charles C. Burr, secretary, and William Lackey, treasurer. Its purpose is to produce only high class films to be made for state right buyers. This will follow out the policy of Mr. Burrinaguared with "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," which is contrary to the usual method of only state righting pictures that have been rejected by national distributors, rather than making pictures specially for the independent exchanges.

In securing the services of Mr. Carewe and giving the corporation his name, which is so well known to the motion picture world, the officers of the company feel they have greatly added to the name and strength of independent producers. Mr. Carewe needs no introduction in the picture world. His reputation as a producer of First National and Metro productions is well known.

Hoxie Popular in West Indies

Jack Hoxie, the Arrow cowboy star, for whose pictures there seems to be an international demand, is reported to be one of the most popular screen stars in Cuba. His pictures are featured at the Imperial Theatre in Havana, the premier motion picture house in the West Indies. The West Indies exhibitors are seeking a personal appearances of Hoxie.

State Rights Coast Gossip

Sol Lesser has acquired the screen production rights to "The Prince and the Pauper," "Buster Brown" and "Just David" for Jackie Coogan.

According to reports heard in local circles, "The Jungle Goddess," which Col. William N. Selig is completing for Export & Import Film Company of New York, will be the last animal serial that producer will make. It is reported that he will dispose of the Selig zoo and devote all his time to feature production.

Carmen Arselle has been engaged to play opposite Dick Hatton in the Prairie production, "Four Hearts," which Western Pictures Exploitation will State right.

Ray Rockett is authority for the announcement that Rockett brothers will start production on their next independent release this week. A story has been acquired, but no title selected as yet.

Production on the next Clara Kimball Young independent production, "The Modern Madonna," is in its eighth week at the Garson studio. Arthur Edeson is photographing while Harry Garson is directing. Sada Cowan wrote the story.

Lon Chaney arrived late last week from New York where he closed a distribution deal with National Exchanges for the Co-Operative Producers, who recently incorporated for $250,000. F. H. Croghan and David Hartford are president and vice-president, respectively, for this firm.

Production on the Edwin Carewe Northwest features that C. C. Burr of Affiliated Distrihtuors will State right will be made here and not in the East, as was originally planned. Bernie Fineman and Bennie Zeidman are interested in this project, according to reports heard here. Casting will be done here. The first production is expected to be released in time for release on March 1.

News of the disposal of the distribution rights to "Where Is My Wondering Boy" to Equity Pictures Corporation by Bernie Fineman and Bennie Zeidman was hailed here with considerable enthusiasm. Both Fineman and Zeidman are exceedingly popular in filmdom, and the general impression is that they could not have closed a better deal than that reported here.

Since his arrival from New York Harry Wilson, the enterprising public director for Sol Lesser's enterprises, has been considerable of a busy man. Lesser has extensive plans under way for the coming season for the production of independent productions.

'Tis rumored here that Harry Wilson has threatened to commit hari karl if his bosses send him to New York again.

Sacred Films, Inc., Burbank, Cal., are rushing production on the Bible series, and Larry Weingarten is expected to be sent to New York late in February with some of the recently completed episodes, which are being released at the rate of one a week.

Next Hallroom

"From Soup to Nuts" is the title that has been given the newest of the Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Comedies. The picture was forwarded this week by the producer, Harry Cohn, from the West Coast producing centre to the New York offices of Hallroom Boys Photoplays, Inc., for release through Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc.

Tom Leonard and George Williams of the Niagara Pictures Company sales force are sending in contracts in bundles, according to Sales Manager Dave Levy of the Buffalo office. "The Lost Battalion," one of the company's production, is going strong. "The County Fair" has been booked by the Holley, N. Y., high school, St. John's Hall, Spencersport, N. Y., and the Star Theatre, Middleport, N. Y., The Elite, Niagara Falls, has contracted for "The Lost Battalion," in connection with which an avalanche of publicity is being used.

The Adler brothers, who are operating the Lande office in Buffalo, report "Thunderbolt Jack" going over in great shape throughout the territory, especially since "Baron" Hirsch started his drive.

Boy Murphy, manager of the Buffalo Pioneer Exchange, has returned from an expedition into the wilds of central New York, visiting several exhibitors on dog sleds. Bob has become quite an adept with snow shoes, since his winter visits in the snow bound sections of the state. But one must get the business.

R. P. Sullivan, president of the S. & S. Film and Supply Company of Pittsburgh who spent several days in New York acquiring new product, returned to the former city last week.

Arrangements have been made whereby the All Star Features Distributors Corporation will shortly give up its present quarters at Golden Gate avenue and Leavenworth street and will move to 209 Golden Gate avenue, a location recently vacated by the San Francisco Realart office.

It will interest the trade in general to know that despite the fact that the Jackie Coogan pictures are being released throughout the country through First National Exchanges in California, they are being distributed through the exchange of the All Star Features Distributors Corporation.

The Graf Productions, Inc., has incorporated with a capital stock of $500,000 by Max Graf, Louis Graf, L. G. Lehouse, Milton A. Nathan and S. Wolff. The firm is producing "White Hands," featuring Hobart Bosworth, at the Pacific studios.

The Cinema Distributing Company, recently incorporated in California, will open exchanges in that city, in Los Angeles, Portland and Seattle. On the executive board of the firm are Theodore M. Newman, F. E. Samuels, F. C. Chipman, C. A. Cook, F. N. Lupton, T. M. Gulick and C. C. Craig.

Elmo Lincoln, star of the Artclass serial, "Adventures of Tarzan," visited Rochester, Ind., his former home, last week. He told friends there he will shortly go to Europe where he will make personal appearances.

Roy Young has resigned from the Standard Film Company of Kansas City and has accepted a similar position with Phoenix Film Corporation. Mr. Young has been connected with Standard for six years. F. J. Warren will succeed Young with Standard.

H. L. Craig, formerly with Vitagraph, is now with the Crescent-Federated Exchange of Kansas City.

Homer Howard has quit peddling stock for a new Syracuse hotel project and is now driving through the sticks boosting "The Bible" and other Buffalo Merit releases. Quite a change for Homer!

Dave Adler of the Lande Exchange in Buffalo is being swamped with contracts on Jack Hoxie in "Thunderbolt Jack." He reports that the serial is coming into its own throughout the territory.

Sydney Samson, manager of the Grand & Warner office in Buffalo, finds his present hat getting small for him since he booked "School Days" for a day and date showing at Shea's Hippodrome, Court street, Elmwood and North Park, all Shea Amusement Company houses.

When Fred M. Zimmerman, president and general manager of Nu-Art Pictures Corporation of Buffalo, gets a moment from his regular duties he writes poetry about his Avondale Theatre in North Tonawanda. It is questionable whether it helps or hurts business.

N. I. Filkins, manager of the Buffalo Merit Exchange, has booked "The Bible" for the first run in Buffalo at the Mark-Strand, and Manager E. O. Weinberg is giving the short subject a lot of publicity.

Columbia Film Service of Pittsburgh reported this week that the Warner Brothers feature, "Why Girls Leave Home," constitutes the best money maker they have had.

The trade showing of "Lotus Blossom" in the Moose Temple, Pittsburgh, under the auspices of Apex Exchange, is still the talk of film row in Smoky City. On the same program was shown Arrow's "Splash Me."

Joseph Di Lorenzo, general eastern representative of the Pacific Film Company, arrived in New York from the Coast this week. Mr. Lorenzo stopped off at Denver, Kansas City and Chicago while en route East.

H. E. Schiller, manager of the Midwest Educational Exchange of Kansas City, is touring the Kansas and Missouri territory, meeting exhibitors using his exchange's product.

Bert Lubin had a most pleasant stay in Kansas City and Denver where he disposed of the rights in that territory in his Allen Ray feature, "Partners of the Sunset."

Barney Fegan, general manager of the Independent Film Exchange, of St. Louis, announced this week he had waived his rights in the "Blue Fox," the Arrow serial, to permit the Exhibitors Direct Service Exchange to obtain the picture. In all probability Exhibitors Direct Service Exchange will in the future release all the Arrow product, which was formerly handled by Independent Film Exchange.

It is reported that one of the early arrivals at the Buffalo Automobile Show the past week was J. Emerson Dickmon, salesman de luxe of the Nu-Art staff. "Emmy" has been suffering along with a Henry Built sport model for lo these many moons, and it is reported that nothing less than a Pierce-Arrow sedan will satisfy him this season.

Nathan-Semerad Pay Tribute to Griffith Film

The action of Nathan & Semerad, of which Donald Campbell is the head of the film department, in presenting D. W. Griffith with a seven-reel German version of "The Two Orphans," had aroused much favorable discussion in the trade. The presentation was a tribute to the master American director. In giving Mr. Griffith the picture, Mr. Campbell stated that the gift was made because his firm believed that in view of the great expense and labor which Mr. Griffith had gone to in making "Orphans of the Storm," no other film based on "The Two Orphans" story should be marketed.

The following British pictures will be distributed in this country by American distributors, according to a London cable received this week: "Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," "Yellow Claw," "Kipps," "Four Feathers," and "General John Regan" (Stoll); "Mr. Justice Raffles" and "Wild Feather" (Hepworth).

Louis Weiss, secretary of Adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation, this week closed a deal whereby the rights to "Adventures of Tarzan," starring Elmo Lincoln, have been disposed of for Italy to Antonio Mosco of Rome, Italy. Mr. Fontrier, acting as American representative for that firm, closed the deal.

Mr. Weiss announced, too, this week that the following foreign rights to the "Adventures of Tarzan" remain unsold: Russia and South Africa. The serial already has been released in several foreign territories.

Regal-Fischer Corporation will release a foreign picture as its initial feature dealing with the Biblical story of Hester. The picture is in seven reels and will shortly be ready for distribution in the State rights market in this country.

Cecil M. Hepworth, the English producer who has been in New York for the past week, sailed for England on Tuesday, January 17. With him sailed Alma Taylor, one of his stars, with whom he has made a tour of the country. While here Mr. Hepworth completed arrangements for the distribution of his pictures in this country.

The case of the Brazil Theatres Company against the Citizens' Theatres Company, both of Brazil, for possession of the Sourwine Theatre there and damages, came up this week in the Clay county circuit court when arguments were heard on a demurrer filed by the defendants. The controversy is over the contract as to the terms of renewal. The plaintiffs assert their contract had a clause for a three-year extension with a readjustment of rents, and the defendants claims the plaintiff did not meet the new rents as charged by them.

The Hippodrome Theatre, 106 West Main street, Fort Wayne, has been purchased by Tony H. Nelleson, owner of the Creighton Theatre, and head of the Nelleson Amusement Company of that city. The theatre was bought from Joseph H. Riegal, and the consideration was $15,000. Mr. Nelleson announced after the deal had been completed that he intends to make extensive improvements in the Hippodrome in the spring. The Nelleson Amusement Company was recently incorporated for $20,000.

The executive offices of the Crandall Amusement Company in the Metropolitan Theatre Building have taken on the appearance of a morgue. It was formerly the custom of those connected with the local motion picture industry to congregate there evenings after the theatres had all closed—it was a sort of a clubhouse for the boys. But that is now a thing of the past. Joseph P. Morgan, assistant general manager of the Crandall enterprises, has gone and got married.

Mr. Morgan made a date with a whole lot of fellows for one Saturday night. That was to throw them off the track while he led Miss Mary Ruth Bogert, formerly of Martinsburg, W. Va., (where by the way the Crandall company have two houses which required Mr. Morgan's rather constant attention) over to Alexandria, Va., where the knot was spliced.

Harry M. Crandall was responsible for the getaway. He procured the license and acted as best man. Johnny Payette, Mr. Morgan's assistant, served as bridesmaid—so he could get an idea how it was done for they say he's next to step out.

Seattle

Effective January 15 the Clemmer Theatre will change its name to the Columbia.

H. M. Herbel, for six months Universal's Seattle manager, is taking charge of the Denver division of the territory for that company. This includes supervision of the Denver, Salt Lake, Spokane and Butte offices. L. J. Schlaifer, formerly short subject manager in the Seattle office, is succeeding Herbel.

Paul R. Aust, former manager of Realart's Seattle office, went to Palo Alto to enter the automobile business with his father.

Donald Smith, formerly employed out of the San Francisco branch of Hodkinson, has taken charge of the Portland office.

James Q. Clemmer, manager of the Winter Garden Theatre, states that the company remains in the same hands in which it started, and that he is still manager of the theatre. This is in denial of the published rumor that Jensen and Von Herberg would buy the house, and that Guy Appleton, an oculist, had bought a controlling interest.

Beverly B. Dobbs and Marvin R. Cohn, cameramen of Seattle, have been commissioned to take motion pictures showing the natural resources of the State of Washington. The pictures are to be shown in the principle theatres of the various communities and also before civic organizations, including the schools.

Buffalo

The operating arrangement under which the Shea Amusement Company and the Elmwood Theatre Company have been working for several weeks will terminate January 21, when the Elmwood will go back to its old policy of second run, double feature programs with the operation of the house again under the exclusive direction of the Elmwood company. It is said that Elmwood patrons did not like being able to go to only one theatre—the Hippodrome. Elmwood and North Park were showing the same feature day and date. Patrons also complained of the elimination of the double feature programs and the mailing list, and they did not approve of only two changes a week. The Shea company has been booking all the Elmwood attractions and it is understood that the arrangement called for a 50-50 split on the receipts of the North Park and the Elmwood.

Kansas City

Several of Kansas City's suburban theatres have lowered admission prices. The theatres which asked 11 and 17 cents have dropped the war tax. A few of the houses charging 15 and 25 cents have lowered admission prices. Among the theatres which have lowered their admissions are the Apollo, Linwood, Alamo, Summitt, Ellsworth and Gillham.

W. E. Truog, manager of the local Goldwyn offices, was elected secretary of the Film Board of Trade at the last meeting. He succeeds Roy Young, resigned.

Out-of-town visitors the past week have been: J. D. Hughes, Heavner, Okla.; C. P. Hunt, of the Rex Theatre at Higginsville, Mo.; Messrs. Sears and Jones, McPherson and Brookfield; W. H. Wever, of the Echo Theatre, Great Bend, Kan.; T. C. Goodnight, Lyric Theatre, Holden, Mo.; G. L. Rugg of the Eureka Theatre at Weston, Mo., and Lloyd Ware of the Varsity Theatre at Lawrence, Kan.

Chicago

The motion picture theatre managers of Chicago gave a testimonial luncheon last Tuesday to Robert Levy, at the Illinois Athletic Club. Mr. Levy, or "Bob" as he is familiarly known, has just been appointed by President Harding as United States Marshal of the Northern District, with headquarters in Chicago. It is the first time that the motion picture business has been honored to such an extent in this section of the country. The luncheon was arranged by Peter J. Schaefer, who acted as toastmaster, and, in behalf of the gentlemen present, presented Mr. Levy with a solid gold star, in the center of which rests a fine four carat diamond Among those present at the luncheon were Nathan Ascher, Henry Schoenstadt, Morris Choynski, Jack Miller, Joseph L. Friedman, Max and Harry Ascher, Adolph Linick, Andrew Karzas. Arthur Schoenstadt, Lubliner & Trinz, Frank & Fred Schaefer, Sid Selig, Charles Bugg, I. Berkson, Marks & Goodman, Ludwig, Schindler, Sig Faller, Bedell & Ashman, Norman E. Feild, Ralph T. Kettering, George Moore, Jack Burch, Emil Mayer, Louis J. Jones, Sam Abrahams, A. Newell and Teter & Foster.

A questionnaire sent out by H. W. Given, Chicago manager of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to cover 3,000 exhibitors in Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Indiana and Michigan, relative to local business conditions, has elicited hundreds of replies in which the outlook is cited as "very good."

As a follow-up of the questionnaire, Mr. Given plans to hold a Paramount Business Conference in the near future, to discuss general business conditions. Prominent bankers, business men and exhibitors will be invited to attend and addresses will be made by leading men in all lines of business. No attempt will be made to "boost" or sell Paramount, or any other pictures, at this conference.

A cablegram received from Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Jones, aboard the Adriatic, stated that they were thoroughly enjoying their fourth day at sea, finding the weather ideal. They are on their way to Egypt.

Danger of a tie-up of moving picture theatres was averted last week when officials of the Motion Picture Operators Union signed a new agreement with the Allied Amusements Association and the Motion Picture Theater Owners Association. The union had asked for a 15 per cent. increase in wages. At a series of meetings the committee appointed by the two exhibitor organizations refused to consider the raise, being backed up by the claim of the exhibitors that 95 per cent. of the smaller houses in Chicago would be forced to close if more money must be paid the operators. The committee sought to make a reduction in the operators' wages, and after two months' deliberation a compromise was agreed upon whereby the scale would remain the same as the 1921 rate.

St. Louis

General contractors have been asked for estimates on the new Marcus Lowe State Theatre to be erected at Eighth street and Washington avenue on ground acquired through the Mercantile Trust Company. As planned the structure will cost upwards of $1,500,000. R. King Kaufman, vice president of the trust company, who holds a similar position with the Loew Theatre Company, sent out the inquiry for estimates. If the prices are right the structure will be pushed forward so it may be open at the beginning of the 1922-23 theatrical season. Marcus Loew was in St. Louis a few weeks ago. At that time he said construction costs would have to come down before he would think of erecting the State.

Canada

The Independent and United Amusements, of Montreal, operating five picture theatres in Montreal, will shortly open a sixth theatre in that city, according to an official announcement by Ernest Cousins, president. This will be a brand new theatre called the Plaza. The company now controls the Strand, Regent, Belmont, Papineau and Moulin Rouge. Two of these, the Belmont and Papineau, were completed within the past year or so.

The Holman Theatre, Montreal, leased and operated for a number of years by the Canadian Universal Film Company, Ltd., has passed out of existence insofar as name and control are concerned, the theatre having been secured by John T. Fiddes, a pioneer exhibitor, who has re-named it the System Theatre. He reduced the price scale, making the general admission for afternoon shows 15 cents and the evening prices 15 and 25 cents. He also adopted the policy of four changes weekly. Fiddes claims to have presented the first prologue with a film feature anywhere on the North American continent when he staged such a number at the Strand Theatre in Winnipeg in 1911.

From Canada comes the interesting news that the Alberta Board of Moving Picture Censors has passed "Passion," the German film production in which Pola Negri was starred, after the title had been changed to "The Passion to Win." It is understood that the Alberta board selected this name but the reason for doing so is not obvious. Incidentally, the board also made a few minor eliminations in the final mob scenes.

There is yet possibility of trouble in Montreal over the question of Sunday shows, which are officially tolerated by the civic administration although the staging of a theatrical performance or show on Sunday is banned by the Lord's Day Act, a federal law affecting all Canada. The point of trouble is that Harold Hevias, lessee of the Orpheum Theatre, which is presenting burlesque, is dissatisfied because the city officials decided to permit all types of stage or film performances, with the exception of burlesque, to be offered on Sundays. He points out that the other theatre managers have done nothing to compensate him for the loss of Sunday shows and he has drawn attention to the fact that all other Sunday performances in Montreal are illegal under the Canadian law. He believes that the other managers should make it possible for him to stage vaudeville and film attractions on Sundays.

Washington State

That picture theatres may not sell numbered theatre tickets which entitle the holder to a chance on a prize was a decision handed down by the Washington State Supreme Court on January 11. The action was instituted by the Northwest Producers Association, members of which have been furnishing the prizes for "Country Store" nights at neighborhood houses of Seattle. During last summer, when business was at its lowest ebb, the night on which grocery store products were given away to the holders of the lucky numbers the theatre was sure to be packed, and the practise pulled the exhibitors through what was otherwise a very poor season.

When the city authorities, however, ordered it stopped the exhibitors did not wish to fight them but the Northwest Producers Association persuaded one exhibitor to get out an injunction while they took it up in the courts. At a meeting just after the injunction was granted the neighborhood theatre managers agreed that it would be better policy for them to discontinue the "Country Store" nights immediately. As a result there is full harmony between city authorities and theatre managers.

The United Artists' Corporation, through Charles Harden, Northwest manager, filed suit in Superior court on January 3 for $304 in payment for a print of "The Nut," which was lost in transportation between Tacoma and Seattle. Suit was filed against the Puget Sound Electric Railway. The film was lost on June 12 last.

Baltimore

The Consolidated Engineering Company has been awarded the contract to build the Metropolitan Theatre at Pennsylvania and North avenues and work will be started immediately. The five buildings now on the site will be razed. September 1 is the date set for the opening. The seating capacity will be 1,500. The Metropolitan Theatre Company, of which Dr. F. W. Schanze is president, is back of the project.

Joseph Rabinovich, owner of the Comedy Theatre, 412 East Baltimore street, and Harvey Malone, a film agent of Baltimore, were each fined $25 and costs by Magistrate Stanford in the Central Police Court on January 16. The charge against Mr. Rabinovich was that he had exhibited a film entitled "Hell's Hinges," without it having passed examination by the Maryland Censor Board, while Mr. Malone was charged with having rented a film to Mr. Rabinovich which was not censored.

The number of objectionable scenes in moving pictures which comes before the Maryland Censor Board for examination, is steadily diminishing, according to Miss Marie Presstman, one of the censors, who spoke before a meeting of the Woman's Civic League of Baltimore on January 11. Out of 300 cases investigated by the board only six "violations" were found.

Toledo

There is a persistent rumor in theatrical circles here that the Keith interests are negotiating with the directors of the Rivoli for the purchase of the entire Rivoli block, which includes the Rivoli and Toledo Theatres. The deal is a three million dollar one.

J. J. Murdock, general manager of the Keith circuit, was here two weeks ago at the same time that Mr. Sairbair, Indianapolis, president of the Rivoli Co., was in Toledo. Mr, Murdock admits that the Keith interests are in the field for the purchase of the Rivoli and the Toledo theatres, but Mr. Sairbiar denies that either of the theatres are for sale.

It is the intention of the Keith interests if they secure the new property to change the Keith vaudeville from the present Keith house to the Rivoli and to play the Klaw & Erlanger and Schubert big attractions at the old Keith house.

The Toledo Theatre would remain as a stock house.

S. E. Applegate, of Pathe, is now with the United Artists. M. E. Milligan, Metro, will represent R-C in the future. John Gill, formerly of Realart, takes over the city territory for the Vitagraph. J. W. Pierce, formerly of Vitagraph, has established offices at 1237 Vine street, where he will represent out-of-town exhibitors.

Florida

Children's matinees will be introduced in Tampa, Fla., on January 21 at the Victory Theatre, it was decided by the Consolidated Amusement Company, after a conference with leading club women. Arrangements were made by C. D. Cooley, general manager, for an interesting opening program, with addresses by leading educators. The performances will be at 10 o'clock every Saturday morning and will last an hour and a half.

Consolidation of the four leading picture theatres in Orlando, Fla., has been effected and will, it is said, bring an end to a warm theatrical war which has been in progress between different interests for some time. The Orlando, Beacham, Phillips and Lucerne are the houses affected. The Beacham will show super-productions and Keith vaudeville. The Grand will be closed for repairs temporarily.

Opportune Snow Fall Assists in Production of "The Storm"

A few months ago a Jewel company went into Oregon to get snow stuff for "Conflict." Owing to the placid nature of the weather god they stayed two weeks without getting what they went for. The experience of another Jewel company was quite different. When Universal bought "The Storm," the Langdon MacCormack-George Broadhurst play which created such a sensation for its mechanical stage effects, it was planned to make the moving picture many times more thrilling. For this reason, virtually the entire company, twenty-two men and one woman were sent to Great Bear, which at this time of the year is a snow-bound valley in deep mountains. The company consisted of Reginald Barker, the noted director; House Peters, Virginia Valli, Josef Swickard, Matt Moore, Frank Lanning, Louis Rivera and Lallo Encinas. The expedition was in charge of Jack Voshell, unit production manager; Rowland Rushton and Robert Webb, assistant directors; Dr. Joos, medical officer; property master, Perry Hilburn; cameramen, Friend F. Baker and Howard Hunt.

It was difficult getting into the valley, but the snow stuff was so exceptional that they felt well repaid in spending a longer time than they had anticipated. On Friday night when they were ready to start back another tremendous snow storm blocked the treacherous mountain pass through which they had entered and which was now a twisting avenue of gigantic snow drifts and jagged, bared rocky promontories through which it was utterly impossible for the imprisoned company to break its way to civilization. With only enough provision to last a week already they were beginning to feel the pinch of hunger, when the first truck of a relief train sent from Universal City broke through the pass.

Irving Thalberg realized that drastic measures must be taken to rescue the imprisoned company and sent chief electrical engineer with a ten-ton generator truck with provisions and shovelling apparatus and ten men to break through into Big Bear.

Harry D. Brown, electrical engineer in charge of the relief expedition, made his rescue through Cajon Pass, through the worst stretch of road possible to imagine, working his ten men in three shifts for an entire day before he could make the terrific grade and break through.

Edward L. Hyman Suggests Selections for Washington and Lincoln Festivals

FEBRUARY offers two national holidays, one of them generally accounted the best holiday of the year from the theatrical point of view, for it is too cold for outdoor events and it is not a home occasion. Washington's Birthday should be made a big event, and if possible both occasions should be marked by some departure from the usual program. In some sections it will be possible to get the co-operation of the schools, and everywhere it will be possible to persuade some well known man to make a brief address.

Use flags, bunting and portraits in front of the house, and carry the decorative scheme inside.

A drawing contest, the subject to be Washington or Lincoln, compositions and recitations can all be arranged for and will help to create interest. For musical selections, Edward L. Hyman, of the Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, contributes a list of appropriate selections and adds comment on a few simple tableaux, which will save a lot of trouble and thinking. Mr. Hyman's list follows:

Edward L. Hyman's Suggestions for Patriotic Programs Appropriate for Week of Lincoln or Washington's Birthday

SOUNDS FROM THE SUNNY SOUTH—(On the Old Plantation)—Medley overture—

A Prince There Was Has a Simple Lobby

For "A Prince There Was," Walter Lindlar, of the Paramount exploitation staff, offers a novelty idea for the box office, requiring very little building and involving no greater cost than is comprehended in the cost of one 24-sheet, two sixes and a three, together with some wrapping paper and a bucket of paste.

The top of the 24-sheet supplied this banner, and the sidewalk cutouts are from the six sheets. The head over the box office window is from the three sheet and is the same child face shown on the sixes.

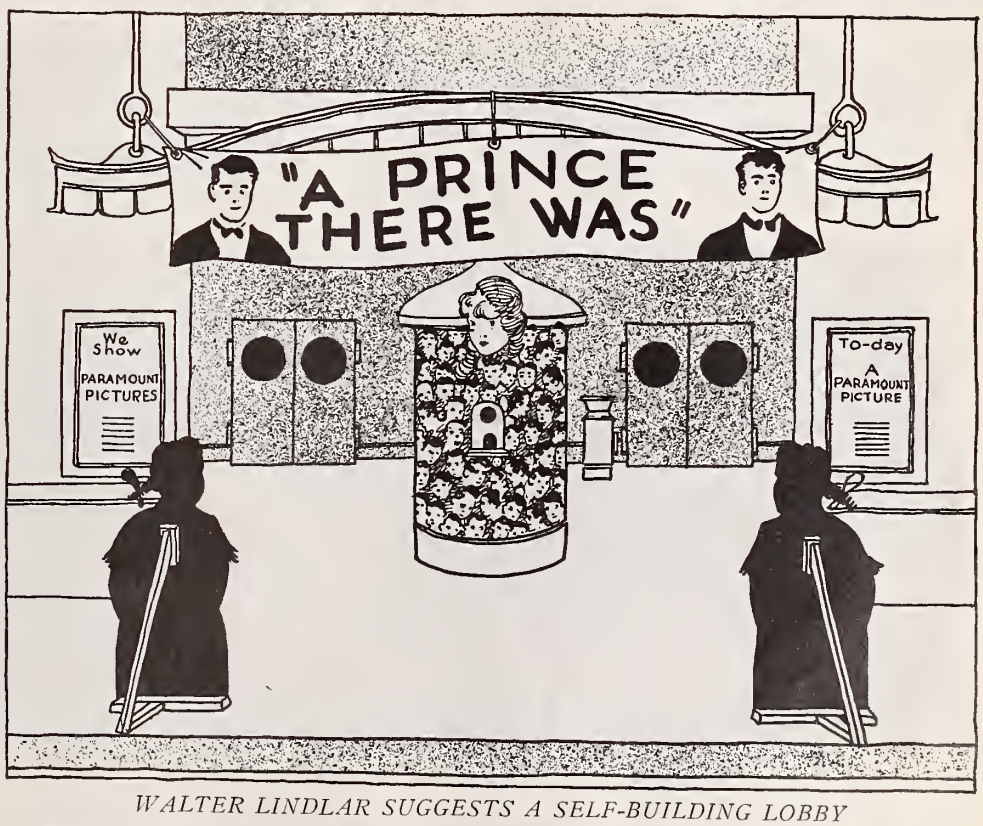
The box office is built in with any material you may have on hand. If you have never built a false box office, make a simple frame and cover it with wrapping paper, but if you have any board construction, cover that.

A few days before the showing announce that you will give a ticket to the matinee performance to any person bringing in a picture of Tom Meighan obtained from any source. These may be from the fan magazines, from your own advertisements, from news pictures or anything else.

These are pasted on the box office structure until the front, at least, is covered. Probably you will have a sufficient number to cover the entire structure and perhaps carry over to the doors.

A good hook-up would be to persuade the local paper to run a large cut (free), in the same issue in which you make your announcement. The paper will play up the story for the sake of the extra sales, and give you that much additional publicity. Or loan cuts to merchants for throwaways.

The basic idea is to sell Meighan, while the cutouts sell the winning youngster who works with him in this picture.



WALTER LINDLAR SUGGESTS A SELF-BUILDING LOBBY

All you need for "A Prince There Was" are a 24-sheet, a three and two sixes. The sixes are sidewalk cutouts and the 24-sheet is the banner. The box office is decorated with pictures of Meighan cut from fan magazines and brought in by the patrons

There are several very appropriate animated cartoons of a patriotic nature that can be run just before the news reel. This will help round out the program and will be found very effective.

Following this, a person with stage experience and with clear diction, could be used to advantage in several historic recitations. The following are suggested:

PATRICK HENRY'S SPEECH.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADDRESS.

There are several good tableaus that could be arranged for this occasion. Following are several suggestions:

A GROUP OF G. A. R. MEMBERS IN FRONT OF A HUGE AMERICAN FLAG. There is a G. A. R. organization in almost every city and the members will be only too glad to cooperate with exhibitors.

TWO SOLDIERS, REPRESENTING THE NORTH AND SOUTH, SHAKING HANDS. A flag could also be used here but two or three prop cannons or a group of shell torn American and Confederate flags could also be used.

BETSY ROSS MAKING THE FIRST FLAG AS SOPRANO SINGS "THE SWEETEST STORY EVER TOLD."

A GROUP OF AMERICAN SAILORS, SOLDIERS AND MARINES. Members of the militia in your city will cooperate here.

THE SPIRIT OF '76. This is a very fine number. You can use several members of your orchestra here.

Hyman's Novelties at the Mark-Strand

Making the overture a sort of prologue to the coming attraction is the newest idea from Edward L. Hyman, of the Mark-Strand, Brooklyn. The overture the week of January 22 will be excerpts from Carmen, and immediately following the selection, a trailer will announce the appearance of Farrar and Reid in the two-reel version of Carmen for the following week. Mr. Hyman contends that playing gems from H. M. S. Pinafore the week before Harold Lloyd in "A Sailor Made Man" was a pro prologue to that feature, but the connection was not clearly apparent. This time he makes the direct connection with a trailer, and the stunt becomes more effective. For the overture the stage will be lighted half red and amber, with the transparent windows in the set in a brilliant green.

EDW. L. HYMAN

The second number will be the bird song from Pagliacci, sung as a concert number, and this is followed by a production of "The Gondoliers," with these selections: Opening chorus, "On the Day I Was Wedded," "The Duke of Plaza Toro," "Bury-Bury," "A Regular, Royal Queen," "Take a Pair of Sparkling Eyes," and "Dance a Ca Churcha." A Venetian set will be used, with a ballustrade and hanging lamps and a gondola. Night lighting will be used with an electric moon and stars.

The Topical Review leads to the prologue to the feature, Norma Talmadge in "Love's Redemption," and will be based on two selections from Finden's Four Indian Love Lyrics. The first will be "The Temple Bells Are Ringing," to be followed by "Pale Hands I Love." The setting will be East Indian, with set palm trees, and the soprano and baritone will be dressed as Miss Talmade and her leading man.

The comedy, "The Love Egg," will follow, with Dethier's Intermezzo for the organ postlude.

QUARTETTE NUMBERS

"Tramp, Tramp, Tramp."
"Dixie."
"Tenting On the Old Camp Ground."
"Glory, Glory Hallelujah."
"Hail Columbia."
"Marching Through Georgia."
"For the Freedom of the World."

Numbers for individual soloists can be selected from among the list of overtures. There are several there that can be used very well.

Three Sheet Frames on Six Sheet Boards

Charles F. Eggers, of the Lyric Theatre, McKeesport, Pa., liked the Clive posters prepared by Paramount for "Experience," and he wanted to use them in the lobby. He had two corner three sheet boards and sixes back of those. The sixes were built so that he could frame the paper in white margin, so there was room for two ornamental strips which cut the boards into three sections, each of which held one three very comfortably.

And as long as he was having them made, he made them so they could be put on or taken off with the least trouble, and he can use them whenever he gets enough of an assortment of paper to make it worth while.

This seems to be a new stunt in the handling of paper, and it should be welcomed by a lot of managers who display sixes in their lobby. They can frame any board to take a pair of threes. Mr. Eggers got three on each, making it possible to use six of the set, supplementing this with a 24-sheet and a lot of other material.

Have you read the Forestry Warning story on Page 379? If you have not, better turn to that page now and read it immediately. It is imperative that you do so.

THIS ELABORATE COMBINATION LOBBY WAS STAGED AT A COST OF ONLY SIX DOLLARS

But that is because the material was close at hand and the labor cost was not counted in. B. B. Garner, of the Cuseo Theatre, Lakeland, Florida, does not mind sitting up all night now and then if he thinks he can help business, and this helped Ben Hampton's "The Mysterious Rider" to a third more than the usual business. The cutout from the big sheet is worked in with small fir trees

OLD TIME COSTUMES FORMED EFFECTIVE WINDOW DISPLAY

The Colonial Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., made effective use of some old stage wardrobe to put over this United Artists' attraction to good business in the Wilmer and Vincent house. Old prints will serve if costumes are unavailable

Old Costumes Served to Display Disraeli

Getting hold of some stage costumes of the mid-Victorian period and then making a fuss about them was the simple means employed by the Colonial Theatre, Harrisburg, Pa., to put over Disraeli.

The old wardrobe was displayed in the chief window of the leading dry goods stores and then the management, backed by the store advertising, persuaded the papers to make comment upon the display and contrast the old dressing with the ultra modern styles.

The result was that the crowds stood before the window all day long and took away with them the idea of the costume play. These were not offered as costumes used in the production but merely as "Costumes of the Disraeli period." They served as well and were more convincing.

Most costumers supply something suitable and a store will let in such a display where you could not get in the usual advertising and as such it is of display value to the store and not derogatory to the dignity of the concern.

Elaborate Chain Gang a Broadway Ballyhoo

The chain gang seems to be natural ballyhoo stunt for "The Right Way," the story written by Thomas Mott Osborne, the most famous Warden Sing Sing prison ever had, and produced by the Producers' Security Corp.

The play had a big week at the Broadway, New [illegible] d this was in part due to the parade of the four convicts under guard. Everyone knows that convicts no longer wear the striped suits, but the striped suit is still essential to the ballyhoo; just as essentail as it was thirty odd years ago when they used to employ precisely the same stunt for "The Black Flag." The convict ballyhoo was as much a part of that old drama as the parade for "Uncle Tom's Cabin." It is still good and good all over the country. It had Broadway packed to a standstill while this photograph was being made and the box office sheet shows that it built up business.

Under an adequate forestry policy enough trees can be grown on the NOW WASTE LANDS east of the Mississippi River to constantly supply this country's needs and in addition allow it to develop a big timber export business. Page 379.—

Swapped Pictures for Dolls

Getting toys for a theatre Christmas tree is generally a matter of persuading local merchants, but Leon J. Bamberger, Paramounteer for Minneapolis, saved the merchants for another stunt and got some good advertising for Paramount at the same time.

The Daily News was planning a Christmas tree and started a campaign for toys. Bamberger came in with the proposition that one of the Paramount stars would autograph his or her photograph for anyone who contributed two or more toys to the collection.

Paper Helped Out

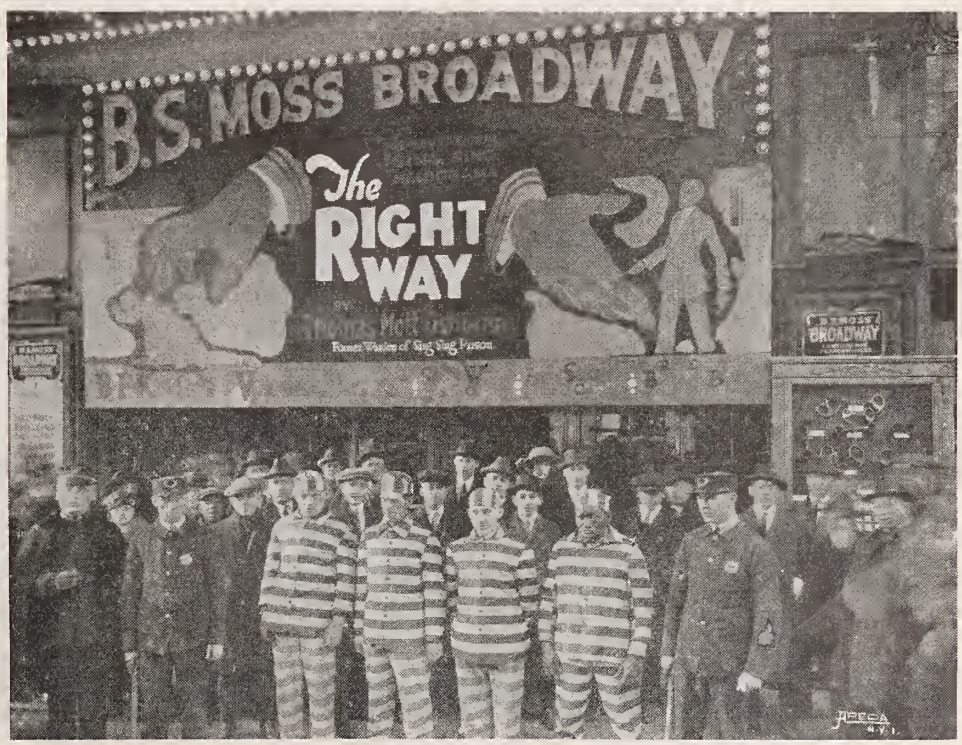
Of course the News had to play up the entire list of Paramount stars to put over the idea, and it brought free publicity worth many times the cost of the prints. The only sufferers were the stars, who got writers' cramp autographing the portraits—and Bamberger says that they really wrote the signatures themselves.

A Pro-Prologue

Using advertising matter on the stage for a coming attraction is not at all new, but using a production to advertise the coming of "The Old Nest," was something else again.

Credit it to the Windsor Theatre, Hampton, Ia. On the stage was built up an elaborate miniature model of a farm with the homestead, the barns, silo, windmill and all the rest. A road ran between the house and the barn and down this came a motor truck which ran up to the doorway of the house. A booster bulletin board for the Bigger Hampton movement was prominently displayed in the yard and one sheets for the Goldwyn production were spotlighted at either side.

This model was lighted with changing effects for several days before the coming of "The Old Nest" and made a feature of the program, showing just before the current attraction.



CONVICTS DREW CROWDS IN A BIG BROADWAY BALLYHOO

B. S. Moss' Broadway sent out a chain gang with two keepers and a warden to ballyhoo for "The Right Way," which was written by Thomas Mott Osborne, the famous penologist, who wrote this story for the Producers' Security Corporation

Built a Drawbridge to Guard Box Office

Possibly the management of the Majestic Theatre, La Crosse, had heard of the hold-up at the Capitol Theatre lately. At any rate, when Fox's "A Connecticut Yankee" played the house they made the lobby over into a castle front with the box office walled up with beaverboard and a drawbridge guarded by two knights in full armor. There is also a cowboy in a plug hat hanging around.

Raise the Bridge

If you copy this design, raise the bridge from the lobby floor and provide a block and fall by means of which the bridge can be raised at non-showing times, lettering the underside with an advertisement of the attraction. This bridge looks a little too much like a gang-plank to be convincing, but the idea is there and a little elaboration will greatly enhance the effect.

THIS MANAGER TOOK NO CHANCES ON HOLD-UP MEN

Two knights and a drawbridge guarded the approach to the donjon keep or whatever it is the box office of the Majestic Theatre, La Crosse, is made up for. There is also a cowboy with a plug hat to aid in exploiting "A Connecicut Yankee"

Carried the Tent Idea from Sidewalk to Stage

Fred Walton, of the American Theatre, Bellingham, Wash., took the tent idea for "The Sheik" and played it to a logical conclusion.

He not only made the tent front, but the inside of the lobby was the tent interior and on the stage he showed two prologues with the tents of the Arabs, the girl ushers acting as characters.

We do not pay much attention to prologues, but this is so simple that it may interest others, and it is within reach of all. The feature was preceded by the Burton Holmes-Paramount travelogue on Biskra. The stage was set to represent a tent interior, simply using the same material as that employed for the front of the house. One of the girls faked an Oriental dance. Then the first half of the travelogue was run, the screen was taken up and another usher was seen with "The Sheik;" in this case a whiskered old reprobate. She played a selection, the real playing being done by a man off stage, then the screen was dropped again and the film ended with the camels crossing the desert and the feature was put on. It was simple and decidedly effective, and helped to bulge the walls for a four-day run.

Sold on Half Rates

Getting the parents through the child is old stuff, but if it works the date doesn't matter. Ed Paull, of the Regent Theatre, Springfield, O., had "Peck's Bad Boy" for a four day run. Instead of making one matinee a cut rate show, he issued coupons good for any child on a ten-cent admission to any performance. These coupons were distributed around the schools and repeated in the paper. The result was that hundreds of youngsters simply made their parents turn out, and the parents paid the full price and packed the house at most of the showings.

Burning Up Barnes

A racing car, locally owned, and excerpts from the sub-titles, were the selling points used by William C. Johnson, of the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., for "Burn 'Em Up Barnes."

The quotations—with frequent changes—were used on slides for two weeks prior to the coming of the picture. The racing car had won numerous country fair events and was well known, so the presence of the car in the lobby was an attractor. Over the entrance door was written "Entrance to the races" and over the exit stood "Positively no betting allowed." At odd times the car was sent out as a perambulator.

HERE ARE THE INS AND OUTS OF THE EXPLOITATION FOR "THE SHEIK" IN BELLINGHAM, WASHINGTON

This carries the Lindlar lobby to its logical conclusion and shows how thoroughly Fred Walton goes into a stunt when he likes the idea. He not only used the tent idea, but he put his staff into more or less Arabic dress. We think that must be the Queen of Sheba standing in front of the box office and we'll admit that she is some queen. H. C. Eagles, a Paramounteer, helped with the scheme

HOW A PITTSBURGH MANAGER PUT OVER A COMEDY

The Savoy, a Rowland and Clark theatre, split the banner between the dramatic feature and the two-reel Educational-Campbell comedy, "The Stork's Mistake," but it gave all of the lobby display to the two-reeler, realizing its greater Christmas value

Gave Full Lobby Space to a Two Reel Comedy

Now and then you discover some manager who has the courage of his convictions. Just before Christmas the Rowland and Clark management in Pittsburgh, figured that a comedy would pull more people than a drama, so when they booked "The Stork's Mistake," an Educational release, into the Savoy, they divided the banner between the two and the five, but gave all the rest of the lobby to the two-reeler, realizing what a fine display could be made with this subject.

A Chimney Exit

Three paintings were on each side of the lobby (only one side of which is shown in the cut), and the entrance and exit doors carried a large painting of the stork and the physician in a wild chase. You broke the physician in two to enter and came out through the chimney.

It was new and different, and it held the business up at a time when business most needed bolstering. It was a direct defiance of the tradition that the longest film is always the feature, but between tradition and the box office, the Savoy favored the B. O.

Attendance Records Put Over the Sheik

One man's meat may be another man's poison, but the New York business on The Sheik has probably sold more tickets to out-of-town patrons than any single factor, not even excepting the book itself.

A Paramount Help

The Paramount exploitation department prepared an interesting set of comparative figures that read well in print and look as well on signs, and these have been almost universally copied.

N. Blumberg, of the Palace Theatre, Racine, made the lettering for the sign which completely covered the ticket office, except for the window. It was not a very large lobby, but by using every part of it, Mr. Blumberg got as much on his cards as other managers, and he did a very neat job of sign writing, employing stills for his decorative material.

It made a clean-up and the most elaborate lobby could have done no more.

Painted on Scrim for His Moonlight Effect

Because he had run an Oriental atmosphere picture only the week before, W. E. Drumbar, of the Riviera Theatre, Noxville, was somewhat up against it for a lobby display for Pola Negri in First National's "One Arabian Night."

He got something different by painting on a series of scrim drops, the first carrying tinsel stars, which glittered very realistically in the lights. On the backings he painted mosques and houses. The mosques lack the characteristic domes of oriental architecture, but they showed up well and the patrons were not particular. Cutout windows in the buildings added to the effect.

An Oriental Orchestra

To back this up, he framed an orchestra of a musette, a flagolet and tomtoms, keeping the music down to suggest the sound coming from a distance. It got over, and was not ear piercing. The band did rather better than the scenery to get in the crowds.

It's well to remember that your phonograph dealer can order Turkish records for you if you cannot get a band. Give him time to send out of town for them and tell him just what you want, and he can supply almost any sort of music from Chinese to Choctaw. It is not regularly carried, but he has the lists.

Horseshoes for Luck

When the Fox production of "Thunderclap" was due at the Moon Theatre, Omaha, the management obtained seven racing plates which were shown in a glass case just in front of the lobby and labeled: "These shoes worn by Dan O'Patrick, the winner of the famous European Sweepstakes. Loaned by William Fox."

No one had ever heard of Dan or the European sweepstakes, but a lot of people crowded into the theatre to see the seven-legged horse.

THIS LOBBY IS SMALL, BUT EVERY INCH OF IT WORKS

It was devised by N. Blumberg, of the Palace Theatre, Racine, who put over "The Sheik" with his hand-lettered arguments to as large a business as the greater houses did on longer runs. He played to capacity, and no one did better than that

Selling the Picture to the Public

Made a Big Appeal With a Back Number

It does not matter how old a picture is if it is new to the town where it is playing. Pictures do not have to be first run to appeal, and Nick McMahon knew that "Forbidden Fruit" was a bit old when he booked it into his Marlowe Theatre, Ironton, Ohio.

He also knew he could put it over with exploitation.

WHAT McMAHON DID

He copied one of the windows used in the earlier runs, and he did just as much business as he could have gained with a pre-release. He made a display in a soda shop with apples and oranges cutout of cardboard to match up with the store's display of candied fruits and both the theatre and the store profited.

Went Through the Mails

Because the Lyric Theatre got into a jam with one of the two newspapers in Lexington, Neb., when the editor refused to publish any readers about "Over the Hill," the theatre withheld its paid advertising in that sheet, used larger spaces in the more friendly organ and took the rest of the money for a mailing list.

In some way they got hold of the names of most of the subscribers to the recalcitrant sheet, and circularized these with postcards and a form letter. The second Battle of Lexington was as successfully fought as the one in 1776, although Lexington had been moved west in the meantime.

Made Rope Substitute for Evergreen Bands

Evergreen decorations were a part of the lobby displays of most theatres during the holidays. W. H. Larned used vines and red and green lights to top his screen frames, but he worked a new idea for the lettering. He took new rope of the cheapest sort and dyed it red and green, using this for the lettering of star and title, as well as around the insert cards and the cutout from the one sheet. Around the latter he added tinsel, which showed up brightly in the lights which top the frame. A sheepskin rug was placed at the bottom to give the suggestion of warmth, and the small signs on either side of the rug were prepared for a greeting. They were not used both at once. The Christmas greeting was shown until that holiday was passed and then the other was set in its place.

Mr. Larned writes that he can trace a part of the material increase in business for the attraction to the interest displayed in the frame.

The use of rope as decorative material on lobby frames is not new, but to use it as a substitute for evergreen rope is a new touch which managers who have tried to form letters out of evergreen will appreciate.

Employed His Marquise for a Pre-announcement

George J. Schade, of the Schade Theatre, Sandusky, thought so well of the money-making possibilities of "Over the Hill" that he turned his marquise over to the Fox attraction a week in advance of the run.

He worked up two twenty-four sheet cutouts into awning announcements, and put them up a week in advance.

THE SCHADE MARQUISE

It is his rule to hold the house announcements to the "today" event, but in this case he was convinced that he would make more money preparing the way for the big feature, so he slid on the current show and spent more of his energy on the bill for the following week, and he made extra large "next week" cards, so there would be no error.

Classified Kidding

Most newspapers are always glad to exploit their classified advertising, and will work in with any manager who gives them a lead. Knowing this, the Century Theatre, Baltimore, inserted this advertisement in a local paper:

For Sale

A double dingle, the rarest bird ever brought out of the wilds of Africa. Captured by an Admiral of the African Navy. For terms address J. Rufus Wallingford, Century Theatre, Baltimore.

That was only the first act. The next was to supply the paper with letters purporting to have come in reply to the advertisement. Just a few of these were the product of the press agent. The rest came in from the same class of persons who make life easy for the column conductors. As soon as they saw the paper printing kidding stories, they piled their answers in. No prizes were offered—naturally—but had there been one it should have gone to the man who offered any money if the bird was a male as he had a female he wanted to breed to.

The BATTLE of JUTLAND No Longer SHROUDED IN MYSTERY

WHO won the Battle of Jutland? This was a question of international dispute even among naval experts until this motion picture was finished. Now audiences everywhere can form their own judgment as to who won.

The immense task of comparing all the logs kept by the gunnery officers of both the British and German fleets throughout every stage of the conflict, and then of re-enacting with models every move of every battleship, cruiser, destroyer and torpedo boat engaged, was done by Major General Sir George Aston, K.C.B., for thirty-eight years a British naval officer.

It took three years' preparation and over 3,000,000 moves of the model ships to reproduce faithfully every course steered, every sinking, torpedo attack and broadside, and every other recorded incident. Each model could be moved but a sixteenth of an inch at a time. It is this fidelity to facts which makes The Battle of Jutland the greatest historical drama ever screened.

Audiences realize they are seeing unbiased history, that every ship they watch sink beneath the surface of the North Sea represents an actual incident in this world's greatest sea battle. The reactions are unlike any aroused by imaginative screen drama. They prove that truth is more thrilling than fiction, even on the screen.

What Unbiased New York Newspapers Said!

NEW YORK MAIL:

" 'The Battle of Jutland,' a picturization of the famous sea fight of the World War—the only clash between the grand fleets of Great Britain and Germany, is a film of unusual interest. It gives a most vivid picture of the epoch-making battle."

NEW YORK HERALD:

" 'The Battle of Jutland,' produced under the supervision of Major General Sir George Aston, K.C.B., from official records, shows in a clear-cut and engrossing way the whole progress of the fight, though it glosses over the finish and leaves unexplained why Jellicoe didn't smear the Germans more."

NEW YORK TELEGRAM:

" 'The Battle of Jutland' . . . marvelous reproduction of the battle between the British and German fleets in the North Sea . . . So realistically has it been done, so dramatically has the fight been laid out . . . that the spectator believes he is upon some high vantage point overlooking the historic conflict. Torpedoes worm their fatal white line toward enemy ships, fire flashes from the ships' sides, there are great flashes, whirling of waters and ships disappear below the surface."

NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL:

" 'The Battle of Jutland' is a fascinating moving picture compiled under the direction of Major General Sir George Aston, following careful preparation. It tells of the great naval maneuvers between the English and German fleets in . . . the affair that many consider the turning point of the war . . . intensely interesting."

NEW YORK WORLD:

"A reproduction . . . that sets before us the actual maneuvering of the various opposing craft of the Battle of Jutland, wherein Admiral Beatty outthought and out-fought the Germans in the World War's great sea engagement. The minutest detail of the attacks is shown—submarines launching torpedoes, battleships sinking, gun-fire from the giant warships, and all. An invaluable animated chapter of the Great War."

MAKING TWO CUTOUTS FOR A CHRISTIE SELL TICKETS

The Strand Theatre, Seattle, thought so well of "Pure and Simple," with Bobby Vernon and Josephine Hill that it made two cutouts of the clever pair the chief feature of the front lobby, figuring that it would hold its own with a big feature

A Good Postal

Sometimes it is what you don't say that counts. The New Theatre, Baltimore, sent out postals recently with a double rule border. Down in the lower right hand corner was a two line

everything

done in a neat script. That's all there was on the card, but a lot of people hunted around until they matched it to the Paramount picture and a lot more knew it in advance, but had their interest more strongly aroused. It's a just once idea, but it is very good that once, and this title works especially well with it.

A Sectional Dictionary

Bridgeport residents recently received a folder in the mails with only their address and "pocket dictionary" on the outside. The thing seemed to be too small for a dictionary and the natural instinct to make the other man out a liar caused them to open and read the piece.

Inside was an enlargement of the dictionary definition of "Shame" with text to explain that the Fox picture of that title would be seen at Dawe's Theatre.

As a dictionary it was all right as far as it went, but it was better as an advertisement, because it was more effective than the usual mailing piece. A one-word dictionary is not generally helpful, but perhaps Dawe's is going to amplify the idea.

Played Up a Christie Along with a Feature

Pat Dowling, the Christie Comedies press agent, is exulting over the Christmas present he received in Seattle.

The Strand Theatre, a Jensen and Von Herberg house there, played up two cutouts from the three sheet, showing Bobby Vernon and Josephine Hill in "Pure and Simple." The cutouts made more of a showing than the greater display for the feature and helped to emphasize the fact that it was an all comedy bill.

That's a good scheme, but we think it is an even better one to play up these comedies when there is a heavy bill, to pull in the people who do not care for drama. A Christie Comedy can pull a man in all by itself if given half a chance.

Staged Football Match With Two on Each Side

One of the best lobby exploitation stunts on Charles Ray in "Two Minutes to Go" comes up from Memphis, where Thomas G. Coleman, of the Strand, built a miniature football gridiron on a platform in the lobby for this First National attraction.

He was at a loss for a grass mat for the field until he thought of mixing sand, chrome yellow and dry green paint. He made this into a smalt and painted the beaverboard with this, getting a better effect than he could have gained with a straight green. The lines were put down in white, and the goal posts were also painted white. This paint and the cloth for the border were the only items of expense, for the four players were football statuettes borrowed from a merchant, while the pennants overhead were loaned by a sporting goods store. The entire display cost only $3 and this was but a small fraction of the additional ticket sale.

The lobby miniature seems to be gaining in favor as a display, and this suggestion comes in time to help out many who have yet to play the picture. It also offers a hint for other lobby displays.

Business is starting up. People feel that with the coming of the new year conditions must change. All over the country the Rotary Clubs are conducting a campaign of optimism. Get in the movement. Make your screen one of the advance agents of prosperity. Rotary will give you the material if there is a club in your town. If there is not, work on your own slides, but help the country to come back and you will profit from the extra tickets sold. Get back of the movement and keep the ball rolling. You are working for yourself as well as for the merchants. Work hard.

THIS FOOTBALL MATCH HAD ONLY FOUR PLAYERS

Thomas G. Coleman, of the Strand, Memphis, could have built a full gridiron for Charles Ray, but he could borrow only four players for Charles Ray in "Two Minutes to Go." However, it turned the trick for the First National release and built business

Spotted Perambulator for Will Rogers Play

G. R. Stewart, of the America Theatre, Casper, Wyo., is better known for his newspaper advertising than for his exploits, but that he can work both sides is shown by this cut for Will Rogers in "Doubling for Romeo."

THE STEWART PERAMBULATOR

The placard on the rider's back reads: "Will Rogers in 'Doubling for Romeo.' America. Now." On the sides of the saddle are signs reading, "A rip, roaring Romeo from Arizona."

The rider was in a romantic costume, but wore a cowboy hat and carried a lariat at his saddle horn, suggesting the combination of cowboy and romantic hero. On a spotted horse he attracted a lot of attention and dragged tickets into the house.

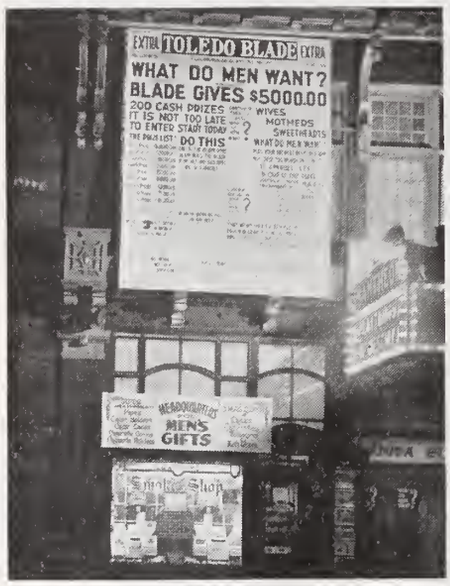
Paul Gray, who is out ahead of "What Do Men Want?" hooked the Toledo Blade to a $5,000 cash contest on the problem, with 200 cash prizes. He had a painting of the Blade front page 15 by 18 feet which he hung above the Pantheon Theatre, where the Wid Gunning offering was to play, and then the Blade carried a front page picture of the "the largest newspaper page in the world" and advised everyone to go and see it in front of the Pantheon.



THE BIG REPRODUCTION

Of course by the time they got there there was a lot of other selling material, so they read the big reproduction and then closed in and gave the stills a good look over.

The Blade carried considerable advertising for the contest on the inside pages, but an illustrated two sevens with a real news value right in the centre of the front page of a paper with 90,000 circulation is some little stunt all by itself.

The contest features has been freely worked on this production but this is the most pretentions hook in both as to the size of the prizes and the publicity gained, and as there has been no "largest newspaper page" for some six or eight months, it was new again.

For that matter it was new in Toledo because it had never been worked there before. That is the real text of novelty. If they have not seen it, it is new. It's the same with the picture. Any stunt is good until it has been used on your patrons, and sometimes it is good when used again.

Another Pretentious Hearne Lobby Display

Noble Hearne, of the Frolic Theatre, San Francisco, sends in another capital lobby display this time for the Universal-Jewel feature, "Conflict." This time he shows both the exterior and interior lobbies.

The box office is a log cabin along conventional lines, but it is merely part of a display which includes a real waterfall with Priscilla Dean perched on the very brink of the falls, to emphasize the high point in the production.

Both sides of the foyer show painted drops with moulded rock in front. On one side is the river and the falls and on the other the town. Artificial vines and real shrubbery aid the effect. Mr. Hearne says that the display is comparatively simple to make and that he will be glad to go into details on request. It will be recalled that Mr. Hearne makes his rocks of pasteboard covered with bits of old scenery and then painting. It gives a decidedly better effect than a flat painting, and once you catch the trick it is not at all as difficult as it sounds.

NOBLE HEARNE, OF THE FROLIC THEATRE, SAN FRANCISCO, SAYS THIS IS EASY TO MAKE

If you don't believe it send him a return envelope and he says he will send the complete details. The left-hand side of the interior lobby is shown in the exterior picture for Priscilla Dean in the Universal-Jewel "Conflict." The figure is a cutout from a poster and the waterfall is partly real, a perforated pipe spraying the water in front of a painted fall

Cleveland Advertisement Suggests Stunned Writer

This four hundred lines from the Standard Theatre, Cleveland, suggests that the copy reader was afraid of his job. He is trying to sell this so hard that he overthrows. His English is awkward, at best, and sometimes worse than that. Take that line just below the signature, which reads "Carl Laemmle, the dean of peer producers." Done into more simple language it merely means "Carl Laemmle, the oldest of equal producers," and that doesn't mean anything at all. The dean of a guild, craft or corps, is merely the oldest and therefore presumably the most experienced member. That implies some distinction, but "peer" is a sadly overworked word with the writers. It means equal. A man who is judged by "a jury of his peers" is judged by his equals. It implies no distinction. Peer, in England, is used as a word of rank, but it is derived from the house of peers in which the men of equality sit, as opposed to the Commons, where the men of title and the men of lesser rank may sit together. Peer is taken by the advertising writers to mean something out of the ordinary, where the reverse is really the sense. That line is not even good circus English. A different sort of slip occurs in the bank below. It reads:

But women with weak hearts, beware!
His Breathless Western heart punch!
Even strong men's pulses beat faster!

There is one exclamation point too many there. The artist in copying has used a "shout" at the end of each line to make it look better, and he splits the sense, for the first two lines should read as a whole—"Women with weak hearts, beware his breathless western heart punch." The extra exclamation breaks the sense. The next bank is almost as clumsy, for it runs: "Carl Laemmle's first western Super-production ever made of the inimitable star in a stupendous sensation." That is just words and words. It may possibly sell—to some, but it will give many people a poor idea of the motion picture theatre. It would have been better to have said: "Carl Laemmle's first western super-production. The most stupendously sensational production in which this inimitable star has ever been seen." It is all a labored enthusiasm, without pull because it is without continuity. Even in jazz writing you have to stick to sense and strive for smoothness. This advertisement lacks both. It would have been better displayed had it been set in type, with the exception of the star and title strip. With lettering that size a good twelve or even an eighteen point could have been employed, which would have yielded a better result. You can gather from the display as it stands that the copy writer is tremendously excited over the bigness of the production, but he does not convey his enthusiasm to you because he speaks so haltingly. Even in the ear there is a clash, for the panel reads

Prices

no higher

If all seats are twenty-five cents there is a price and not prices and "all seats 25 cents" would have covered the ground, for if all seats are a quarter it stands to reason that there are none at a higher price and there is but one price. A house able to buy 500 lines of space for a Sunday splash should be able to afford a more expert writer.

Pulling in Space Is Good House Economy

The Loew theatres, Cleveland, which used to use half pages for each booking, and which later on cut to quarters, pulled still further in just before the holidays without losing display. By cutting a little three bookings, covering four theatres, are put into a single half page with ample display for each and a decided saving in space bills. There is only one advantage to be gained through the use of overlarge advertisements. It is possible to impress the reader with the importance of the attraction by going to large display, but this holds good only where a half page space is two or three times the size of the usual display. When a half page space is made the standard weekly size, the only effect gained is that people are impressed in some small degree with the idea that the house is affluent, but the psychological effect of this extra investment is seldom sufficient to pay the cost of the extra space; particularly in a city, where the space is apt to be billed on the line rate instead of by the inch. We believe that the crowding of the three displays onto a single half page space will sell just as many tickets as was possible where each house obtained a quarter page space. If you make your advertisement large enough to be distinctive and easily read, any greater use of space is more or less wasteful, and does not yield a return in proportion to the investment. We question whether a return to the larger spaces would pay even the cost of the additional advertising, save in the case of a real super feature. Each year a lot of money is wasted in an effort to use more space than the other house does, and this inevitably leads to a fight which results in good only to the advertising departments of the papers. These spaces are not as impressive as the halves, but they will probably sell just as many tickets and do the house just as much good. This would not hold so true were the houses under different managements, but unquestionably much money is lost through the excessive employment of space beyond actual needs. Of the three spaces that for the Park and Mall is easily the most sightly, though the reverse for "Man, Woman Marriage" shows well because only large letters are used in the reverse and the mortises put over the smaller type. This First National sounds like last year, but it should be remembered that First Nationals have not been shown in Cleveland on acount of a legal tangle and this is first run stuff in the city on the lake. It's old elsewhere, but it is Cleveland's first chance. It is only recently they had a chance to see "The Kid." This trio of announcements points a valuable lesson, the moral of which is that enough is plenty.

Grauman Houses Gain Some Varying Results

These two displays for the Grauman Theathough presumably they are the work of the tres, Los Angeles, show very different results, same artist. The top one hides the title in a constructed bank, though it is a title well worth playing up, while that at the bottom obtains a fine display. This is in part due to the fact that the Rialto does not have to carry the list of production acts, but more because the artist held in to half his space where he could have stretched it, through rearrangement, to run over to the formal program. It was merely a matter of laying out the design. The cut ran only half the space, so the title was cramped under the cut. In the other design the various characters in the Cosmopolitan-Paramount production are used for a border and there was plenty of space within for the proper display of a title which sells itself. It is practically impossible for an artist always to make his best display, for conditions must be considered, but we believe that better than this could have been done with the upper space by a more careful planning and a willingness to break away from a conventional layout. Moving the cut more to the center of the space would have permitted the throwing of the title clear across, and the orchestra could have been sold in the space gained at the left of the cut, with the type talk at the right in smaller measure. For that matter the cut could have been reduced materially without losing its value

as an attractor, and that is the only service this scene performs. It is not calculated to sell on the interest it engenders. The display for "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" is much the better of the two from every angle. This does not require as much selling, and yet it is sold much more strongly, both in type and cuts. The cuts are not always under the advertiser's control, but he certainly can write his own copy.

Olympic, Pittsburgh, Continues All Type

One week recently the Olympic Theatre, Pittsburgh, went back to the old hand lettering, but it hurried back to the all type again, with a Pen Print bold title and an open display. With one or two stars the penprint is used in a smaller size for the names, but with three featured players the use of a more solid face, to give greater seeming importance is indicated. The use of all capitals is carried to excess, but the lines are all so open that this is not a serious matter, for you are not asked to read a solid bank. There was a time when the Olympic had about as poor an advertisement as could be found in the country. Not even the country weeklies did any worse than the old hand lettered stuff, and almost overnight they turned to type and fared so well that they carried another house over into the "right" column. This is only a three seventies, but on the page it has the display value of a quarter page at very much smaller cost. And in addition the cost of a cut and the cut copy is also saved. When the other theatres learn the value of this form and the all-type ceases to possess distinction, the Olympic will probably return to the use of cut attractors, but we do not believe that they will ever again revert to the all hand lettered space, for they have discovered the greater value of forceful type lines. The proposition is so simple that sometimes we wonder at the persistence of so many theatres in holding to the drawn display just because the others all do. That is one of the chief reasons for doing something different. With all displays along similar lines, it is difficult to rise above the rest. It's absurdly simple, but if all of the houses did good advertising, there would be no excuse for this department.

Bell Tempted Fate with Half Tone Reproduction

Sometimes Nelson B. Bell, of the Crandall Theatres, Washington, gets in a jam with his half tones, but this three 125 lines gets over very nicely, cut and all, or Bell was careful to get a proper screen. We do not believe that the cut, as such, sold a single ticket, but it sold the Pola Negri name just below, and the Negri probably sold an abundance of tickets. It's a tricky sort of display. It is so simple that it looks as though it might have been thrown together, but evidently it was carefully planned to get the fullest possible display for the star name. Bell could have gotten as large a display by eliminating the cut and setting the name in two lines, with a twelve line letter, but he knew that if he did that it would not suggest the style of the production. It would be too blatant. It would smack two strongly of the circus. He got the effect of the two inch letters by using a cut to keep anything conflicting away from the name, and that stands up in a four line letter just as prominently and at the same time it does not give the effect of a three ring circus, but holds the display to the style of the production. With the title just below, he does not need to be as careful. He can kill that down a little with the panel just below, because he has made the name sell, and having sold, he can do what he will with the rest of the space—except to put fists into it. We think that this represents one of the best displays he ever turned out both for presentable appearance and selling results. And a large part of the success of the design is due to the selection of the cut. A darker background or more color in the hair would have hurt the display below. A dead black border would have been murderous. The lined background is far better and the black in either corner just inside the frame looks all the blacker by contrast. It is difficult to believe that the man who can turn out the work of this grade can run the terrible thing used to advertise the second string houses week after week. He has excelled himself in this. Perhaps it is his defense.

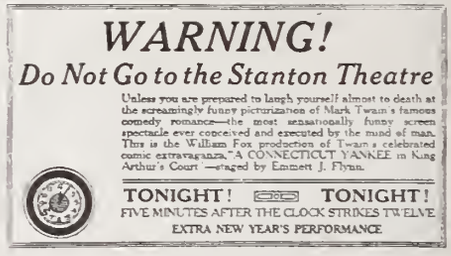
Old Fashioned Device Is as Useful as Ever

"This "warning" is a part of the announcement of the Stanley circuit in Philadelphia. Ben Franklin probably used something like that when he was living in that town, and it may not have been new even then. But that is not saying that it is still good for occasional use.



WARNING!
Do Not Go to the Stanton Theatre
Unless you are prepared to laugh yourself almost to death at the screamingly funny picturization of Mark Twain's famous comedy romance—the most sensationally funny screen spectacle ever conceived and executed by the mind of man. This is the William Fox production of Twain's celebrated comic extravaganza, "A CONNECTICUT YANKEE in King Arthur's Court" staged by Emmett J. Flynn.

EXTRA NEW YEAR'S PERFORMANCE

OLD, BUT STILL GOOD

The smaller type adds that you should not go "unless you are prepared to laugh yourself almost to death" at "A Connecticut Yankee." There was a lot to be said about the Fox production. There was no named star, though probably the Stanton forgets that Harry Myers was put into Lubin pictures from the old Forepaugh stock company in that town, and there was only the standard space in which to get the announcement over. The challenging line attracted the attention. The run on was smoothly phrased, and the idea was put over with a lot of space left for the New Year's special performance, the house opening 12:05 a. m. Monday morning, in accordance with the same custom which permitted the saloons to open as soon as midnight was passed. The challenge is an old form, and like other old timers it can be worked only occasionally; probably not more often than once a year. It is always possible to revive this and the "don't read this" whenever you think it has been almost forgotten, but "just once" stunts should be handled with care. We think that this form of announcement brought more business than the straight announcement could have done. We do not believe that the advertisement would make any impression within the next six months. It is a good plan to keep these ideas for a last resort, using them only when it is not possible to think up some other and more novel lead. The circle in the lower left hand corner is a part of the special performance announcement, a clock face with the hands pointing to five minutes past midnight. That is what you might call a real midnight matinee. Most of them start at half past ten or eleven and run only a little while after midnight.

Gordon, of Boston Slipping Back Again

We have been proud of the Gordon houses in Boston, because they cut out most of the hand lettering in the Sunday displays, and set a good example to other houses, but recently we have noticed that the Gordon theatres have been displaying a tendency to backslide. This display for Miss Lulu Bett would have been better had it been more readable. The copy is good and along new lines, and we think it would have paid to discard the sketch of the book and its myriad readers which is run just below the title at the top to get room for a running story in type. That section of the space is headed "A thumbnail history of the tremendous photoplay Miss Lulu Bett." Then it goes on to tell, in hand lettering, of the success of the book, a few lines of six point all capitals tells that it was a successful play and then lettering is resumed to tell of the picture. This could have been much better done with all type in the same face, possibly an eight point italic with "As a book," "as a play" and "as a picture" set into the copy in twelve to eighteen point bold. This would have carried on the idea of the triple hit as it is not given now, and the lower portion of the space could have been left as it stands to make the eye appeal. The framing of the layout, with the vaudeville on the right and Buster Keaton at the bottom of that space, suggests that he is one of the vaudeville turns. It is misleading, though we do not believe that deception was intended, and it loses strength. The vaudeville may help, but it spoils the balance of the advertisement and neither the pictures nor the acts are put over as they should be. Vaudeville has just the chances of a lot of pictures, but they used to hold the acts down in Boston and we believe that in the average house Miss Lulu Bett will sell better than the biggest act of vaudeville a combination house can afford. We hope that the Gordon houses swing back into the "right" column, for they were doing good work and setting a proper pace to others.

—P. T. A.—

Meaningless Attractor Cuts Down the Display

One hundred lines by three is a pretty large space for a Philadelphia theatre to take, even for a Pickford production, and we think that the Aldine wasted much of the space with meaningless cut attractor. The large clock may get some attention, but a larger "Mary Pickford" and a larger title would have commanded greater attention. The clock means nothing to the reader. He does not associate "Little Lord Fauntleroy" with a clock, and he is not apt to think that the figure is that of Miss Pickford unless the name catches him, and the name would be put over better if there was more white space in which it could be displayed. The clock is meaningless. The name is what sells, yet the clock crowds the name. An all-type display would have been much better than this drawing, and would have put the picture over better. It is a second week display and the fact that it was held for a second week means a lot more than the inconspicuous line just below the signature suggests. A big "Second Week" and a much larger "Mary Pickford," stretched clear across the space would have been a better buy for 300 lines. The real high light of this announcement is the 50-75 cents, for the prices appear about where the center of interest in any space is to be found. Outside of the Stanley houses the Philadelphia picture theatres are not notably strong in advertising talent, apparently, but this is weak even for a poor average, and weak when strength is most essential: on the second week of a big feature.

—P. T. A.—

Don't throw away good ideas because you do not need them today. Tomorrow is coming.

Hooked the Shriners for a Special Show

R. A. Gill, of the Erie Theatre, Hugo, Okla., sends in the program and tack card he prepared for the Hugo Shrine Club when the Paris Club came over with a minstrel show to help the local organization. He writes that it might be of interest to us, "though off the line of picture exploitation entirely." That is where we think Mr. Gill is wrong. It is the best sort of picture exploitation to get a representative audience into a picture theatre, even though a picture is not shown. It establishes the house in the minds of a lot of people as something other than a "movie show" and will bring in some who do not usually attend. They will like the surroundings and come back the first time they see an attractive title, and perhaps get the habit. Helping out any representative organization, whether it be the Shriners, the Elks or the Knights of Columbus, will inevitably help the house. It cannot be hurtful and usually it is helpful in the extreme, so much so that it will well repay the loss of business for a night. It should not be done too often, but nothing is more helpful now and then. Mr. Gill also sends in a throwaway card on Constance Talmadge in "Woman's Place," in which he sold the back of the card to a photographic studio to advertise Christmas portraits. He seems a bit apologetic about this, too, remarking that it lowers the advertising bill. It does that and more. There is a certain credit in being connected with the other enterprises in the town—a linking of the house to other solid institutions which has a distinct moral effect. We are by no means in sympathy with the managers who feel that they cheapen their house program or other advertising media by letting in non-competitive advertising. We feel that it is an asset and not a handicap entirely apart from the revenue feature.

a little would have given all the selling necessary. The cut is largely excess matter. It happens that it comes out nicely, but this is not always certain even in Cleveland, and unless the advertisers know which weeks the press work will be good, it is taking an awful chance to risk 300 lines on the chance that the cut will come ont. Probably the cut interested, because the design suggests somewhat the general nature of the play.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Here are extracts from news available at press hour from publications of the industry boiled down to a sentence. They present the views of Moving Picture World (M.P.W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E.H.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitors' Trade Review (T.R.); Film Daily (F.D.).

Love's Redemption

(Norma Talmadge—First National—5,889 Feet)

M. P. W.—Will please large Norma Talmadge following.

T. R.—Will not disappoint the numerous admirers of the popular star.

N.—Miss Talmadge raises conventional story by her personality.

E. H.—Will satisfy Norma Talmadge followers and will be found interesting if not wholly convincing by others.

F. D.—The most important fact gleaned from Norma Talmadge's current release, "Love's Redemption," is that it is high time she was given material worthy of her ability, and also deserving of the prices that are asked for her productions.

Chivalrous Charlie

(Eugene O'Brien—Selznick—4,543 Feet)

M. P. W.—Light comedy is Eugene O'Brien's forte and "Chivalrous Charlie" is one of the smartest light comedies that has been placed at the disposal of the show-man for some time.

E. H.—Rather unconvincing, weak plot with star playing hero to half a dozen maidens in distress.

N.—Eugene O'Brien as fighting Irish-American surprising novelty.

T. R.—A clever mixture of comedy and melodrama, zippy action, farcial situations and adventurous seasoning.

The Bride's Play

(Marion Davies—Cosmopolitan-Paramount—6,476 Feet)

M. P. W.—Irish people, especially, will like "The Bride's Play."

F. D.—A pretty star and elaborate urban settings its chief appeal.

T. R.—"The Bride's Play" is a charming picture from a scenic standpoint

N.—Romantic photoplay sumptuously staged.

Five Days to Live

(Sessue Hayakawa—Robertson-Cole—5,210 Feet)

M. P. W.—Sessue Hayakawa's preference for the role of the self-sacrificing hero is asserted in much his usual style in "Five Days to Live." His newest picture offers little that is new or enterprising.

F. D.—Fine acting by all-Japanese cast and lavish settings the features.

E. H.—It has a dramatic and satisfying finish and is gorgeously mounted.

N.—It is delivered by a competent cast, well staged, miserably cut. In fact, the juggling of the material borders upon serious danger.

T. R.—While poverty and sadness are elements of the photoplay almost throughout its action, there is nothing sordid or depressing resorted to in its production.

The Sin Flood

(Featured Cast—Goldwyn—6,500 Feet)

M. P. W.—Powerful theme grips the spectator's interest with a vise-like hold.

T. R.—It has that go-and-get-it quality which box offices sigh for.

N.—A rare treat for the discriminating; fine entertainment for all.

E. H.—This is a most unusual picture and will likely create a sensation. It should prove a big money-maker.

W.—One of the most powerful dramas the screen has known.

If you would like to live in a world without trees—if that is what you would bequeath to the future generation—then DON'T write to Washington, DON'T look on page 379, DON'T do anything for, left alone, everything is working beautifully and swiftly toward that state.

Winning with Wits

(Barbara Bedford—Fox—4,435 Feet)

M. P. W.—Another tribute to feminine resourcefulness, "Winning With Wits," offers an entertainment solution of the difficulties in tracing guilt when there is scarcely any clue.

E. H.—A fairly entertaining feature.

F. D.—Story lives up to its title very well. The kind of drama that appeals to "fan" audiences in particular.

N.—Melodramatic story makes good program picture.

T. R.—Dramatically presented, it is doubtful if this picture would fail to get over with the average audience.

(Frank Mayo—Universal—4,886 Feet)

M. P. W.—Super-fine cast. The action has a spring and carries one along entertainingly.

N.—From a point of scenic value, "Across the Deadline" is entitled to praise, in that the locale, the great Northwest, is interesting.

T. R.—Score another for Frank Mayo and Frank Conway.

F. D.—Star, support and direction make fair offering. Will please if they aren't too particular.

E. H.—A story of action, drama, love, with a particularly strong cast in star's support.

Received Payment

(Corinne Griffith—Vitagraph—4,800 Feet)

M. P. W.—Charms of Corinne Griffith cleverly exploited.

N.—Heart interest story with dramatic flourishes.

T. R.—The old theme of "the picture that was turned to the wall" is used in this one from Vitagraph with gratifying results.

F. D.—Production saved by good work of star and director.

E. H.—An interesting story, well presented with an effective climax.

GO AND GET IT. Theme differs from most pictures. Went big here. Although quite old, would recommend it as sure to please, to anyone not having played it. Comedy of Wesbarry great. Advertising; newspapers, Posters, photos. Patronage; small town. Attendance; 620. A. La Valla, Bethel Community Theatre, Bethel, Conn.

THE KID. This picture went over good at raised admissions. No argument! Chaplin pulls them. He's like castor oil—good for the whole family. Advertising; newspapers, heralds and window tie-ups. Patronage; "all kinds" Attendance; good. A. C. Abrahamson, Gem Theatre, Hill City, Minn.

LOVE'S PENALTY. Consider it a good one; picture pleased. Advertising; posters and press. Patronage; fair. Attendance; fair. Chas. G. Howe, Elk Theatre, Longview, Tex.

MAN, WOMAN, MARRIAGE. A 100% attraction that pleased over six hundred paid admissions. Very spectacular and elaborately produced; a wonderful picture. Advertising; posters, mail, street, newspapers, etc. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen. Miss.

MOLLY O'. A splendid comedy drama. Big, also Big Rental, consequently did not have much left after paying expenses. Advertising; billboards, lobby, papers and slides. Patronage; family. Attendance, first day, good; second, fair; third, poor. W. J. Clark, Rialto Theatre, Eureka, Cal.

MOLLY O'. Best picture Sennett has ever made; way ahead of "Mickey" with Mabel Normand. The last reel sure is full of action and will make them stand up in their seats. Book not less than 2 days, no matter how small your town is. Patronage; small town, tourists. Attendance; capacity; W. F. Harding, Princess Theatre, Mount Doro, Florida.

NOBODY. Picture pleased much better than expected: a good picture for high class audience. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Arch E. Bamberger, Empress Theatre, Owensboro, Ky.

NOT GUILTY. A picture without a fault except that it is a little dark in places. Give more light and it will improve very much. Pleased 100%. Settings and acting above the average specials. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Jno. W. Joerger, O. K. Theatre, Enterprise, Ore.

THE OATH. A very good picture, well liked by our patrons. Advertising; one six sheet and one sheets. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. J. F. Schlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, N. C.

PECK'S BAD BOY. Brother, here is a picture you must get by all means. Let them know you are going to show it and all you will have to do is collect the money at the box-office. It's a wonder when it comes to drawing a crowd, and best of all it will please. Advertising; plenty of paper, street, etc. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Miss.

PERFECT WOMAN. Good, but old. Story based on the reds. Advertising; billboard. Attendance; good. G. S. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wis.

POLLY OF THE STORM COUNTRY. A very artistic production that impressed favorably, just the kind any theatre needs occasionally. Advertising; local papers and posters. Patronage; rural. Attendance; poor. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre, Grand Gorge, N. Y.

R. S. V. P. It pleased some, but as a whole was pretty weak. Patronage; small town. C. S. Bovee, Florence Theatre, Elk Point, South Dakota.

THE SIGN ON THE DOOR. The best picture Norma has ever made, according to my patrons. Business very bad, owing to very bad weather and holiday shopping. Advertising; extra. Patronage; high class. Attendance; very poor. Arch E. Bamberger, Empress Theatre, Owensboro, Kentucky.

SKY PILOT. Very good. One of those pictures that please young and old. Advertising; window cards and one sheets. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. G. W. Saul, Firemen's Hall, Hillsdale, N. J.

TWO MINUTES TO GO. A good picture and did a nice business on Thanksgiving and next two days. Pleases big majority. Advertising; cards, billboards and daily. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. Geo. O. Monroe, Gilbert Theatre, Beatrice, Nebraska.

WHO AM I. Very good feature, ran with Hawaiians and business better than the past year for Tuesday night. Advertising; newspaper and billboard. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; good. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Ark.

A WOMAN'S PLACE. The best Connie Talmadge picture we have ever run. This is the word of my patrons. Advertise it big, it won't disappoint. Advertising; mail, paper, posters, heralds. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Miss.

Fox

AFTER YOUR OWN HEART. Good Mix picture; business fine. Advertising; regular. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. C. De Paul, Dreamland Theatre, Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.

AFTER YOUR OWN HEART. For action they never made a picture in the class of this one. Mr. Fox, don't ruin a real Western Star by taking him out of action pictures. Advertising; lithos, newspaper, slides. Patronage; Saturday crowd. Attendance; good. F. M. Holeman, Garrick Theatre, Madisonville, Ky.

FLAME OF YOUTH. Good little picture; could have been better with a little more action and comedy injected. Patrons pleased. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Ark.

GET YOUR MAN. Buck Jones well liked by my patrons and they are always with us when we show him. This mounted police story is as good as any of them. Patronage; middle class. Attendance; good. M. Oppenheimer, Empire Theatre, New Orleans, La.

ROAD DEMON. Very good picture, patrons well pleased. Film in poor condition. Advertising; one six, photos, ones and slides. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. A. G. Coffin, Baldwin Opera House, Baldwin, Wis.

THE TEXAN. Tom Mix injected lots of comedy into this Western, which relieves it to an enjoyable extent. Advertising; ordinary. Patronage; general. Attendance; poor. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minn.

WIDE OPEN. Plenty of comedy in this Tom Mix five-reeler. Very little story, but it keeps them laughing. Advertising; lobby display only. Patronage; general. Attendance good. Alfred N. Sack, New Dreamland, San Antonio, Tex.

Goldwyn

ACE OF HEARTS. No outstanding picture, just average program. Booked for three days and took it off second day. Advertising; photos, posters and newspaper. Patronage; general. Attendance; poor. Charles De Paul, Dreamland Theatre, Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.

BOYS WILL BE BOYS. You can't go wrong on this one: book it—will please 100 per cent. Advertising; one sheets, regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Conn.

DANGEROUS CURVE AHEAD. Very good picture; clean comedy. Played to very good business on Monday and Tuesday. Advertising; a small ad. in newspaper, and regular at house. Patronage; about 65 per cent women. Attendance; good. S. R. Peake, Pastime Theatre, Maquoketa, Iowa.

DANGEROUS CURVE AHEAD. A good picture; 90 per cent liked it. We want more of this kind. Cost means nothing when we pack them in. Advertising; billboards and papers. Patronage; the best. Attendance; excellent. Michael Klamansky, Hippodrome Theatre. Annville, Pa.

EARTHBOUND. A wonderful picture, but it requires close attention on the part of the patrons and those who do not give it are the ones who do not like the picture. We had a few walk out each night, but also had a lot of people stop and tell me it was wonderful. Advertising; extra big. Patronage; the best. Attendance; very poor. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

OFFICER 666. Good, plenty of humor. Too many other things going on hurt business. Advertising; usual advertising, heralds, posters, newspaper. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Anna Frankle, Strand Theatre, Leon, Iowa.

THE OLD NEST. Although there has been lots said about this picture, it cannot be praised too highly. It is simply wonderful. Pleased 100 per cent. and box office receipts were satisfactory. My advice to any small town exhibitor is play it two days, as talk will get more people the second day than all the advertising you can do. Advertising; mailing list, newspaper, usual posters. Patronage; small town with lots of tourists. W. F. Harding, Princess Theatre, Mt. Doro, Fla.

THE OLD NEST. Really a fine production. Pleased 100 per cent. Set them boosting and make them think. Played Christmas at advanced prices. Advertising; billboards, window display, cards and full page newspaper. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; really good three days. C. D. McGregor, Princess Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Canada.

THE OLD NEST. A picture that will please both young and old. It is a true story of everyday life. Advertising; as usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Michael Leszczynski, Pastime Theatre, Depew, N. Y.

OLD SWIMMIN' HOLE. Only a fairly good picture. Star too old for a boy's part. Advertising; paper, posters, lobby. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. H. R. Walker, Royal Theatre, Dartmouth, N. S., Canada.

SILVER HORDE. An excellent picture scenes are wonderful. Northern pictures good. Advertising; billboard. G. S. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre, Minocqua, Wisconsin.

SNOWBLIND. Just fair. Pleased about 60 per cent of the patrons; would not advise boosting it very strong. Advertising; regular. Patronage; usual. Attendance; very poor. Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill.

SNOWBLIND. I didn't see this myself, but my patrons said it was good and it drew the biggest house in six months for me. Advertising; as usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, N. Y.

THE TRUTH. My patrons did not like this one, and I think it very poor. Advertising: one, three, photos. Patronage; family. Attendance; poor. A. Wirtenberg, Woodlawn Theatre, Schenectady, N. Y.

WET GOLD. Did not see this myself but had several comments on photography. Not much of a story to it. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

Wid Gunning, Inc.

GOOD AND EVIL. A foreign made, lavishly produced and very pleasing picture, partly on the order of "Everywoman." Handicapped by title. Advertising; newspapers, posters, slide. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. J. W. Creamer, Pert Theatre, Gillespie, Ill.

Hodkinson

EAST LYNN. A good story and fine picture, but many who had read the book stayed away; afraid picture too sad. Advertising; lobby, papers and slide. Patronage; family. Attendance; fair. W. J. Clark, Rialto Theatre, Eureka, Calif.

GOD'S CRUCIBLE. Very good picture; not a knock out but good entertainment. Advertising; newspapers and billboard. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Ark.

RIP VAN WINKLE. A wonderful production, that is, if you like this type of picture. My patrons didn't care for it so stayed away. We played it two days and barely got film rental. I am through with this kind of pictures. Advertising; mail paper, heralds, photos and everything. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; poor. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Metro

OVER THE WIRE. Can't say much for this one, just a picture, but a good title. Advertising; regular. Patronage; high class. Attendance; poor. Geo. O. Monroe, Gilbert Theatre, Beatrice, Nebraska.

Paramount

AFFAIRS OF ANATOL. Good picture at regular prices—they charge too much for it for me. Lost money. Why twelve stars when only five act? Advertising; one sheets, lithos. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor for the picture. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Conn.

AFFAIRS OF ANATOL. Wonderful production from every standpoint. Just changed policy of house; run nothing but big pictures and run them a week. Had any number come back for the second and third time. Advertising: Newspaper (full page in color), heralds, lobby (Mr. Mills furnishes a photo of a most attractive display, but we haven't space to reproduce it. Ed). window display ,etc. Patronage ;the better class. Attendance; good. Forest E. Mills, Richmond Theatre, Richmond, Ind.

BLUE BIRD. Ran this for the High School; personally thought it beautiful; many liked it, a good many did not. Advertising; newspaper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Ill.

CAPPY RICKS. The best Neighan picture I ever ran, Meighan was well supported. Book it; you won't go wrong—and boost it. Advertising; lobby, six sheets, newspaper, billboards. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. G. E. Shilkeet, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Okla.

CITY OF SILENT MEN. You need not be afraid to meet your patrons when they're coming out from seeing this. Far more entertaining than most specials. More favorable comments than on any picture shown in six months. Advertising; posters, photos, house slides and newspapers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. A. La Valla, Bethel Community Theatre, Bethel, Conn.

EDUCATION OF ELIZABETH. Good picture. Advertising; big; Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. B. W. McCarthy, Orpheum Theatre, Fargo, No. Dakota.

EXPERIENCE. A high class picture good for high class houses; the picture is extra good. Advertising; billboards, paper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. J. Carbonell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Fla.

FOOTLIGHTS. This is a real first class production, so tell your patrons that. When I say so, it IS so. Advertising; usual. Patronage; best. Attendance; good. Geo. C. Poindexter, Broadway Theatre, Hopewell, Va.

FOOTLIGHTS. Very well acted picture. Just a little too long, my people seemed to tire of it. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. F. S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, N. J.

FORBIDDEN FRUIT. Lavish production, fine settings, and well acted by an all star cast. Pleased almost everybody, particularly the women. Advertising; newspaper, posters, lobby display, and direct mail to patrons. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. Mrs. Phelps Sasseen, Lyric Theatre, Easley, S. C.

THE GREAT MOMENT. Patrons liked this one, but did not rave about it. I consider it a little better than the average program picture. Advertising; heralds, newspaper, lobby, program, etc. Patronage; better class. Attendance; fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

THE KENTUCKIANS. Very bad picture for me; people walked out of theatre on this one. Advertising; newspaper and cutouts Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, W. Va.

KING, QUEEN, JOKER. Nothing to it. The only comments were that it was the silliest thing we had ever shown. Advertising: usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. Jno. W. Joerger, O. K. Theatre, Enterprise, Ore.

LADIES MUST LIVE. This one is awful for me (small town) poorest amusement I have ever run; not one good word on it. Patronage; small town. Attendance; first night, poor; second night, nobody. L. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Calif.

LIFE. Splendid; pleased 90 per cent. Good cast and good direction with elaborate sets and good photography. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Ark.

THE LITTLE MINISTER. Give me more pictures of this kind and there will be no kicks. Pleased 100 per cent. Don't hesitate on this one; go and grab it. Advertising; lobby, two newspapers, three 24 sheets, sixteen one-sheets. Patronage; the best. Attendance; good. H. B. Barr, Rialto Theatre, Enid, Okla.

THE RIGHT TO LOVE. Excellent picture, and patrons liked it very much, but no business, as I played it too near Christmas. Advertising; ones, threes, sixes and slide. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; poor. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Miss.

THE SHEIK. Very fine picture, setting and scenery beautiful, photography was excellent. pleased everyone. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. F. S. Windenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

THE SHEIK. Dandy picture, not the biggest in captivity, but a good one. Had very nice business, gave all and a little more than I took in to the Paramount people in payment of the rental. Just simply got it hung on to me, that's all. Other fellow was the best talker. Getting wise by degrees. Ned. Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

THREE WORD BRAND. Good picture. Advertising; big. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. E. H. McCarthy, Orpheum Theatre, Fargo, North Dakota.

TOO MUCH SPEED. Agnes Ayres and Theo. Roberts, as well as Wallace Reid, deserve credit for this good work. A good picture. Advertising; newspaper, billboard. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; good. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Ark.

VILLAGE SLEUTH. One of Ray's poor pictures. Advertising; newspapers only. Patronage; downtown. Attendance; fair. T. M. Hervey, Unique Theatre, El Paso, Tex.

WEALTH. Poor story. Advertising; newspapers. Attendance; poor. T. M. Hervey, Unique Theatre, El Paso, Texas.

WHAT'S YOUR HURRY. Just fair, Reid hardly gets me film rental, so my motto is, "Don't show any more Reid films." Reid is the poorest drawing card we have and his pictures cost like specials. Advertising; paper and plenty of it. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; poor. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

THE WHISTLE. Great picture, pleased old and young, and it's not a Western either. Made no money on it, as film cost too high. Advertising; 24 sheets, street car cards, program, newspapers, trailer. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. J. S. Schwalin, Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio.

WHITE OAK. Everybody liked it and did a big business. It's a good picture. Advertising; very light, only lobby display. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Frank A. Lacy, Majestic Theatre, Portland, Oregon.

Pathe

HELP WANTED, MALE. Good, will suit any audience, received many favorable comments; book it. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall, Old Lyme, Conn.

BROADWAY COWBOY. This comedy Western, with a Sennett somedy "Let 'er Go" gave one of the most pleasing entertainments, both to the public and to the manager, that we have had in months. A good crowd that left in good humor. Advertising; local papers and posters. Patronage; local. Attendance; good. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, Grand Gorge, N. Y.

Realart

THE LAND OF HOPE. A good, clean picture that will please the most exacting audience. Advertising; posters, etc. Patroage; neighborhood. Attendance; fair. Temple Theatre, Abedeen, Miss.

MOONLIGHT AND HONEYSUCKLE. A nice little program picture that pleases one and all. Advertising; newspaper and billboard. Patronage; neighborhood. Patronage; fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Ark.

THE MAGIC CUP. Nothing extra, but you may get by with it. My patrons didn't care for it so matinee killed night showing. Advertising; usual posters. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; poor. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

THE SNOB. A good, clean, little picture that will please the most exacting audience. 99 per cent. of Realart pictures are good. Advertising; usual posters. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; fair. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

R-C.

KISMET. One of the finest productions I have ever shown, Otis Skinner's work is wonderful. The sets are beautiful and the direction is faultless. Nine reels of 100 per cent picture. Print from St. Louis office in excellent condition; price more than reasonable. Book it and please them. Advertising; extra heavy. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; only fair. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Ill.

ONE MAN IN A MILLION. A delightful picture, it appeals to all homey people. Beban is great in his character work. Advertising; paper, program, cards. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. Arthur G. Pearson, Pearson's Theatre, Somerville, Massachusetts.

SO LONG, LETTY. It is a good, clean, six-reel comedy; lots of laughs and all pleased; didn't draw well for some reason. Advertising; cards, paper and bills. Patronage; all classes; Attendance; poor. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, N. Y.

WHAT'S A WIFE WORTH. Not as good as the "Stealers" but still above the average. Advertising; newspapers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. N. R. Carskaden, Music Hall Theatre, Keyser, W. Va.

WHAT'S A WIFE WORTH. A very good picture, pleased everyone. You will not make any mistake in booking. Advertising; lobby, newspaper, billboard. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. G. E. Shilkett, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

Selznick

THE DAUGHTER PAYS. Very good picture. Elaine Hammerstein is a sure bet. Patrons stopped on way out to express comment on picture. Advertising; six sheet, ones and photos. Patronage; small town. Attendance; very good. A. G. Coffin, Baldwin Opera House, Baldwin, Wis.

GIFT SUPREME. Must have been a super-special the way every one has commented on this. Everybody said it was the best picture they ever saw and asked me to repeat it; did not see it myself. Advertising; usual. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; poor, account of rain. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Ala.

A MAN'S HOME. A very poor picture for me, far from being a special; the picture is not complete, and failed to please my patrons. Advertising; paper, window cards, heralds and mailing list. Patronage; first class. Attendance; fair. H. O. Dorr, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss.

PALACE OF DARKENED WINDOWS. A fine picture of the Oriental type. Beautiful settings, good scenes, carries a few thrills. Advertising; newspaper, billboard. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; fair. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

POPPY. Good picture, reissued. Liked by audience. Advertising; newspapers and lobby. Attendance; fair. J. Solomon, Bijou Theatre, Clarksburg, W. Va.

United Artists

LOVE FLOWER. We did only ordinary business and although Griffith's name was pushed to the limit, it availed nothing. Advertising; extra. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; only average. C. D. Burbank, Franklin Theatre, Thompsonville, Conn.

THROUGH THE BACK DOOR. One of her best; you've got to hand it to Mary—the one star they line up to see, even in a blizzard. Advertising; general. Attendance; good. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Ia.

THE IRON TRAIL. One of Beach's best. Would class it next to the "Spoilers." Beautiful scenery and good action. Patrons were well pleased. Ran picture two nights. Had several patrons come back second night. Well pleased. Advertising; newspaper, billboards and heralds. Patronage; general. Attendance; good first night, better on second. A. G. Coffin, Baldwin Opera House, Baldwin, Wisconsin.

Universal

CONFLICT. Just an ordinary picture, resembles a serial, some very good thrills, not big enough for a special where one is giving the best. Advertising; billboards, mailing list. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; fair. L. O. Davis, Perry Theatre, Hazard, Ky.

CONFLICT. From a production standpoint it is exceptionally fine. Miss Dean is an artist. Advertising; cards, newspaper, billboards, oil painting, etc. Patronage; better class. Attendance; good. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

COLORADO. Fine; pleased a good crowd, 100 per cent.. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. L. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Calif.

THE FIGHTING LOVER. Frank Mayo very poor in this feature. Photography bad, too dark. Advertising; one three, photos. Patronage; family. Attendance; poor. A Wirtenberg, Woodlawn Theatre, Schenectady, New York.

THE FIRE EATER. Hoot Gibson is advancing rapidly and we are doing great running his pictures. Advertising; billboards and newspaper. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. Harold S. Clouse, Hollywood Theatre, Highwood, Minn.

THE FOX. Weak in spots, but proved to be a good box office attraction. Advertising; extra news advertisements with a few three sheets, usual lobby display. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. J. A. Mcnear, Jr., Hill Opera House, Petaluma, California.

NOBODY'S FOOL. Good picture for me, far better than "Moonlight Follies." Advertising; billboard. Attendance; good. Victor Theatre, Minoqua, Wis.

NOBODY'S FOOL. From an entertainment standpoint, in my opinion, this is the best special Universal has produced; a splendid picture in every respect. Advertising; usual. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. J. C. Rowton, Victory Theatre, Shawnee, Okla.

RED COURAGE. A very good Western with lots of action. Pleased patrons very much and Hoot Gibson is well liked. Advertising; only four one-sheets. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Jerry Westin, Winter Theatre, Albany, Minn.

TIGER TRUE. One of best Mayo ever made. Plenty of action. Pleased practically everyone. Advertising; posters, photos, newspapers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. A La Valla, Bethel Community Theatre, Bethel, Conn.

UNKNOWN WIFE. Good picture, better than some specials. Pleased all; some asked for this to be shown over. Advertising; local newspaper, one and three-sheet posters. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. J. E. Evins, Star Theatre, Smithville, Tenn.

Vitagraph

BLACK BEAUTY. Those who saw it proclaimed it very good. Ran three shows, but did not make any money. Advertising; heralds, posters, photos, newspaper advt. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Kenneth Thompson, M. W. A. Hall, Hancock, Wis.

BRING HIM IN. A carefully directed picture with a popular star and the kind of picture for a mixed audience. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Landale Theatre, Carlinville, Ill.

SON OF WALLINGFORD. Excellent picture, pleased everyone. Has comedy, thrills and heart interest. Cast, story and direction fine. Suitable for any house. Advertising; usual channels, nothing extraordinary. Patronage; industrial small town. Attendance; good. P. W. Kunze, Orpheum Theatre, Stoughton, Mass.

PRINCESS JONES. Pleasing picture, although not a very heavy story. We are using this star for Sunday shows and she gives satisfaction for light entertainment. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. O. K. Theatre, Enterprise, Oregon.

THE SEA RIDER. A very ordinary program picture that did not hold up interest. Ran a two-reel O. Henry entitled "The Dream" with it and had many good comments on the short subject. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Jno. W. Joerger, O. K. Theatre, Enterprise, Oregon.

SINGLE TRACK. Good story, pleased crowd. Advertising; newspaper and program. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. N. R. Carskadan, Music Hall, Keyser, West Virginia.

STEELHEART. Excellent, pleased 100 per cent of my patrons; they want to see more of this kind of picture with Duncan. Advertising; usual. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pa.

Comedies

AMONG THOSE PRESENT (Pathe). A three reel Lloyd comedy that is a positive knockout; book all of them and clean up; every one a peach. Advertising; automobile and posters. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Miss.

FOR LAND'S SAKE (Educational). For thrills, laughs and new stunts, this comedy is certainly in the AA class. They don't make them any better. Advertising; usual. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; good. J. C. Rowton, Victory Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

HOLY SMOKE (Educational). Provoked as much mirth as "Shoulder Arms" or "Dog's Life." If they don't laugh at this they are dead. Advertising; one sheet. Patronage; industrials. Attendance; good. Howard James, Union Theatre, Volunton, Conn.

NEIGHBORS (Metro). Buster Keaton is good, and in this he created a scream. Everyone considered it a great comedy. Advertising; one sheets, photos, newspaper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. A. La Valla, Bethel Community Theatre, Bethel, Conn.

NOW OR NEVER (Pathe). An absolute knock 'em dead comedy. Harold Lloyd three reelers the best bet an exhibitor has. Book the series and clean up. You can't go wrong. Advertising; sixes, threes, ones, photos. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

Serials

DO OR DIE. (Universal). Eddie Polo is a tonic for poor business. He will surely bring them in. Sure fire hit. Advertising; six sheets, newspapers, photos, slides. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Al. V. Bothner, Majestic Theatre, Troy, New York.

HURRICANE HUTCH. (Pathe). One of the best serials we have ever shown. Supporting cast great, new stunts that are real thrilling. Advertising; photos, six sheets, 24-sheets. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. Landale Theatre, Carlinville, Illinois.

WHITE HORSEMEN (Universal) Started good. Everybody likes action and Universal short stuff has more of it to the foot than any other service I know of. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Ark.

Short Subjects

ADVENTURES OF BILL AND BOB (Pathe). This reel draws like feature, and is one. Why can't we have more like this? Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, De Queen, Ark.

FAMOUS RIDE ON RUNAWAY TRAIN. (Educational). This is great stuff, if put over right, with the proper effects. My audiences were roaring with excitement and laughter during the wild ride. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. E. E. Corr, Princess Theatre, Thompson, Iowa.

LADIES' PETS (Chester Educational). Only fair. Have not been able to see anything extra in Educational; like all the rest, some are good and others rotten. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

State Rights

BLUE BLAZES (Doubleday). Great, very good, so good I booked the series. Patrons asked for more like this one. Advertising; daily paper, billboards, window cards. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; fair. J. Edw. Mitchell, Strand Theatre, Waverley, Massachusetts.

THE GIRL FROM PORCUPINE (Arrow). Good Curwood picture. Plot not as interesting as previous Curwoods. No complaint. Advertising; newspaper, lobby display, heralds. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. Smith & Correll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, North Dakota.

KAZAN (E. & I.) A 100% picture, if your patrons like outdoor stuff. Ours do, and this went over with every comment a favorable one. Used a stencil of a dog's footprint for sidewalk advertising and got them wondering what was coming. It pays. Advertising; extra newspaper and billboards. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. O. K. Theatre, Enterprise, Oregon.

OH, MARY, BE CAREFUL (Pioneer). Light comedy, Madge Kennedy fans would like it, others would consider it fair. Advertising; posters, newspapers. Patronage; just folks. Attendance; fair. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

"The Leather Pushers"

Deft Mingling of Beauty and Brawn in Universal Series Based on Witwer's Famous Stories in Collier's Magazine.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

It has been the good fortune of Universal to produce that "something different" in offering the new series, "The Leather Pushers." In these, H. C. Witwer's popular stories of the ringside have been pictured without losing any of their individual flavor. The author's slant on this particular phase of life, his conception of the type of people who make it a success, added to the slangy jargon which has always been one of the chief delights of his readers, have been transferred to the screen with integrity.

Even the most obvious objection to such a subject has been surmounted. It does have an appeal for women as well as men. While romance and boxing may, upon first consideration, seem too far removed to be logically associated, Mr. Witwer's familiarity with all angles of the sportsmen's life makes such a combination both plausible and entertaining. Perhaps the immediate reason for its success is that the hero is a gentleman-boxer. This is a feature of which the director, Harry Pollard, has made the most. Reginald Denny, who has been chosen to play the leading part, is a handsome type, well qualified physically to impersonate the champion, but still possessed of gentle features and a graceful manner, so that his feminine admirers will be many. "Kid Roberts's" weakness for silk dressing robes and pretty ladies and the ridicule that is forthcoming from others because of this, is a delicious touch that appears and reappears—but not too often.

Mr. Denny's accomplishments as a boxer occasioned much praise at the opening showing. Several well-known "leather punchers" as Sam McVey, Jack Renault, Danny Hayes, Frankie Ryan and Bob Armstrong, make ringside scenes a great success, and the selection of types for fans is all that could be desired.

The series consists of twelve two-reelers, each of which is known as a round. The first three, upon which this review is based, show the circumstances that bring Kid Roberts to the ring, his first three difficult fights, the dispute among the managers and his first two unsuccessful love affairs. Each round is a complete chapter.

Length of each round, 2 reels.

"The Touchdown"

Almost any type of audience will like this comedy, starring Lee Moran. It is one of the best things in which he has appeared. Not only are there a lot of laughs and amusing situations, but a decidedly unique effect produced by trick photography has been achieved, where Moran, after being caught at the bottom of a foot-ball scrimmage, is shown flattened out like a sheet of paper, working his way along the ground. The story deals with a rube who goes to a smart college. There is some clever comedy stuff where he is hazed by using an electric current; also where a skeleton comes and lays down in the bed with him, and where after jumping out of a high window in his pajamas he camouflaged himself with a lot of balloons. He gets into football togs, is forced into the game and proves to be a hero by his unique manner of securing touchdowns, one time by deflating the ball and hiding it under his shirt. —(Universal)—C. "Grandfather's Clock"

Those of a past generation will see with delight this old-time song of Henry C. Work put into moving pictures by Charles Urban's Kineto Review. Those of the present generation will find much interest in it also with its delineations of the dress and exquisite manners of a by-gone day.

The poem is carried out in pictured detail. All the action, of course, has to do largely with "Grandfather's Clock," and a wealth of charming and pathetic incidents are woven around it.—T. S. daP.

"No Defense"

William Duncan, the Star and Director of Vitagraph Melodrama.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

When a screen story is framed, especially to set off one particular star, and it is necessary to the progress of events that the star be featured almost every minute, it is imperative that he measure up to the popular standards for actor-heroes. Public taste has improved somewhat and demands something besides vigor and he-man tactics, which is the extent of William Duncan's offering in this feature. In a serial or in a typical Western, he has a legitimate standing, but in a feature, part of which has the conventional, social background, he is not seen to the best advantage. This fact might not be worth mention if he were not so constantly featured and if there were fewer close-ups. But in view of this circumstance it is impossible to write at all of "No Defense" without writing of William Duncan.

The material of the story is not new. The familiar frame-up, the dishonest partner, and the girl who is an unwitting bigamist, all take part in a melodrama that is interesting without being novel. There is one unexpected maneuver at the end and a convenient use of all members of the cast in a rather involved climax. A catastrophe, which seems inevitable, is averted after trying suspense. There are a number of spectacular Western shots in which Duncan shows his ability as a rider and stunt-performer.

The Cast

John Manning ..... William Duncan
Ethel Austin ..... Edith Johnson
Frederick Apthorpe ..... Jack Richardson
Milton Hulst ..... Henry Hebert
Mrs. Austin ..... Mathilde Brundage
MacRoberts ..... Charles Dudley

Story by J. Raleigh Davies.
Scenario by C. Graham Baker.
Directed by William Duncan.
Length, 5,700 Feet.

The Story

John Manning and his partners find gold near their Western mining camp. Apthorpe is crooked and kills the third partner after trying to escape with the fortune, laying the blame on Manning who is hunted by the police. In time he arrives home, only to find that his wife had heard a report of his death, has married. Her husband, who is district attorney, Apthorpe, and Manning's wife are then involved in Manning's prosecution. His wife succeeds in bringing about his acquittal and freedom for herself.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

A Falsely Accused Man Escapes Death Only to Find a Worse Tragedy—His Wife Has Married Someone Else—Her Husband is District Attorney—the Real Criminal Turns Up—and All Are Involved in a Spectacular Climax.

Exploitation Angles: Sell this to Duncan's following, and try to sell the story to others, using the Western locale and the bigamy incident for punches.

"In Old Granada"

A Burton Holmes subject that is unusually comprehensive. Its contrasts have been well planned, and a variety of scenes from the ancient cave dwellings of the gypsies to the lofty castles of the grand potentates, from the classic courts, modeled in exquisite Saracenic style to the modern plebian thoroughfares, are included. Especially beautiful are the patios of private homes which display an artistic massing of flowers that is not ordinary. The girls with the mantillas and shawls add another interesting moment.—M. K.

"The Law and the Woman"

Stanlaws Gives 'Em What They Want, With Artistic Touches.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

Judging from two out of his first three pictures, it would seem that Penrhyn Stanlaws is the most valuable of the screen's recent acquisitions. Before he took up picture work Stanlaws was, as Robert Sherwood of Life states, "a . . . depicter of beautiful dumb-bells," for the covers of magazines. (The dots will suffice, out of courtesy to the artist). But Stanlaws has brought a fine sense of the artistic to the screen, and with his picturization of Barrie's "The Little Minister," presented a picture of rare beauty and charm, and now with "The Law and the Woman" he takes the commonest theme known to picturegoers and directs it in such a way that it doesn't look like the same old thing at all. Incidentally, the theme mentioned has always proved popular when presented in the right way. It is the old friend, the falsely accused innocent man of a murder he did not commit. The story is an adaptation of Clyde Fitch's popular play of some years ago, "The Woman in the Case."

But, with the aid of an expert scenario written by Albert S. LeVino, Stanlaws supplies a melodrama that has gripping suspense, and although the outcome is perfectly clear from the very beginning, owing to long familiarity with the plot, the spectators' interest is keyed up and never is allowed to drop. The continuity is, paradoxically, involved and at the same time perfectly clear, and the method of telling the story heightens the suspense. In this picture Stanlaws proves he has a rare sense of dramatic values, and with that is coupled the ability to present his story in a highly artistic manner. Taking the popularity of the theme for granted, it must be said that the director gives them what they want in an artistic dressing.

Betty Compson is the star of the production and handles her role acceptably. But what seems to be the most important role is intrusted to Cleo Ridgely, whom, it is stated, makes her return to the screen after a long lapse. The acting honors are rightfully hers as she makes the most of the most prominent character. The rest of the cast are adequate.

The Cast

Margaret Rolfe.....Betty Compson
Julian Rolfe.....William T. Carleton
Clara Foster.....Cleo Ridgely
Phil Long.....Casson Ferguson
Judge Thompson.....Henry Barrows
Aunt Lucy.....Helen Dunbar
Bates ..... Clarence Burton
Detective.....J. S. Stembridge

Adapted from Clyde Fitch's Play, "The Woman in the Case."
Scenario by Albert S. LeVino.
Directed by Penrhyn Stanlaws.
Length, 6,461 Feet.

The Story

Julian Rolfe is sentenced to death on the testimony of Clara Foster, a woman of the underworld. His young wife, in a last desperate attempt to save his life, assumes the character of a woman of the Foster type, makes friends with her enemy and finally wrings a confession from her in time to save her husband.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

A Tale of Miscarried "Justice" That Beauty and Daring Put Right—For When One Woman, Through Hate, Had Sent a Man to Prison, Another, Through Love, Set Out to Make Him Free.

Exploitation Angles: Play up Miss Compson strongly, and then sell the artist, who is almost as well known. Make a newspaper talk about the appeal of the new art to the exemplars of the old school and get interest in the production apart from the Compson fans.

"At the Sign of the Jack o'Lantern"

An Interesting Story Presented by H. J. Reynolds, Produced by Renco Film Co., and Released by Hodkinson.

Reviewed by T. S. daPonte.

Lloyd Ingraham, in directing "At the Sign of the Jack o' Lantern," has given the screen an entertaining production. There are no disconnected joints in the story, which runs along smoothly, and for this Mr. Ingraham again deserves praise for he, in collaboration with David Kirkland, adapted the film production. It was taken from the well-known story by Myrtle Reed.

The acting throughout is good, and goes a long way toward lending plausibility to a number of events which are somewhat amazing, but which, nevertheless, are not too far fetched to seem possible. Right from the first the story catches the interest by showing the arrival of two travelers at their destination during a furious rain and electrical storm—such a scene which when photographed as graphically as this one is—immediately grips the imagination.

Particular mention should be made of the characterization of a New England maid-of-all-work.

The Cast

Mrs. Carr.....Betty Ross Clark
Harlan Carr.....Earl Schenck
Dick ..... Wade Boteler
The Poet.....Victor Potel
Mrs. Dodd.....Clara Clark Ward
Jeremiah Bradford.....Monty Collins
Uncle Skyles.....William Cortwright
Mrs. Holmes.....Mrs. Raymond Hatton
Willie ..... Newton Hall
Elaine ..... Zella Ingraham

Story by Myrtle Reed.
Directed by Lloyd Ingraham.
Adapted by Lloyd Ingraham and David Kirkland.
Length, 5,193 Feet.

The Story

Harlan Carr is bequeathed $600 and an old country house by the will of his uncle, which also provides that a further legacy is due Carr contingent upon his treatment of a number of guests who will visit him at the old homestead. Carr takes his bride to live in the old house. Almost immediately the guests, who were related by marriage to Carr's uncle, begin to arrive. Most of them make themselves obnoxious, but Carr and his wife, mindful of the clause in the uncle's will, fear to turn them out. Finally, however, their rudeness can be stood no longer, and Carr orders them to leave. The full contents of the will is then made known by a lawyer, and the Carr's are surprised to learn that their action in turning out the unwelcome guests is commended, and that a larger legacy is coming to them for so doing.

Exploitation Angles: Don't spoil the surprise in this by spilling the climax, but advertise that everyone with relatives will be interested in the story and its outcome. Get them all interested.

"Schoolday Love"

W. S. Campbell's latest two-reel comedy for Educational release is undoubtedly the weakest of the series. It presents the same child actors and same animals as in his previous comedies, and they are as willing workers as ever, but the story is not there and the "gags" are few and old. The only feature left to the picture, therefore, is its novelty of having only child and animal actors. Campbell's previous comedies have been good, especially his first one for Educational, but now he has reached the point where he must inject some new ideas in his stuff, and especially at least a hint of a plot. He has the physical material for good comedies.—S. S.

"Her Social Value"

First National Attraction Has Charm, Strength and Beauty.

Reviewed by J. M. Shellman.

Strength, charm and beauty are the principal ingredients of "Her Social Value," starring Katherine MacDonald, in which Miss MacDonald furnishes the major portion of the beauty. While the theme of this story hangs on the time honored plot concerning the shop girl who marries riches and thereby is supposed to find herself out of her class, ill at ease and uncomfortable, still it is told from a refreshingly new standpoint.

It brings home with a wallop, and several morals; that double dealing is bad business; that men and women marry for better or worse and should stand by; that snobbishness generally rides for a fall and that real love-matches are the best after all.

All the characters are portrayed excellently by the well selected cast. Essentially a drama, the fine points of humor throughout, are skillfully brought out by Director Jerome Storm through Vincent Hamilton, and the station agent and the driver at the station, who played their roles with rare understanding and subtlety. Values in lighting effects are above the average, especially the one representing a cloud passing over the moon, dimming its radiance. The camera work shows that Joseph Brotherton knows his business and the sets are exquisitely designed and arranged.

The production should prove of great box office value, especially because the well told story tells of a girl who overcomes great odds.

The Cast

Marion Hoyte.....Katherine MacDonald
James Lodge.....Roy Stewart
Clifford Trent.....Bertram Grassby
Bertha Harmon.....Betty Ross Clarke
Shipley ..... Winter Hall
Joe Harmon.....Joseph Girard
Gwendolyn Shipley.....Lillian Rich
Leroy Howard.....Vincent Hamilton
Ruth Lodge.....Helen Raymond
Belle ..... Violet Phillips

Story, Scenario and Direction by Jerome Storm.
Length, 5 Reels.

The Story

The salesgirl, Marion Hoyte, has finer instincts than the other members of her family, who are contented with their lowly station in life; so when the society man, James Lodge, proposes marriage, she accepts and they are wed.

But complications ensue and although they love each other, they become divorced. Then one day there is an accident, and the girl and her husband find themselves reunited in an extraordinarily original manner in a Western mining camp, far from the drawing rooms in which they have moved.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

Her Husband's Family Tried to Freeze Her Out and So Did Their Friends—But She Put up a Fight, and Won!

Exploitation Angles: Play Miss MacDonald up, and sell her on her personal charm, using the story to back this appeal. In many places you can clean up with an appeal to shop girls, offering a prize to the largest delegation from a single store.

"Be Reasonable"

Watching the rapid progress of this two-reel Sennett comedy reminds the onlooker of the farces from the same producer released in what old-timers would call the good old days. It is replete with bathing beauties, of the particularly Sennett type, and is played by comedians who provide comedy of the rough-and-tumble variety. The former group is especially pleasing to the eye and the latter will make an audience laugh. And they have excellent comedy material to work upon. Laugh follows laugh.—(First National)—F. T.

"The Flower of the North"

Typical James Oliver Curwood Story Is Filmed in Thrilling Style By Vitagraph.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

Good results with old material is the effect created by "The Flower of the North" which has had the advantage of receiving very vital directing. Spectacularly, the picture is a success with a skillful use of out-door "shots" to set off thrilling action and strong conflicts. The fact that the cause of all the excitement is not too clearly defined is submerged in the vigor of motion and the oversweeping melodramatic effect. Fundamentally, there is scarcely one original idea, the story interest clinging to a feud among the employees of a fishing company and the unraveling of a mystery regarding the heroine's parentage—circumstances such as have many times been used in creating scenarios, and particularly in the plots of James Oliver Curwood. It is the development of the theme, as accomplished by the director, that furnishes the interest in this case. In the rescue of the canoe on the rapids, the attack of the Indians and the mutinous fights among the fishermen he has achieved what was evidently the purpose of the picture—a big, dramatic, pictorial effect.

The cast is headed by Henry Walthall, who embodies the characteristics, as a man and as an actor, that are necessary for his serious, forceful role. His tendency to be reserved is an improvement over some of his performances in the past. Pauline Starke, too, has been appropriately cast. On the whole she is sincere and pleasing, but detracts from some of the scenes because of her self-consciousness.

The Cast

Philip Whittemore.....Henry B. Walthall
Jeanne D'Arcambal.....Pauline Starke
Thorpe ..... Harry Northrup
Pierre ..... Joe Rickson
Blake ..... Jack Curtis
D'Arcambal ..... Emmett King
MacDougal ..... Walter Rodgers
Cassidy ..... William McCall
Sachigo ..... Vincent Howard

Story by James Oliver Curwood.
Scenario by Bradley J. Smollen.
Directed by David Smith.
Length, 7,130 Feet.

The Story

Jeanne D'Arcambal, known as "The Flower of the North," has never been told a secret concerning her mother. Thorpe, superintendent of a Canadian Fishing Company, tells her one day that he is her real father. She believes him and is about to give up everything, including her sweetheart, for Thorpe, because of the power he holds over her, but she is prevented from this mistake and is the means of saving her sweetheart and half the community from being killed. She then learns the truth about her mother and father.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

Another James Oliver Curwood Thriller. Including an Attack by the Indians, a Rescue on the Rapids and a Mountain Girl's Romance.

Exploitation Angles: With Walthall and Curwood, make this a campaign of names and sell on those. It is a play strong enough to get back of and push, but sell the names and they will like the story all the better because they will not have been oversold on that.

"Bright Eyes"

There are two laughs, of the "wow" variety, in "Bright Eyes," the latest Ben Turpin-Sennett Comedy, that would amply repay a spectator sitting through the rest of the two reels even if there was nothing else to laugh at. One is the scene where the comedian, he of the indeterminate eyesight, innocently looks at a huge clock to note the time and the clock stops, illustrating a familiar classification of homeliness. The other is where Turpin sits at a dressing table for the purpose of brushing his hair and the mirror shatters itself to pieces. Like most humorous film scenes, they are not funny in description, but wait until you or your audience sees them.

But these two scenes are by no means the only hilarious moments in "Bright Eyes." There are frequent incidents that are typically Turpinesque, which is saying much in the matter of comedy.—(First National)—F. T.

"Jungle Goddess"

A Hair-Raising Animal Serial State Righted by Export and Import Film Corporation.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri.

When Col. William N. Selig gave exhibitors of the country "The Lost City" the general impression in the trade was that he had reached the pinnacle of serial production. But his current offering of fifteen episodes, "The Jungle Goddess," is far more elaborate in production, more daring in presentation and representative of the investment of considerable money. Picturesque and pretentious, "The Jungle Goddess" establishes a high mark in serials, for in this one there are three villains instead of the usual one, each making his appearance as soon as his predecessor is killed off.

If this serial doesn't make your patrons boost your house nothing else will, for it is one of those episode productions that has a logical story, plenty of human interest and is literally choked with hair-raising, recklessly sensational stunts in which wild beasts play a most important role. There are fights among the animals; in the fact, the audience, in one episode, actually sees a huge elephant crush the life out of a ferocious lion. The serial gets under way from the very beginning of the first episode with a sensational balloon flight. There is a battle in the air that is by far the most fearless and best reflected on the screen. There are enough animals shown to terrorize the entire country if let loose.

For genuine, honest-to-goodness thrills this serial is hard to beat. Once your patrons see one episode they will flock to your house to see the serial through to its finish. The acting is splendid, particularly that of Elinor Field and Truman Van Dyke. The savages took dangerous enough to keep any one from wanting to penetrate the interior of Darkest Africa. But if your patrons like serials or want thrills that will knock them out of their seats you cannot afford to overlook booking this one. The photography is excellent, as is also the direction. If you liked Col. Selig's "The Lost City" or "Miracles of the Jungle," you'll go wild over "The Jungle Goddess."

The Cast

The Jungle Goddess.....Elinor Field
Her Sweetheart.....Truman Van Dyke

Scenario by Agnes Johnston and Frank Dazey.
Directed by James Conway.
Fifteen episodes of two reels each.

The Story

The story concerns the daughter of an English nobleman who is kidnapped and thrown into the basket of a balloon which, freed, drifts for days until it is shot down with a flaming arrow over the jungles of Africa. The little girl is offered as a sacrifice to the lions by the natives, but miraculously escapes and is thereupon adopted by the tribe and grows up as "the jungle goddess." Her playmate of childhood days, grown up now, decides to hunt for the vanished heiress. He finally meets the girl after a series of adventures. Thrilling adventures take the couple across three continents, through Africa, China, India, and other countries, in their effort to reach civilization.

"Anne of Little Smoky"

Story of the Hill Country Portrayed by Fine Cast and Distributed by Playgoers Pictures

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

Conflict between enforcement of the game laws and the habits of the natives of a mountainous region, forms the basis of "Anne of Little Smoky," presented by Playgoers' Pictures, through Pathe Exchange, Inc. It is of average interest and is hampered by the fact that it is built on an oft-used theme.

The work of an excellent cast aids this picture materially. Joe King as the Forest Ranger, and Winifred Westover as his sweetheart, the daughter of a poacher whom he arrests, are entirely satisfactory, while excellent performances of the gypsy girl and the head of a mountain clan are given by Dolores Cassinelli and Frank Sheridan, respectively.

The locale is, of course, among the hills, and there are many beautiful shots. The story is not always convincingly told and some of the scenes could be shortened to advantage. Taken as a whole, however, the production should prove satisfactory to the average audience.

Story by Edward Connor.
Scenario by Frank Beresford.
Length, 5 Reels.

The Story

Bob, a forest ranger in a mountain country, loves Anne, the daughter of the head of the clan. Bob saves a gypsy girl from unwelcome attentions and she later saves his life. Anne becomes jealous. Bob arrests Anne's father for breaking the game laws, but he is acquitted as by a ruse she has arranged that the evidence is missing. In a row following the trial Bob is trailed with blood hounds as it is believed he has killed Ed. Anne, realizing she loves Bob, dons his clothes and seeks to throw the dogs off the scent, but finally in a storm lands at Bob's cabin where Ed. is found alive. Tom, Anne's brother, who was shell-shocked in France, is restored to health when he saves the gypsy whom he loves from the advances of a renegade Indian, and the picture ends with a double romance.

A Dual Romance of the Hills, of the Conflict Between Federal Law and the Habits of the Natives, Portrayed by a Cast of Four Stars.

Romantic Story of the Mountain Country Presenting Four Stars, Winifred Westover, Joe King, Dolores Cassinelli and Frank Sheridan.

Exploitation Angles: Seek to sell on the locale and the players, letting the story slide. You will get better results with the names.

"Stamboul"

Burton Holmes has offered a subject that will receive exceptional appreciation in this travelogue which is both entertainment and education. In a succession of scenes displaying the beautiful architectural masterpieces of the city, he has caught a certain spirit of romance and awe in featuring some of the characteristic buildings and mosques that will be apt to interest everyone. The number is a good example of the advantage of showing only what is slightly out of the ordinary in a travel picture, and eliminating the more common phases of life. The Turkish types and customs are strikingly different and he has not forgotten to play up the veiled women.—M. K.

"Little Miss Smiles"

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

With a Ghetto tenement as the background, "Little Miss Smiles" was inspired by the same strata of life in New York as was "Humoresque," and its characters have a similar appeal. Family life under circumstances where the children are many and the pennies few with a strong emphasis on the mother-love theme, gives a chance for the combination of comedy and pathos that makes a picture human. Shirley Mason, in rags and smiles, has a lovable role of certain appeal, and she is supported by a cast of more than average ability.

The story as first conceived, has some very reliable material, some situations such as the mother's going blind, the father having plenty of family love but no ambition, and the young son choosing a prize-fighter's career against his parents' wishes. But it is rather in spite of the manner of directing than because of it, that these points register. The idea is there, the cast is at hand, but the certain inspiring touch of the director that can make a splendid thing out of a good thing, is somehow lacking. Nevertheless, the picture is good entertainment and deserves popularity. Arthur Rankin, as the youthful aspirant to fistic fame, gives a fine performance, and Gaston Glass is a clean, self-confident type, perfectly suited to his part.

Length, 4,884 feet.

The Story

The story concerns the vicissitudes of the Aaronson family, and their joy and sorrow as they realize on one hand that the mother's sight is failing, and on the other hand that the daughter Esther is beloved by a popular young doctor. Then there is the anxiety caused by the ambition of Davie, the eldest boy, to become what Papa Aaronson calls a "box fighter." The boy gets into evil companionship, shoots a gangster who has insulted his sister, and causes dire complications.

"Liquid Gold of Texas"

These pictures are aptly named for they show oil, and the manner in which it is extracted from the earth down in Texas where fortunes are being made over night by lucky prospectors. The "mushroom" towns that spring up around a newly discovered oil field seem almost as romantic as those which used to follow in the wake of a gold strike.

The enormous development of the country which follows the bringing in of a well that is more than a temporary gusher is pictured in the films and an intimation of the vast amount of money that is necessary for machinery and other incidentals necessary to carry on the work after oil has been struck is indicated by the pictures.

Veritable lakes of oil are shown, these being the reservoirs in which the liquid is stored. There are many processes which the oil must go through in being refined for commercial purposes.—T. S. daP.

"The Call of Home"

Familiar Theme Is Dressed Up With Fine Flood Scenes—R-C Release.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

Many times the not unusual feat of giving a new appearance to an over familiar theme has been accomplished by fresh treatment. In the case of "The Call of Home," this refreshment does not come until way along in the fifth of the six reels. It is a group of flood scenes that are as fine as anything of the sort that has been done on the screen before, and provides a most welcome relief, of excitement and rapt wonder as the realistic, mad torrent of water completely flooding a large valley and destroying everything, including the spectators' ennui, in its path. It lifts the picture out of a most serious slough of mediocrity, and gives R-C a one scene picture that will prove popular where audences are not over particular concerning the freshness of the moving picture fare they are served.

Gasnier, the director, has done all it deserves with a hopeless story that does not offer opportunities to spread himself but once. And the first four thousand feet of the feature have the appearance of being the result of no one taking any sincere interest in what they were doing. The picture is miscast and the performers do not help matters to any noticeable degree. The titles are bad attempts at "literature" of a "moral" tone.

"Exit the Vamp"

Amusing Paramount Comedy Has Ethel Clayton As Star.

Reviewed by F. V. Armato.

"Exit the Vamp," a Lasky production, is a story that brings a busy young lawyer husband to the sudden realization of his own peril, in becoming a victim to the wiles of a scheming vampire.

The wife's part in combating the charms of the vamp, who skillfully tries to ensnare her unsophisticated husband, shows a marked degree of skillful acting by Ethel Clayton, who adopts the unusual method of herself vamping her husband. The picture is enhanced by many amusing episodes and dramatic situations which occur during the impersonation of the vamp.

The story of this Lasky feature presents a problem of every day life that can be exploited to great advantage. Although there appears to be quite a tame beginning which is altogether pleasing, the vamping of the husband which follows assumes proportions of exceptional interesting moments and holds the undivided attention of the audience.

The Cast

Marion Shipley.....Ethel Clayton
John Shipley.....T. Roy Barnes
Mrs. Willy Strong.....Fontaine La Rue
Old Man Shipley.....Theodore Roberts
Robert Pitts.....William Boyd

Story and Scenario by Clara Beranger.
Directed by Frank Urson.
Length, 5 Reels.

The Story

Marion Shipley is one of those sweet little perfect wives who wait on their husbands with rare devotion, and because of their unselfishness and her own children and those of her sister-in-law, the vamp shows her gratitude by starting a flirtation with Marion's husband. As affairs progress, Shipley guarantees the vamp's account for a diamond necklace. Through the jewelry salesman, who is a friend of hers, Marion discovers this. Taking the young man as an escort, she goes to the cafe where her husband and Mrs. Strong are dining and sees the latter hand him her apartment key.

Instead of provoking a dramatic scene, Marion decides to beat the vamp at her own game. Going to Mrs. Strong's apartment, she makes herself up charmingly, transforming her hair and her gown and borrowing the make-up and perfume of the vamp. Shipley arrives and in the dim light of the room he sees only the back of his wife of whose identity he is ignorant. She proceeds to vamp him so perfectly and completely that she is in his arms when the real vamp arrives. By clever handling of the situation the wife makes the vamp's presence odious to hubby and thus binds a contract that will stand any kind of attack.

Exploitation Angles: Hang this on the story as much as the star, making your appeal to deserted wives with "Are you losing your husband's love? See the cure in 'Exit the Vamp'" and similar appeals. You could make this bring you business even with an unknown star, but with Miss Clayton to help, you should clean up.

"An Idle Roomer"

It has an elaborate start—showing the hero, Harry Sweet, in a Turkish setting. The harem queen's perfume atomizer, however, turns out to be the drippings from a milk bottle when Harry wakes up. The beginning of this comedy, which is a Universay Century, is enough out of the ordinary to get the spectator into a receptive mood at once and what follows is similarly ambitious. The business of making explosive pancakes is new and furnishes many laughs. All of the comedy situations are well planned and succeed in getting the punch at the right moment. (Universal) M. K.

"Man from Lost River"

Lloyd-Goldwyn Picture of North Woods Is Highly Entertaining.

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

That irreconcilable minority which snarls and sneers at motion pictures, scoffing when they are classified as an art, should be forced to see Frank Lloyd's production of "The Man From Lost River," from the story by Katharine Newlin Burt. It would not silence their raucous voices, for theirs is a hopeless malady, but it would test their facility for finding excuses upon which to base their destructive criticisms.

This Goldwyn picture is very skilfully constructed. Denied greatness by the limited scope of its plot, it nevertheless ranks in the vanguard of really worthwhile pictures. The treatment by Lloyd of a not extraordinary story is what raises it above the level of most North Woods stuff. He has seen to it that the film possesses every essential—smooth continuity, good scenic backgrounds, fine photography and excellent acting. Therefore it has realism and force. It seems to be lacking in only one respect—there might have been more comedy relief.

The chief feature is the acting. House Peters shows to great advantage in the role of the lumber camp foreman, a rough-and-ready chap of sterling worth. Allan Forrest is perfectly cast as the selfish, cowardly Easterner. Fritzi Brunette proves an admirable foil for the contrasting of the characters of the two men around whom the action centers. The others make the most of their minor parts.

The Cast

Barnes .....House Peters
Marcia .....Fritzi Brunette
Fosdick .....Allan Forrest
Rossiter .....James Gordon
Mr. Carson.....Monte Collins
Mrs. Carson.....Milla Davenport

Adapted from the story by Katharine Newlin Burt.
Directed by Frank Lloyd.
Photographed by Norbert Brodine.
Length, 5,694 feet.

The Story

Fosdick, a pampered member of New York society, tries to escape the wanderlust by joining a band of lumberjacks in the North Woods. He marries Marcia, a girl in the camp, but tires of the life and abandons her, only returning when oil is discovered on her land. His reappearance is not welcomed by Barnes, the camp foreman, who loves the girl, and the coward is forced by the foreman to care for Marcia when she is taken ill of a contagious disease. After her husband's death, Marcia learns that the rough man she feared is the real man, after all.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

A Stirring Story of a Girl Who Married a Coward, and How Real Love Eventually Came to Her.

House Peters and Fritzi Brunette Are Featured in This Gripping Tale of the North Woods, Written by Katharine Newlin Burt.

Exploitation Angles: Don't overboom this, but tell in sincere, convincing words that it is a real picture and worth seeing. Tell them that it is not a "great" picture, but something more rare than that, a good, even production.

"William Cullen Bryant"

William Cullen Bryant is one of Kineto Review pictures in its "Great American Author" series, and this film is enlivened with portions of the poems of this great writer. There are also "shots" of some of his descendants who still live at the grand old estate at Roslyn, Long Island, which the poet inhabited from 1843 until the end of his life.

With each quotation of Bryant's poems displayed on the screen there is a picture which elaborates it and fits the subject.—T. S. daP.

"The Ruse of the Rattler"

A Pathe-Playgoers Western Drama With Lively Star and Action.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri.

J. P. McGowan may not be a William S. Hart, but he most assuredly does know how to reach out and grasp the heartstrings of his audience. McGowan is something more than a screen actor—he is of that rare type known as showman-actor, for his work is a combination of natural acting and keen showmanship. Without the presence of a showman, "The Ruse of the Rattler" would lose much of the appeal it now possesses; in fact, it would probably not have seen the light of day. McGowan is manly, just a regular, every day man—not the superman one usually sees portraying the American cowpuncher.

As an entertainment vehicle, "The Ruse of the Rattler" is an ordinary Western with the usual hoakum to arouse the youngster and refresh the adult's memory of ambitions of yesteryear. The story is peppy, for it calls for plenty of action—and gets it. It is fast-moving with ample adventure and a romance that constitutes the other outstanding feature, the first being the work of McGowan.

If your house is the sort that caters to audiences that delight in the melodramatic in motion pictures, "The Ruse of the Rattler" will satisfy for it is so distinctively Western in action and atmosphere that you are made to feel like hopping out of your comfortable seat and joining the posse in pursuit of the ever doublecrossing villain.

The Cast

The "Rattler".....J. P. McGowan
Henry Morgan.....G. McGregor
Helen Henderson.....Lillian Rich
Bud ..... Jean Perry
Mrs. Bludgeon.....Dorothy Wolbert
"Squint" Smiley.....Stanley Fritz
Tim Bludgeon.....Andrew Waldron

Story by A. W. Coldeway.
Directed by J. P. McGowan.
Length, 5 Reels.

The Story

They called him "the Rattlesnake" because, like the reptile, he never struck before rattling a warning. He is commissioned by Henry Morgan to turn the Sandersons out of their home. The "rattler" takes one look at Helen Sanderson and resigns. And in so doing he exposes Morgan, who vows vengeance. Morgan hires a gang to kill the "rattler," who manages to escape, although Morgan's confederates believe him dead. The "rattler" makes his appearance at the psychological moment and in true western fashion proceeds to administer a wholesale beating to the villainous element. And here the tables turn, for from that moment on the "rattler" finds matters to his liking, defeats the villain and wins a wife.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

A western drama of thrills, suspense, action and romance—A daredevil, hard-riding, quick-shooting, bad man. A brave girl. A clever villain. Some hearty chuckles. A real plot that keeps you guessing.

Exploitation Angles: Play up McGowan as a new western star, and sell him hard with the usual melodramatic appeal.

"Battling Torchy"

This two-reel Torchy Comedy released by Educational and featuring Johnny Hines, burlesques the story of a love-smitten youth who seeks a way to "cut out" a pugilist competing for the affections of his sweetheart. It is all nicely "framed" for Torchy's double—a first-class fighter—to knock out the "pug" in a boxing match, when the double is hurt and Torchy finds himself in the ring. How he wins the fight by using a syringe full of ether is amusing.—S. S.

"Reckless Chances"

Thrilling Romance Made By Playgoers Pictures, Starring J. P. McGowan, Released By Pathe.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

The railroad track proves a thrilling and romantic setting for action in "Reckless Chances." Most of the old short-cuts to melodramatic climaxes have been used, the hero being the daredevil type, who plunges into each adventure, regardless whether it promises to be his last, the heroine, a girl who keeps up with him, and the high spots of the drama being the derailment and the train robbery.

Obviously, it has the elements of the Western thriller of pioneer days in picture production. But the acting is good and the punch is not lacking, due, to a great extent, to the fact that the enthusiasm of the performers and the director is contagious. J. P. McGowan has a happy-go-lucky personality that seems to justify almost anything he does, and Dorothy Wood is a charming Irish colleen type. The role of Dan Murphy, her father, is delightfully handled by Andrew Waldron.

The Cast

Terry Nolan.....J. P. McGowan
Nora Murphy.....Dorothy Wood
Dan Murphy.....Andrew Waldron
Harry Allen.....Robert Walker

Story by Anthony W. Coldewey.
Directed by J. P. McGowan.
Length, about 5,000 feet.

The Story

The story opens with a runaway, in which horse, carriage and a girl topple over the bank. Then McGowan is accused of robbery and arrested. He makes an escape from the sheriff. Further dangers await the hero when he flirts with the chance of being recaptured, and stays in the vicinity to be near a pretty girl whom he befriended when her automobile crashed into a wagon and she was attacked by the owners, who are the real thieves. Of course, he vindicates himself and wins the girl, in spite of paternal opposition.

Program and Exploitation Catchline:

Working on a Railroad Had Its Thrills and Its Dangers: And if One Happened to Be in Love With the Superintendent's Daughter, Life Was Far From a Bore.

Exploitation Angles: Sell this on thrills and remind your patrons that McGowan was making thrillers before they were invented.

"Dawn to Dusk in Egypt"

Because of its picturesque history, Egypt stirs the imagination as few countries do. Where is the person who has not heard of the Pyramids or the Sphinx or the Nile? There are such people but they are very much in the minority. The very mention of the homeland of Cleopatra and the Pharaohs intrigues the mind. Now Robert C. Bruce has come forth with a one-reel World Wandering for Educational titled, "Dawn to Dusk in Egypt." It is a beautiful thing. He has carefully angled his "shots" of the River Nile with its burden of sailing vessels, and the ancient tombs of rulers, and obtained striking results. It is a short subject that will fit in with any program in any picture house.—S. S.

"False Alarm"

The village fire department has been made to do its duty again as a laugh-factory in this Fox comedy, featuring Chester Conklin. Not altogether unsuccessful in its intent in this case, at the same time it seems that this subject deserves a well-earned rest. One delay after another halts the advance of the fire department to the place of need and the suspense has been built upon this. It is the suspense rather than the comedy that holds the interest during this time. (Fox) M. K.

"Why Announce Your Marriage?"

Delightful Entertainment Provided In Selznick Feature Starring Elaine Hammerstein.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

Fanny Hurst's marital experiment, consisting of separate establishments for man and wife, with consequent freedom of action, has apparently furnished the idea on which is builded the Selznick production, "Why Announce Your Marriage?" starring Elaine Hammerstein.

Those responsible are to be complimented upon having evolved a thoroughly entertaining photoplay on an unhackneyed theme. The subject has been treated humorously with the introduction of farce comedy complications, and some of the scenes while in themselves inclined to be risque are saved by the knowledge of the spectator that the young couple are actually married.

Miss Hammerstein and Niles Welch as the secretly married couple are entirely satisfactory and the remainder of the cast is adequate; particularly true is this of Arthur Housman, who as a "gentleman drunk," gives one of the best and most laughable performances of a society swell that has ever been seen on the screen. You don't get tired of him, although he is in this condition during almost the entire photoplay, and his every appearance brought forth laughter from the spectators at Loew's State Theatre.

There is something doing every minute that will hold your interest and this picture should prove thoroughly entertaining and amusing to the majority of theatre patrons

Story by Lewis Allen Browne and Alan Crosland.
Directed by Alan Crosland.
Length, 5 Reels.

The Story

Arline Mayfair, a successful illustrator, is in love with Jimmy Winthrop, but does not wish to marry him as she wishes to establish a reputation as Arline Mayfair and not as Jimmy Winthrop's wife. While aiding another young couple to elope, Arline and Jimmy decide to be married secretly. Complications soon begin to ensue, arising from a visit to Arline's studio where Jimmy's hat, cigars and shoes are discovered. This starts gossip, and the friends of the young couple decide to visit Jimmy and advise him of the situation. They find him at home, much embarrassed, and later discover some feminine lingerie in his room. Arline decides to go away to the country. Finally Jimmy follows her to her cottage. A burglar scare at the nearby hotel results in the burglar taking refuge in Arline's house, where the crowd find Arline and Jim en deshabille. Finally everything is explained satisfactorily when the gentleman drunk, who has chased the burglar, discovers the marriage license.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

Delightful Comedy Drama, Starring Elaine Hammerstein, Based on the Question of Secret Marriages.

Exploitation Angles: Play on the title as well as the star, using her to win her fan followers and getting the rest from the snappy situations. Circularizing the engagement and wedding announcements will give you some capital and in small towns you can make a lot of talk by starting a discussion of the incident. "Are you married?" will make good snipe and teaser material.

"Diamond Carlisle"

Clark-Cornelius' Northwest Melodrama Full of Action—State Rights Release.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri.

Clark Cornelius are releasing a series of Northwest melodramas and this is one of the series. It deals with the romantic and adventurous Northwest and the famous Mounted Police and outlaws of that country. It is the old story of a gambler, deserted by a treacherous pal, seeking to make amends. How he does it furnishes the excuse for a series of thrilling fights. But withal, "Diamond Carlisle" is action personified.

While it is scenically picturesque and photographically excellent, there is a sad lacking of good acting. George Cheseboro, who is starred, however, carries himself through the entire five reels with flying colors. But this is not true with the remainder of the cast, which either overacts or fails to take full advantage of the opportunities offered in the respective roles. For instance, Frank Caffray as the weakling overdoes his part and his action in the holdup is one that is farcical—not natural even for a weakling. Iva Brown makes a beautiful Mae Boyd, but she is slow and seems to take things generally for granted.

The climax is a hair-raising affair, a struggle between the two former pals on a lumber slide. The two are shown fighting all the way down the slide and finally one, the villain, of course, is picked up by the hero and cast off some 200 feet below into a valley, dead. Cheseboro does spectacularly realistic work in this scene—so realistic and thrilling that applause seems to just naturally follow his reckless escape and dangerous flight to freedom.

The Cast

"Diamond Carlisle".....George Cheseboro
Lopez ..... Alfred Hewston
"Black" Meyer.....Milburn Morante
Belle ..... Peggy Weightman
Dick Boyd.....Frank Caffray
Mae Boyd.....Iva Brown
Mrs. Boyd.....Mary Hawley
Virginia Boyd.....Virginia Morante

Produced by Milburn Morante.
Length, 5 Reels.

The Story

"Diamond Carlisle" is a gambler, hounded by the Northwest police. His pal, Lorenz, had deserted him in the hour of his greatest need. He vows vengance and seeks freedom in another section of the country, where he is known as Jack Taylor, gambler. He is employed to cheat weaklings out of their money. He succeeds. Among his victims is Dick Boyd, brother of Mae Boyd, with whom "Taylor" falls in love. Later developments disclose the fact that Dick and Mae are being victimized by Jack's employer. Desperate, Dick, in an effort to meet gambling debts, holds up two messengers of "Black" Meyer, the saloon keeper. Dick is recognized and later arrested. Realizing that he had indirectly brought unhappiness on the girl he loves, "Taylor" sets out to make amends. He locates the stolen money and returns it, only to find that Lorenz had reached town. The latter, terrified, seeks to escape, but he is overtaken by "Taylor." The half-breed dives into the lumber slide wherein a fight ensues between the two, "Taylor" winning. At the crucial moment, the Northwest police arrive. "Taylor" exchanges clothes with Lorenz, whom the police believe to be "Diamond Carlisle' and congratulate "Taylor" for his work. "Taylor' now is free to marry Mae Boyd, having cleared her brother and redeemed himself.

Exploitation Angles: Play up the melodramatic action, laying stress upon the fight on the slide and lay off the mounted police. Hang it all on the fight and the general hustling and sell the action for all it is worth, which will get in those most likely to approve the play.

"The Invisible Fear"

Anita Stewart-First National Picture Should Prove Acceptable.

Reviewed by Clarence L. Linz.

"The Invisible Fear," with Anita Stewart, a First National production, is a good program picture. The photography is good and the acting on the whole is good. There is nothing marvelous about the picture, but it will hold the audience and the exhibitor will not lose money on it.

The Cast

Sylvia Langdon.....Anita Stewart
Arthur Comstock.....Walter MacGrail
Bentley Arnold.....Alan Forest
Marshall Arnold.....Hamilton Morse
Mrs. Marshall Arnold.....Estelle Evans
John Randall.....Ogden Crane
Nagi ..... George Kuwa
Butler ..... Edward Hunt

Story by Hampton Del Ruth.
Scenario by Madge Tyrone.
Directed by Edwin Careine.
Length, 4,900 Feet.

The Story

Sylvia Langdon, who in defending herself from the advances of Arthur Comstock, had thrown a candle stick at him and knocked him senseless is haunted after seeing his prostrate form, from the window by the terrible fear that she has killed him. Soon after she is married to Bentley and at a party in their home she is suddenly startled by the appearance of Comstock. She flees to her room in a hysteria. He follows and demands that she open the safe containing the family jewels. An argument follows which reveals that Arthur had killed his uncle, and it was his body which Sylvia had seen prostrated on the unforgettable night.

Exploitation Angles: Give this all to the star and her personality. Let the story slide, but play up the theme of the fear which probably overshadows every man and woman.

"Neighbor Nellie"

Prizma made a good selection when they picked little Madge Evans as the star of this picture. She is an attractive girl, and many fans remember her for her good work as a child actress during recent years. She photographs nicely and shows up particularly well in these pictures in natural color. The picture is adapted from a poem of the same title, depicting the beautiful friendship of an elderly man with grown children, for his little ten-year-old neighbor next door.—C. S. S.

"The Bear and the Bees"

The motto that "Evil gain brings pain" has been deftly used by Paul Terry in this animated cartoon fable, distributed by Pathe. It is well up to the standard of this series, with clever animation and humorous touches. The bear is shown as a merry troubadour who serenades first a squirrel and then a monkey with dire results. He then steals a barrel of cider from a farmer and after an exciting chase finds a hive of bees. Confidently approaching it, he knocks the hive over, and then the bees get busy with poor bruin.—C. S. S.

"Years to Come"

What we may possibly see in years to come when man is subordinated and woman supreme is cleverly and humorously treated in this single reel Pathe Comedy, starring Snub Pollard. There is the tired business woman, the home-loving husband who is pursued by a stage-door-Jennie, and other characters where the sexes are reversed. The women all wear mannish cut clothes, while the men, though retaining their bifurcated garments, nevertheless wear laces and ruffled collars. The main situation occurs when wifey comes home suddenly and finds poor hubby being vamped by a big blonde. —C. S. S.

"The Last Payment"

Pola Negri's Latest Picture a Morbid Tragedy Which Is Crudely Acted and Directed.

Reviewed by J. M. Shellman.

Morbid, gruesome and tragic, and very much on the order of one of Poe's tales is "The Last Payment," starring Pola Negri, produced by U. F. A. and released by Paramount. It is a modern story and so decidedly different from the ordinary run of American films, that it is an innovation, but one which is not liked, judging from the comments of persons who have seen it, both in Washington, where it was reviewed last week, and at the Rialto, New York, where it played to packed houses, owing to the star's popularity.

Although the story is plausible, one keeps thinking throughout, "So this is the German idea of Mexico, South America and Paris." It may be technically correct, but it does not appear convincing.

Pola Negri goes through a lot of stock pantomime acting and appears to be handicapped in her work. Only once—during the time she is crowned queen of folly—does she rise to emotional heights worthy of her ability.

The photography is only fair and the film lacks even capable lighting effects, while the close-ups are crudely done. The sub-titles, which were probably done in the Paramount studios, are well done. Ernest Lubitch's master hand is missing in this production and the acting, as well as the effects the Director George Jacoby strove for, lack vividness because there is too much apparent effort to make them vivid, too exaggerated and overdone.

There are too many eating and drinking scenes which are tiresome and monotonous. The attempts at comedy relief—judging from the good old American idea of humor—are ridiculous, having only the semblance of gayety. The sets—judged from American standards—are very poor, something like producers put out in 1912. Pola Negri's modern costumes are of a frightful style and do not fit her.

The Cast

Lola ..... Pola Negri
Pedro Maurez, South American Cattleman..
.....Leopold von Ledebour
Henri Durand, Cattle King.....Albert Patry
Paul Durand, His Son.....Henry Liedtke
Jules Lambert.....Reinhold Schunzel

Story by John Brennert and George Jacobi.
Directed by George Jacobi.
Length, 5 Reels.

The Story

Paul Durand, a young Frenchman, goes to South America to look after his father's cattle interests and meeting Lola, the beautiful wife of Pedro Maurez, a cattle grower, both fall in love with each other. Pedro is slain by an assassin and the pretty widow accompanies Paul to Paris. Henri Durand, Paul's father, opens his house to Lola with the result that he falls in love with her himself. Complications ensue.

Jules Lambert, Durand's secretary, recognizes Lola as his former wife through whose extravagance he was ruined and sent to prison for crime. He reveals the truth to young Durand who resolves to go to Bombay. Lambert sends for him on the eve of his departure and tells him that his own father intends to marry Lola. Durand sees his father and Lola in a private box at a public resort and blows out his own brains.

Across his son's body, Lola extends her hand to the father, but he spurns her. The crowd call for Lola who is declared "Queen of the Roses." She drinks a toast to love and at the dawn stumbles through a lonely park and collapses on the ties of a railroad. A moment later the train rushes by and Lola has made her last payment.

Exploitation Angles: Make all your appeal on the fact that in this Pola Negri is seen in her first modern dress story.

"The Scrapper"

Universal Offers Modern Irish Romance Staring Herbert Rawlinson.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

Particularly interesting to those of Irish extraction is the newest Universal attraction, "The Scrapper," starring Herbert Rawlinson. Practically all of the characters portray Irish roles, the whole picture is permeated with the influence of this race and the sub-titles are in Irish-English dialect. It is not, however, propaganda or a historical picture, but a modern romance.

The average spectator will probably feel that the Irish atmosphere has been somewhat overdone, particularly in the sub-titles of which there is a very large number, those during the love scenes being filled with the blarneyest kind of blarney. There is a good fight near the end, but the earlier reels are lacking in action, with a consequent excess of footage.

Herbert Rawlinson as a young Irish contractor is inclined to overact his role and is not always convincing, and is not the ideal type for a character of this kind. As the young Irish girl, Gertrude Olmstead is well cast and attractive to look at. Little Frankie Lee makes the role of the office boy stand out sharply. The remainder of the cast are for the most part well cast. The picture is well photographed and there are some particularly attractive romantic scenes.

The Story

Malloy, a young Irish construction engineer, is assigned to a rush project and falls in love with the contractor's daughter. The contractor's secretary is his rival and puts a Swede on the job to hamper the work. Malloy works all the harder, both at love making and building, and finally in a fist fight beats the Swede. The girl does not prove so easy, so Malloy kidnaps her and takes her to the priest. She fights hard at first, but before they reach the priest everything is alright and she is perfectly willing to marry Malloy.

"A Rambling Romeo"

Uniformly entertaining as two-reel Christie Comedies are, this one featuring Neal Burns, Earl Rodney and Helen Darling, is above the standard set by its predecessors. Given a good story, directors and players nowadays can usually produce a good picture, and this comedy proves it. The "hero," in endeavoring to help a bashful friend, becomes engaged to his friend's sweetheart just after he has consummated an engagement with his "best girl." As the two girls live in the same apartment building, complications naturally ensue.—S. S.

"Whispering Women"

A Clark-Cornelius Melodrama With Great Wolf Fight.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri.

Containing a story, which, although done many times on the screen in various ways, is replete with human interest and with a romance that involves two well-meaning grown-ups and two lovable children of the backwoods country, "Whispering Women" will entertain and cause motion picture enthusiasts to talk favorably because interwoven in the interesting tale is a desperate battle between a dog and a pack of wolves. This fight is the outstanding feature of the photoplay, which is well directed and destined to entertain patrons of theatres featuring the intensely melodramatic productions. As the spectator looks on the screen before him there appears this realistic fight to death between dog and wolf, in which the former obtains a deadly grip on the latter's throat and tightens it until the very life of the beast is choked out of him. This scene should make your patrons sit back in amazement for it is the genuine article that is reflected on the silver sheet.

As entertainment it will hold its own. Its characters are human and are portrayed by actors and actresses who live the parts. But particularly notable is the work of little Clara Heller and Everett Moran as the two youthful lovers. Theirs is a piece of acting that promises a happy future for both. The little girl is called upon to do some emotional acting of a most difficult nature, but in spite of her few years she behaves in veteran fashion and seems to step off the screen and grip the heart of the looker-on, so realistic is her work. Perhaps, if the older players had taken a hint from these juvenile workers the production would be worth a place at the top of a program at the best first-run houses in the country.

The Cast

David Hartley.....Walter Davis
Florence Hartley.....Esther Welty
Dolly ..... Clara Heller
Bobby ..... Everett Moran
"Blackie" Devoe.....George C. Welsh
A Fourth Hartley.....Brindle

Produced by James Keane.
Length, 4,800 Feet.

The Story

Dave Hartley operates the largest lumber camp in his section of the Northwest. He has a loveable wife and charming little daughter who is loved by little Bobbie. Dave is called to his camp. While at camp a mysterious stranger visits the community and the babbling tongues of idle gossipers charge Mrs. Hartley with undue intimacy with him. This gossip reaches Hartley, who sets out to learn of his wife's disloyalty for himself. Hartley is exhausted in the dense woods and is forced to hide. The wolf pack arrives. Meanwhile little Bobbie and Dolly are lost in the forest and spy Hartley. Dolly's faithful dog, Brindle, sensing danger, sets out to find the girl and arrives in the nick of time, just as the wolves are about to make a final plunge for the three. He fights off the wolves, killing one. Later Hartley learns that his wife had not been disloyal, that she had been the victim of idle village gossip and that the mysterious stranger, was none other than her brother who, having committed a crime, comes to his sister, Mrs. Hartley, for help.

Exploitation Angles: Just for a change of pace, try this 114th chapter from the Koran for a teaser: "I fly for refuge unto the Lord of men, the king of men, the God of men, that he may deliver me from the mischief of the whisperer, who slily withdraweth, who whisperest evil suggestions into the breast of men; from genii and men." Run this without comment, and explain to the editor, if he is curious that this is regarded by the Muslims as a talisman against all harm. Then break into your regular advertising with stress upon the wolf fight.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

A Model Installation

From H. M. Ransome, projectionist, Algoma Theatre, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario, come three photographs of the projection room and equipment of the Algoma, which set a record of projection room photographs received by this department to date. I say this, not because there are no faults in the equipment, though but very few are in evidence, but because of the completeness of the photographs, the completeness and orderliness of the accessories, and the care with which the arrangements for photographs were made, even to the placing of cards designating various sections of the room for reference in the text of the letter.

My compliments to Brother Ransome. These are the sort of things which I like to publish, because it shows to other projectionists what can be done by enterprising, energetic men. Could you even imagine a mere mechanism "operator" being able to show such a room as this?

Brother Ransome says:

I am not going to confine myself to just one new year resolution, but my very firstly first for that g-r-r-rand and glorious 1922 (long may she wave) is "A little closer to your (our) department." In this I believe I have been your inseparable (though unseen and unheard of) companion quite entirely long enough to realize what the resolution means.

My first debut will be by way of the photographs with which this letter is inclosed, the same being illustrative of another creation of the Canadian Players Canadian Corporation, Ltd.

With a few exceptions the photographs are self explanatory. I will, however, enlighten you on the points which cannot be shown photographically.

The construction is of steel, concrete and hollow tile. The plant occupies about 3,600 cubic feet, as follows: 300 square feet floor space with a twelve foot ceiling.

The floor is covered with cork linoleum. The room is well ventilated. There is an electric fan at the ceiling. The observation ports are of ample dimensions. They are conveniently located. In section 3 you will notice that the illumination is not the only thing. Notice the rigid bench for general revising.

Entrance may be had either through the theatre, or through a private entrance which does not communicate with the auditorium. The equipment does not call for much comment, except to say that the projectors are placed fully two feet from the wall, and the Transverter is in a separate room, as shown in section 2.

Likes the Transverter

I like this equipment. I have in fact adopted it, not because it is perfect, but by reason of the fact that it, like the room itself, is builded upon a solid foundation—a foundation which affords opportunities to build.

The foregoing covers the main points, and our Supervisor of Projection, C. A. Dentlebeck, ought to be as proud of the high grade service he is rendering to the company, as we, the projectionists, are of them high grade photoplay reproductions we are able to place before our public because of the wisdom he has shown in providing us with the things and the conditions necessary to high grade screen results.

After the opening of this theatre a year ago, Mr. Dentlebeck, before departing for the East, remarked: "You are in charge. There will be 500 miles between us, and you must depend upon your own knowledge and initiative. I wish you success, but don't forget to always fire a bit above the mark you expect to hit."

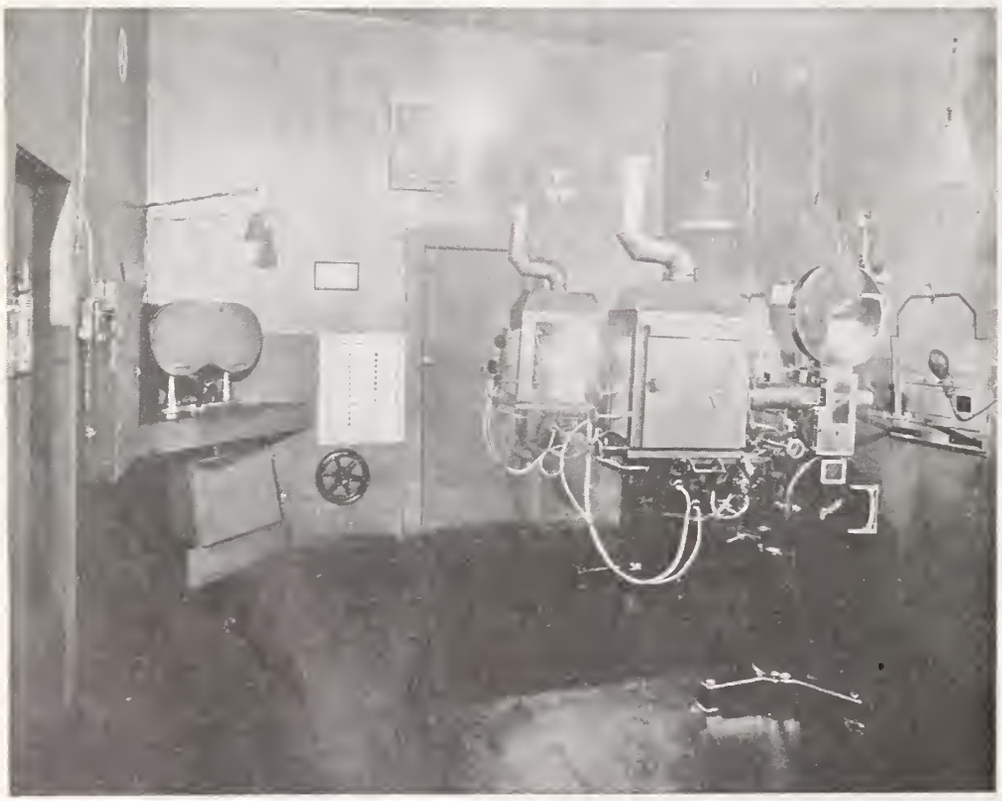

ILLUSTRATION ONE

Of the projection room, Algoma Theatre, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario

Arrangement May Appear Odd

The arrangement of the projection room may appear a bit odd to you. The walls are of two colors, green and grey—the first named above. The revising room, section 3, is all cream color. All conduits are black, with a few minor gold trimmings. All exposed lights are out during projection. Total darkness in projection room is unnecessary when using special shades. They cost little to make, and may be made to distribute light wherever it is needed. Lamphouses are equipped with incandescent lights, controlled by an automatic switch. They have worked perfectly since their installation. Piping of lamphouse vents to ceiling will come under 1922 improvements. I'm using both lamps for stereopticon purposes, but you may be assured the job will be done right.

Lens ports are stopped down to the minimum permissible, as you may see in Figure 1; I also observe a special slide which is opened when projecting stereopticon pictures. Plate glass in all observation ports renders the projection ports very nearly sound proof. The spot is projected through glass.

The "trombone dissolver" is no longer a joke in this theatre. Motor driven, inclosed rewinder was originally located in section 2, which proved to be inconvenient, as well as unbalanced. When opportunity afforded I secured material (thanks be to a warped stage floor, which was torn up) and built with rewinder table you see in Figure 1. At the same time the aforesaid W. S. F. supplied enough lumber for the shelves in section 3. They are put up right, and no warping will cause their wrecking.

The One-Legged Table

The one-legged table in section 2, is the combination of a music stand and spot lamp. Can be transformed into either in just a few moments, meanwhile serving the purpose shown. It is a great friend, because it is portable and can be raised or lowered, and set and locked at any angle. When making repairs it is a very great convenience. The fire shutter item is too important, and too big a subject to be treated here. I will make it the subject of a separate letter, later. Pictures and charts, neatly framed, serve an excellent purpose in our projecting room. The ladder in section 2 leads to a 5 H. P. electric fan.

Since these photographs were taken I have completed a support for any length shutter shaft for Simplex projectors. It works successfully and can be installed on any projector in fifteen minutes. This will also add to the list of 1922 improvements.

One More Thing

This letter of introduction will soon close, but before that there is one thing more, viz: In a recent issue of the department you remarked that the members of Local Union 173 had not been as progressive as they might have been I trust that assertion by you will serve to refresh their ambition, to the end that the good work go on.

The photographs are all time exposures, and you will note that the image representing my 'umble self, section 3 has moved just enough to deceive you as to my homeliness.

I take great interest in the Moving Picture World, giving especial attention to the Projection Department, and am proud that I am able to present to you the fruits of what has been accomplished in so short a time. I wish you the compliments of the Christmas and New Year season.

As to your installation: Taking section 3, the revising room, first; the light color on walls seems to me to be excellent, and the pictures surely do add class—especially the lady clothed for the most part in your very excellent Canadian atmosphere. The revolving shutter blades on the wall prove that you have done considerable experimenting, presumably in an endeavor to get the best possible results.

ILLUSTRATIONS TWO AND THREE
Of Algoma projection room as photographed by H. M. Ransome, projectionist

And will some of those tight-wad, alleged managers who give their projectionist sometimes as many as six whole carbons all at one time, after he has signed a receipt therefor, take a good rubber at the upper shelf in section 3, though if I were in your place, Brother Ransome, I would try an experiment, as follows: I would make a wire basket, or get a letter file wire basket large enough to hold at least fifty carbons, and suspend it from the ceiling about two feet above and immediately over one of the lamphouse vent pipes in Figure 1.

And when the 1922 improvement of connecting those pipes to the open air, or the projection room vent pipe is done, I would have an arrangement made so that at least one bundle of positive and one bundle of negatives could be laid right on or against the pipes. The point is that I am pretty well convinced that nine out of ten projectionists are using carbons containing more or less moisture. Only recently I visited a large theatre in New York City where the projectionist had trouble with a piece of the Silver Tip negative, tip breaking off soon after the arc was struck.

I placed a few of the carbons in the bottom of his lamphouse, told him to let them alone for at least three days and then try them out. Have not had his report yet, but I am pretty certain the trouble was with moisture in the carbon. Anyhow it is not going to hurt to have carbons very thoroughly dried out, and that takes time. Moisture cannot be expelled from a carbon very rapidly.

At first I was going to call you down for allowing so many films to be exposed. And it is bad practice, too, even though it is not in the projection room proper. Small chance of their catching fire—yes, but things just do happen sometimes, and it would be no great expense to have a metal container made which would protect the films at least reasonably well. And that is my chief criticism of your plant—that and that apparently you have not geared down your rewinder to a seven-or-eight-minute-to-the-1,000-feet speed, though maybe you have, too.

Notice to All!

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies by mail on matters which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through the department, remit one dollar.

Much to Commend

But there is much to commend. Here I find no evidence of cheapness. The Famous Players Canadian Corporation evidently does not demand of you 100 per cent. results and supply you 25 per cent. equipment and conditions.

Just look at the Hawkins and other book on the shelf, the Handbook beside typewriter and the lens charts on the wall.

Observe the spare parts beside the typewriter and rubber at the typewriter itself. Evidently Friend Ransome's first act upon entering his projection room to go to work is not a mental counting of the hours and minutes which must expire before he will again get the thrice blessed relief from the grind of perfectly horrible WORK.

We might even conceive that Ransome enters upon his daily duties with some degree of real pleasure, or at least that he thinks as much about his task as he does about how glorious it will be when he can again close the door from the outside.

The special lamp shades mentioned are, I presume, the cone-shape shades seen in Figures 1 and 2. They are almost identical with those on page 401 of the second and page 638 of the third edition of the Handbook. They are the shades I recommend for general auditorium lighting, and I do still believe they cannot be much improved upon for low ceiling theatres, such as store room theatres or theatres of that general type. What Brother Ransome says concerning their application to projection room lighting is, I believe, quite true.

As to C. A. Dentlebeck, why he is the one man, to date, who has given ample proof, in a big way, of the value of a Supervisor of Projection.

New York's Six Hundred Seat Cameo Is a Jewel of a House

IN the issue of January 21, we illustrated and described a small house in Portland, Oregon, John Hamrick's nine hundred and ninety-four seat Blue Mouse.

Now, we are going to tell of a still smaller picture theatre which has been opened right here in New York—the six hundred seat Cameo, which has been built in and adjoining the Bush Terminal Building, 130 West Forty-second street.

The Cameo, which is under the direction of B. S. Moss, is unique among picture theatres in its exclusive intimacy, artistic luxury, and rich perfection of appointments.

The Cameo is revolutionary in many ways. Occupying one of the finest sites in New York and built, decorated and furnished regardless of expense, it seats but 600 patrons on a single floor, the first and only consideration having been the maximum of comfort, beauty and efficiency regardless of capacity.

The Results of Experience

The wide aisles, the unusual space between seat rows so that patrons can walk comfortably to their seats without stumbling over earlier arrivals, the faultless taste of the decorations and furnishings, scientific illumination, ventilation, heating and cooling, the correct pitch of floor and aisles, the admirable sight lines of the Cameo represent the results of many years' experience with motion picture presentment by Mr. Moss and his painstaking study of the many problems involved.

The usual marquee extends across the front, the vestibule has a high base of black and gold marble and a paneled wainscot of Botticino marble running up to the underside of the cornice. The cornice and ceiling are of ornamental plaster in the decoration of which the tones of the marble wainscoting have been recalled. Glazed doors give entrance to the lobby where the cold tones of the vestibule have been changed for slightly warmer ones. The marble base here is of Rosato with pilasters and panels of Sienna marble in which a creamy color predominates and above this is a cornice and a vaulted ceiling with penetrations over the panels. The body color of the ceiling is of the same general tone of the Sienna, though somewhat cooler.

EXIT OF CAMEO
The beautiful bronze door cost $5,000

A Seventy Foot Lobby

The lobby is seventy feet long and in eleven panels on either side wall are set alternately gold display frames and mirrors nine feet high. The ornamentation is in polychrome and gold leaf. The blue in the cornice is of a shade which occurs again over the display frame in combination with gold.

At the ticket office window is set a specially designed bronze grille. The lighting fixtures are of crystal, consisting of both chandeliers and brackets.

The foyer is quite subdued after the brilliancy of the lobby and prepares one for the transition from the outside world to the theatre.

Above a marble base, a paneled wainscot of black walnut runs up to the top of the doors, surmounted by a heavy capping. The inner filet of the moulding in the panels is striped in dull gold. There is a coffered ceiling, the beams and cornice are of walnut with the plaster ornamentations in the panels of polychrome—an antiqued green forming the background in general with some orange and with dull gold for the high lights in both ceiling and cornice.

Paneled Wall Space

The wall space between wainscoting and cornice is paneled and of a warm stone color. The foyer is fifteen by twenty-three feet and its floor is covered with a handsome rug, just showing a margin of the marble floor around the edges.

A handsome chandelier and concealed lights in a cove around the walls furnish the lighting. The lobby is embellished with antique furniture, comprising a console table with marble top and mirror over it, an old Italian table and several chairs.

The ticket taker's box is also a piece of antique furniture which has been adapted to this purpose.

The auditorium is about forty-five feet wide by eighty-five feet long and has a seating capacity of 600.

A Simplexized Projection Room

The projection room, located on the mezzanine floor is twelve feet long by eight feet wide. It was laid out and equipped under the supervision of J. F. Robin, which is an ample guarantee of the convenience of the room and the efficiency of its apparatus.

The projection equipment consists of two Type "S" motor driven Simplexes, Snap-lite lenses, and equipped with Fulco arc controls, Robin speed indicators, switchboard panels on which volt meters and ammeters are mounted.

Film not in use is stored in a Safe-T-First enclosed film cabinet.

Two one hundred ampere rheostats are also part of the equipment.

A nine by twelve picture is projected eighty feet to a screen painted on a plaster wall.

The projection room is approached by means of a short flight of stairs, from the head of which the process of projection may be viewed through a glass door.

Lighting Controlled from Projection Room

The entire lighting system of the theatre is controlled by Cutler-Hammer dimmers, operated from the projection room. J. J. Kieley is chief, and Cecil Woods, Jr. and Charles Bryfogal, assistant projectionists.

The central feature of the auditorium ceiling is a large dome elaborately decorated, with the surface elsewhere divided into panels in which is set plaster ornamentation with bands of ornament enclosing these and the whole richly designed in the Adams style. The standing rail at the rear of the house is of Sienna marble and a Sienna marble wainscot about three and one-half feet high runs around the walls, and above this, twin pilasters occur at intervals supporting the cornice. There are large moulded panels in the broad surfaces between the pairs of pilasters and small panels between the pilasters themselves.

Auditorium in Cafe-au-Lait

The treatment of the auditorium is mainly cafe-au lait and gold. The stiles and rails of these wall panels are of a cool gray to contrast with the warm tones of the panels and the cream of the pilasters. All of the ornamentations of the ceiling, side walls and the cornice, together with the panel mouldings are of gold, except the small panels between the pilasters which are in polychrome.

appear is of marble and there is a proscenium arch with a gold decorated frame around it, and a silk damask curtain of old rose trimmed with gold fringe and tassels filling the opening. This same material is used to drape two large openings at either side of the stage which serve as exits to a lobby leading to Forty-first street.

The auditorium which is lighted by a large crystal chandelier suspended from the dome, and twelve crystal side wall brackets, is carpeted. The chairs are upholstered in old rose.

A four manual organ has been installed and an adequate space has been provided for the orchestra. A staircase at the rear of the auditorium leads up to a mezzanine, and the ladies' and gentlemen's retiring rooms with appointments in keeping with the rest of the house.

Sun-Light Arc Corporation Will Equip Huge New Italian Studio

A LARGE film studio, organized by Frank Elliott, vice president of the Sun-Light Arc Corporation, and to be equipped by that concern, is now in course of construction in Rome. The plant, which is to be operated on the same lines as the Robert Brunton Studios in Hollywood, California, now known as the United Studios, is nearing completion.

It is to be run on a rental basis, and will offer to the American producer the same technical facilities to which he is accustomed to at home. It will make a special appeal to the American director who seeks fresh fields and pastures new and it is expected that the release in the near future of the huge production made by J. Gordon Edwards for the Fox Company, also the new George Fitzmaurice production, both made in Italy, will create great interest in Italy as a producing ground for certain pictures.

The studio company, which is imperatively a nominally Italian one, is capitalized for ten millions of lire. It will be Sun-Light Arc equipped, and will offer the American producer the same technical facilities he can obtain here in the United States. This is the first serious effort to attract the American producer to a European studio, and it has been up to an American concern in the shape of the very successful Sun-Light Arc Corporation, through one of its officers, to secure for the visiting American director the technical facilities, without which it is impossible to make pictures to sell to the American public.

Will Have First Class Laboratory

In addition to a first class laboratory, a very difficult thing to find in Italy, the concern will offer all the usual facilities in regard to casting, locations, construction of sets and up-to-date lighting equipment. This will be the first studio in Italy to have its own electrical generator for direct current.

The company will further act as chaperone to visiting companies and assure them of protection in many ways, giving them the financial protection to enable them to secure the best results at the minimum of cost.

A communication from Frank Elliott, who has been in Rome and on the ground for some time, states that despite Italy's wonderfully picturesque and historical attractions for the producer, and the fact that the Italian producer is anxious to make every effort to enter the American market, the Italian director is not familiar with even the rudimentary technical facilities for picture making, according to the ideas of the up-to-date American manufacturers and the demands of the American exhibitor.

Would you run in winter—without HEAT?

Certainly NOT.

Of course, you wouldn't. You know the business you'd lose that way would be a good deal more than it costs for warmth and comfort.

Now, why doesn't that same argument hold good in summer? It's the sameproposition exactly.

There's actually no saving in running without Monsoon Cooling System in summer—any more than in running without heat in the winter. You lose more in business in hot weather than it costs for cool, refreshing Monsoon comfort.

Think it over—but not too long. Hot weather is coming along fast. Get ready for it.

Herbert Griffin Becomes the General Sales Manager of Nicholas Power Co.

HERBERT GRIFFIN, since August, 1920, technical engineer of the Nicholas Power Company, has been appointed sales manager of that organization.

In making the announcement, to a World representative, of Mr. Griffin's promotion, Edward Earl, president of the Nicholas Power Company, said: "When upon his return from war work in Russia, about two years ago, Mr. Griffin was made technical engineer of this company, we simply were obliged to create a new position to cover the special work to be performed by him.

"Of course, we have maintained an experimental department for many years, but we have so much research and development work that we found it necessary to appoint Mr. Griffin to take special charge of this particular phase of our business. In addition to the ideas developed in our own factory, we are constantly in receipt of suggestions and inventions which must be given the most rigid practical tests before they can be adopted.

"What is sometimes theoretically feasible is not always thoroughly practical. Something that may be satisfactory for a few projectionists may be unsatisfactory to the great majority of those who operate the machines.

"In Mr. Griffin we have found an ideal combination of long and thoroughly practical technical training with an exceptionally wide experience in the sales end of our business.

Practical Understanding Necessary

"Since Will C. Smith resigned from this company last July, we have been without anyone in a high executive position who possessed the necessary technical knowledge. Experience has taught us that the executive supervising sales should have a thorough and practical understanding of projection. How can a man make our factory understand the requirements of exhibitors, managers and projectionists, unless he has the technical training which enables him to properly translate their demands?

"Herbert Griffin, in addition to looking after sales, will also have the important responsibility of seeing that our factory meets the exacting demands of the exhibitor who realizes that better projection pays. He is a trained electrical engineer, and this knowledge, together with that acquired while he was projectionist, supplemented with the experience he has secured in the nine years he has been with this company, enables Mr. Griffin to thoroughly understand requirements of the progressive projectionist.

"Herbert Griffin began as an operator fifteen years ago, and has been connected with the motion picture industry ever since. He has been connected with the sales department of this company for nine years, and was a road representative for a considerable part of that period. He has therefore a wide and intimate personal acquaintanceship with our distributors and exhibitors throughout the country. He is a sincere believer in the policy of this company with regard to selling through authorized representatives.

"The distributor renders a service to the exhibitor, particularly in emergencies, which makes him indispensable. The manufacturer must support him, for if the distributor does not prosper, he is compelled to discontinue branches and in some instances, to close up altogether. With his elimination, the manufacturer finds it difficult to give satisfactory service, and in the end the exhibitor suffers."

In conclusion, Mr. Earl said "Mr. Griffin is thoroughly likeable and obliging. He is fortunate in having the will to help others, and what is so often lacking, the ability to know how to be helpful."

Fifteen Years in the Industry

Herbert Griffin has been actively connected with the motion picture industry for fifteen years, and is already well known to our World readers through articles and items which we have published regarding him. In October, 1919, we carried an illustrated article describing his experiences while serving with the Y. M. C. A. in Siberia. He was one of the first Y. M. C. A. secretaries to enter Russia, and for seventeen months was in charge of motion pictures for that organization in Siberia and portion of Russia.

It was through Mr. Griffin's efforts that the population in many parts of Siberia viewed motion pictures for the first time, and his experiences were unique, interesting and valuable. Mr. Griffin believes that there is a great opportunity for motion pictures in Russia, and that road shows should be successful there.

Two years ago he found fifty or sixty Siberian theatres in operation, but they were about fifteen years behind the times. He thinks that there is a gold mine there for American capital when political conditions are more stable than they are at the present time.

Among the Power's improvements which have been made while Mr. Griffin has been technical engineer are the Type "E" lamphouse, the roller pin intermittent movement, the governor

Working in conjunction with the General Electric Company, Mr. Griffin's knowledge of projection has been particularly useful to that company which has freely availed itself of the fund of information which he has acquired in the fifteen years he has been a part of the motion picture industry.

The demand today is for better projection. The exhibitor is realizing that it pays, and it is through such men as Mr. Griffin, who have had experience in the technical, as well as the selling end of the business, that the requirements of the exhibitor, manager and projectionist, are given the proper attention.

Member of I. A. T. S. E.

Herbert Griffin was a member of one of the first operators' organizations, and has been a member of the I. A. T. S. E. since the unit to which he belonged was absorbed by the latter organization. He has frequently spoken before projectionists' societies, and has always been an enthusiastic supporter of every movement which helped to make the projectionist more efficient.

He is an old friend of F. H. Richardson, and has always been glad to co-operate with the former in his efforts to widen the knowledge of the projectionist, as he believes that only in this way can the present high standard machines be maintained among those who operate motion pictures.

Playgoers Pictures presents

"Anne of Little Smoky"

A Wistaria Production

Winifred Westover
(Mrs. William S. Hart)

A feature which is proving its exceptional audience appeal by creating business and affording satisfaction wherever it is shown. It is an outdoor drama, full of action and adventure. It is as exciting as the stormy romance of Anne, the impetuous mountain lass, and as human as life itself. It is entertainingly told, beautifully photographed and realistically enacted in "The Bride's Play"

MARION DAVIES

In seven days at the Rialto Theatre, New York, the box office receipts were

$24,169.45

This means that thousands crowded into this house to see this masterpiece —a picture that reaches the highest peak in photoplay production.

Marion Davies portrays two wonderful characters—the modern young bride and the bride of the early ages.

"Miss Marion Davies appears in one of the most beautiful and charming pictures of her screen career."—Evening Telegram.

"'The Bride's Play' is a continual succession of gorgeous pictures; it has indeed been given a background which is almost overwhelming with its wealth of luxurious beauty."—Evening Mail.

"For production of sheer physical beauty 'The Bride's Play' at the Rialto this week comes near the head of its class. Every scene is beautiful."
—Evening Sun.

A Cosmopolitan Production

On the Drawbridge

"THE BRIDE'S PLAY" has a tremendous, feminine appeal. It pictures two great bridal scenes—the first, in the days of knights and armor when men often took their wives from rival suitors at the point of the sword or the lance—the second, a wedding of today, with all the romantic, picturesque marriage rites, that have been handed down from time immemorial.

HERE'S a show that means big money anywhere in the world. A sizzling tale of prize rings and engagement rings, and a chap who dealt a knockout blow to his family's snobbery.

On the stage the play was the outstanding hit of the season. And Wallie has never had a role with more comedy, more drama, and more punch!

Punch is right! Wait till your audiences see that boxing match!

The WALL

While Others Danced She Decorated the Wall

A weed in a garden of roses, is Idalene Nobbin, a wistful figure, awkward and pigeon-toed.

We laugh at her sad attempts at the toddle, but we are moved at the cruelty of youth which makes her the butt of practical joking. Young love and the sensitiveness of the wall flower is the theme of Rupert Hughes' latest original photoplay, a mirth-making pantomime, treated, however, with gentle sympathy.

Mr. Hughes says of it, "The world is full of girls who are crushed with lack of encouragement at home and who need only to be flooded with sunshine and praise and taught a little grace and self-confidence. The Wall Flower is the story of such a homely thing and of her swift blooming when her desperation threw her by chance among strangers who were kind to her. It is a love story, of course, but of more than one kind of love."

Colleen Moore gives a splendid performance in this exceptional picture, which the author chose to direct himself.

NEW YORK'S VERDICT:

"'The Ruling Passion' is an answer to the question of what kind of films does the public want. There simply isn't any one who can do the things that Mr. Arliss does with the same touch of perfection. He is in a class by himself. * * * Certainly it is not like the things he has done before, yet he brings to the role the same matchless playing and magnetic personality."—NEW YORK EVENING MAIL.

"The Ruling Passion" is a comedy with a new and delightful plot. It is George Arliss' newest and most surprising achievement. The setting and photography leaving nothing to be desired. It is a winning feature film."—NEW YORK MORNING TELEGRAPH.

"'The Ruling Passion' tells a lively story, in which comedy and more serious drama are happily blended."—NEW YORK EVENING TELEGRAM.

"This adaptation of Earl Derr Biggers' story, 'Idle Hands,' is an engaging comedy, lighter of touch than that of any of Arliss's preceding vehicles."—NEW YORK EVENING SUN.

"'The Ruling Passion' is the best of George Arliss's pictures. Here is a film with an excellent story, which holds the interest, appeals to one's sympathy and amuses, and is acted by a cast which ably supports the expert Mr. Arliss. The role which Mr. Arliss undertakes is unlike those in which he is familiarly known, and is something of a lark for him, as it will be for those wise enough to see him in it."—NEW YORK EVENING GLOBE.

"It's an entertaining comedy, with George Arliss in a role that reveals an unsuspected flair for humor."—NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL.

"The sinister George Arliss of 'The Devil' and the keenly contriving George Arliss of 'Disraeli' give way to the more genial and simply human George Arliss of 'The Ruling Passion.' It's a human story and humanly done by Mr. Arliss."—NEW YORK TIMES.

"George Arliss's acting in the screen play, 'The Ruling Passion,' is of a high order. It is distinctive and finely drawn, in a photoplay of real human quality. As a comedian Mr. Arliss is a delight."—NEW YORK MORNING WORLD.

"It is one of the uniquely delightful comedies of the winter, raising Mr. Arliss to the pinnacle of the screen. Chuckles and continuous chortles were the order of the day. Mr. Arliss carries out the delicious entertainment with the most feathery of touches, so that one declines to believe, despite the evidence, that it is twenty years since he essayed straight comedy."—NEW YORK HERALD.

"'The Ruling Passion' is a bright comedy of outdoors and George Arliss is a comedian again. Anything Arliss does is interesting, but as a comedian, he appeals deeply. He acts where many merely behave."—NEW YORK AMERICAN.

"George Arliss is such a perfect actor that everything he does seems to be of the utmost importance. Mr. Arliss isn't a shiek, nor a political schemer, nor a spy, nor even a devil. He is a rich man who is advised by everyone to retire when he doesn't want to."—NEW YORK TRIBUNE

If all the adults in the world who have read Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's Famous Detective Adventures of Sherlock Holmes were packed in one continuous train composed of all the world's conveyances, the file of railroad coaches, steamers, autos, trolleys, buses, dog sleds, droskies, pony packs, howdahs, palanquins, donkey carts, jaunting cars, jinrickshaws and other transports would complete an unbroken line stretching 25,000 miles around the globe.
It goes without saying that the greatest part of this vast circle of human beings of all the countries of the world will wish to see the same stories in the fifteen Sherlock Holmes film dramas released by the Alexander Film Corporation 130 West 46th St., New York City.

Dear Sir:

I think it is due the company that produced "THE FOUR SEASONS" to tell you that it is the only picture that we ever held over a second week in the New Theatre, although we put in another feature, we got so much applause on "THE FOUR SEASONS" and were told so many times what a wonderful picture it was, we deemed it a good move to hold it over a second week.

I might also add that it got more applause than any other picture ever played in the New Theatre and personally I do not know when I enjoyed a picture more than I did "THE FOUR SEASONS."

Very truly yours,

C. E. Whitehurst,

This new national distributing organization brings into association two men who have for many years in this industry maintained honorable, fair and clean relations with motion picture exhibitors.

WALTER E. GREENE was one of the founders of Paramount, organizer and president of Artcraft and vice-president in charge of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

F. B. WARREN was one of the initial members and vice-president in charge of distribution of the Goldwyn organization and also built the Associated Producers' distribution, of which he was general manager.

American Releasing Corporation is now opening its branch offices in 19 exchange cities, in charge of men of standing and ability. We will begin releasing nationally in late January, with pre-release engagements of productions of power and popularity. The first of these productions will be announced next week.

Screenings are now being held in many of the larger key cities of the United States. Without prior announcement, our first releases are now being taken directly to conveniently nearby cities and shown to you for booking. This is a policy of direct action instead of "talk."

The Reigning Beauty of the Screen

LUCY DORAINE in "The LOVE SLAVE"

A tremendous drama of passion by Georges Ohnet, famous author of "The Iron Master."

A beautiful Arabian slave girl—madly in love with the handsome young Parisian who rescued her from a beast.

A flower of the East transplanted to Paris—the ages-old clash of East and West—a mad, jealous passion that would destroy one once beloved—then prison walls that close in on another form of slavery.

A thrilling escape from a living death—freedom and peace—the re-kindling of dead fires—and a climax so powerful—so satisfying—that it brings a profound sigh of relief.

Actually filmed in the Orient—as a production "THE LOVE SLAVE" is greater than "The Sheik"—with all the lure of the East popularized by "One Arabian Night."

The great dramatic theme—EAST against WEST—meets the country-wide demand created by "The Sheik."

Organized Gloom

WE met a man the other day who was sporting a new diamond in his five dollar necktie. It was a neat stone and its sparkles drew our attention. "Fine," we observed, "has your lodge made you a present or did you get it for Christmas from the wife and kiddies?"

"Oh, no," said the man, "I bought it yesterday. Just picked it up because I took a fancy to it."

"You're lucky," said we, "business must be improving."

He looked at us and winked good naturedly. "You're on, aren't you?" he ventured, "you're not paying attention to this gloom stuff, are you? Oh, we had a falling off in the Spring and Summer, but, good Lord, the bank roll is still pretty fat and things are coming fine!"

"But you have been saying right along that business was so bad that you'd have to close down!"

"Sure! I don't want the other fellow to think I'm getting too much, or it'll make a difference in prices. I want to be the poor guy who is starving to death and thereby kid the other guy. You're wise, aren't you?"

We confessed that we laid no claim to great wisdom but we were glad to be told.

After we parted, each on his own way, we felt like calling for a showdown all along the line and asking each man who showed the gloom sign to prove his claim of approaching bankruptcy or stop making a poor mouth.

Figures secured from official reports, facts obtained personally by our own men in all sections of the country show that business is far better than any one business had a right to expect owing to the general readjustments following the greatest war in the history of the world. Investigation has shown another thing. Our business is on the rise and this goes for all but a few exceptional cases where special conditions are responsible.

Based on information in hand we predicted some time ago that the season beginning after the holidays would not only return to the peak but would ride to new records because of the large number of really great box office attractions that are now available.

By this we did not and do not mean that all the producers are going to get fat with money because all of them are not. Those that have good pictures and are not afraid to advertise them will make money. Those who have poor pictures were never so bad off as now because of the competition of show quality.

We didn't mean either that all exhibitors in the land would grow corpulent in the box office because they won't. But those who use show judgment in picture selection and give their exclusive attention to their business, will prosper and prosper handsomely. The day of the gloom spreader is over. The day of the enthusiast who has the courage to step out and go after business success is here. In fact it has never really been away.

STATE rights companies are threatened with bankruptcy as the result of an Internal Revenue Commission decision that sales may be taxed at the rate of 5 per cent. The commission has granted a thirty-day delay to the Christie Company, against whom it made complaint as a test case, so that a defense may be entered. The I. P. D. A. will spare no effort to convince the commission that the collection of such a tax would be unconstitutional and illegal, and the N. A. M. P. I. is expected to co-operate. Every independent is reported as ready to spend his last cent in the fight.

The attempt of Canon Chase, of Brooklyn, to convince a Senate committee that the film industry should be investigated meets with about as much success as the remembered attempt of a canine friend of boyhood days to masticate fresh maple syrup cooled in the snow. Hays Ship Ready All But the Crew

Signatures of Several Important Companies Will Await Formal Organization —Salary Isn't $150,000

ALL is ready for Will H. Hays to assume command of the new producers and distributors organization with one detail missing. This detail is the organization. A tentative body has Mr. Hays under contract, for a period of three years, but additional signatures await the formal organizing and launching of the association.

Incidentally Mr. Hays isn't to receive a salary of $150,000. It is less than that, but it is in keeping with the size of the job he has before him. The only reason for mentioning money in the matter is to bring out the fact that newspaper exaggeration has figured in building up the grand total to an amount considerably larger than it really is. There is no question in the minds of the gentlemen who signed the contract, and of those who didn't, that Mr. Hays will be more than worth his salary as he has all the qualifications for the captaincy of the producers' and distributors' ship. The only delay now is in the matter of the crew.

There are several slants to the problem which are not being publicly discussed because the producers and distributors have shown an ability for silence that could be compared to genius if it wasn't a trifle short sighted.

To date the only ones permitted to discuss the situation have been the daily newspapers and they have given their imaginations full rein and free. For instance, the New York Evening World set forth during the week that Mr. Hays had been chosen for his job for the following reasons:

FIRST—To save the investment of millions of dollars which Wall Street financial interests have made in the most important producing concerns in the combination.

SECOND—To pull the motion picture industry out of a hole into which it has been plunged by mismanagement, jealousy, cut-throat trade methods, recklessness in expenditure, star exploitation and disregard of business methods.

THIRD—To prevent the establishment by Congress of a Federal motion picture censorship.

FOURTH—To use the motion picture industry in propaganda to further the election of a Republican Congress next November, when the entire membership of the House of Representatives and one-third of the membership of the Senate will be chosen by the voters.

The last article of the World's declaration is possibly the most absurd. A case in point is Mr. William Fox, who is one of the prime movers in the Hays movement and a signer of the contract, is a Democrat and so far as history records always has been. He has been an active Democrat and once was mentioned as a possible contender for the Democratic nomination for Governor of New York. Possibly, the Evening World was inspired to the conclusion by the fact that Mr. Hearst, its business rival, has editorially approved of Mr. Hays. Again it will be noted that Mr. Hearst never has been accused of being Republican or of lending himself to Republican propaganda.

No Maxim silencer appears to have been attached to Mr. Joseph M. Schenck, who from Los Angeles described Mr. Hays as a sort of "traffic cop" for the industry. W. W. Hodkinson, who was not a party to the movement, came out against it. Up to the hour of speeding to press Pathe, Vitagraph and Associated First National Exhibitors, Arthur S. Kane and others were not signatories of the contract, but there is reason to believe that these will join the association when it is actually and formally organized. In order not to gum up the wheels of progress they all maintained silence and referred all interrogators to one spokesman who spoke not a darn bit.

Between now and March 5 the actual work of perfecting and incorporating the new body, as well as giving it a formal name, will have to be brought to pass. It possibly is just as well that such differences as may exist be threshed out and settled before the new body gets under way.

Another element in the problem is the National Association. If it is to be scrapped, a new body will have to be organized to take care of the various interests in moving pictures which would be left without official representation. The raw stock, projection and accessory men need an organization as well as other branches, and if they are left out on the doorstep they will form their own.

William A. Brady is to date without official word of the new body and is doing the only thing he can do under the circumstances—sawing wood. He has many times expressed his desire to be relieved of the presidency of the N. A. M. P. I. and is willing now, but lacking official information his hands are tied.

In the meantime the National Association is proceeding as usual with a busy program of activity and its valuable work is not being interrupted.

Harold Lloyd Signs Long Term Contract with Pathe; Brunet Frames Agreement

HAROLD LLOYD has signed a new long term contract with Pathe. The new agreement between Lloyd and Pathe, under whose banner the comedian has become established in the front rank of motion picture stars, was framed by Paul Brunet, who conducted all the negotiations for Pathe.

Hal Roach, who has made all the comedies in which Lloyd has appeared for Pathe, of course continues as producer.

It is explained that the matter of the length of the Lloyd comedies under the new arrangement will be strictly governed by the character and quality of the material evolved in the production development of each subject—which means that the Lloyd standard of excellence is to be maintained first of all; a given story that turns out to be adequately filmed in two reels will be confined to two reels, and so released. This is a principle cherished by Lloyd himself, and naturally met with no opposition from Pathe.

Conferences on the subject of the new contract occurred almost daily during the two weeks' visit of Harold Lloyd and Hal Roach to New York. Past and present conditions in the motion picture industry with promises held by the future, leading problems of production and distribution, evidences of the advancing status of Lloyd comedies both artistically and commercially—every detail of the situation was canvassed frankly and thoroughly.

All these matters were thrashed out, it is declared, in an atmosphere of such complete mutual understanding that the actual signing of the new contract was a mere formality, postponed for ceremonial purposes to the last day prior to the departure of Lloyd and his producer for the Pacific Coast.

Following the completion of the new long term contract with Harold Lloyd, Paul Brunet said:

"Harold Lloyd has established the reputation and earning power of a motion picture star of the first magnitude. On that basis his productions will be handled by Pathe. The wide-spread attitude of exhibitors toward all of the Lloyd comedies released within the past year, irrespective of our own judgment regarding their quality and commercial value, would justify this policy. Few pictures in the ordinary feature classification released during that period have served to attract larger or more profitable audiences.

"Harold Lloyd's comedy creations crystallize a fundamental quality lacking which no motion picture or other creation designed for public entertainment can hope to make a convincing appeal. Reviewers are wont to refer to this as 'the human touch.' More and more, they are going on record with the statement that 'Harold Lloyd has the human touch.'

"Neither public adulation nor steadily advancing rewards have caused Harold Lloyd to relax in the slightest degree either his remarkable industry or adherence to the high standards he set for himself. He is now barely reaching his prime, and the great success he has won is certain of still further increase."

PAUL BRUNET, PRESIDENT OF PATHE, AFFIXING HIS NAME TO NEW CONTRACT WITH HAROLD LLOYD

Standing behind them are: Herbert Goudge, Lloyd's legal representative; Bernhard Benson, vice-president of Pathe; John Humm, assistant general manager; Lewis Innerarity, secretary; Elmer Pearson, general manager, and Hal Roach, producer of the Lloyd Comedies

Film Boards of Trade and Hoy Service Put in Nineteen Distribution Centers

THREE matters of importance to film distributors received the attention of the distributing division of the N. A M. P. I. at a meeting on Jan. 20, presided over by P. L. Walters, chairman of the division. The first concerned was the inauguration of Film Boards of Trade in nineteen distribution centers of the east and central states, and the establishment of the Hoy Reporting Service in each of these centers.

Eleven companies entered into the agreements necessary to nationalize the Hoy Service. They were Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., Famous Players-Lasky, Fox Film, Goldwyn, Metro, Pathe Exchanges, Inc., Pioneer, R-C, Selznick, Universal and W. W. Hodkinson. Other companies are expected to join the movement shortly.

The second matter was the exchange housing situation in Washington, D. C. The District of Columbia commissioners have given the owners of exchange buildings until March 3 to comply with existing fire prevention regulations. The owner of the Mather Building, in which are many of the exchanges has agreed to comply with the regulations so that some of the distributors are renewing their leases. The exchanges which occupy separate buildings will also comply immediately with the requirements.

The third subject was the requirement of the District of Columbia commissioners that film containers be corrugated on top and bottom, and that the metal be at least 25 U. S. gauge. The original requirement was that they be fibre-lined. However the latter requirement has been recinded, thereby saving the industry at least $40,000 a year. Under the amended requirement all containers in use in Washington, which are of 25 gauge metal, can be utilized to meet the requirements by having the tops and bottoms corrugated. This can be done with a metal die or stamp.

Hunter Is Sales Manager of American Releasing Co.

John L. Hunter, one of the best known of the younger executives in the industry, is sales manager of American Releasing Corporation, and Frederic Gaige is assistant sales manager, according to an announcement from Walter E. Greene and F. B. Warren, the operating executives of this recently formed national distributing organization.

Mr. Hunter was from the date of its formation general manager of Associated Producers, Ltd., the Canadian corporation of the American "A. P.," and prior to that was for several years one of the sales executives of Associated First National at the home office in New York. Mr. Gaige was a sales executive of Famous Players-Lasky under Mr. Greene as vice-president in charge of distribution, and comes to American Releasing from the United Artists, with which he has been connected for the past year.

Bubb Joins American

Benjamin C. Bubb, well known in film circles, due to his original advertising designs applied to many of the big screen attractions of the past, has joined forces with the American Releasing Corporation, and will be the advertising art manager of that company.

Canon Chase's Attack on Films Fizzles Under Examination by Senate Committee

Senators Shortridge and Ashurst Criticise Brooklyn Clergyman's Declaration. He Wants Regulation Rather Than Censorship of Pictures—Industry to Oppose Investigation at Later Hearing

By CLARENCE L. LINZ

SENATOR SAMUEL M. SHORTRIDGE (Republican), of California, and Senator F. Ashurst (Democrat), of Arizona, forming the subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee appointed to consider the advisability of making a probe of the film industry, did not seem much impressed with the testimony offered by the Rev. William Sheafe Chase, chairman, motion picture committee of the Society for the Prevention of Crime; W. H. Field, who claimed to be representing the American Legion, or even Senator Henry L. Myers (Democrat), of Montana, author of the investigating resolution.

Canon Chase presented a copy of his "Catechism on Motion Pictures in Interstate Commerce," on which he made his case. He declared that he was not seeking censorship but rather regulation. Senator Ashurst declared himself against both censorship and regulation, but said he would vote for any bill that would put in jail any man which a jury declared to be guilty of putting out a picture actually detrimental to public morals. He was willing to leave that to a jury, but not to put in the hands of two or three men the power to say what should and what should not be displayed on the screen. He was not willing to give such power to anyone; he expressed the belief that such power would be abused, and, further, censorship and regulation as proposed was but a further encroachment on the rights of the people.

Ashurst an Intent Listener

Senator Ashurst was greatly interested in the activity of Canon Chase. He listened intently to all the clergyman said and questioned him at some length on various phases of the testimony. He declared that what was sought in the way of censorship and regulation was too much like that censorship which prevailed in England 250 years ago, in the days of the Stuarts when there were star chamber proceedings that deprived men and women of life and liberty .

In opening his testimony Canon Chase referred to the hearings by the House Committee on Education in 1915, when, he said, the entire committee reported in favor of the censorship bill then pending before it, but which was not advanced by the House; to the action of that committee during the succeeding Congress when eleven members were for and five members against the censorship bill; the cinema investigation carried on by the National Council of Public Morals of Great Britain in 1917, and in the same year, the investigation made by the New York Legislature's joint investigating committee, resulting in legislation vetoed by Governor Whitman; and to the Chicago investigation, a report on which was made in 1920 recommending a censorship ordinance for Chicago.

Registers Most Impressions

"These investigations have not been thorough enough, I feel, to meet all the needs," declared the witness. "There is a very great feeling of need of more efficient regulations of the morality of the motion picture. It has been brought out that 87 per cent. of our impressions come through the eye, that 7 per cent. come through the ear, 2 from the touch and 1 per cent. from the smell; 87 per cent. of our education comes through the eye."

He stated that the commissioner of education, in a public speech, said that a larger factor of education of our people is the motion picture. The witness contested this on the ground that 20,000,000 people attend picture exhibitions every day, but there are 17,000,000 children and youths in the day schools and colleges of the nation. He added that experiments have been made by persons interested in visual education, and that it was shown that among classes of people of equal intelligence, one thought by a teacher orally, the other taught by motion pictures, the latter, when both were subjected to a written examination, made the better showing.

Quotes Brady's "Threat"

The witness called attention to the following statement contained in his self-styled catechism:

"Mr. William A. Brady, president of the National Association of Motion Picture Industry, issued the following threat to the Chicago Motion Picture Commission, which, appointed September, 1918, issued its report in September, 1920, favoring a city censorship ordinance.

" 'The reason you will not attempt this thing with the newspapers is because you are afraid of them. Up to date the motion picture business of the United States has had no religion and no politics and I will issue to you now a warning from the motion picture industry of the United States that they propose to use the wonderful power in their hands and they are going into politics and perhaps you will pay a little heed to them after they get into politics.' "

Senator Shortridge inquired if that statement was not made before Postmaster General Hays was secured to serve the industry.

Dr. Chase declared that the "New York Motion Picture Industry" engaged Fiorello G. LaGuardia to conduct a political campaign before the primary on September 13 and the fall election, for the repeal of the New York control law. "They promise to use their screens to assist the election of all candidates for the Assembly who will promise to vote for the repeal and threaten to defeat all who refuse to do so," he said.

An Alleged Conversation

The witness related a conversation which he said he had with Mr. Brady concerning the passage of the Massachusetts law. " 'We do not want a law,' said Mr. Brady, ' we want a gentleman's agreement. We promise to put on good pictures and we will put them on provided the governor will veto this bill,' and he was asking me to back this gentleman's agreement, and he said, ' I have just been through the West. I have visited six legislatures. I have said to them that if they would defeat this censorship law or fail to pass it, if we did not give them good pictures within a year I would go there myself and advocate motion picture censorship,' and he said that with a view to getting my consent for a gentleman's agreement.

"I replied to him something like this," and Canon Chase retold a discussion he had with a representative of the liquor interests on the question of prohibition where, he said, a similar request has been made, and where the maker of the promise to make the saloons better was unable to do so. The witness declared that it is not possible to make the regulation regulate.

The senators were told that when the film men appeared before Governor Miller at a hearing, asking for a veto of the New York bill, they made an official statement showing the control of the industry which, in itself, in his opinion, would justify the subcommittee in making a report in favor of an investigation. It was the statement of Harris D. H. Connick of Famous-Players, stating that if Messrs. Fox and Loew and the Famous Players were to withdraw their support

Sarah Bernhardt Invited to Be Guest of Honor at Anniversary Celebration of First Feature

LEADING stars, directors and authors, representing the entire film profession in Hollywood, have cabled Sarah Bernhardt in Paris, inviting her to come here as guest of honor in a national celebration of the tenth anniversary of the first big feature picture featuring a stage star.

The cablegram, which was addressed to the famous actress at the Sarah Bernhardt Theatre, Paris, follows:

"We as representatives of American motion picture art invite you to visit America to be honor guest in nation-wide celebration of tenth anniversary of feature motion picture. This invitation is in recognition of fact that you were first, as you have been greatest artist, to lend your genius to establish motion pictures as art. Your example ten years ago in creating 'Queen Elizabeth,' first feature picture, gave this new art impetus which has carried it to its position as most important entertainment of world. Your appearance on speaking stage always has been inspiration to drama."

Bill to Amend Law

A bill was introduced in the New York State Assembly this week to amend the New York State Motion Picture censorship law by making mandatory, instead of permissive, as at present, the issuance of a permit by the motion picture commission, for pictures intended solely for educational, charitable or religious purposes.

Celebrates Anniversary

The first anniversary of the Stanley Theatre, a magnificent $2,000,000 edifice erected by the Stanley Company of America at 19th and Market streets, Philadelphia, will be celebrated the week of Jan. 30.

Would Ban All Sunday Shows

Backed by the Lord's Day Alliance, a bill was introduced in the New York State Assembly at Albany this week, which, if passed and signed by the governor, would end all Sunday picture shows. The bill was introduced by Assemblyman Clarence W. Hausner, of Schuyler county, a Republican. It provides that no picture shows shall be held on Sunday if an admission price is charged. Any person aiding in such exhibitions by posters or advertisements, or any person owning or leasing a building in which such a show is held, would be guilty of a misdemeanor.

In addition to all the rest, every such exhibition would, of itself, annul any license which might previously have been obtained.

There is slim chance, however, of the bill getting anywhere, for Speaker H. Edmond Machold, of the Assembly, has said that such bills would not be considered during this session.

Awaits Decision in C. G. Binderup Suit Against the Omaha Film Board of Trade

A DECISION in the $720,153 damage suit of Charles G. Binderup, Minden, Neb., theatre owner against Pathe Exchange, Inc., and other members of the Omaha Film Board of Trade is not anticipated for several weeks Attorneys argued the matter before the United State Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis January 17 and 18, Judges Sanborn, Garland and Trieber being on the bench.

The case, which is perhaps the most important ever tried so far as the system of renting moving picture films is concerned, resulted when the Omaha Film Board of Trade sought to punish Binderup for a stated violation of the rules of the organization, it being alleged he bicycled film. In addition to owning theatres in Minden, Blue Hill, Alma, Bloomington and Upland, Neb., it is said he furnished film service to other theatres under the name of the Binderup Circuit.

Binderup, in filing suit for $240,051 in the United States District court at Omaha, alleged that he was found guilty of "trumped up" charges by the film board, and that the action of the organization ruined his business. As his action was brought under the anti-trust statutes, judgment would have been for thrice the amount prayed, or $720,153. On June 11 last the district judge instructed the jury to find for the defendants. Binderup immediately appealed.

Albert Reinheb Heads Motion Picture Salesmen

The Motion Picture Salesmen, Inc., held its semi-annual election Tuesday afternoon at the Hotel Astor, and elected the following officers:

Albert Reinheb, Metro, president; L. Lawrence Baren, Pioneer, first vice-president; Mathias Kahn, Warner, second vice-president; Richard Gledhill, Famous Players, recording secretary; E. C. Bullwinkle, Metro, financial secretary; Louis Weinberg, Selznick, treasurer; L. Lawrence Baren, Pioneer, historian and publicity; Joseph Lee, Famous Players, sergeant-at-arms. Trustees, Ben Roman, Goldwyn; Jesse Levine, Famous Players. Directors, Herman Kram, Arrow; Richard Gledhill, Famous Players; Meyer Soloman, Selznick; Ben Roman, Goldwyn; Ben Rapaport, Pioneer.

A theatre party, supper and dance will be held on February 4, when the newly elected officers will be regularly installed, and the members, together with their wives and sweethearts, will be guests.

Lower Electricity Rates Sought by New Yorkers

Following its plan to readjust the prices of everything that goes into the conduct of a motion picture theatre, in its desire to keep them open, the New York Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce, at its last meeting, decided to attack the existing electric light rates now prevalent in its territory. President William Brandt, in appointing a special committee to petition the Public Service Commission for a reduction of rates, pointed out that the picture theatre is one of the most important consumers of electricity, and that in some cases rates have nearly doubled.

There are six companies directly affected by the campaign. They are the New York Edison, United Electric Illuminating Company, Brooklyn Edison, Queens Edison, Public Service Company of New Jersey and Richmond Light and Railroad Company.

Statistics have been gathered which show that the price of coal, which is the principle ingredient in the manufacture of electricity, the cost of supplies and salaries of all employes have been very materially decreased, so that a reduction in electric rates would not work a hardship upon the companies. Assurances of cooperation have been received from practically every civic organization in Greater New York.

READ WHAT CRITICS SAID

WID'S DAILY—

Mae Murray does her best work in lavish "Peacock Alley" . . . As a whole, looks like good box office bet and undoubtedly Mae Murray's best . . . Direction splendid.

VARIETY—

It may be safely ventured "Peacock Alley" is the best picture Mae Murray has ever done. . . . "Peacock Alley" is a good picture, a very good picture, a picture that will do somcthing for exhibitors.

MORNING TELEGRAPH—

The star never lookcd more adorable. . . . Exhibitors are advised to book the picture early.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS—

Robert Z. Leonard has . . . sct a precedent that will keep him alert, to live up to. Unquestionably, "Peacock Alley" . . . will pass the severest test known for a picture—that of getting the money.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD—

As Cleo of Paris, in a colorful production, "Peacock Alley," Mae Murray does a striking piece of characterization. . . . The production is both lavish and effective.

MOTION PICTURE JOURNAL—

In "Peacock Alley" Mae Murray scores with the finest piece of acting ever portrayed by this well-known celebrity.

CINEMA ART—

The last word in pictures. . . . The star never looked more adorable than in this picture. The settings are costly and the direction is excellent.

NEW YORK HERALD—

Mae Murray's first independent production has been lavishly as well as painstakingly screened. . . . Miss Murray . . . does the best acting of her career.

EXHIBITORS HERALD—

In Mae Murray's "Peacock Alley" . . . under the skilful direction of Mr. Leonard, the beautiful blonde star is shown at her best. . . . On the whole, "Peacock Alley" is one of the most delightful pictures of the season.

THE BILLBOARD—

Typically a Mae Murray picture! Ravishing, dazzling, with a lilting twang of cabaret jazzing—yet pulsating warmly with the lure of love and exotic romance. . . . All other pictures of this character become inconsequential in comparison.

WEEKLY FILM REVIEW—

"Peacock Alley" bids fair to take rank with the biggest box office attractions of the season. It has the requisites—story, star, direction, setting, atmosphere.

It doesn't take three weeks to look at a theatre

WHEN B. S. Moss threw open the doors of his beautiful new Cameo Theatre in New York, he threw "Peacock Alley" on his screen.

And those who came to the Cameo threw the hope of getting a seat to the winds.

As Harriette Underhill in the New York Tribune said: " 'Peacock Alley' is making seats hard to get at the well named Cameo Theatre . . . sure fire stuff . . ."

The surging jam of people who stormed the Cameo the first night or so might only have been curious to see the new theatre.

It's worth seeing, all right; but "Peacock Alley" ran there three packed weeks.

And beautiful though the Cameo is, it doesn't take three weeks to look at a theatre.

State Rights Men Will Fight Tax That Threatens to Put Them Out of Business

Internal Revenue Commission Grants Thirty-Day Delay to Christie Company That Arguments May Be Heard Against Intended 5 Per Cent Tax on State Rights Sales—N. A. M. P. I. Concerned

By ROGER FERRI

FOLLOWING news this week from Washington on the action of the Internal Revenue Commission in granting a thirty-day delay to the Christie Comedy Company in the case involving a 5 per cent. tax on State Rights sales, Harry G. Kosch, general counsel for the Independent Producers and Distributors Association, announced that that organization will in all probability ask leave to intervene in this case inasmuch as it vitally concerns State Rights and independent producers and distributors in general.

That the I. P. D. A. will spare no effort in its determined stand to show the Internal Revenue Commission the error of its way was made certain this week when Mr. Kosch called a special meeting of the association for early next week. The Washington dispatch came as a distinct surprise to State Rights distributors in New York.

Mr. Kosch told Moving Picture World: "It is my belief that the film rental tax when enacted was placed directly on the exhibition of films and was not intended to be paid by a producer or distributor who leased State Rights to film with the understanding that the lessees were not themselves to exhibit the films, but were to lease them to theatres for exhibition.

"If this tax is collectable it will drive every independent producer and distributor out of business."

Unconstitutional and Illegal

Independent producers and distributors are unanimous in their contention that the intentions of the Internal Revenue Commission are unconstitutional and illegal. If need be, one of them said, the case will be carried to the United States Supreme Court.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, when first informed of the Washington dispatch by Moving Picture World, said: "If the Internal Revenue Commission rules that this tax is collectable, then every motion picture company in this industry is liable. This is a question that interests the entire industry and not only the independents. This case involves an issue of vital importance to every producer and distributor, for if the tax is collectable on State Rights sales it is similarly collectable on transactions between the national distributing corporations and their local distributing subsidiaries.

"The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is as vitally concerned in this case as the Independent Producers and Distributors Association. If this tax is collectable it will drive every independent out of business. And I want to go on record right now as saying that if I pay any such tax every distributing organization in this industry will likewise pay."

Other independent distributors in their statements to Moving Picture expressed a similar attitude. In fact, every independent is prepared to spend his last cent, if necessary, to fight the case. In all probability Mr. Kosch will go to Washington in the interests of the I. P. D. A. Efforts to obtain an expression of the intentions of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry were in vain, for Secretary Frederick Elliott was out of town.

Would Mean Bankruptcy

It was pointed out by State-righters that a collection of the tax, which became effective May 1, 1919, would mean the bankruptcy of virtually every concern.

About a year ago the question was taken up by a group of independents, who met in the office of Arrow Film Corporation. Present at that meeting were Dr. W. E. Shallenberger of Arrow Film Corporation, Joseph Schnitzer, president of Equity Pictures Corporation, and Joe Brandt, president of the Independent Producers and Distributors Association and C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation. Messrs. Brandt's and Schnitzer's attorneys were present. The matter was discussed from every angle.

Later Dr. Shallenberger's attorney was called in. These legal experts unanimously opined that the film rental tax did not effect State Rights sales to local exchanges.

The Washington Dispatch

The Washington dispatch follows:

"The Bureau of Internal Revenue announced its intention of collecting the 5 per cent. film tax from producers and distributors who have leased State Rights for their films as well as from such State Rights buyers, regardless of the fact that the producers did not lease their films for exhibition. In conformity with this contention, demand has been made upon the Christie Company for upwards of $12,000 alleged by the bureau to be due the government as tax on such State Rights contracts. The matter was referred to Jack Connelly, Washington representative of the N. A. M. P. I., who at once took the matter up with the bureau and succeeded in securing for the company a suspension of thirty days in complying with the demand for payment, in which the company will be given an opportunity to present its argument to the solicitor of the bureau.

"It is the bureau's contention that all leases for exhibition and as such taxable under section 906 of the revenue act of 1918, which was repealed on January 1, 1922. It is the contention of the industry that films leased by a producer with the understanding that the lessee was not himself to exhibit the films but was to lease them to theatres for exhibition, would not subject the producers to this tax. It was argued by Mr. Connelly that the disposal of State Rights in such a manner did not bring the transaction within the scope of the law which textually covers only the 'leasing or licensing for exhibition.' Should the person obtaining State Rights from a producer himself exhibit the film he would be subject to tax, but where the lessee made further leases it did not appear that the producer, who did not lease the film for exhibition, was liable, especially in view of the fact that those who were instrumental in having the tax placed on a percentage basis, in lieu of the former footage tax, did not intend that it should be pyramided but that it should apply to one transaction only—the lease for exhibition.

An Important Test Case

"The Christie case is more than the protest of an individual taxpayer. It is a test case, for if the bureau is successful in upholding its contention that a producer is taxable on such leases, it is the government's intention to call upon all producers, and all others whose operations have been of alike nature, for the 5 per cent. tax on every film leased since the law was enacted.

"As a result of Mr. Connelly's efforts, officials of the bureau agreed that the Christie Company should be given an opportunity further to argue its case, despite the fact that claim for an abatement of the tax has twice been denied. Following Mr. Connelly's visit to the bureau an official telegram was sent to the collector of internal revenue in California, instructing him to suspend demand of payment of the tax for thirty days, and a date will be set on which officials of the Christie Company can meet the solicitor and other officials of the Bureau of Internal Revenue to thrash the matter out."

¶ A review of a moving picture is a critical opinion of its show value plus a brief outline of its nature, quality and style.

¶ It must be absolutely honest but it must be more than that, it must be the view of one who knows show values and whose opinion is worth something.

¶ Moving Picture World reviews do not pretend to be perfect but they are competent, they are truthful and they are fair.

¶ If a picture is good, our reviews say so. If it is poor, our reviews say so. This is the only kind of reviews that can possibly serve the exhibitor.

¶ Incidentally we normally print more reviews than all the other trade papers combined.

¶ They are unbought and unbuyable. They are as fair as we humanly can make them.

¶ They mean money to you.

Finish Detailed Plans For Convention; Instructions Are Issued to Delegates

FOLLOWING a day which Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State; Samuel I. Berman, executive secretary, and W. H. Linton, treasurer, spent in Albany conferring with members of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association, announcement was made that all detailed plans had been completed for the coming state convention of exhibitors in the Capital City. While there, President O'Reilly said that the convention would take action towards securing better shipping facilities for films, the adjustment of film prices, that the year's legislative program would be outlined, that the matter of uniform contracts would come up for action, and that the question of giving preference in the way of bookings to small town theatres over churches and schools would also be considered.

The state officers plan to arrive in Albany some two or three days in advance of the opening of the convention. As soon as the delegates reach Albany, they should go direct to the Hotel Ten Eyck and to an information desk on the mezzanine floor, where they will find Secretary Berman. Here they will register, receive their badges, hotel reservations and such information as they desire.

Business Begins at Noon

The business session will open immediately following the arrival of the Empire State Express on Tuesday noon. In the meantime, however, all exchanges having booths must have the decorations in place; in fact, President O'Reilly is notifying the exchanges that these booths must be completed not later than the evening preceding the opening of the convention. All booths have been sold.

Following the opening of the convention, there will be a meeting of the executive committee, and later on special committees will be announced.

All of Wednesday will be given over to business. Sessions will be held in the hotel ballroom. On the night of February 15, a ball will take place at the State Armory. It has been decided to announce all stars who will attend the ball not earlier than four or five days before the convention, the Albany Managers' Association believing that such procedure is the best in order that those attending the ball may know for a certainty the stars who will be there. A New York decorator has charge of the decorations of the Armory for this function.

May Film the Ball

Stars will make their appearance at 10 o'clock on the night of the ball. There is a plan on foot to have motion pictures taken at the ball and shown similar to the procedure which was successfully carried out at the Hotel Astor ball. Tickets for the ball went on sale last Monday in many places in Troy, Schenectady and Albany. Slides advertising the ball will be sent out the first week in February to all houses within a radius of 100 miles of Albany. It is expected that at least 6,000 will attend.

In connection with the banquet, which will be held at the Hotel Ten Eyck on the concluding night of the convention, Frank Tierney, former secretary to ex-Governor Martin Glynn, and now connected with Fox Productions, will write the songs.

The special women's committee, which will look after all members of their sex attending the convention, has been busy during the past week in arranging its program of entertainment. Letters are being sent to all exhibitors in the state urging them to bring their families.

To Invite Sweet

The list of speakers at the banquet will not be announced for another two weeks. Thaddeus Sweet, former speaker of the New York State Assembly will be invited to address the banqueters.

The Albany Chamber of Commerce is distributing 10,000 booklets throughout the state advertising the convention.

In order to take care of all exhibitors desiring hotel reservations, the local association has just sent out postals to all exhibitors in the state asking them to use a return attached postal and inform Samuel Suckno as to their wants.

George Roberts, president of the local association, was overjoyed last Saturday at the receipt of a letter from William Brandt to the effect that the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York was coming to the convention on a special train. This means that there will be the biggest delegation present from the Chamber ever attending any convention in New York State.

Increase in Number of Companies Incorporated

There was a decided increase in the number of motion picture companies incorporating in New York state during the past week, according to advice from Albany, when nine companies filed papers in the secretary of state's office, noting an aggregate capitalization of $135,000. Included in the number formed during the past few days were the Joseph M. Schenck Productions and the Talmadge Producing Corporation, each capitalized at $10,000, and having as directors N. M. and Joseph Schenck and Bert Nayfack, of New York City. Other companies incorporating, with the amount of capitalization and directors, were:

E. R. Champion Distributing Co , $10,000, E. R. Champion, Elizabeth Huber and Joseph Forster, New York city; Variety Sales Corporation, $10,000, M. R. Weinberg, William Rakoff, New York, Reuben Weinberg, Brooklyn; Third Avenue Motion Picture Theatres Company, $20,000 and the Highclass Motion Picture Theatres Company, $20,000, each having the same directors in G. W. and Ruth Anson, and Harry Frankel, of New York City; Projection Rooms, Inc., $5,000. Dave and Marie Narcey and William Kamean, New York; The Elmwood of Penn Yan, Inc., located at Penn Yan, $50,000, H. C. Morse, W. M. Patteson, C. B. Briggs, Penn Yan.

Reduced Rates for Convention Throng

Persons planning to attend the New York State exhibitors' convention next month will receive reduced rates over the New York Central lines if they follow the procedure outlined. When they purchase their ticket to Albany they should notify the ticket agent that they are attending the convention and desire a certificate. Should any ticket agent be without instructions on the issuing of certificates, exhibitors should get a receipt for the ticket they purchase, and this will be validated the same as a certificate by a representative of the New York Central at the convention.

A one-way ticket to Albany should be bought at the full price. Arriving at Albany, the person should present his certificate at the Hotel Ten Eyck for validation. This validation will enable the holder to return home at half fare.

Two Orchestras in One Picture House

The theatre with two distinct orchestras has become an established fact in Canada. This is the Allen Theatre, Winnipeg, which boasts a concert orchestra under the leadership of Charles Manning and a jazz organization under the baton of Harold Green. Both are house orchestras, permanently employed, and they alternate for features and comedies, as well as special musical offerings.

Chase's Attack Fizzles

from any pictures, the pictures would fail.

Dominated by Small Group, He Says

"There was the most significant statement of the absolute control by four or five men," declared the witness. "If you take that along with the point I am making—their entrance into politics—you can see what four or five men can do.

"Is it not a dangerous thing when four or five men can control the screens of America; when you realize that these four or five men have engaged the Postmaster General of the United States, who knows politics—at least of one party—to be the manager this fall, and you realize that the killing of the report of this committee is one of the tasks assigned to him, the tremendous importance is brought to your attention. He is selected because of his executive ability, but it seems quite curious that it should happen to be the ex-chairman of the Republican committee that is asked to manage this part of this important, significant business."

He pointed out that eight days after Senator Myers introduced his bill the Federal Trade Commission "brought charges against" various enterprises in the industry, and he suggested to the committee that it extend an invitation to the commission to testify before the committee.

Shortridge Humorous

Senator Shortridge is fast becoming famous in the Senate for his ability to think quick and fast and bring forth a funny remark that will better illustrate his point than a sober argument of great length. Canon Chase was dilating or what it would be possible to do with the screen; how it could be made to operate against the interests of any possible candidate.

"Well," said the senator, "you can adopt the remedy I did in California. Get up a film of your own and sweep them off the earth."

"But could you get the theatres to exhibit it?" wondered the witness.

"Certainly," responded the senator, "hence I am here."

The witness declared that controlling interests were seeking forty key cities in which to own theatres; then all of the other theatres in the territory of each of these will want to run the pictures that are successful in the theatres in the key cities, whereupon control of the theatres of the nation will be acquired.

Senator Ashurst declared that upon the argument of the witness, everyone who enters politics would have to be investigated. He pointed out, humorously, that the newspapers had entered politics, and suggested that one Californian owned lots of newspapers.

"Common Morality"

"How can you have freedom of expression if we in Congress create a bureau that tells 100,000,000 people what they shall see on the screens?" inquired the senator. "Somebody must say what shall and what shall not be thrown on the screens."

"This is the thought," replied the witness. "There is a general moral law in the United States. At least we have what is called the common morality. The law provides everywhere that that law shall not be violated by the morality that is taught on the screen. Motion pictures are outraging the morals of the country."

It was suggested that Tarkington Baker be called before the committee. It was charged that he was responsible for the agreement entered into between the N. A. M. P. I and Mr. Hays.

Dr. Chase declared that he does not recommend censorship but regulation and the bill which he recommends is more liberal than the New York law. Senator Shortridge suggested that the committee must consider the power of Congress to enact such legislation. He seems inclined to agree with the industry that motion pictures are entitled to the same degree of free speech as the newspapers.

The only picture referred to during the hearing was "Foolish Wives." The witness referred to adverse criticisms of this in reviews. He also declared that one of the duties of Mr. Hays will be to meet the charges of the Federal Trade Commission.

Myers Waxes Prophetic

Senator Myers, author of the resolution calling for an investigation, predicted that it will not be very many years before a majority of the states enact censorship laws. He said that there is a growing sentiment among the people for such legislation.

In answering the claim that the screen would be used as a medium to influence people in one way or another, Senator Ashurst declared that the almond growers of the West and the cotton producers of the South were doing everything possible to secure protection from foreign importations—and that he was for them. Senator Myers declared that the screen situation was becoming unwholesome.

Senator Shortridge declared that "the right to express thought by way of pen and pencil or quill is a natural inherent right; the right to express thought by impressing it upon paper is a natural inherent right. That is our conception and that is the law of this Republic. Now, as suggested, we have the natural inherent right to speak our thoughts, write our thoughts with pen, express our thoughts by impressing them on a bit of paper and circulating it. For the violation of that right unquestionably we can be punished and are punished by local laws in respect of slander and libel, and under municipal laws, of obscene, indecent language.

Refining Censorship

"When you speak of censorship, it means something or nothing. It is a regulation of a certain kind. It is controlled by a certain thing. It is a thing of government for the subject matter, namely, moving pictures. Now, it is claimed there is a Constitutional right in the states to exercise that control, and it will doubtless be claimed that the government has control in the District of Columbia, and, perhaps, interstate commerce traffic, but whether it be municipal, state or federal control, it means that the government shall control the industry we have in mind and say what pictures shall be exhibited and what pictures shall not be exhibited. That really is the issue."

It is to be remembered that witnesses had declared that it was not censorship but regulation that was desired, and Senator Shortridge removed the mask.

Senator Ashurst entered his opposition to pre-censorship. He declared that he would support a bill that would make it a crime to throw certain pictures on the screen. He named a number of things that would go to make a picture unfit for exhibition, and in support of his contentions he said that the newspapers now have the power to print the things complained of, "but they know that a jury of twelve men would absolutely convict them and send them to the penitentiary. That restraint we have found to be a good thing. Now, it seems to me if we set up a censorship it just climbs. We all go to one man to see what we can print. John Smith may say that Charlie Chaplin pictures should not be shown because he does not like comedy and claims that the pictures have no merit."

So Lamentably Weak?

This did not appeal to Senator Myers and he sought to go on with his own argument, and later Senator Ashurst declared he would hate to believe that we are so weak as a nation that we cannot view pictures without having our morals contaminated.

Both senators, in comparing the screen and the press, held the opinion that the men charged with censoring could exert a greater control over the industry than could the industry itself. If the industry gets too big, combines and seeks to do things illegal, there is relief for the public in the anti-trust laws. Senator Ashurst

Why Don't "Depravities" of the Films Affect Morals of Censors, Asks Hughes

ANYONE who is willing to be a censor is not fit to be one," said Rupert Hughes, well known author and scenarioist in an address on the "Future of the Motion Picture," last week at the Bushwick High School, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mr. Hughes invaded the stronghold of New York censorship as spokesman for the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. It was in Brooklyn last year that the censorship agitation originated and led to the enactment of the law creating a New York State Motion Picture Commission.

Mr. Hughes characterized the film censorship boards as "sausage machines" and said that it is eminently unfair that film productions, on which months of painstaking effort have been spent by authors, actors and directors, are obliged in several states to be ground through machines before the public itself is allowed to see the result of this serious, intelligent and painstaking effort.

Really Laboratories

"The motion picture studios are really laboratories where people work as earnestly as in many other laboratories in the world," said Mr. Hughes. "These people are not gypsies. They are earnest, conscientious people working hard and exercising self-denial and strict attention to their art. The comedians, or clowns of the screen, work like chemists to get the exact formula which will produce an explosion of laughter. Chaplin, Harold Lloyd and other notable clowns are in reality great dramatic artists, all working just as seriously and earnestly as any other professional workers in the world.

"In New York we have a nice middle-aged lady who is paid by the state to cut out from films what she considers damaging to the morals of the community. After she has sat for eight hours watching pictures in the projection room, it is really remarkable that her family even speaks to her when she goes home at night—if it were really true what the censors tell us they find in some of the films. Just think of her state of mind, after looking at the horrible depravities that censors tell us are in the films. If the motion pictures have the effect upon one's mind that the censors tell us they have, the average censor should be taken out and lynched after a week of looking at these terrible things they tell us exist. Of course, though, the pictures do not have the effect upon one's mind and upon one's actions that the censors attribute to them.

As to Pennsylvania

"Pennsylvania has spent millions of dollars on censorship but I defy anyone to go to Philadelphia and find any cleaner pictures than that are shown elsewhere, or any less depravity and crime than is found elsewhere. Certainly the motion pictures cannot be blamed for crimes and evils that have been existing since the creation of the world.

"Censorship cannot keep children virtuous. In England years ago they found two little girls 8 years old, who for more than a year had been kept in solitary confinement in cells as punishment for theft. But this did not stop theft in England. Crimes come from the inside, not from the outside.

"A clergyman once told me that he would rather have his daughter in a picture house in the evening than sitting alone at home with her thoughts.

"When anyone tells you that something you may see will ruin your heart or soul, tell him that he is talking nonsense. When they tell you the motion picture is the cause of wickedness, tell them that the motion picture is twenty years old and that wickedness existed long before that.

What History Reveals

"It took thousands of years to break down censorship in order to get public schools. During the time very honorable people gravely said that if you let ordinary persons read, it would ruin them. Of course that, in the light of what has happened, was absurd, but the same character of people today are saying that it will ruin the public to see motion pictures that have not been passed through the censorship 'sausage machine.'"

Mr. Hughes' address was one of a series of lectures that are being given in the public schools of New York through an arrangement between the Board of Education and the National Association of Motion Picture Industry. Other speakers will be D. W. Griffith and Paul H. Cromelin.

An interesting film program was shown in conjunction with Mr. Hughes' lecture, the pictures for which were donated by company members of the National Association. These pictures were: "Sunshine Gathers" and "Neptune's Daughters," by Prizma, Inc., and "Speed," by Goldwyn.

AN alleged film theft plot involving the attempted piracy and sale of prints which would have represented a loss of at least $500,000 to the companies involved, has been thwarted by the Film Theft Committee of the N. A. M. P. I. The film was to have been shipped to Japan, Mexico and South America.

The details of the plot and its frustration were divulged at a meeting of the Film Theft Committee on January 24, following the arrest in Portland, Me., of Leon Gorman, a distributor's agent, with headquarters in that city, who is charged with attempting to steal 1,000 reels of film which were found in his possession and which belonged to several of the important film companies.

Most of the film was the property of Metro. Other companies whose reels were found in the recovered loot were Pathe, Fox Film, Universal, Famous Players, Bray Pictures and Goldwyn.

Gorman's arrest was brought about by W. Comfort Hawkins, representing the Film Theft Committee, and John S. MacLeod, a Metro official and a member also of the committee.

To Aid Manufacturers in Promoting Foreign Trade

Moving pictures as a means of promoting foreign trade are to be given an exhaustive trial within the next few months by the Department of Commerce, which for some time has been investigating this means of carrying the message of American production to foreign markets. Arrangements have been made with the Bureau of Mines, of the Department of the Interior, for obtaining the services of its motion picture expert for the purpose of producing the first film to be shown abroad.

The co-operation of American industries will be required to make the venture successful, as it will be necessary for the various manufacturers to pay the entire cost of production, the department's part being confined to the showing of the filmc abroad. Showing will also be made in this country under the auspices of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Film Folk as Artists

The Society of Independent Artists, Inc., 1947 Broadway, New York City, reports that many motion picture people are planning to exhibit their own works at the sixth annual exhibition of the society which will be held at the Waldorf-Astoria from March 11 to April 2. Artists must register before February 1. The time limit was extended from January 15.

Salesmen Benefit by Congressional Action

Film traveling men will benefit by the provision of a bill just passed by the House of Representatives providing for interchangeable mileage books, good on any railroad in the country.

The measure directs the Interstate Commerce Commission to order all carriers to issue mileage books of not less than 1,000 nor more than 5,000 miles. Before issuing this order, however, the commission is to promulgate regulations surrounding the use of such mileage prescribing whether the tickets are to be transferable or not, and if not, what identification may be required, and setting forth the baggage privileges to which lawful holders of such tickets are entitled.

The commission will also have authority to set the rate of fare to be charged for such mileage books.

Walker Wins Verbal Bout with Senator Lusk

Senator James J. Walker took a slam at the New York State Motion Picture Censorship Commission last week when Senator Clayton R. Lusk, introducer of the bill last year, told the members of the Senate that they were invited to attend an illustrated talk in the Assembly chamber on the New York port development.

"Wait a minute," said Senator Walker. "Have the pictures been censored? It is well to know whether or not the law has been complied with."

Upon Senator Lusk replying that the pictures had been censored, Senator Walker remarked:

"Well, they will not be worth looking at, then."

Wants Child Acts Barred

Mrs. Alice Curtis Moyer-Wing, Missouri Industrial Inspector, has sent letters to the managers of moving picture and vaudeville theatres in St. Louis, requesting that they stop the practice of permitting children to exhibit in their theatres. She contends the practice of neighborhood houses in holding amateur nights in which children are permitted to compete for prizes is a technical violation of the state child labor laws, which prohibits the employment of children under sixteen years of age at gainful occupations.

Statter to Take Charge

Arthur Statter, Los Angeles newspaperman and scenario writer, has been given charge of the serial and short reel feature department at Universal City. He replaces William Lord Wright, who recently resigned.

En Route to New York

George W. Mann, vice-president of the Motion Picture Utility Corporation representing local banking interests to finance San Francisco made pictures, will be at the Hotel Astor February 1 to arrange for disposal of this product and negotiate for other producers to come to San Francisco.

The company has been functioning for some time and is headed by Joseph R. H. Jacoby, who produced last three Hobart Bosworth pictures.

Selznick News Has Real Innovation

THERE is no question but that Myron Selznick has made a real innovation in the physical appearance of the Selznick News. Trade newspaper men were treated to a showing of this innovation last week and were most favorably impressed. Beginning with the current issue of the Selznick "pet," the old conventional subtitle will be seen no more. In its stead will be a representation of a newspaper clipping. Only the headlines, and these in clear type, will be used.

There seem to be three features which make this change attractive. In the first place, the printed description of the ensuing scenes are more easily read in this form than in the old subtitle, as there is plenty of white space to make the type stand out boldly. Second, the new subtitle suggests absolute authenticity because it reminds of the daily newspaper. Third, it has an individuality that will redound to the credit of the Selznick News, establishing it as different from competing news reels and bringing it more forcibly before the attention of the public.

The headlines shown last week were well written—good newspaper "heads" that told the story concisely. This innovation will be welcomed by the public so long as the headlines remain pithy and so balanced that there is plenty of white space around them. Considering the staff with which Myron Selznick has surrounded himself, there is no doubt but that this quality will be maintained.—S.S.

Hodkinson Takes Over Realart Offices; Eight-Year Lease Begins on February 1

MARKING another milestone in its phenomenal business expansion of the past six months, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, now recognized as one of the most important distributors in the industry, leaves the present headquarters in the Harriman National Bank building on Fifth avenue, where its offices have been located for four years, to take over on February 1, the former executive office of Realart Pictures Corporation at 463-9 Fifth avenue. The lease was signed on January 19, and dates from February 1, 1922 to February, 1930, a term of eight years.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation was organized and incorporated on October 31, 1917. In November of the same year executive offices were established on the third floor of the Harriman National Bank building at 527 Fifth avenue. As a result of the continued expansion of the Hodkinson interests these quarters soon became too crowded, and several months ago additional office space was taken on the fifth floor of the Guarantee Trust Building, 522 Fifth avenue, where the accounting department and offices of the purchasing agent are located.

A few months ago, however, it was realized that even this additional amount of space did not afford sufficient working room for the rapidly expanding company, and with the establishment of the Hodkinson branches in November, it became apparent that larger quarters would have to be acquired at once. At that time, however, no other Fifth avenue building offered a solution to the problem.

When the first announcement was published that the Realart offices were to be abandoned negotiations were immediately opened for their acquisition by Hodkinson. The deal has been pending for several weeks, but was definitely closed and the lease signed last Thursday. The arrangement includes all office fixtures, desks, filing cabinets and two of the latest type Simplex projectors.

The new Hodkinson home office occupies the entire fourth floor of the building at 463-9 Fifth avenue and for the first time since its incorporation Hodkinson will have its own projection room and sufficient space to accommodate the large staff of home office executives and employes without undue crowding. The projection room in the new Hodkinson offices has the longest "throw" of any private projection room in the city, it is said, and the seating arrangement consists of luxurious over-stuffed divans and arm chairs.

The individual private offices are elaborately appointed. President Hodkinson's office, which is located on the Fifth avenue and Fourtieth street corner, has four windows and the walls and ceiling are made of built-in ash panels. The desk which was specially made to match the other woodwork in the room is said to have cost a large sum, while in one corner of the room there is on old Jacobean table imported from England at a cost of nearly $2,000.

The general manager's office, which will be occupied by O. F. Munroe, is equally luxurious and contains a second Jacobean table to match the one in the president's office. The chairs are of overstuffed leather, and the floor, as in Mr. Hodkinson's office, is covered with heavy blue velvet carpet.

Three other executive offices are arranged on the Fifth avenue side of the building, each of which is luxuriously and tastefully appointed. Additional offices are arranged on the Fourtieth street side and along the side facing a large open court on the north. The projection room is located in the center of the floor space. One of the most imposing rooms in the entire suite is the reception hall. The walls are panelled in walnut and the furnishings are massive over-stuffed divans and arm chairs, while the floor is covered with a double thickness of soft grey velvet carpet.

Every friend of the Hodkinson organization is invited to call and inspect the new headquarters. In all probability an official house-warming will be held when President Hodkinson returns from his visit to the West Coast.

Lasky Changes Name of Realart Studios

Several changes in studio personnel were announced this week in Los Angeles by Jesse L. Lasky, in charge of the production of Paramount pictures.

The Realart studio, announced Mr. Lasky, has been renamed the Wilshire studio, to distinguish it from the Lasky studio.

Frank E. Garbutt, until now manager of the Realart studio, has been appointed special technical advisor to the Paramount production department and will be in charge of all the company's laboratory work in Los Angeles and New York.

Victor H. Clarke, formerly manager at the Long Island studio, has been appointed manager of the Wilshire studio.

Recall Fitzmaurice and Robertson from Europe

Jesse L. Lasky has announced in Hollywood that George Fitzmaurice, who has been producing for Paramount in Europe, will go to California and that both he and John S. Robertson will operate at the Wilshire Paramount Studio (formerly the Realart Studio) taking with them their entire technical staffs.

Bronx Exhibitors Install Officers Recently Elected

Following his re-election for the ninth consecutive time, John J. Wittman was for the tenth time installed as president of the Bronx Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association at a banquet held Monday evening, January 25, at Daubert's club rooms in the Bronx.

At the same time, the following officers were also installed: John C. Bolte, vice-president for the third time; Henry Cole, executive secretary for the ninth time; Henry Suchman, treasurer for second term; Edward Falter, Morris Sussman and Isadore Rothman as trustees, and William Wilson as sergeant-at-arms.

The esteem in which this organization is held by the city and Bronx officials was shown by the presence of Justice Robitzek of the Municipal Court, District Attorney Edward Glennon, Judge William E. Morris, Surrogate Schultz, Justice Peter A. Shields, Assistant District Attorney Quigley, Frank Fitzpatrick of the Board of Water Supply. All of these gentlemen thanked the Bronx organization for its assistance and co-operation, several stating that its attitude was largely responsible for their election. Many of these gentlemen spoke against censorship.

Another guest whose presence spoke well for the standing of the Bronx Exhibitors was John Hyland, superintendent of the Bronx Children's Society, who thanked the Bronx exhibitors for their fine co-operation as a body in working with the society and city officials in seeing that the laws regarding the admission of minors is lived up to.

As a token of the esteem in which the officers are held by the organization, John Wittman was presented with a fine folding fishing rod, Mrs. Wittman with a beautiful floor lamp, Henry Cole with a handsome suit case, John Bolte and Henry Suchman with gold fountain pens.

pointed out that during the pendency before the Senate of the League of Nations legislation and now, under the presence of the Four-Power treaty, if there were censorship in the land, the powers in control of the government could prevent the appearance of all publicity that was not in keeping with their views.

The senators quizzed Canon Chase as to the nature of the assistance rendered Governor Whitman by the screen—they wanted to know if he considered that immoral. He sought to sidestep that issue by declaring that was simply an incident of the control of the screen. It was brought out that the press and other mediums are used to further the aspirations of political candidates in the same way.

Field a "Knocker"

W. H. Field—who later told the Moving Picture World correspondent, when asked where he came from and what his interests were, that he had "knocked around a lot" and that he was simply speaking for the American Legion—urged upon the committee that there was great need for regulation of the industry. He said that some time ago the Legion had attempted to have local officials act against pictures imported from Germany, which he classes as propaganda pictures which distorted American history but without success. The senators told him it would have been possible to secure injunctions against the pictures in any and every city in which they were exhibited, but this did not seem satisfactory to the witness.

In closing the session, Senator Shortridge announced that the subcommittee would be willing to give another hearing later to those who might be opposed to the Myers resolution, and Canon Chase said he would present some names of persons who would desire an opportunity to join with him in favoring the probe.

A Big Constructive Thing

AFTER seeing the first two numbers of the Official Urban Movie Chats, which is issued in conjunction with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, we are of the opinion that the organization has done no more far-reaching and constructive thing for itself, for its industry and for the public.

Editor Charles Urban has demonstrated again his ability to make things tremendously interesting, and we extend to him, as well as to the Theatre Owners, our congratulations. The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which is releasing the series, is in for an extra run of big business, if we are any judge of attraction values.

Preceding the first number is a declaration of principles and a new and a really constructive slogan, which reads: "For the Good of All." This has a positive quality and an acceptable flavor, and it in no sense suggests defense or warfare. The declaration of principles reads:

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES
THE MOTION PICTURE THEATRE
OWNERS OF AMERICA

Realizing the tremendous influence of motion pictures at this time for the re-establishment of the principle of right thinking among our people, dedicate ourselves to the following constrictive plan:

FIRST: To encourage in every way possible the production of clean, wholesome and optimistic films.

SECOND: To take an active interest in the public welfare and co-operate with our community civic and social forces, in helping to maintain a high moral standard.

THIRD: To utilize our theatres and screens for the purpose of helping our boys and girls to become good citizens.

AND LAST: To do our part to the full measure in helping to re-establish a healthy condition throughout our country.

MOTION PICTURE THEATRE OWNERS OF AMERICA

The material for entertainment runs the gamut of human interest. It is instructive, entertaining and rich in appeal. It educates without making the spectators feel that they are in a school room.

The second number is of the same high quality and character as the first, and there seems to be every reason to expect the succeeding numbers will be equally fine.

President Harding's endorsement is used importantly, but briefly, and the concentration is on the instructive and entertaining elements. We venture the opinion that the Movie Chats will do more than any other one influence that has appeared, to better the screen's position before the public and to really help the American people immeasurably. The Theatre Owners have hit the right thing in the right way, and they are entitled to every praise for this accomplishment.

This publication is dedicated to the service of the moving picture industry in all of its elements. Its foundation is character, its watchword is enterprise, its aim is betterment.

TO celebrate the tenth anniversary of the birth of the feature moving picture Sarah Bernhardt, the greatest actress in the history of the drama, has been invited to visit the United States during the month of March. It is significant that the greatest of all actresses should have been the first to appear in a picture of feature length and scope. Old timers of ten years' standing will recall Mme. Bernhardt in the role of Queen Elizabeth, a character which she portrayed with extraordinary skill. Today the production would not seem pretentious, but it served to awaken those interested in the screen to its possibilities for entertainment that was more than novelty. As we look back at this picture and recall its run at Daly's Theatre in New York, we are reminded of the astonishment of the public. Few men and women of that ancient time—for ten years is almost a century in moving pictures—had any real conception of the screen's greatness until this picture was presented. There was some resentment on the part of the old line dramatic critics who could not see their way clear to regard the screen as either an artistic or a permanent institution.

The screen owes a great debt to Mme. Bernhardt, and it is to be hoped that she will be able to accept the invitation to be present at this anniversary celebration. It is an event of great consequence. All of the industry should join in bidding her welcome.

Canon William Sheafe Chase, the Brooklyn ecclesiastical nuisance to the moving picture business who has so much time on his hands that he can journey to legislative halls to advocate the medieval idiocy of censorship, met with a gratifying contact of good, common sense in Washington on Wednesday. Appearing before a committee that was considering whether or not the moving picture industry should be subjected to a Congressional investigation, he found worthy men of dignity and importance who told him that they did not believe in censorship at all, and men also who doubted whether censorship effected a cure of any evil whatever. The good Canon has had such fine holidays in Albany that the treatment he received in Washington seems almost rude. A big frog in a little puddle he found himself dwarfed by the senatorial intelligence of Washington. We realize that these are harsh words, but they are the truth.

Victor Shaprio of Pathe has been elected head of S. Rankin Drew Post of the American Legion, succeeding Lieut. Commander Wells Hawks, who is again in active service. S. Rankin Drew Post is of all the legion units the one nearest the heart of the moving picture and stage folk, and the happy choice of Lieut. Shapiro is a source of satisfaction to our industry. A man of enthusiasms, modesty and fine abilities he is a credit to us and we shall regard him as the screen's representative in his new position of honor.

New and Very Beautiful!

WARREN G. NEWCOMBE has contributed an absolute novelty to the screen in his thousand feet of the beautifully contrived "Land of Love's Dreams." He has demonstrated that the surface of picture possibilities has only been scratched and that the field of endeavor is limited solely by human imagination. Exquisitely painted things are mingled with live figures—to produce a charming and withal an exciting dream of a young man who visits the exalted temples of fancy, journeys on to the dome of Heaven itself, and on the magic barge of phantasy is carried to the brink of destruction. The entire thing engages the sympathy, astonishes the senses and compels the enthusiasm of the spectator. Its titles are its only weakness, as these seem to have been done by one who had the soul for grandeur, but who had not learned how to write. The titles do not rise at all to the sublime beauties of the Newcombe achievement, yet this is so really an achievement that the picture is great despite them.

We believe theatres everywhere will heartily welcome this new and lovely thing, and we extend our hearty congratulations to Mr. Newcombe for having done something worth while.

News from the Producers

First National Has Multitude of Films Completed, in Production and Planned

Independent studios and stars releasing their photoplays through First National were never busier than they are at this moment, the company announces. Not one studio is idle and at some, such as the United, Thomas H. Ince's, Mack Sennett's and Louis B. Mayer's three and four companies are working at the same time.

The independent studios have recently shipped to the New York offices of First National two Mack Sennett comedies, one of which features Ben Turpin and is titled "Bright Eyes." The other is a two-reel Sennett comedy, still unnamed, featuring Billy Bevan and Mildred June.

R. W. Walsh's "Kindred of the Dust," a dramatization of Peter B. Kyne's novel, also has been finished recently and has received a pre-view at the Ritz-Carlton in New York City. Marshall Neilan's film version of Booth Tarkington's "Penrod" in which 'Freckles' Barry plays the title role, is also completed.

In the cutting and editing rooms of the studios there are now a number of big productions which will be ready for release in a few weeks. Katherine MacDonald's "Domestic Relations" is being prepared and final titles will be inserted this week. Anita Stewart's "The Woman He Married" also is being cut and edited. J. L. Frothingham has "The Man Who Smiled" almost completed. At the Thomas H. Ince studio four photoplays—"Jim," "The Hottentot," "Skin Deep" and "Bellboy 13"—are getting their final grooming before shipment to New York.

Two Ray Films

In the cutting rooms at the Ray Studio both "The Deuce of Spades" and "Smudge" are being edited. "The Deuce of Spades" will be finished this week. At Buster Keaton's new "twin-six" studio "Cops," his latest comedy, has been assembled for shipment, while in the Mack Sennett cutting room the final splicing of "For Love or Money," formerly "When You Leave Home," is being done.

In New York, Richard Barthelmess' latest production, "The Seventh Day," has been filmed and editing is well under way.

Plays that have been on the verge of production for many months are now actually under way. Maurice Tourneur is in the midst of "Lorna Doone" and J. Barker Read, Jr., is completing "Pawned." Another production, Richard Walton Tully's "The Masquerader," the making of which had been postponed for sometime, is now begun. Allen Holubar also is busy again. His new production is "The Soul Seeker," starring Dorothy Phillips.

Talmadges Busy

At the Louis B. Mayer Studio, John M. Stahl is completing the filming of "One Clear Call" and Anita Stewart is busy on the dramatization of Countess Barcynska "Rose O' the Sea." At Mack Sennett's Studio, "On Patrol," the fourth Billy Bevan-Mildred June comedy, is in the making and Mabel Normand is working at top speed in "Suzanna," her romantic drama of early California life. Ben Turpin is a sort of Toonerville trolley conductor in some scenes of his latest two-reel comedy, "The Robin's Nest."

At the United Studios both Norma and Constance Talmadge are busy. Constance finished "The Divorcee" on January 17 and Norma is now well started on the interiors of "The Duchess of Langeasis." Katherine MacDonald has started another picture, as yet untitled. Charles Ray has chosen his cast for a new play.

In Continuity Form

There are several photoplays being cast into continuity form now at the various studios for future production, among them Thomas H. Ince's "Someone to Love," "The Desert Fiddler," "Wooden Spoils" and "Finding Home." Katherine MacDonald's scenario staff is preparing "Conquer the Woman" and Marshall Neilan will do "Fools First" next.

Barthelmess Busy

In the East, Hope Hampton is appearing in "The Light in the Dark," while Richard Barthelmess is busy on "Sonny." Charlie Chaplin also is hard at work at his La Brea avenue studio, but the title and plot of his next production remains a dark secret.

Summing up, it looks as if 1922 will be one of the busiest years the producers and stars releasing through Associated First National ever had.

Many First Run Contracts Are Signed for "The Four Seasons"

"The Four Seasons" has been in preparation for national release for the last few weeks and the period of grooming is almost over.

Contracts for first runs are being made in all the major cities of the country by the branch exchanges of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which is distributing the nature-classic for the Kineto Company of America, Inc.

The interest excited by the pre-release run in New York has spread all over the country. An idea of how picture-goers are looking forward to its coming is given by a comment in the Portland (Me) Press-Herald of January 18. The motion picture editor of that paper wrote:

"The Four Seasons" will be distributed generally beginning next month. This is good news because it means that it probably will receive the earliest possible showing in Portland. It has received excellent notices in New York by even the most blase critics.

This enthusiasm is as strong on the part of exhibitors as it is on the part of the public.

In a few cities the pre-release idea carried out at the Rialto in New York has been duplicated. One of these cities was Baltimore where it played at the New Theatre.

It is expected that "The Four Seasons" will sweep the country. Wherever it plays it is proving that the motion picture public really wants the high-quality product; that it is all wrong to underestimate the intelligence and appreciation of the picture going public.

Among the prominent theatres that will play "The Four Seasons" in the very near future are Sid Grauman's Theatre in Los Angeles and the entire group of theatres on the Stanley circuit in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, with a pre-release at the New Karlton in Philadelphia.

Pathe Film Praised by Educators

In connection with reports received from all sections of the United States of the enthusiastic public approval accorded to "White Eagle," the latest serial release starring Ruth Roland, Pathe has letters received from high educational sources warmly commending the picture for its freedom from objectionable features and for its absorbing dramatic, realistic and artistic qualities.

One of the letters was from Paul C. Stetson, of the Board of Education, Dayton, Ohio, and the other was from Mrs. A. J. Barnett, of the Central Council of the Parent-Teachers' Associations of Dayton and vicinity.

Larry Semon Finishes Vitagraph Comedy; A. E. Smith Praises it

After several weeks of hard work, Larry Semon has completed his newest Vitagraph comedy. It is said to be the most elaborate comedy ever made by Semon and comes under the category of a special production. Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, Semon, and several members of his supporting company, saw the picture in the rough, without titles, just before Mr. Smith's departure for New York last week, and declared themselves more than satisfied. They were agreed that the result more than justified the extra time and money spent on the production. Lucille Carlisle is again seen as Semon's leading woman.

Just before the comedy was completed ground was broken for the new Semon studio on the Vitagraph lot.

"Monkey Shines" Is Now Finished

"Monkey Shines," a new Campbell Comedy, has recently been finished and delivered to Educational Film Exchanges for release. It presents a new youngster, Laurence Licalvi, in the principal boy role, while Doreen Turner has the chief girl part.

Paramount Names Twelve for Simultaneous Booking During Anniversary Month

For the celebration of its Tenth Anniversary Month, starting March 5, Paramount has specially set aside twelve of its biggest productions as yet unreleased. The reservation of these subjects for day and date booking throughout the country at the outset of the month, says the Paramount statement, insures the best opportunity of the year to first-run exhibitors for registering the biggest month's receipts in their history. They are:

William S. Hart's "Travelin' On," a typical western drama, Hart being the author. It was adapted and directed by Lambert Hillyer and photographed by Joe August. Ethel Gray Terry is leading woman.

George Fitzmaurice's "Forever," adapted by Ouida Bergere from George Du Maurier's novel "Peter Ibbetson," and the play of the same name. It has shown for weeks at the Criterion Theatre, New York. Elsie Ferguson and Wallace Reid are co-starred. The balance of the cast includes Elliott Dexter, George Fawcett, Montagu Love and Dolores Cassinelli.

Wallace Reid in "The World's Champion," adapted from the stage comedy, "The Champion," by Thomas Louden and A. E. Thomas. J. E. Nash wrote the scenario and Philip E. Rosen directed. Lois Wilson plays opposite Reid.

Gloria Swanson in "Her Husband's Trademark," from an original story by Clara Beranger, with scenario by Lorna Moon. Sam Wood directed. Richard Wayne is leading man and Stuart Holmes, Clarence Burton, Charles Ogle, James Neill and Edythe Chapman are in the cast.

Wanda Hawley in a Realart picture, "Bobbed Hair," written especially for her by Hector Turnbull, scenarized by Harvey Thew and directed by Thomas N. Heffron. The cast includes William Carleton, William Boyd and Ethel Wales.

Cecil B. DeMille's big special production, "Fool's Paradise," suggested by Leonard Merrick's story, "The Laurels and the Lady." The story was written by Beulah Marie Dix and Sada Cowan. The all-star cast includes Dorothy Dalton, Mildred Harris, Conrad Nagel, Theodore Kosloff, John Davidson, Julia Faye, Clarence Burton, Guy Oliver and Jacqueline Logan.

Constance Binney in "The Sleepwalker," a comedy of somnambulism by Aubrey Stauffer, directed by Edward Le Saint from the scenario by Wells Hastings.

Marion Davies in the Cosmopolitan's "The Young Diana," from the novel by Marie Corelli. The scenarist was Luther Reed and Albert Capellani and Robert G. Vignola combined in the direction. Forrest Stanley, Pedro de Cordoba and Harrison Ford are in the cast.

The four massive U.F.A. productions of the series titled "The Mistress of the World," directed by Joseph May and featuring Mia May. These productions are promised to set a standard hitherto unapproached in spectacular interest.

Selznick Names Eugene O'Brien and Elaine Hammerstein Features

Fannie Hurst's unique ideas on marriage, as promulgated not so very long ago, have been used by Lewis Allen Browne, Selznick scenarist, as the basis for "Why Announce Your Marriage?" starring Elaine Hammerstein.

This idea consisted of being married and retaining liberty of action, of a woman living apart from her husband, and coming and going as freely as if the couple remained single.

When the scenario was finished, Myron Selznick assigned Alan Crosland to direct the production and Mr. Crosland added some ideas of his own to the scenario. Playing opposite Miss Hammerstein is Niles Welch and an effective supporting cast has been provided, including Arthur Housman, Frank Currier and Florence K. Billings.

In the screen version it is announced that the Hurst idea has been considerably elaborated with adventures and side issues which add to the interest and suspense.

Another Selznick production which is now completed is "The Prophet's Paradise," release date being set for February 10. Eugene O'Brien is the star with Sigrid Holmquist, known as the "Swedish Mary Pickford," playing opposite. Lewis Allen Browne prepared the scenario from a magazine story by C. S. Montagne, the action centering in Constantinople.

The picture gets its title from a fictitious slave market invented by Turkish crooks as a means of robbing tourists. O'Brien appears as a Yankee traveler disguised as a Turkish prince and rescues an American heiress.

The supporting players include Arthur Housman, Bigelow Cooper, Arthur Donaldson, Joseph Burke and Nora Booth.

"Glorious Fool" Is An Amusing Romantic Comedy

Picture patrons who remember "It's a Great Life," made by Goldwyn from Mary Roberts Rinehart's story, "The Empire Builders," will find equal pleasure in her new Goldwyn's "The Glorious Fool," scheduled for release in the next group of pictures which the corporation is now getting ready for showing.

Throughout the romantic story of the wealthy young man who ended up, after a spree, in a hospital with but a few hours of life promised him by the physicians, married his nurse to cheat designing relatives of his fortune, and then got well, Mrs. Rinehart has interwoven the human, natural comedy which she imparts to all her stories whether on the stage, screen or within the covers of books.

Helene Chadwick and Richard Dix are featured in "The Glorious Fool" and continue in it the excellent team work which made "Dangerous Curve Ahead" so delightfully different from any other motion picture. Miss Chadwick as the young probationary nurse who is persuaded into marying Billy Grant on his deathbed and then finds herself with a strange husband when he recovers, does some very fine and amusing acting in the picture.

Others in the cast are Kate Lester, Vera Lewis, Lillian Langdon, Otto Hoffman, Theodore von Eltz, John Lince, Frederic Vroom and George Cooper.

MacDonald's Next

For Katherine MacDonald next production for Associate First National, B. P. Schulber president of Preferred Picture has engaged the following wel known screen players: Nigel Ba: rie, Charles Gerard, Charles Clar: Mona Kingsley and Ethel Kay.

The story is an original, tempc rarily titled "Friday to Monday by Charles Logue. Chet Withe will direct.

"The Infidel," another produc of the Logue typewriter, recentl completed but not released, give every preliminary indication, ac cording to everybody that has ha a chance to preview it, of bein one of the outstanding film tri umphs of the current year.

Exhibitor Passes Along a Tip; Small Towns Like "The Sheik'

James V. Chest, proprietor of the Capitol Theatre, Canajoharie, N. Y., has "cleaned up" with George Melford's Paramount production, "The Sheik." In this town of less than 2,500 Mr. Chest played three days at advanced prices, and was so elated over the results that he wrote the following unsolicited letter to M. W. Kempner, manager of Paramount's Albany exchange:

"The writer very seldom indorses any picture. However, I feel that I am in duty bound to say something regarding 'The Sheik,' which I recently played. To start with, I wish to say that the small exhibitor who is afraid to play this picture because it is costume, is making a big mistake in not booking as soon as he can.

"As a rule, small-town folks are not strong for the costume picture. However, 'The Sheik' is different because it is human, the characters are fine and there is the greatest photography I have ever seen. When I played this feature at my Capitol Theatre, even the hard-boiled western fans came a second time to see it. I ran 'The Sheik' three days, whereas my ordinary run on big pictures is two days, and on the third day my theatre wasn't half big enough to accommodate the people.

"The small-town man had better book this as soon as he can, for it sure spells money at the box office. Besides, no great amount of advertising is necessary. I did not even have a herald. A few posters, the trailer and the local newspaper did the job."

Has Much Action

"A Game Chicken," which Bebe Daniels has just completed as a Realart picture for famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is heralded by the producers as providing the greatest variety of action of any production in which this vivacious star has appeared.

"Lotus Eater" Opens Theatre

"The Lotus Eater," the John Barrymore production personally directed by Marshall Neilan, which was held over for a second week at the Capitol Theatre in New York, after it had established new attendance records on the opening day, was chosen as the initial feature of the new Capitol Theatre in Detroit, a John H. Kunsky house, which opened January 12.

Three Premieres for Stahl Film

"The Song of Life," a John M. Stahl production, released by First National, is to have three simultaneous premiere showings the week of January 23. It has been booked for that period by the managements of the Grand Opera House and Liberty Theatre in Pittsburgh, and the Victor Theatre of McKeesport, Pa.

Lane Begins on New Fox Comedy

Lupino Lane, the famous English comedian and pantomimist who was recently signed to a contract by William Fox, has begun his first two-reel special comedy at the West Coast Studios under the direction of Jack Blystone. The title of the picture is "The Broker."

Chaplin Films at Victory Theatre

Evansville, Ind., had a real "First National" week when the Grand Theatre, a vaudeville house, featured Charles Chaplin in "The Idle Class" and the Victory Theatre, the home of First National, doubled the Chaplin film with Constance Talmadge in "Woman's Place."

Fox Completes "Monte Cristo"

William Fox has mysteriously made "Monte Cristo," with Emmett J. Flynn directing. Mr. Flynn brought the print on with him from the West Coast on his recent visit, and those who have seen it are enthusiastic. It will be released as a special. John Gilbert is the star and Estelle Taylor has the leading feminine role.

Exhibitors Wire and Write Zukor Scores of Congratulatory Messages

Adolph Zukor

Since Paramount's announcement to the trade of its plan to celebrate its tenth anniversary in March, President, Adolph Zukor has received scores of telegrams from leading exhibitors all over the country, congratulating the company upon its success and present position in the film world, extending to Mr. Zukor personally their felicitations and expressing their appreciation of his leadership ever since the birth of the modern picture a decade ago. Following are some of the telegrams received:

From H. M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.: "The healthy growth of the child depends on the care of the parent, and for your many years of faithful service I think you can well be termed a parent of the motion picture industry. Your association with it dates from the days of its infancy and the benefit of that association is reflected in the present gigantic scope and healthy influence of that still growing infant."

Ascher Bros., Chicago: "We extend to you greetings and felicitations on the tenth anniversary of Paramount. Your untiring efforts during the past ten years reflect great credit on the industry. We congratulate you and wish you all things good."

Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago: "Feeling that we are part of Paramount's big family, we take pleasurable pride in extending to you our congratulations and best wishes for the continued growth and success of your child on its tenth birthday."

Phil Gleichman, Detroit: "Congratulations to you and Paramount on your tenth anniversary Never in the history of any business has so thoroughly been demonstrated the wisdom of your policy of the best at a price consistent with its earning power. The motion picture industry owes you a debt of gratitude for your loyalty and enterprise that I hope to see reflected in the forthcoming March anniversary month. I know I am echoing the sentiment of every progressive exhibitor when I say, 'On to prosperity with Paramount.'"

William Goldman, St. Louis: "It is not really, as has been said, the first hundred years which are the hardest. Actually the difficult years are the first ten, and the manner in which you have guided the best pictures in the world through to this the tenth anniversary has been the wonder and admiration of every one. Let me add my congratulations and those of every employe of the Missouri Theatre to the long list which you must have already received."

John H. Kunsky, Detroit: "My congratulations to you on the tenth anniversary of Paramount. You have built up a wonderful organization."

A. H. Blank, Des Moines, Ia.: Congratulations upon this the tenth brilliant milestone in the resplendent career of the Famous Players company. The history of motion pictures, reading at times like a wonder tale in its miraculous growth and expansion into an art worthy of the name, is but a history of the foresight and dauntless fortitude of Adolph Zukor in realizing the dreams of a man of rare vision. I had the pleasure of showing the first production released by the Famous Players and our theatres have been built more magnificently and more frequently as we endeavored to keep in step with the amazing elaboration of your ideas. The industry owes you much, Mr. Zukor. Congratulations and best wishes to you and to your organization."

Congratulatory messages were also received from the following:

"Great Authors" Is Ready to Release

Charles Urban announces that the series of "Great Authors" which James A. Fitzpatrick has made for the Kineto Company is now completed. Distribution plans are being perfected by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. The "Great Authors" will be released on the one-a-month basis.

The series, as completed, is as follows: John Greenleaf Whittier, Washington Irving, Edgar Allan Poe, William Cullen Bryant, J. Fenimore Cooper, James Russell Lowell, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Mark Twain, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes, and Walt Whitman.

Conley Featured in "Midnight"

The latest Mermaid Comedy for Educational has just ben completed under the supervision of Jack White. The picture, in which Lige Conley has the featured role, has been given the title "Midnight."

Many of the sets have been reproduced from the famous Eden Musee, for many years a New York land mark. Elinor Lynn, beauty contest winner, is the leading lady.

Ruth Roland

PRODUCED BY RUTH ROLAND SERIALS INC.
SUPERVISED BY HAL ROACH

The Pick of Over 30 Serials!

The Mahaiwe Theatre of Great Barrington, Mass., is a high-class house, run in a high-class way, and catering to a high-class family patronage. The town of Great Barrington, situated as it is among the beautiful and famous Berkshire Hills, draws business not only from the very rich whose fine estates dot the countryside, but also from a typical American small town population.

The management of this successful and well run theatre has booked "White Eagle." In announcing the attraction to their patrons they speak as follows:

"'White Eagle' has been selected from a list of over 30 serials, for three important reasons:

First. Because it is the very best serial on the market.

Second. Because it is an outdoor all Western serial, a pleasant change from the usual serial story. Most all the picture has been taken in the open and the story breathes the spirit of the great West.

Third. Because mothers will not have to worry about their children picking up distorted ideas of life by viewing this chapterplay. It is entirely censor proof. There is not a foot of film in the whole picture that the most severe critic could criticise in the least."

We can add but little to this most excellent description of Ruth Roland's greatest serial.

Making Picture in New Orleans

Headed by Whitman Bennett and Director Kenneth Webb the cast in the company making the second Rex Beach photoplay for United Artists Corporation left New York January 14 for New Orleans where they will remain until all the exterior scenes for the forthcoming picture have been made. The title for this new Rex Beach feature has not yet been decided on.

Most of the action of the story takes place in New Orleans. Many big scenes will be made, including an immense mob scene that is planned for a setting in the main business section of New Orleans.

Eugene O'Brien Appears in Person

Eugene O'Brien returned to New York January 16 after a week's appearance at John H. Kunsky's Madison Theatre, Detroit in connection with the showing of "Chivalrous Charley" before large audiences. O'Brien's visit at the Madison is his longest appearance before the footlights since he left the stage. In addressing the audiences O'Brien had an interesting and witty monologue which was received with much favor.

Besides meeting Mayor James Couzens, of Detroit, Police Commissioner Inches, and Lieut. Governor Thomas Reid, of Michigan, O'Brien was also a guest of honor at the banquet held under the auspices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan.

Sharon Exhibitor Doubles Receipts

With a big red heart as the basis for all the advertising, the Liberty Theatre, of Sharon, Pa., made "Camille," Nazimova's picturization of the famous French drama for Metro, so well known to the public that the receipts during the engagement were double those of the four preceding weeks.

"Peacock Alley" Is Second to "Four Horsemen" in Bookings

Mae Murray's newest picture, "Peacock Alley," has been booked more heavily than any production ever released by Metro Pictures Corporation, with the one exception of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse."

Report of this fact came this week from William E. Atkinson, vice-president and general manager of Metro. Robert Z. Leonard presents Miss Murray in "Peacock Alley," a Tiffany production. The photoplay by Edmund Goulding, based on a story by Ouida Bergere, is the romance of a Parisian dancer and a young American business man.

Although there was from the first, according to Mr. Atkinson, promise that "Peacock Alley" would be a box office offering, it hardly had been anticipated that at this time it would outstrip the record of every Metro picture except "The Four Horsemen." One early indication of the instant attractive power of Miss Murray's picture was its choice as an opening feature at B. S. Moss's new Cameo Theatre in New York, where it ran before capacity houses for three weeks.

January 23, the date set for the release of this picture, has proven far from early enough for many exhibitors. Pre-releases have been demanded in many instances by showmen who see in it a big money-maker.

The Tiffany organization is preparing a second Mae Murray picture, "Fascination." It is, General Manager M. H. Hoffman has announced, by Edmund Goulding, and will be done under the personal supervision of Robert Z. Leonard.

Pathe's "Go-Get-'Em Hutch" Is Scheduled for April 9

April 9 has suddenly become conspicuous on all Pathe office calendars. It is the date just officially announced for the release of "Go-Get-'em Hutch." This is the serial which Producer George B. Seitz, Charles Hutchison, "stunt" star of the extraordinarily successful "Hurricane Hutch," and all the other Pathe production forces set out to lift onto a serial "thriller" plane which no other production in that class had yet succeeded in reaching. Now they declare that the new serial contains greater drama and more thrilling "stunts" than any other ever filmed by Pathe.

At the time "Go-Get-'em Hutch" went into production, says Pathe, "Hurricane Hutch," with its huge volume of early bookings, held the record. But that record already has been beaten by "White Eagle," starring Ruth Roland, which "Go-Get-'em Hutch" immediately follows on the Pathe serial schedule. Nevertheless, the promise mentioned still holds good, and the next twelve weeks of bookings are confidently expected to more than realize it. Prints of the opening episodes, which shortly will be available for exhibitor inspection throughout the country, are relied on to make this certain.

Greenwich House Books "Jane Eyre"

Another New York theatre joined the ranks of recognized first-run houses this week when the management of the Sheridan Theatre in Greenwich Village, New York City, booked the Hugo Ballin-Hodkinson feature, "Jane Eyre," for a week's engagement, beginning Sunday, January 31st. On the night following the openin "Jane Eyre," at the Sheridan, both Mabel Ballin, the star, and Hugo Ballin, the producer, will make personal appearances before the screen.

"Jane Eyre" is a story by Charlotte Bronte. It was adapted for the screen by Mr. Ballin. The cast includes in addition to Mabel Ballin, Norman Trever, Crauford Kent, Emily FitzRoy, John Webb Dillon, Louis Grizel, Stephen Carr, Vernie Atherton and Elizabeth Aeriens.

All Star Cast in "One Clear Call"

With the signing this week of Doris Pawn and Donald MacDonald for important roles in "One Clear Call," John M. Stahl completed the cast for his latest independent production made for Louis B. Mayer. The making of the picture has been under way now for nearly five weeks, but many of the big scenes, the humorous episodes and the heart throbs are still to be filmed.

The cast is headed by Henry B. Walthall, Claire Windsor, Irene Rich and Milton Sills. Others are Joseph J. Dowling, Doris Pawn, Donald MacDonald, Shannon Day, Edithe Yorke, Nick Cogley, Fred Kelsey, William Marion, Albert MacQuarrie, Annette De Foe, Stanley Goethals and Richard Belfield.

The story by Frances Nimmo Greene has had wide circulation as a novel. The scenario was prepared by Bess Meredyth. Ernest Palmer is in charge of the camera work.

Stanlaws Starts New Production

A combination of exceptional interest is announced for a new Paramount picture, "Over the Border," by Albert Shelby LeVino, based on the short story "She of the Triple Chevron," by Sir Gilbert Parker.

It will be a Penrhyn Stanlaws production made with Betty Compson, Tom Moore and a splendid cast, including Casson Ferguson, Sidney D'Albrook, J. Farrell Macdonald, L. C. Shumway, Jean de Briac, Edward J. Brady and Joseph Ray.

Tom Moore, star in numerous successful pictures, will play Serg. Tom Flaherty, a Celtic role that is said to fit him like a glove, while as Jen Galbraith, dainty Betty Compson will prove an irresistible figure, it is expected.

B. Cohen, Minneapolis Salesman for Pathe and W. Kofeldt, Pathe's San Francisco Head, Win Prize

B. H. Cohen, Pathe salesman working out of Minneapolis, and W. W. Kofeldt, Pathe branch manager in San Francisco, are winners in the Jesse D. Hampton sales and collection contest, which ended on December 24. Announcement to this effect was made by Pathe this week, following the compilation of the returns for the eight weeks' competition period, which began on October 31 and closed December 25 at midnight. All contracts recorded up to that time were counted in the result, which accounts for the delay in the naming of the winners. The victors can take either a transcontinental trip at Mr. Hampton's expense, or $500 cash, its equivalent.

The Hampton contest was open to Pathe and Associated Exhibitors salesmen, inasmuch as each sell the product of the Hampton studios.

The Associated Exhibitors representatives handle the product in all towns over 1,500.

Cohen's triumph is made all the more impressive inasmuch as he won through his efforts in the towns of less than 1,500 people.

Under the rules of the contest, the prize went to the salesmen siging the greatest number of contracts during the eight weeks of the contest, on a point basis. The manager's award went to the branch head whose office showed the biggest increase in collections on Hampton's attractions, based on the average of collections for the eight weeks directly preceding the contest.

The San Francisco branch showed an increase in Hampton collections of 54.36 per cent. Milwaukee finished second, New Haven third, Buffalo fourth, and Oklahoma City fifth. The contest for the branch price was much closer than that among the salesmen.

Takes Hutchinson to Florida for Scenes in Newest Serial

Hardly had Charles Hutchison and the company supporting him in "Go-Get-'em Hutch," thawed out from their frigid stay at Saranac Lake, N. Y., making snow scenes for the newest Pathe serial attraction, when Director-Producer George B. Seitz piloted them to Jacksonville, Fla. The company will remain there for several weeks, while "Hutch" will make some of his most thrilling stunts for the serial which will follow Ruth Roland's "White Eagle" on the Pathe release schedule.

More than a fortnight was spent by Hutchison and his support at Saranac Lake while Mr. Seitz was producing what unquestionably will be some of the most stirring scenes ever staged for a serial production.

Pathe looks for a particularly colorful production in "Go-Get-'em Hutch," for certainly it will run the gamut of locations with its harbor scenes, ocean exploits, its snow "stuff" and the tropical atmosphere that will be added by the material taken in Jacksonville. "Go-Get-'Em Hutch" will be an April release. As in all other recent Pathe productions, gun-play will be missing from the latest work coming from the George B. Seitz studio.

Hoxie Popular

Arrow Film Corporation announces the well-known series of Jack Hoxie Western dramas, produced under the personal supervision of Ben Wilson and starring the most popular cow boy actor in the world, has been sold for the Michigan territory to Messrs. Ward, Dickerson and Barnes, who report that Hoxie goes particularly well in this territory.

In "Luxury Tax"

Augge La Field, former "Follies" girl, and who has appeared in several of George M. Cohan's musical shows, has one of the principal roles in the forthcoming Hugo Ballin-Hodkinson production, "The Luxury Tax," which is scheduled for release by Hodkinson next week.

Associated Exhibitors Is to Release "Lady Godiva" in March

It is declared by Associated Exhibitors that no finer screen version of a literary classic has ever been made than "Lady Godiva," the big spectacle film which Associated Exhibitors will distribute for Wistaria Productions.

An advance statement from Associated Exhibitors declares that no opportunity has been lost to surround the production with the correct atmosphere of medieval England.

Associated Exhibitors state that the release date of "Lady Godiva" will be early in March and the prints will be in the exchange cities well ahead of that time.

Working on Film

Word from the Coast states that work is well under way on the second Leah Baird Production for release by Associated Exhibitors. The working title is "When the Devil Drives."

Paramount Lists January 29 Films

On January 29, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is releasing the George Fitzmaurice production for Paramount, "Three Live Ghosts," and Mary Miles Minter in the Realart picture, "Tillie."

For his screen production of the stage play, "Three Live Ghosts," by Frederick W. Isham, which scored one of the biggest hits of the theatrical season of 1920-21 in New York, George Fitzmaurice took his entire organization to England, there to get the real background for the story, which was more or less handicapped in the stage version of its painted sets. The play was scenarized by Ouida Bergere.

The leading roles are in the hands of Anna Q. Nilsson, Normany Kerry, Cyril Chadwick, who has the same part he played in the stage play; Edmund Goulding, John Miltern, Clare Greet and Dorothy Fane.

"Tillie," the Realart picture in which Mary Miles Minter is starred, is an adaptation of the novel "Tillie, the Mennonite Maid," by Helen R. Martin, and the play by the author and Frank Howe, Jr. Alice Eyton wrote the scenario and Frank Urson directed, the production being supervised by Elmer Harris.

Florence Vidor in "Woman Wake Up"

It is understood that the next Associated Exhibitors feature will be "Woman Wake Up," starring Florence Vidor. While no announcement as to the release date has been made, it is believed the film will be available early in March and will start off a month characterized by three big features, including Leah Baird in "Don't Doubt Your Wife" and the Wistaria production, "Lady Godiva."

Irene Castle Finishes First for Hodkinson

"French Heels," an Edwin L. Hollywood production, which marks the first appearance of Irene Castle on the screen in more than two years, will be released on January 29 by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. It is the first of a series of four productions starring Mrs. Castle which will be released by Hodkinson.

The second production of the series, "The Rise of Roscoe Paine," has been completed and is now in the cutting and titling stage. It is scheduled for release about the middle of March.

"French Heels" is adapted from Clarence Budington Kelland's "Knots and Windshakes," which appeared in Everybody's Magazine. In it Mrs. Castle has the part of a young girl who is obliged to earn her own living and chooses dancing as the means.

FLINT, MICH., Jan. 12, 1922.

Mr. J. H. Young, Manager,
Vitagraph Company, Inc.,
401 Joseph Mack Bldg.,
Detroit, Michigan.

My dear Mr. Young,

I just completed a four day run at my Strand Theatre, with your James Oliver Curwood Special- "Flower of the North", and it behooves me to say without any flattery, that this picture surpassed anything I have shown during the business depression as a box office attraction. You may pass the good word along to other exhibitors, and refer them to me as to the quality of this picture and the wonderful opportunity it offers for exploitation.

As soon as your next special produotion is ready, kindly get in touch with me providing it is as good as "Flower of the North".

In closing I wish to congratulate you and the Vitagraph Company on having such an excellent production as "Flower of the North".

Yours very truly;

Pathe Prize Contest Opens and Enthusiastic Response Comes From All Localities

Pathe branch managers and salesmen throughout the country are now engaged in one of the greatest prize contests ever staged by the organization, with the stakes for the victors ranging from $2,500 down to $500.

The wire from General Sales Manager Eschmann announcing the terms of the contest had hardly reached the thirty-four competing offices, before despatches began coming back to the home office expressing the enthusiasm of the entire sales force.

Robert Smeltzer, eastern district manager, sent the following message from Pittsburgh: "Details of ten-week sales and collection contest shows that today mark an epoch in the history of our company as the starting point of the greatest and fairest contest ever waged among thirty-four entrants. The Eastern Division branches are out to win all prizes."

James Loughborough, who has just taken over the managership of the Albany office, which has been a three time winner on past Pathe contests, sent the following business-like message: "Albany out to repeat in qualifying and Brunet Anniversary contest. We have finest organization, best sales force. It isn't, 'He can who thinks he can,' but 'He will who knows he can.' Watch Albany grab four straight." From Branch Manager Honcck at Milwaukee, comes the following, brief but to the point: "Contest wire received. We are off."

Enthusiastic wires were received also from Walter Wessing, western district manager; W. A. V. Mack, of Buffalo; Manager Kofeldt, of San Francisco; Jack Auslet, New Orleans; Branch Manager Coughlin, of Dallas; Branch Manager Jacques, of Cincinnati; Manager Van Horn, at Butte and Spokane, and Branch Manager Vaughan, of Memphis.

The patrons of the Brooklyn Strand Theatre, who a few weeks ago greeted Charles Ray while he was visiting the house in person, turned out this week in great numbers to see him in his latest First National release, "R. S. V. P." During Mr. Ray's visit to the East he was the guest of Mr. Edward L. Hyman, manager of the Brooklyn Strand.

Showing of "The Sheik" Brings Big Demand for Book

Paramount calls the attention of exhibitors of "The Sheik" to the value of making full use of the co-operation afforded by bookksellers through window displays of the photoplay edition of the popular Edith M. Hull novel. Moreover, Paramount says, it will be found that the dealers are more than anxious to lend every assistance which will make for mutual profit.

"The Sheik" book tie-up has been conspicuously successful in the Pittsburgh territory——so successful, in fact, that Donald D. MacFarlane, sales manager of the Pittsburgh News Company, wholesale newsdealers and booksellers, has written as follows to William N. Robson, Paramount exploitation representative in Pittsburgh:

"The sale of the book has been clean getting out of bounds of anticipation. I have sold over 1,000 of these books in five days' time, which I believe is a record never before established in Pittsburgh on the reorders of any book within a period of at least thirty days. At the present time I am short over 1,000 capies. If 'The Sheik' doesn't stop running in pictures, I will either go crazy from the demand or else I am there now, I don't know which. All I hear is 'Sheik,' 'Sheik,' 'Sheik,' on every message I get over the telephone. If it isn't one calling, it is another.

"The only thing I can say is that it is wonderful to have such a demand on any book, it is wonderful to have such a picture showing, and above all it is wonderful to have such co-operation between your firm and the publishers. It is something that we can all say in the years to come it has been one of the biggest feats of co-operation in this line that has ever been accomplished."

Undaunted by his difficulty in getting his orders filled on account of the big demand throughout the country wherever the Melford production is being shown, Mr. MacFarlane is still pushing the campaign with vigor, advising his customers to get in touch with local exhibitors in all the unplayed towns in his territory.

Screen Version of "Life" Jokes to Be Handled by Wid Gunning

Wid Gunning, Inc., announces that it has acquired for distribution what it believes to be the short feature novelty hit of the year. This is "The Good Things of Life," a weekly single reel release, illustrating the best jokes and other comic material selected from "Life." Charles Dana Gibson, Coles Phillips, and a score of other artists and humorists equally famous are collaborating in the creation of this novelty, which is edited by Ashley Miller, its originator.

The establishment of a department specializing in shorter features of the better type is hinted at by Wid Gunning officials in connection with this announcement.

It is known that Gunning has been in conference with numerous specialists and producers of the type of short subject featured by first-run houses. As the Gunning sales organization is equipped for one hundred per cent. efficient distributing and advertising service, the evolution of a department emphasizing shorter features will be a natural one.

February 15 is set as the release date for the first issue of "The Good Things of Life." There will be one single reel a week thereafter. According to the Gunning statement the magazine is going to cooperate extensively in providing publicity for "The Good Things of Life."

"'The Good Things of Life' is a big little feature in every sense of the word," says a statement from Robert E. Welsh, of the Wid Gunning organization. "Did you ever hear of a big feature with titles written by George Ade, Wallace Irwin, Walt Mason, Caroline Wells, Oliver Herford, Meredith Nicholson, Tom Masson or Don Marquis —and illustrated by Charles Dana Gibson, Coles Phillips, F. X. Leyendecker, Maxfield Parrish, H. T. Webster, and all the greatest and highest paid illustrators in the world?

"These are the men and women who are the bright stars of humor writing for 'The Good Things of Life.' Very often a short novelty release starts out like a house afire and later suffers in quality. 'Life' has a twenty-year world-wide reputation to maintain and the artists and writers who contribute to it and to this pictorial 'Life' must hold their standard.

"'The Good Things of Life' is launched as a screen institution, backed by a long term contract guaranteeing its constant high quality. The comic material used in each issue of "The Good Things of Life" is illustrated in a variety of ways. There are sections in which real actors appear in the usual moving picture fashion to snappily illustrate a joke; a section of animated cartoons; a section of plastic work or clay modeling; silhouettes, pretty girls and other means.

Four Hodkinsons for February Include the First Movie Chat

February will be a banner month for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Four important productions are listed on the schedule of releases and the month will also mark the release of the first Official Urban Movie Chat. The first Movie Chat will be issued on February 5, and succeeding Chats will be released every Sunday thereafter.

"The Four Seasons," an Urban Popular Classic recorded by Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of the Bronx Zoo, will be released on February 5. This is a four reel production depicting animal and plant life in spring, summer, autumn and winter. The scenes were photographed in the Bronx Zoological gardens under the personal direction of Dr. Ditmars and Charles Urban.

Also on February 5 there will be released the first of the series of twelve single-reel Great Authors pictures made by Charles Urban. The first features the life of John Greenleaf Whittier. The remainder deal with James Whitcomb Riley, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Walt Whitman, James Fenimore Cooper, James Russell Lowell, Edgar Allen Poe, Washington Irving, Nathaniel Hawthorne, William Cullen Bryant, Oliver Wendell Holmes and Mark Twain. They will be released at the rate of one a month.

"Hope," fourth in the series of Triart Great Masterpieces, will be released on February 12. This two-reel production is based on the famous painting by Watts. It was made under the supervision of Herbert Blaché as dramatic director and Lejaren a Hiller as art director.

On February 19 Hodkinson will release "The Luxury Tax," fifth in the series of Hugo Ballin-Hodkinson productions featuring Mabel Ballin. It is described as a modern society drama of New York and Europe and was written by Ethel Donoher. The cast includes Crauford Kent and Raymond Bloomer.

Pathe Announces List of Short Subjects for February Release

Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that the latest Pathe Playlet, "Convict 993," featuring Irene Castle and an all-star cast of players, will head the strong collection of short subject features and the one serial episode scheduled for release the week of February 5. "Convict 993" has been cut down the three reels, all the "padding" is omitted, which makes it move at a remarkably fast gait, it is said.

"The Trap" is the sixth episode of the new Pathe serial, "White Eagle," starring Ruth Roland. "The Lamb" is the current reissued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. "The Fox and the Grapes" is the latest animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables." "Blow 'em Up" is the title of the current Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard. Pathe Review No. 141 presents a series of entertaining subjects. Pathe News Nos. 12 and 13 present the current events of the world. Topics of the Day No. 6 throws the latest bits of wit and humor on the screen.

Another McGowan Picture Coming

Playgoers Pictures state that their J. P. McGowan features are proving so acceptable in the theatres that arrangements are being made to follow "Reckless Chances," which was released on January 15, with another outdoor McGowan feature, entitled "Hills of Missing Men," during February.

"What Do Men Want" Contest Is Increasing

The "What Do Men Want?" Contests, put on by Wid Gunning exploiteers in co-operation with large newspapers during the run of the Lois Weber production, are assuming national scope. The latest tie-up was arranged with the Dayton Daily News, while "What Do Men Want?" was being shown at the Liberty Theatre, Dayton, Ohio.

Almost two thousand letters were received at The News office within a very short time after the contest was announced. The essays on "What Do Men Want?" came from all parts of Ohio, and the most interesting will be brought together by the Wid Gunning organization.

The Dayton campaign and contest brought a record amount of free newspaper publicity. The details of the essay contest were announced on the first page of the News, and, thereafter, not a day passed but a column or two was devoted to it.

A large sign, a facsimile of the first page of The News, was put up in front of the Liberty, and the newspaper ran a photograph of it on its front page. An advertising campaign, starting with the use of "What Do Men Want?" teaser ads, culminated on the day the picture opened at the Liberty with four pages of advertisement in the News, the largest ad for a single production used recently in Ohio. Paul Gray, of the Gunning exploitation forces, put over the campaign.

"Better Campaigns, Better Business"

Harry McDonald, of the Wid Gunning organization, returning from a trip covering most of the key cities as far West as Minneapolis, states his belief after talks with exhibitors and salesmen, that better times are already here for discriminating showmen.

"Where exhibitors are putting their shoulders to the wheel and concentrating their efforts on pictures worth while, money is being made and optimism prevails," said Mr. McDonald. "It was a source of great satisfaction to hear theatre owners whose judgment in securing big pictures has given them national prominence, give the releases of Wid Gunning, Inc., the endorsements which I have brought back with me.

"The impression prevails that the margin of profit is greater when the stars' names are disregarded and an exhibitor selects an individual picture and gets behind it with a good campaign. Exhibitors today will profit most by concentrating on a certain week and selecting a strong production and going after it with everything at their command. Exhibitors are very enthusiastic over 'What Do Men Want?', 'White Hands' and 'Our Mutual Friend,' as the exploitation possibilities seem unlimited. Better times here for the discriminating exhibitor who knows what his patrons want, gives it to them and tells the world he is doing it."

"The Prodigal Judge"

Crosland Directed Three Selznicks

Although the productions were filmed several months apart, Alan Crosland's work as a director of Selznick pictures has prominence in the first four pictures released in 1922 by the Select Distributing Corporation, having directed three, starring Elaine Hammerstein, Eugene O'Brien and Conway Tearle.

Miss Hammerstein's picture is "Why Announce Your Marriage?" Crosland also directed "The Prophet's Paradise" in which Eugene O'Brien will appear. The first picture Selznick released in 1922 was Crosland's third work for Select distribution. "Shadows of the Sea," starring Conway Tearle.

Robertson Coming Here to Direct

Following his announcement last week that Rudolf Valentino's first Paramount starring picture would be a special production of Vicente Blasco Ibanez's novel and play, "Blood and Sand," Jesse L. Lasky in Los Angeles this week stated that John S. Robertson, producer of "Footlights" and "Sentimental Tommy," would soon return from abroad, where he has been making Paramount pictures and would begin work on the production of "Blood and Sand" in Hollywood.

June Mathis has completed the scenario. Valentino will play the role of the toreador, and May McAvoy will be seen in the part of the wife.

Will Release Two Paramount Films

The Cosmopolitan production for Paramount, "The Bride's Play," starring Marion Davies, and Bebe Daniels in the Realart picture, "Nancy From Nowhere," are the features scheduled for release by Famous Players-Lasky on January 22.

Shanghai Exhibitor Who Shows to 15,000 a Day, Visiting Here

An interested and interesting visitor at the Paramount western studio recently was Richard Bell, manager of the New World Theatre, Shanghai, China, for eighteen years a showman in the Orient.

Mr. Bell declared that Paramount pictures and stars are very popular with his clientele, which includes from eighteen to twenty thousand patrons daily. He runs six machines in the New World. He also is interested in various other enterprises in the same connection throughout the Orient, and while, oddly enough, he speaks Chinese indifferently, is fluent in Dutch and Malay.

"You can always get a Number One boy—or clerk—to explain and interpret for you," he said, "but when it comes to talking Dutch down in Java or Malay or Hindustani, it's different—so I have a pretty good grasp of those tongues."

He asserted that Gloria Swanson, Wallace Reid and Thomas Meighan were all great favorites in Shanghai and nearby cities and towns. His brother-in-law runs a theatre in Hangkow and, on the whole, he says picture business is improving in the Orient.

Rex Beach Film Is Nearly Ready

Under the personal supervision of Whitman Bennett the next Rex Beach film production for United Artists Corporation is rapidly rounding into shape. Kenneth Webb is directing. The title has not been decided upon.

Fox Has a Diversified List of Pictures for February Release

Fox Film Corporation's release schedule for February contains a number of productions rich in dramatic strength, acording to announcement issued this week.

Heading the list of offerings is a Tom Mix picture, "Chasing the Moon." "The Broadway Peacock" is the title of the February release, starring Pearl White. The picture was directed by Charles J. Brabin. William Russell's picture will be "Strength of the Pines," a drama of adventure in the forests of the Northwest. The second production, in which Maurice Flynn, former Yale football hero, is starred in a February release. "Smiles Are Trumps" is the title.

Another picture in the February list is "Little Miss Smiles," starring Shirley Mason. An Al St. John comedy, "Straight From the Farm;" two Sunshine comedies, "Please Be Careful," and "West is West," and four Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons complete the list. Lupino Lane, who was recently signed to a Fox contract, is at work at the West Coast studios on his first production, known under the working title as "The Broker."

Two Talmadge Reissues Ready

Lewis J. Selznick is ready with another pair of Talmadge revivals "Good-Night Paul" with Constance Talmadge and "By Right of Purchase," starring Norma, to be issued in January and February. Both of these revivals were made at a time when the Talmadge girls were just achieving stardom. "Good-Night Paul" was a stage work of Roland Oliver and Charles Dickson scenarioized by Julia Crawford Ivers. Harrison Ford is leading man for Constance in the revival, with Norman Kerry, John Steppling, Beatrice Van, and Rosita Marstini in prominent supporting roles, and was directed by the late Walter Edwards.

In "By Right of Purchase" Eugene O'Brien appears opposite Norma Talmadge. Charles Miller directed. William Courtleigh, Jr., Charles Wellsley, Ida Darling and Florence Billings are leaders in the support. "Good-Night Paul" and "By Right of Purchase" have been revised and re-edited and printed on new stock.

J. Boyle Praises F. Hurst Picture

Jack Boyle, author of "Boomerang Bill," a Cosmopolitan-Paramount picture soon to be released, saw "Back Pay," a Fannie Hurst story, in Cosmopolitan's projection room. He was so moved by the picture that he wrote a commendatory review of it. He says in part:

"Every girl in America should see 'Back Pay.' Every man will be better for having seen it. As screened by Cosmopolitan Productions, Fannie Hurst's story is much more than an irresistibly absorbing photoplay. It is a true drama taken with scrupulous fidelity from life itself."

Shirley Mason in New Fox Picture

The famous Villa Borghese at Rome with its beautiful gardens furnishes historical setting for some of the very many fine exteriors in "The Man From Home," scenes which George Fitzmaurice has been making in Italy for Paramount.

Universal Signs Harry Myers for Lead in "Robinson Crusoe"

Although the scenario and production departments at Universal City have been working for more than four months on the serial, "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe," the cast has just been definitely selected. Julius Stern, who has been so busy with the details of the opening of "Foolish Wives" that he too had to take to his bed for a few days, has just announced the cast for the latest serial of the new type.

The definite selections were somewhat delayed by illness. He now announces, however, that Harry Myers, who has played with Universal fully half of his photoplay career, has been signed to play the lead, Robinson Crusoe. This selection is particularly happy, as he will endow the role with a wealth of humaness and humor. No one who saw his work in "A Connecticut Yankee" will doubt for a moment that he will make a wonderful Crusoe.

Mr. Stern was fortunate enough to sign Nobel Johnson for Friday. Others of prominence in the cast are Gertrude Olmstead, the Elks prize winning beauty; Joseph Swickard, who played a big role in "The Four Horsemen," and Gertrude Claire, who has just finished in an important part for "Human Hearts." Robert F. Hill will direct.

Selznick Offers Ince Film for Use Lincoln's Birthday

As an especially appropriate booking for the week starting February 12 the Selznick organization calls attention to the Ralph Ince presentation of "The Highest Law," a photoplay in which Mr. Ince plays the role of Abraham Lincoln. As Lincoln's Birthday falls on Sunday the holiday will be celebrated Monday, and this fact gives showmen two days (where Sunday shows are in order) to make a special drive on the Lincoln subject.

"The Highest Law" was produced in time for Lincoln's Birthday a year ago and was very generally played at that time, but there still remain hundreds of theatres where the Ralph Ince presentation will come as a new feature for the reason that it has not been played. Mr. Ince not alone stars in "The Highest Law" but he directed the presentation from his own assemblage of data bearing on the subject of Abraham Lincoln.

The story relates an actual incident in the Rebellion as touching directly upon the life of the great "War President." Ince has made a specialty of Lincoln interpretations, having also produced "The Land of Opportunity" when the Sleznick organization was co-operating with the Americanization movement that the late Franklin K. Lane inaugurated when he was secretary of the interior in the previous administration at Washington.

Gunning Signs Schertzinger and Wray Physioc's Product

Rumors of production news soon to be forthcoming from the Wid Gunning organization this week bore fruit in a definite announcement concerning two production units. Victor Schertzinger, it became known, is about to start work at Santa Barbara on the first of four special Victor Schertzinger Productions, while the news also became public that the Wid Gunning organization had signed for a series of four Wray Physioc Productions.

The first Schertzinger Production, on which work is about to start, carries the box-office title of "Dollar Devils." Concerning the Wray Physioc Productions the announcement states that the first, "The Madness of Love," is already completed, while the second is being edited.

Wid Gunning also has signed for a number of other independent productions which are now being edited and concerning which a definite announcement is expected next week.

Schertzinger already has three of the four stories which he intends to film. Of the three stories, two are the work of Louis Stevens and one is by Kenneth Clark. The fourth will be selected within the next few weeks. Cullen Landis, Joseph Dowling and other members of the cast have already been signed. Mr. Schertzinger will be assisted by John Stumar, one of the best-known cameramen in the business.

International News Supplies Views of Pope on Day of Death

A great news reel "beat" is claimed by the International News Reel Corporation for supplying Broadway theatres a few hours after the Pope's death with what are said to be the only and exclusive moving pictures taken of Pope Benedict XV. International, which claims to be the only news reel company ever to take moving pictures of a Pope or in the Vatican, recently obtained possession of the only other moving pictures of the Pope ever filmed.

At the same time that Broadway houses were being supplied with the Pope pictures, 300 prints also were being rushed by fast mail, aeroplane mail, courier and other means to exhibitors in other parts of the United States. These prints, each 500 feet in length, are a part of International News No. 7 released by Universal, and are being supplied to all users of the International News Reel service without added cost.

The celerity with which the pictures of the Pope were distributed Sunday is all the more remarkable owing to the fact that International was not deceived by the false report of Saturday afternoon but waited until absolute confirmation off the Pope's death early Sunday morning, before starting to work on the news reel feature. Laboratory workers of the Universal Fort Lee plant had to be called from their beds to begin the printing and cutting of the film.

Selznick Revives Talmadge Film

On February 20 "By Right of Purchase," sixth of the Talmadge revivals, will come to showmen through Select exchanges. Norma Talmadge is the star and the production was original at the time when Eugene O'Brien was her leading man. The Talmadge revivals are all furnished on new film, retitled and re-edited.

Coogan Completing Another Feature

While "My Boy," Jackie Coogan's latest production has been enjoying successful openings in the key centers and exhibitors throughout the country are planning campaigns for the feature when it arrives in their territories, the star, Jackie Coogan himself has been a very busy little fellow.

Jackie has been working hard on a new feature film. It is a plumber story with the starlet in the role of the plumber's helper. Like "My Boy," this new picture was filmed from an original story written for Jackie. Those who have seen portions of the film exhibited in the studio projection rooms claim it is a most worthy successor to the "My Boy" subject and if anything contains more comedy angles which is the proper thing for the next vehicle to possess in view of the serious role Jackie enacts in the "My Boy" film.

Sol Lesser, vice-president of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., and producer of the Coogan productions, announces that 1922 will be a rush year for the Coogan organizations. That there will be no letup in production is the prediction of Mr. Lesser. "We aim to have four feature pictures completed before the first of next year," says Lesser, "and during that time there is a possibility of Jackie making one of these four productions abroad," he added. Jackie's new production is still untitled. The feature is in full five reels length.

Priscilla Dean Is to Star in Universal's "Under Two Flags"

After spirited competition and negotiations extending over several months, John C. Brownell, eastern scenario editor of Universal, has just purchased the screen rights to "Under Two Flags," by Ouida.

Priscilla Dean has been greatly interested in the character of "Cigarette," the heroine in "Under Two Flags." And Universal realizing what Priscilla Dean could do in a part like "The Wildcat of Paris" has had in mind just such a role as "Cigarette" for Miss Dean. It is a delightful combination of spitfire, ingenuousness, eccentricity and dramatic intensity, it is said. Belasco saw infinite possibilities in "Under Two Flags" and when he presented it in 1901 with Blanche Bates and Maclyn Arbuckle in the principal roles it was one of the dramatic novelties and biggest successes of the season.

Fox Actress Comments on Work Abroad

Some interesting observations of production in foreign countries were related by Violet Mersereau, who recently returned from Rome, where she had been playing the Christian maiden in "Nero," which J. Gordon Edwards has just completed for William Fox.

"Making pictures in Rome," she said, "has both its advantages and disadvantages. The climate is perfect and the studios are fair. Our studio was the best in all Italy, but none of them has the perfect equipment that makes our American studios such a joy. But Mr. Fox did everything possible to contribute to our comfort, and it was a delight to work for him.

"I might give as one of the greatest advantages, my scenes with the players who spoke only Italian or French. I was the only American in the cast, and I found it somewhat disconcerting at times to have the director tell me to look tenderly at the leading man while I listened to his earnest protestations of love—disconcerting, I mean, when he would pour a perfect volley of Italian at me. I could not understand a word he was trying to say, and when I answered his passionate declaration in English he looked just as mystified."

New Fox Films Are Announced

Johnnie Walker and Edna Murphy, youngest of Fox stars, have just completed "Extra! Extra!" at the Fox Hollywood studio. The story is by Julian Josephson and was directed by W. K. Howard. "Elope If You Must" is the title of Eileen Percy's newest starring vehicle, adapted from a story by Joseph Poland and directed by C. R. Wallace.

William Fox has just purchased a novel as material for a coming picture by Tom Mix. The novel is "Free Range Lanning," by George Owen Baxter, and is a story full of action.

Under the title of "Iron to Gold," Dustin Farnum has begun work on a new picture at the Fox Hollywood studio. The story is by George Owen Baxter, and the adaptation for the screen by Jack Strumwasser. Margaret Marsh is leading woman.

Work Started on New Kineto Series

James A. Fitzpatrick, who produced the series of "Great Authors" for the Kineto Company, is already at work on a new Kineto series to be based on "Great Statesmen."

Work has gone forward on a number of subjects; among them George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson of the Revolutionary Period; James Monroe, Daniel Webster and Abraham Lincoln. Other contemplated subjects are James C. Blaine, Grover Cleveland, William McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt and Woodrow Wilson.

It is probable that in this latter group several substitutions will be made. There will be twelve subjects in the series, each being treated in a single reel.

Mr. Urban expects Mr. Fitzpatrick to finish the entire series by late spring or mid-summer and then will probably send him to Europe to carry out the idea among the European authors and statesmen.

Viora Daniel in "'Twas Ever Thus"

In featuring Viora Daniel in the latest comedy he has completed for Educational release, "'Twas Ever Thus," Al Christie has moved her up the ladder along with Dorothy Devore, Bobby Vernon and Neal Burns, who alternately head the casts in the new Educational-Christie Comedies. Miss Daniel was with the Lasky company, playing leads before joining the Christie company.

"Boomerang Bill" Coming to Rialto

"Boomerang Bill," featuring Lionel Barrymore, will be presented by Hugo Riesenfeld at the Rialto Theatre, New York, the week beginning February 5. It is a Cosmopolitan production released by Paramount. The original story was written by Jack Boyle. The picture was directed by Tom Terriss.

Pyramid Signs Betty Blythe to Star in "The Mayor's Wife"

Three important announcements were made for the motion picture trade this week by Walter E. Greene, president of Pyramid Pictures, Inc., of New York City.

The first is the signing of Miss Betty Blythe as star of Pyramid's third super feature and the fact that Kenneth Webb will direct this spectacle. "The Mayor's Wife," from the pen of Anna Katherine Greene, will be the starring vehicle for Miss Blythe. Production will commence in about three weeks at the Whitman Bennett Studios in Yonkers, which has been taken over by Pyramid.

The second item of interest is the announcement that Ray C. Smallwood will commence casting at once for "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge," from the pen of Paul M. Potter. Monte Blue has been signed to play the male lead in this all-star production.

The third announcement is that "My Old Kentucky Home" is almost ready for the trade. Plans are being made for its New York showing. Sigrid Holmquist, Monte Blue, Lucy Fox, Arthur Edmund Carew, Frank Currier, Julia Swayne Gordon, Matthew Betz and Billy Quirk comprise the all-star cast in this production, which the producers expect to be one of the hits.

Critics and Public Approve Arliss in "Ruling Passion"

Unanimous approval from the reviewers for the New York newspapers and frequent outbursts of spontaneous applause from capacity audiences at the Strand Theatre, marked the Broadway premier last Sunday, January 22, for George Arliss in "The Ruling Passion," second of the Arliss film productions for United Artists.

"The Ruling Passion" showed to capacity from the beginning of the very first performance to the very end of the last. There were hundreds who stood up all through each showing, and many other hundreds who were turned away because of a lobby that was jammed by still more hundreds waiting and struggling to get inside.

Enthusiastic comments of those who had seen the incomparable Arliss in his new, entirely different and wholly delightful role of the humanitarian in this whimsical comedy drama, as they filed out, only served to whet the desire of those who were waiting to get inside, and made them the more determined to wait till they could get in.

"Bride's Play" Drew $24,000 During Week's Run at Rialto

In offering "The Bride's Play," starring Marion Davies, Cosmopolitan Productions announces that it wishes the exhibitors to know that this picture rolled up the big total of $24,169 45 during its week's presentation by Hugo Riesenfeld at the Rialto Theatre, New York. The proof of the value of the production lies in those figures because they demonstrate that Mr. and Mrs. Public like "The Bride's Play" and like it with enthusiasm, Cosmopolitan Productions states.

"The Bride's Play" is a successor to Miss Davies's previous popular release, "Enchantment." The original story appeared in Hearst's Magazine. The author, Donn Byrne, also wrote "The Woman God Changed," which was one of the most successful pictures of last season, according to statements from Cosmopolitan Productions.

Sennett's Latest Has Been Finished

After months of concentrated effort on the part of Mack Sennett, the final touches have been put to "For Love or Money," his latest achievement. This is listed as the second Sennett feature for release through Associated First National.

The film is an original story of love, romance and adventure, and was directed by F. Richard Jones, with an all-star cast headed by George O'Hara and Kathryn McGuire. The others are Noah Beery, Ethel, Grey Terry, Billy Bevan, Mildred June, Ben Deely, Dot Farley, Robert Cain, Herbert Standing and Eddie Gribbon.

Broke Records

Completed returns on the results of the holiday drive of Century Comedies show that sales from the different exchanges more than doubled their previous high records. Gratifying co-operation was given Julius Stern, president of Century.

The returns alone on the special bills for children featuring the Brownie and Baby Peggy series were notable. This is true not only in the United States but in Canada as well.

New Exchange

The Associated First National chain of exchanges has been augmented with a new office in Butte, Mont., created to take care of the rapidly increasing amount of business in that state. It is located at 114 West Granite street and Charles W. Koerner, a salesman, who has been covering Oregon for the Portland exchange, has been installed as manager.

The London daily, weekly and film trade papers have given J. Stuart Blackton's production, "The Great Adventure," fine notices. Published reports from London correspondents in American papers also have spoken highly of the picture. All that we have read for the most part deal with the performance of Lady D'ana Manners, giving her unqualified praise and predicting an unusually brilliant success for her if she continues in pictures.

An advertisement of a certain film utilized a lot of good money in space rates to say this with display type the other morning:

"Harriette Underhill, famous motion picture critic of the New York Tribune....Recognized as one of the foremost authorities on motion pictures in the world...."

By whom, for heaven's sake?

All the same ad writer has to do is to place Quinn Martin, of the New York World, and A. S., of the Globe, in the same category and omit real critics of pictures such as Robert Sherwood, Percy Reniers, if he is still writing on films, Don Allen and R. W. P. and the laughter of thinking readers (and there are some) may penetrate into his office.

Poor Max Linder! No sooner had the spry little French star recovered from the temporary loss of his eyesight than he came down with a bad cold which developed into a mild but serious case of pneumonia. He is in bed at his home under the care of a physician and nurse, and will be unable to resume production on his burlesque of "The Three Musketeers" for at least two weeks. The doctor's edict is that Max exercise great caution because of the danger resulting from his having been gassed in the war. He was left without the rugged constitution he had prior to service.

Cynthia Perot and Elliott Taylor, after a highly successful season in London and Paris, have returned to New York to appear at the Criterion Theatre in their spectacular "Spanish Jazz." Perot and Taylor were the features of "The Little Dutch Girl" at the Lyric Theatre in London for over six months and also danced at the supper hour at the Embassy Club during that time. Then they went to Paris and danced at the Frolics and the Chateau de Madrid for over eight months. "Spanish Jazz" was selected by Hugo Riesenfeld as a feature of the Criterion's program because it gives a dashing start to the feature film, "Red Hot Romance," the John Emerson-Anita Loos production which satirizes the romantic stories of American heroes in South American kingdoms.

Sam Morris, vice president in charge of distribution for Select Pictures' Corporation, left for Chicago January 23 on the first leg of a journey that will take him to most of the Select Exchanges in the mid-West section. He will have Chicago as headquarters for the next few days, making trips out of there to neighboring branches.

Morris lately returned from Washington and the South, where he went in the interest of Select Pictures' distribution and his Chicago trip is but a second section of an itinerary that he has mapped out for the next few weeks. Morris makes a practice of personally visiting the Select Exchanges at least twice a year.

This time he is especially interested in promoting the sales of "A Man's Home," the first of this season's Selznick specials, and "Conceit," the special starring Hedda Hopper and William B. Davidson that has just been released.

It has been the custom of the Authors' League of America to have a prominent director at each of their monthly luncheons to give them words of advice on writing for the screen. The January luncheon at the Cafe Boulevard, New York, had Herbert Brenon, well-known Fox director, as the guest of honor. Brenon, who has just completed a picture with William Farnum as the star, talked on writing up to the screen, not down to it—which was a gentle reminder that authors must take motion pictures seriously if they are to succeed.

Should Arthur Hopkins' revival of "The Deluge" prove to be the success it merits, it will help in exploiting Goldwyn's production of "The Sin Flood." The latter is the picturization of the former, and received more than the usual acclaim from the reviewers. "The Deluge" when it opened a few seasons ago was unanimously stated to be one of the finest dramas ever shown upon the American stage, but Hopkins made the error of opening it during the hottest spell New York had experienced in years. And such heavy stuff in such heavy weather didn't go, even in the face of unusual and valuable praise.

which will be held in the month of March and in a place, at a time, and price decided by the committee. Joseph Miles has consented to act as chairman of the credentials committee. Harry L. Reichenbach has agreed to serve as master of ceremonies. The sentiment has been sounded and it's for the dinner and all that it will mean to those who are eligible to attend.

The committee will pass on your status promptly. If you have put in ten years in this, the greatest of all business, the finest of all human endeavors, send word to the undersigned in care of Moving Picture World, 516 Fifth Avenue, and send word today, You will want to be a part of it.

This is the third reprinting of this notice. A great many replies have been received. To those who have already signified their intention of taking part in the Old Timers' Dinner this opportunity is taken to notify them that in the near future they will be given full particulars by mail.

Don't hesitate. Write today. You will want to be among those who will make the Old Timers' Dinner a memorable occasion.

Everyone writing on films has already made the customary selection of the ten best pictures of the year. Not to be outdone, we, with a little outside help, have selected what we consider the best five during the same months. We may include but five, but they are real choice. Our "Best Five of the Year" are:

"Havana, the Beautiful."
"On to Bimini."
"Montreal and Vicinity."
"London Still Wet."
"Making Madiera Wines."

Speaking of best pictures of the year, seriously. Why does not First National revive "A Small Town Idol?" The customary time before a film is re-shown may not have elapsed, but we are under the impression that this is an instance when the precedent may be broken. You all may not give a darn, but we will nevertheless state that we saw "A Small Town Idol" four times. And asking a reviewer to see a moving picture over again is like inviting a postman to take a walk on his day off.

The picture should have played an extended engagement on Broadway. We'll warrant it would have been successful. Is it too late?

Stern spent nearly an entire week without sleep, speeding the opening of "Foolish Wives," and afterwards helping to arrange the many cuts necessary, and his present illness is the result. The Passing Week in Review

AT last the independent producing and distributing forces present a solid front. Of that there need be no doubt. The action of the Independent Producers and Distributors Association this week in immediately taking steps to fight the intentions of the Internal Revenue Commission to collect a five per cent. rental tax is convincing proof that the State Rights faction of this industry has finally organized itself. And this is as it should be. There has been altogether too much talk and too little action. The slogan of every State Rights concern should be: "Say it with action." We have direly needed action—and now that we have it, let all hands confine this action along lines that will best serve the trade in general.

ON page 483 is a complete report of the program adopted by the I. P. D. A. in its fight against imposition of the rental tax on State Rights sales. The article contains also a resume of the case of Christie Company versus the United States Internal Revenue Commission. Every State Rights producer, distributor and exchangeman should read it. The future of our business is at stake. Collection of the tax would bankrupt the trade. It would undo all the good that has been accomplished in the past year and a half. There is an issue involved that effects every man in this business. If ever State Rights men have fought this is the time when they should fight their hardest. The very existence of the State Rights producer, distributor and exchange is threatened.

THE trade is unanimous in its contention that the imposition of such a tax on State Rights sales is unconstitutional and illegal. The Internal Revenue Commission thus far has gone on record as believing otherwise. Christie Comedy Company has been granted a delay of 30 days to file arguments against the imposition. That is merely a detail of procedure. There should be no stalling, no patient waiting to see what the Commission will do. Now is the opportune time to fight. No effort should be spared to fully convince the Commission of the injustice of its intentions. It has been suggested by some that action be delayed until the present case has been decided. Trained legislative attorneys believe otherwise.

HARRY G. KOSCH of the Independent Producers and Distributors Association, has announced that he will ask leave to intervene in the case. And the issue involved is of sufficient importance to the trade in general to warrant such action. Mr. Kosch, like many others in this branch of the industry, is convinced that drastic and immediate action must be taken on all issues threatening to jeopardize the interests of State Righters. His timely move in calling a special meeting of the I. P. D. A. deserves commendation. It demonstrates the spirit of the I. P. D. A. And it's a display of the spirit that cannot help but win.

IMPOSITION of the tax will ruin a flourishing market. Even the most prosperous of our State Rights concerns will be put out of business if this tax is collectable. If need be the fight will be carried to the United States Supreme Court for final adjustment. State Righters are not the only ones involved. The entire industry will be affected if the interpretation now placed on the act is kept in force by the Commission. The distribution end of the entire industry will be called upon to dump millions of dollars into the treasury of the United States.

THERE should be co-operation in this fight. The interests of the National Association are as much at stake as those of members of the Independent Producers and Distributors Association. Jack Connolly, the Washington representative of the N. A. M. P. I., is on the ground. But he must have the unanimous support of members of the association he represents. It has been said that the issue concerns only the independents. Tax experts disagree. They believe, and there is reasonable ground for such belief, that the entire industry will be involved if the Commission holds that the tax is collectable, for the reason that many local exchanges distributing the wares of national distributing companies are controlled or owned by local or subsidiary interests.

BUT regardless of the attitude of the N. A. M. P. I., the independents have decided to fight—and fight to the end. There will be no compromise. The tax is unreasonable and unconstitutional, according to those who are experts in such questions. It will bankrupt the trade. The laws of the country are aimed at construction, not destruction. But this tax spells destruction. It is out of the question. To impose it would be to discourage competition in an industry that direly needs competition. Its effects would be in direct contradiction of the principles to which our constitution was dedicated.

THERE can not and must not be any lagging on this issue. The Government is pressing the issue. We must push back with equal force. Delay means defeat. Opposition must not be confined to mere words. There must be action—immediate action. Harry G. Kosch has the right idea—say it with action. And say it now.

THIS week the I. P. D. A. will file complaints against two exchanges, one accused of wholesale violation and disregard of contracts, and the other charged with giving worthless checks in return for merchandise, failure to give an accounting on pictures leased on a percentage basis and violation of contracts. These will be in the nature of test cases. In the latter instance, the association will ask for a Federal receivership. In the former, criminal action will be instituted against the accused. The I. P. D. A. means business. It is determined to drive out of the field dishonest exchanges and "fly-by-nights," and eliminate film piracy.

FOR years this trade has been menaced by these dishonest operators. Much has been said against their presence, but no action ever was taken. The practice has progressed to such an extent that national distributors have suffered huge losses. There is little chance for the recovery of these losses. But the elimination of these operators will benefit the trade in general—and that is the purpose of the movement of the I. P. D. A. The movement has the endorsement of every legitimate exchange. The test cases will bear close watching. Let them serve as a warning to others similarly involved. Let them understand that nothing bordering on crookedness will be tolerated. Let them understand that they will either have to "shoot straight" or be thrown out.

THE State Rights market is being cleansed. Let the process be complete. Exhibitors throughout the country hail the action of the independents with enthusiasm.

In the Independent Field

I. P. D. A. Will Take Legal Action Against Philadelphia and Middle Western Exchanges

Two test cases to ascertain the extent to which distributors may legally go in action to recover money or losses incurred from broken contracts will be made by the Independent Producers and Distributors Association within the next ten days, it was learned authoritatively this week. As a matter of fact no surprise will be occasioned if, this week, as a result of a visit to Philadelphia by Harry G. Kosch, general counsel for the I. P. D. A., to consult an exchangeman against whom the distributors have a grievance, legal action were taken to recover certain damages alleged to have been suffered by a number of distributors who have had business dealings with the exchange.

Another test will be made in a middlewestern city where the I. P. D. A. will make overtures to a certain exchangeman, who is charged with having issued worthless checks, failure to give any accounting on percentage transactions and with general violation of contracts, for recovery of money alleged to be due many of its members. It is reliably reported that this exchangeman's indebtedness to national distributors is more than $20,000. If no adjustment satisfactory to the distributors can be made, it is the intention of the I. P. D. A. to file application in the United States District Court for a Federal Receiver to take charge of the affairs of the exchange.

If these two test cases prove successful it is the intention of the Independent Producers and Distributors Association to deal in a like fashion with other exchanges under the surveillance of the organization. The association intends sparing no effort to bring to justice a certain small number of dishonest exchanges, that have been victimizing not only exhibitors, but national distributors as well. Mr. Kosch will personally take charge of the cases.

On Friday, Jan. 27, Mr. Kosch and several members of the I. P. D. A. were scheduled to go to Philadelphia In that city is alleged to be an exchangeman who has been in the habit of contracting for a series of pictures, playing the first two or three of that series and defaulting on the others. Because of the agreement between national distributors and exchangeman the hands of the former have been tied and he has been unable to dispose of his pictures in that territory to some other local distributor who might seek the entire output, according to allegations of the I. P. D. A.

This exchangeman will be asked to make an adjustment satisfactory to the involved distributors. If he fails, a test will be made of the issue. This test will be made to ascertain the ability of distributors in enforcing a film contract, i.e., enforce an exchange that has contracted for a series, used one or two and defaulted on the others.

The middlewestern case is even more serious inasmuch as one of the charges is that the exchangeman in question has been issuing worthless checks. Another is violation of contracts. The other charges him with failure to give an accounting for moneys received on pictures leased to him on a percentage basis.

Announcement also was made that a committee including Tom Evans and Harry Getz, representative of the Allied Laboratories Association, had been appointed for the purpose of co-operating with the Independent Producers and Distributors Association in putting an end to film piracy. The two associations will work together and have already obtained the co-operation of the Federal Trade Commission, which, as was exclusively announced in this department several weeks ago, is conducting a nation-wide investigation of the activities of alleged film "pirates" and "fly-by-nights."

Second National to Release "David and Jonathan," "Mr. Pim Passes By" and Hylands

Second National Pictures Corporation, in addition to its announcement of franchise holders throughout this country, this week also made known its plans for the future. Its current release is a picturization of E. Temple Thurson's novel, "David and Jonathan." However, this is merely a forerunner to a series of productions that it has under way for regular release through its State rights exchange franchise holders. The picture deals with a popular story.

Plans for the future call for the release of a series of melodramas, including "Mr. Pim Passes By" and six others which will be available within the next few months. In addition to these Second National also will release a super feature Irish production made in Ireland. There also will be a series of features starring Peggy Hyland as well as several comedies and scenics.

Second National's plans for the future are extensive. An official said: "We will make a very interesting announcement to the trade within the next few weeks concerning our releases. We contend that we will within the next few months release some of the biggest box office attractions offered on the independent market. These will be released to our franchiseholders on an equitable basis, guaranteeing all persons involved reasonable profit."

The Second National offices this week were flooded with requests for franchises from interested exchanges. Some of the largest exchanges in the country already have allied themselves with the firm.

State Rights News of the Week

Bernie P. Fineman has been elected president of the Edwin Carewe Productions, Inc., which will produce a series of Northwest features. C. C. Burr, president of Affiliated Distributors, will handle the distribution of the pictures, the first of which will be ready March 1. Bennie Zeidman is also associated with Messrs. Fineman and Burr in this enterprise.

If negotiations now pending materialize Pearl White, former Fox star, will make a State rights serial of 15 episodes.

At its coming meeting in New York on Feb. 12 to the 14th, Federated Exchanges will announce the acquisition of a new series of pictures.

Irving Lesser of Western Pictures Exploitation Company of San Francisco and Los Angeles is due in New York next week to close several big deals.

Producers Security Corporation is negotiating for several melodramatic features. They acquired "The Blonde Vampire" last week. This firm is also releasing "The Bootlegger."

When the I.P.D.A. meets next week to take up the question of the five per cent. sales tax, a committee will be appointed to confer with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry which is mobilizing its forces to fight the Internal Revenue's intentions.

A. H. Woods during the past week disposed of the screen rights to eight melodramas to State rights producers.

The Stanley Company of Philadelphia during the past week offered a State righter $20,000 cash for the exclusive exhibition rights to a production the release of which is announced this week. The offer was turned down as it is the intention of the distributor to lease the picture to a Philadelphia exchange on a percentage basis.

Editorial on C. B. C. Film

The Detroit Journal last week devoted several paragraphs in its editorial columns commending "Screen Snapshots" produced by Jack and Harry Cohn, of C. B. C.

In the Independent Field

Great Lakes Film Concern Is Organized

The Great Lakes Film Corporation of Albany, N. Y., was incorporated under the laws of New York last week and will deal in the State Rights distribution business. The firm will handle State Rights pictures in the territory north of Westchester county. The personnel of the organization follows: President, Sol. E. Rose; Vice-President, Lee Langdon; Herman Goodman, and E. A. Kuper, who is secretary.

Frank Marshall Visits New York

Frank Marshall of the Reggie Morris Productions is a recent visitor to the Arrow offices and reports that his company is more than satisfied with the splendid returns secured by Arrow of the Reggie Morris Comedies. He left Wednesday.

Apfel in Maine

Oscar Apfel is producing a Northwestern melodrama in Maine. Producers Security Corporation will in all probability handle the distribution.

"Ten Nights" Continues to Set New Records; Showmen Amazed

Showmen and exhibitors throughout the country are marveling over the remarkable showing of Arrow's "Ten Nights In A Barroom," which thus far has not missed a single record wherever it has been shown. Not since "The Birth of a Nation" swept the country have exhibitors been confronted with such a consistent record-breaker as this production has developed into being. Legitimate showmen, who have been stubborn in the matter of booking pictures into their houses, are clamoring for dates.

The meteoric showing of the picture has created nationwide discussion among theatre folks who have seen the production go into houses that were conceded "lemons" and finish the week the winner by thousands of dollars. Not only that but the picture established new records.

This week "Ten Nights" opened for an indefinite run at the Globe Theatre in Boston and Ascher's Halsey Theatre in Newark, N. J. In spite of the stiff opposition arranged by rival houses, the Globe Theatre on Monday played to more people than ever were crowded into a picture house in a single day in Boston. Tuesday, in spite of the severe cold weather, extra shows had to be jammed in. This was made possible by the elimination of the comedy at each show. Instead of the usual five shows it was necessary to give six. Manager Meagher of the Globe wired this office that, in his opinion, the picture is good for at least five weeks at his house. For the first time since the picture was shown one dollar has been set as the top price at this house.

The Newark engagement already has been extended a second week, making it necessary to postpone the opening of "Theodora." Sidney Ascher, one of the keenest showmen in this country, and a well-known State Righter, owns the Halsey Theatre. He staged a number of splendid exploitation stunts that won considerable newspaper space. J. Charles Davis, 2nd, was in charge of the Arrow exploitation. John Lowell, the star, made the trip to Newark from New York via an areoplane and received first page mention. The stunt was cleverly put on with the result that a capacity business ruled on the opening day, Saturday, while on Sunday a new record was set.

Both in Boston and Newark the commendable review of the press critics aided materially in bringing out the capcity second day crowds.

In all probability Arrow Film Corporation will stage first run showings in the key cities in order to prove the drawing power of the picture in any community and following this showing sell the local territorial rights, but retaining a percentage interest after the exchange has regained its investment. Exchanges already have flooded the Arrow offices with requests for quotations on the production.

Future bookings on the picture are unusually heavy. On January 30 it opens in Toronto for an extended run. Clinton White is in the Canadian city doing the advance exploitation. On that day also the feature opens at Wilmer & Vincent's Orpheum in Altoona, Pa., for a week with John Lowell appearing in person. For the first time in the history of Utica, N. Y., "Ten Nights" will play the Colonial and Majestic, W. & V. houses, simultaneously, starting Sunday, January 29. Charles V. France will exploit the picture in Utica.

Following the successful two-week showing at Reading, Pa., De Luxe Exchange of Philadelphia, which owns the Eastern Pennsylvania rights to the picture, has obtained ten day and date week showings in Philadelphia. The Stanley Theatres of America of that city also have booked the production over its entire circuit, starting with the Philadelphia premier at the Victoria Theatre on February 16.

Premier bookings are underway for Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Columbus, Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis and Kansas City. The star, John Lowell, will make personal appearances at all these cities.

Between You and Me

CHARLES E. BARTLETT will produce a series of backwoods melodramas for the screen and has leased the Blazed Trails Productions, Inc., studio in Gloversville, N. Y., for production purposes. He will make a series of eight for State rights distribution. Richard Travers, it is understood, will be starred.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger of Arrow, which is sponsoring the L. Case Russell screen version of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" has enlisted the aid of newspapers of the country in fighting the old adaptation of the play of the same name, which was shown generally throughout the country years ago and was suddenly revived three weeks ago. The Newspaper Advertisers Association of America has promised to refuse the advertisements of users of the "revival."

It has just come to light that Joe Jacobs, who is associated with Sidney Ascher in a number of motion picture enterprises, had an old negative of "Little Lord Fauntelroy," but kept it on the shelf when Mary Pickford's special based on the same story and with the same title was offered exhibitors of the country.

Conditions in the southern market are anything but promising and the backers of several exchanges there have stopped furnishing the necessary backing with the result that they are threatened with bankruptcy. One of these exchangemen was in New York last week hoping to interest new capital, but he was disappointed. He offered paper for rights to certain pictures

Broadway shops seem to have undergone a change of heart for this week virtually every worthwhile store had a slate cutout of Wesley Barry in "School Days" which opens at the New York Strand on January 29, conspicuously displayed in their windows. Harry Richenbacker tried to land some of these ideal spots, but it remained for the publicist, Eddie Bonns, associated with Warner Brothers, to pull the trick. We counted 27 windows. Attaboy.

You're going to hear a lot of interesting news from Equity Pictures Corporation. Their acquisition of the B. F. Zeidman special, "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight," is only a forerunner to a number of big things that we understand Joe Schnitzer has under his belt. Nat Rothstein has started the ball rolling on the Zeidman picture by advertising it broadcast in New York.

Russell Productions Will Make Series of Six Northwesterns

"Shadows of Conscience," the seven-reel special produced by Russell Productions, Inc., for the independent field, has been bought for the territory of Nevada, California, Arizona, and the Hawaiian Islands by the Progress Features of San Francisco and Los Angeles.

This story of American life of fifty years ago is receiving a hearty welcome from Americans of today, according to both E. H. Emick and George A. Levy, of Liberty Theatres Corporation, who has the rights to Western Missouri, Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico and southern Idaho, as well as A. E. Lefcourt, president of the Pioneer Corporation, who is booking the picture in New York State, northern New Jersey, northern Illinois and Indiana.

Russell Productions, Inc., have achieved such success with their first great American classic that a series of six outdoor pictures, featuring twelve stars, will be the next output of the Russell Studios. B. D. Russell, production manager, is in California, superintending the details of getting the series under way.

J. C. Davis Will Direct

According to John Russell, President of Blazed Trails Productions, Inc., producers of "Ten Nights In a Barroom," State righted by Arrow, J. Charles Davis, 2nd, will direct that company's next picture, "Open Places." Mr. Davis has directed several pictures.

"Impulse" Neva Gerber's Third

"Impulse" is Neva Gerber's third Ben Wilson production for Arrow Film Corporation. Arrow officials claim this to be Miss Gerber's best picture released by them.

In the Independent Field

Independent Coast Film Men Active

Independent production on the Coast appears to be on the increase, judging from statement issued during the past week. The general belief among independent producers on the Coast is that 1922 will be a banner one for State Righters. At least three new productions destined for State Rights distribution were begun this week.

B. F. Fineman, President of the new Edwin Carewe Pictures Corporation, which was incorporated in New York early this month, arrived in Los Angeles early this week in company with Edwin Carewe and Raymond L. Schrock, scenario writer.

Final shots were taken this week on the latest David Butler feature, "According to Hoyle." Production is at the Louis Burston studio. Work will start on the next Butler picture within three weeks.

G. M. Anderson, head of Amalgamated Productions, Inc., whose pictures will be distributed by East Coast Productions, Inc., of New York, will have three units at work within the next week. Fred Church will be starred in these Westerns.

Harry Garson, producer of Clara Kimball Young productions, will shortly leave for New York for a conference with officials of Equity Pictures Corporation. Miss Young has only one more picture to make for Equity under her present contract. This picture has been completed. The general belief on the Coast is that a new contract will be drawn up, although there is said to be some hitch in negotiations over the salary question.

A new Independent producing company made its bow last week when it was announced that the Protean Arts, Inc., had acquired use of the Fine Arts studios. It is understood tbat this firm will star Cecil Holland, character actor, lu its series of sbort subject novelties. Raymond Cannon will direct. William Foster will photograph.

Fred Caldwell of the Commonwealth Morlon Pictures Corporation of Los Angeles is casting "Dominating Eyes," which is the third of a series of 12 five-reel Westerns. Affiliated Pictures Enterprises will State right the pictures, according to announcement here.

Edna Schley of Western Pictures Exploitation Corporation left for New York last week to close a contract for a story from which she will make her next release.

Webster Cullison, who produced the "Philo Gruhb" comedies, featuring Victor Potel, is working on a melodrama for the Independent market. Western Pictures Exploitation Corporation will sponsor the production.

Film folks here are showing a keen interest in the much-talked of "Ten Nights In a Barroom," now being screened in Eastern theatres. Already requests have been made to local first-run exhibitors to bring the picture here.

James Hogan, who wrote and directed "Where Is My Wandering Boy To-night," which Bernie Fineman and B. F. Zeidman sold to Equity Pictures Corporation of New York recently, expects to make a series of pictures starring Johnny Walker. The pictures, according to Coast reports, will be offered the Independent market.

Production on the Little Napoleon Comedies will be started shortly at the Morris R. Schlank studios. Harry Burns will direct the two-reel series in which the famous chimpanzee will be featured.

New York Circused Prior to "My Wandering Boy" Premier

Despite the fact that only two weeks have elapsed since Equity Film Corporation concluded negotiations that gave it distribution rights to the B. F. Zeidman special, "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" already Nat Rothstein, the publicity and exploitation director, has seen to it that New York City has been circused with paper of all sizes and styles. Not a single spot of any prominence has been overlooked. Everywhere one moves on Manhattan Island he is confronted with pretentiously prominent posters advertising the advent of the production.

Hundreds of 24 sheets have been plastered in New York from the Battery to Yonkers. Even many more hundreds of six and three-sheets have been posted at advantageous spots. It is conservatively estimated that the advance poster exploitation for "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight" in New York City alone, exclusive of Brooklyn, already has passed the $10,000 mark. Every subway station, every elevated and in every car are posters or cards advertising the picture.

In the past few years motion picture distributors have been liberal in their appropriation for poster advertising, but Equity in "circusing" New York as it is doing with this picture, is establishing a new precedence. That they will reap a fine harvest from this exploitation goes without saying, for the posters are attractively designed and will arouse public discussion of a picture that already has won the attention of every exchange and exhibitor in the country.

This campaign in New York is preliminary to the opening of the picture at one of the leading picture pavilions on Broadway within the next two weeks. The picture will play for an indefinite run. A special corps of stage mechanics and production experts have been signed by the Equity firm for this premier showing, which promises to be on a pretentious scale. There is ample opportunity for stage effects and none will be lost, for a special prologue is already being arranged with spectacularly artistic and colorful settings.

Inasmuch as it was that famous song, "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" that inspired the screen story, a special musical score, that will be in the nature of a surprise in so far as effect is concerned, is being arranged by a well-known composer. Scores of persons, too, will be employed at the premier to serve backstage in providing the necessary effects. A specially augmented orchestra will also be on hand.

Milton Crandall, the enterprising exploitation man who successfully toured the country with Miss Clara Kimball Young, the Equity star, on a personal appearance trip, will in all probability be placed in charge of the exploitation campaign by Mr. Rothstein. Joe Schnitzer, president of Equity, has received hundreds of inquiries from exhibitors and State rights exchanges seeking further information on the picture, which will be distributed in the independent market.

Demand for Melodrama Unusual, Alexander Points Out Changes

State rights exchanges throughout the country this week reported an unusual demand from exhibitors for melodramatic productions with the result that never before in the history of the motion picture industry has the cry for melodrama been as great as it is at present. William Alexander of Alexander Film Corporation, which is State righting the Sherlock Holmes detective series of two-reelers, on his return recently from a tour of the country, verified condtions that have been reported in New York.

Mr. Alexander, an observant student of the industry, said this week that the play of action and tense situation has always been popular, but the new year has started with an increased demand everywhere for this class of screen play.

The finest theatres of Cleveland, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Cincinnati, Boston, St. Louis, New Orleans are favoring the plays of blood and sand, mystery and perilous adventure rather than the purely social conflicts that have been raging generally.

Vaudeville is creeping into a great many of the small screen theatres of the middle west and south with a view to offering something different than screen theatre zone competitors. This move, says Mr. Alexander, is resulting in a greater demand for the short reel miscellaneous subjects.

Of 12,000 reply post cards sent out by the Alexander firm to moving picture managers throughout the country questioning film men's disposition toward the Sherlock Holmes productions of the Alexander firm 5,796 correspondents expressed interest in the subjects, saying the interest had been generated by the reception given the Sherlock Holmes pictures by the trade paper critics.

Mr. Alexander reports a general pre-Spring freshening up of enthusiasm all along the fixed routes of film trading from New York to the Coast and the Gulf to Canada. Estimating this confidence spirit at a 33 per cent. increase over last Autumn, Mr. Alexander believes the advent of Spring proper will see a decided redivivus in the selling and exhibiting trade generally.

The Alexander trip, consummated in less than four weeks resulted in the sale of more than 70 per cent. of the Sherlock Holmes unsold territory.

Brandt on Trip

Joe Brandt of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation and Art Brandt Productions, Inc., left New York this week for a tour of exchange centres. He will study conditions. The trip is being taken pursuant to Mr. Brandt's desire to at all times keep in intimate touch with conditions of the market.

"His Nibs" Opens in Cleveland; Start "Mister Antonio" in Spring

A preview showing of Exceptional Pictures Corporation's initial feature, "His Nibs" starring Charles (Chic) Sale, has been arranged by Phil Selznick, who owns the Ohio rights to the production, for January 28 at the Allen theatre, Cleveland. S. Barret McCormack will be in charge of the showing. A feature of this engagement will be the personal appearance of Mr. Sale, who will present his vaudeville act. Through an arrangement with the B. F. Keith Vaudeville Exchange the engagement of Mr. Sale was made possible, for he is under contract to tour the Keith vaudeville houses. Mr. McCormack already has started on his exploitation campaign.

While first run dates on "His Nibs" are pouring into the various exchanges handling the picture, Exceptional Pictures Corporation this week announced that all is being put into readiness to start production on "Mister Antonio" starring Otis Skinner. Mr. Skinner is now touring the country in "Blood and Sand" and production will start as soon as he completes this tour.

Meanwhile the Exceptional publicity and exploitation forces are concentrating all efforts on properly publicizing "Mister Antonio" to the waiting public. It is expected that actual production on this picture will start early in the Spring.

Friedman's Theatre

Ben Friedman's Rivoli Theatre in Minneapolis, Minn., will be open late this month.

"Boys, you've got a knockout"

"Your picture is a knockout and your title is a knockout." So said an old showman with thirty-eight years of experience behind him. "The public wants drama right now, drama packed with sentiment, and you've got the greatest combination of heart punch, sentiment, drama and title that I have seen in the show business in many years. Millions have sung the song—millions know the title—that's why I predict that—

Exhibitors will "clean up" with it

Proof that this old showman is right, came a flood of letters and telegrams from State Right Buyers, Independent Exchangemen and exhibitors from all over the country asking for territory, terms, prices and release date on this B. F. Zeidman production,—

"Where is my wandering boy tonight?"

Exhibitors, Communicate With Us

We want to hear from exhibitors all over the country.

We want to hear from those particularly who are seeking sure fire pictures that will bring the old 1914 profits and 1914 business. Tell us what you think of the title, and we will write and tell you what kind of goods we've got to back up the title, and then when we say —"Watch and Wait" you'll understand exactly what we mean.

Lucy Doraine, Star of "The Love Slave," Will Tour United States

Persistent rumors regarding an early visit to America of the emotional star Lucy Doraine, add interest to her latest screen vehicle in this country, "The Love Slave," presented by Herz Film Corporation and released in the independent field by the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc. In the past three years the theatre, concert halls, operatic stage and lecture platform have been crowded with a horde of foreign artists, but there have been few screen stars among them, although the latter have recently been well represented by their work in the cinema theatres. "The Love Slave" is a Sacha production and the second Lucy Doraine picture to be shown here, the first being "Good and Evil," from the same studios.

These having been well received, it should be of value to the industry as a whole if Mlle. Doraine's heralded visit should become a fact, for there is no doubt that regardless of the ultimate settlement of the foreign film question, the development of the art of the motion picture is an interest shared by producers and players on both sides of the water. Broad-minded critics are of the opinion that each has something to learn from the other, a statement that seems in part at least to be realized by Mlle. Doraine's producing company, who, it is credibly reported have engaged the services of an American director, Tom Walsh, for a new series of pictures in which the beautiful Franco-Slav actress will star. In this connection it is interesting to note that "The Love Slave," although from a foreign studio, follows the recent American practice of having been taken from a widely known and popular book by a famous author.

The story is from the pen of Georges Ohnet, one of the leading novelists of France, best known in this country by the dramatization of his book "The Iron Master," which served as a stage vehicle for the celebrated English stars, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Kendall, and later as a photoplay in which Nat Goodwin was starred. M. Ohnet, considered an idealistic rather than a naturalistic writer, produced, it is said, stories that seem made for screen productions.

In "The Love Slave" the star appears as Kora, an Arabian slave girl taken to Paris by a wealthy young man who rescued her from her masters, and the situation thus brought about introduces the age-old conflict of "East Against West." Much is claimed for "The Love Slave" as a production inasmuch as the scenes in the Orient were actually filmed in the East, the old Damascus of the Bible, the Arabian desert, the wandering tribes, quaint streets, bazaars, mosques and markets, having the true athmosphere thus so surely obtainable.

Skirboii Brothers, of Cincinnati, are effectively using Eddie Bonns' "Advertise With Music" slogan in connection with their extensive exploitation on "Schooi Days."

"Penny of Top Hill Trail" is the Cincinnati Federated Exchange's best bet, according to a report sent to this department.

The Canuck Film Company has established an exchange in the Albee Theatre in Montreal with J. Roseby as manager.

Horsfali Productions, Inc., of Canada, by the way, have sold their interests on British pictures to Angio-Canadian Picture Corporation.

Jake Lourie of the Beacon, Modern and Park Theatres of Boston thought so much of "School Days" that he booked it into ail three houses for day and date showings beginning Feb. 19.

"Baron" Hirsch has resigned from the Buffaio Lande office sales staff and has returned to New York to join the Arrow Company. Dave Lande is sending in an avalanche of contracts on "Thunderbolt Jack."

Sydney Samson, manager of the Buffaio Grand & Warner office, has received some great exploitation helps on "School Days." One of them was a lollypop in a nice wax paper container. All that remains now is the container. Sydney himself dined on the lollypop.

Dorothy Seibert has succeeded Ida Brown as booker at the Buffalo Merit exchange. Miss Brown is going to Caiifornia to look over the moving picture colony and have a good time generaiiy. N. I. Filkins reports that Homer Howard has arranged an unusually large number of personal appearances for Grace Davison who will open her tour in Albany, proceeding to the Empire, Syracuse, and then towns in western New York.

The newly organized Niagara Pictures Corporation in the Warner building, Buffaio, is getting a goodiy share of business these days and Sales Manager Dave Levy announces that a revival of "Mickey" is being pianned. "The County Fair" is being heaviiy booked, as is "The Lotus Blossom," the exchange's new feature.

Fred M. Zimmerman, president and generai manager of Nu-Art Pictures in Buffaio, is so busy that one would think him the President so hard is it to get in touch with him. Fred is continuaiiy traveling between New York, Albany and Buffalo and when he gets a moment off he starts for North Tonawanda to look over his Avondaie theatre in that city.

The De Luxe Feature Film Company of Seattle has taken on a new lease of life. Instead of one salesman Manager Ai. Rosenberg has employed three, and he will soon he in the market for more pictures. With headquarters at Spokane, A. McRae will cover Eastern Washington, Northern Idaho and Montana. Louis Rosenberg has for his territory Oregon and Southern Idaho, with Portland as his headquarters. The remainder of the territory, Western Washington, is in charge of Mandel Neider.

The Kwality Pictures Corporation recentiy formed in Seattle by Al. K. Brin, who is president, has opened headquarters at 2006 Third avenue. The company is handling Warner Brothers productions, of which the first two, "Why Giris Leave Home" and School Days," are ready for release.

The Ministerial Association of Seattle has sent a hearty endorsement of the Bihle Series of pictures to the De Luxe Feature Film Company, the Northwest distributors, and is recommending them to schools and churches.

J. T. Sheffield, manager of the Greater Features Company of Seattie, is leaving this week for New York, Chicago, and hack to the Coast via the company's Denver and Sait Lake offices.

S. J. Hankin, former head of the Fine Arts Exchange of St. Louis, is considering offers from several exchanges in the Middie West. He expects to make a trip East shortly.

Colonel Howard F. Brink, who is one of the big reasons why the Buffalo Grand & Warner Exchange is such a huge success, is now driving through the western New York district signing them up right and left for "School Days." Howard set a record on "Why Giris Leave Home" bookings.

M. Cohen, one of the most popular Knights of the Leaping Tintypes who ever sold "fillums" out of Buffalo, has left the "Queen City of the Lakes," to take charge of the Nu-Art office in Albany. If anyone can put over a new exchange, it's Maurie.

There seems to be a craze for spectacular production in Germany, according to Ernest D. Fredman, the English writer, who recently spent several months in that country studying cinematographic conditions there. The studios in Germany are a hive of industry with very little waste noted. "The Wives of Pharoh," which Ernest Lubitsch directed, is said by that writer to he the greatest film ever seen in Engiand. He characterizes Luhitsch as "D. W. Griffith's most serious rival."

The proposed bill that the Senate Finance Committee is said to he drawing up aiming at a radical taxation of ali foreign pictures was the chief topic of discussion among importers and exporters of film during the current week.

Warners' Pictures have opened a Detroit office at 605 Film Building and same is in charge of Dave Warner, who has been handiing some of the Warner pictures in Cleveland for the past yesr. Among the pictures to be distributed in Michigan are "Why Girls Leave Home"; "School Days"; "Ashamed of His Parents" and "Parted Curtains." Mr. Warner is now piaying his first Michigan engagement at the Fox-Washington Theatre, Detroit, where "Why Giris Leave Home" opened an indefinite run on January 19. The next attraction will be "Ashamed of His Parents." Mr Warner states thst leading exhibitors aii over the state are negotiating with him for these big features.

The Favorite Film Co., of Detroit, Mich., has taken over the distribution rights in Michigan for "His Nibs," starring Chic Sale, and already has closed contracts with the entire Butterfield Circuit. In these towns the Butterfield interests operate vaudeville as well as picture theatres, and Mr. Sale is one of the biggest headline box office attrsctions that has ever played them. For this reason, Ed Beatty, generai manager of the Butterfieid circuit, did not hesitate to book the picture after screening.

What about the Broadway showing? Is it absolutely essential to the success of a picture. Or is it one of the showman tricks that may become as obsolete as the balyhoo?

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, and one of those progressive men who rarely follows the beaten path, declares that the Broadway showing for a big picture to be state righted is not necessary. He points to the success of L. Case Russell's screen version of "Ten Nights in a Barroom," as a most recent instance of how a state rights picture can be put over without making its initial bow on New York's famous street.

"If a picture has audience value and exploitation possibilities such as are contained in 'Ten Nights in a Barroom,'" says Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, "I cannot see the need of giving it a 'tryout' on Broadway. When we took 'Ten Nights in a Barroom' for distribution we discussed at length various angles of the picture and whether it should be opened in a Broadway house.

"Finally, we decided that the picture was good enough to go out on its own merits. We opened the picture in Providence—proverbial among showmen as being a 'show-me' town—and smashed all previous records. And this without the Broadway showing. We have duplicated the Providence success in Woonsocket, Lawrence, Pawtucket, Mass.; Reading, Pa., and Newark, N. J.

"We didn't go into these cities and tell folks about what the picture had done on Broadway. That would not have appealed to them, anyway, in my opinion. What people want to know is whether the film is going to interest them. The Broadway showing is all right, and if it suits New York—fine! But just the same, people are a lot more interested in seeing the picture for themselves, if the title and general description of the picture is appealing. And they have been buncoed so often by shows that come to town with a press agent's fervid accounts of how many weeks it did on Broadway, that they have come to accept this time-worn statement with a generous pinch of salt."

Two Carnivals Are Completed

Two more of the Carnival comedy pictures, being distributed by C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, are ready for release. These two-reelers star "Smiling Bill" Jones and Polly Moran.

"Watered Stock" Booze Picture

L. & H. Enterprises this week announced that they will shortly release "Watered Stock," a feature dealing with the bootleging issue. Marjorie Payne, formerly with Christie Comedies, is co-starred with Al Van Doussen.

"The Jungle Goddess" Will Be Completed by March 1; Eleventh Episode Completed

Word comes from the coast studios of Col. W. N. Selig, where "The Jungle Goddess," Selig's wild-animal serial is being made, that production on the chapter-picture has already reached the eleventh and twelfth episodes.

Export and Import Film Co., Inc., world distributors for "The Jungle Goddess" originally announced they contemplated completion of the serial by February 1st. Difficulties encountered in the filming of the many hazardous wild-animal stunts written into the scenario by Agnes Johnston and Frank Dazey, are said to be the reason for the slight alteration in the scheduled plans of the serial.

As production is now progressing, it is promised that the entire fifteen episodes will be completed by March 1. Five episodes of "The Jungle Goddess" are already in New York, while chapters six, seven and eight have just been shipped from Los Angeles. Episodes nine and ten are now being cut and titled.

"I could have rushed this serial through on scheduled time," advises Col. Selig, "had I not wanted to make 'The Jungle Goddess' my masterpiece episode drama. In working with wild animals—and I believe I have more experience along those lines than any one else in the motion picture business—one can never depend on what the animals are going to do. There are days when some of the lions cannot be tempted to work at all. In 'The Jungle Goddess' I am taking great care to have all the wild animal action as realistic as if it had actually happened in the jungles."

Weiss Sells Big Serials to Balkans

Louis Weiss, Secretary of Adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation, has disposed of the Balkan states in Europe for "Adevntures of Tarzan," starring Elmo Lincoln. This deal was closed between Weiss and M. Frontier, acting for Antonio Mosco, of Rome, Italy, who has already purchased Italy for this serial. The countries involved in the sale of the Balkans are as follows: Roumania, Bulgaria, Greece, Turkey in Europe, Albanio, Montenegro as now constituted, and the Kingdom of Servia as it existed prior to August 1st, 1914. With the closing of this contract Weiss announced that the only foreign territories remaining unsold for "Adventures of Tarzan" are the following: South Africa, Russia, Spain, Portugal and Scandanavia.

In its recent issue the "Lichtbild-Buhne" publishes statistics showing that the taxes levied from cinematographic trade in 1920-21 in the United States amounted to $90,628,714.25 and from the film industry to $5,951,187.73.

According to a cablegram, the Coal Commission for Greater Berlin has consented to an increase of the electric current contingent allowed to the motion picture theatres, from 35 to 80 per cent. of the 1916 consumption.

The recent failure of the Banca Italian Disconto of Rome has had a disastrous effect on the film industry in Italy, the real magnitude of which can not yet be perceived. It was mainly through the financial assistance of this bank that several of the leading Italian producing firms were able to establish the great combine known as the Unione Cinematografica Italiana.

Gaumont's version of "The Three Musketeers" was shown to the London trade last week and was enthusiastically received by the British trade press. Meanwhile Douglas Fairbanks' picture of the same title continues to draw huge crowds at the Opera House in London.

D. W. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm" will be shown in London late in the Spring, it was announced in that city last week. The picture, according to the London despatch, will be shown as "The Two Orphans."

A Monty Banks 1922 comedy, "Fresh Air," distributed in the United Kingdom by the Ideal Company, was selected by H. Winik and Tom E. Davies of the Western Import Company, among the pictures to be shown to the King and Queen of England at a special exhibition at Buckingham Palace recently. The royal couple laughed heartily at the diminutive comedan and congratulated Messrs. Davies and Winik on the excellent merit of the comedy. Page, Federated Exchanges.

The crisis through which the motion picture industry in France recently passed has taught French producers a lesson they will not soon forget and once again production in that country is bustling with activity. France has established a custom duty—an imitation of that in vogue in England, Italy and Spain—on all foreign films entering that country. This tax has been fixed at 20 per cent. ad valorem, or 20 per cent. of the value in France of the imported product.

Sir Oswald Stoll is planning a trip to America late in March. He is planning to remain in the States about six weeks.

Frank Eiliott, Vice-President of the Sun-Light Arc Corporation of London, closed an important deal in Italy early this month when he acquired a large studio in Rome which is to be furnished with Sun-light arc, all the most up-to-date electrical equipment and every technical facility to which American directors are accustomed.

The Charlie Chaplin revivals in England are literally burning up and the distributors are unable to fill all dates, owing to the delay in getting the necessary number of prints.

J. Stuart Blackton's, "The Glorious Adventure," which will be distributed in the United Kingdom by Stoll Film Company, Ltd., was given its premier showing at the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden, last week. Lady Diana Manners is starred.

Richard Rowland, former President of Metro, who recentiy returned from Europe, hought the big French production, "L'Atlantide," for distribution in this country. He is said aiso to have closed a deal for Marcus Loew, President of Metro, whereby Sir William Jury will handle the British distribution of Metro pictures this year.

"WHERE IS MY WANDERING BOY TONIGHT?"

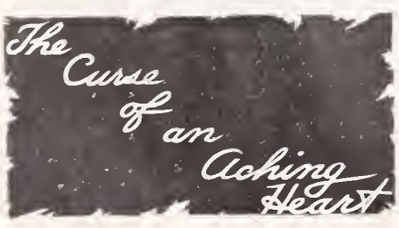
Record-Breaking Demand for Big State Rights Pictures Prevails

Never before in the history of the independent market has there been such a wholesale demand for State Rights pictures by the leading exhibitors than there is at present. During the past two weeks this department has been swamped with inquiries from exhibitors seeking details concerning some of the big pictures now on the market. Within the next four weeks at least five State Rights productions will have found their way into Broadway theatres. In all probability Sam Rothafel of the Capitol, who already has booked "His Nibs," the Chic Sale feature, will show "Ten Nights In A Barroom," for which he is bidding, although there is a probability of the production going into a legitimate house for a run. Warner Brothers' "School Days" opens at the Strand in New York on Sunday.

"Where Is My Wondering Boy Tonight," Equity's super feature, also will go into a Broadway house for a run. The Loew metropolitan houses are weekly featuring State Rights subjects. As a matter of fact virtually every box office record made during the past few weeks have been established by State Rights productions.

For the first time in the history of the trade such circuits as Stanley, Wilmer & Vincent, Alfred S. Black, S. A. Lynch and others are seeking State Rights productions of box office merit.



Morris Schlank On Independents

Newsy Observations of the Week

WHILE players associated with producing companies releasing their productions through national distributing corporations are idle on the Coast, those working for independent producers are very active and keeping extremely busy. So said Morris R. Schlank, the producer whose pictures are released in the State rights market by Arrow Film Corporation. Mr. Schlank is in New York on a business trip. He expects that 1922 will be a banner year for independents and that 1923 will see even greater progress for State righters.

Said Mr. Schlank: "I have always produced for independents and will always continue to do so and I believe there are a lot of so-called big producers who feel the same as I do toward the trade in general right now. The independent market is improving every day. Its possibilities are unlimited. Promoters galore have visited me and with paper and pencil they have tried to show me where I could make millions. However, I want none of these promoters. I am satisfied with my business as it exists today.

Harry Warner of Warner Bros. is slated to address 1900 school teachers and principals of New York at a special screening of "School Days" at the Lexington Theatre on Friday night, Jan. 27. His subject will be "Censorship." Some of the foremost educational authorities in the country will be on hand. The Warners have had no trouble whatsoever obtaining the cooperation of educational institutions on their Gus Edwards production, which conveys a message every child in this country should receive and heed: That education is necessary.

S. Barrett McCormack of the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, was up against the toughest proposition of the season some few months back. Virtually every program company had tied up with some theatre in Cleveland. When Mac moved into Cleveland form Los Angeles he was confronted with the proposition of finding that he could not get program pictures. He hustled to the State rights exchanges and contracted for their features. And he has been using State rights pictures right along—and making, in proportion, as much and some times more than the larger houses in that city.

David Segal of Royal Pictures and Pioneer exchanges of Philadelphia visited New York Wednesday. Dave is a live one and demonstrated his confidence in the future by taking over the Pioneer franchise for his territory. Mr. Segal expects a considerably better season, although he said the past year was the most trying he has ever experienced. With industrial conditions in his district improving and more people attending the picture houses in preference to the legit theatres, the situation bids fair to clear.

D. G. Fischer Explains Plan of New Firm

David G. Fischer, vice-president and general manager of the Regal-Fischer Corporation, last week announced to the film industry in general the entry of the Regal-Fischer Corporation in the independent field. "Persecution" will be the first release issued.

The features owned and controlled by this organization will be leased to the State Right exchanges, if they have the facilities for handling same. If not, then it is the purpose of the Regal-Fischer Corporation to exploit the features they control, direct to the exhibitors, with the cooperation of the local exchanges.

The New York territory will be handled direct from the home office. Mr. Fisher will be in charge. Frederick A. Fleck will take charge of the New Jersey section.

George L. Fecke will handle the advertising and exploitation.

Blazed Trails' New Production

Blazed Trails Productions, Inc., producers of Arrow's "Ten Nights In a Barroom," will start production in April on "Open Places," by L. Case Russell. The picture will be made in Gloversville, N. Y. John Lowell will be starred. Baby Ivy Ward also will appear in the cast. Joe Settle will photograph.

Loew Signs Elmo Lincoln

Elmo Lincoln, star of Weiss Brothers' serial, "Adventures of Tarzan," will appear at all the Loew theatres while touring the country on his present trip. He is now appearing in Philadelphia, but next week moves to Pittsburgh.

Elmo Lincoln Proves Showmen's Claim That Personal Appearances Are Business Builders

By ROGER FERRI.

DURING the past few months State rights distributors and exhibitors have asked the question:

"Why the personal appearance?"

Trained and experienced showmen have promptly answered: "Personal appearances by all means." The writer is a firm believer in personal appearances, for we have seen them work miracles. Successful showmen have claimed that they build business, and, yet, there have been those who have questioned cold and proven facts.

Louis Weiss, of Weiss Brothers, who are State righting "Adventures of Tarzan," a 15-episode animal serial, starring Elmo Lincoln, some time ago informed us that that star would soon start on a personal appearance tour of the country. Before we proceed it may be well to record here that the most difficult picture to exploit is a serial production. Consequently, Mr. Weiss's plans interested the writer and to ascertain the extent of the value of a personal appearance not only to theatre, but to the picture itself, we wandered to that slumbering Pennsylvania metropolis geographically referred to as Philadelphia. Prior to going to Quakerville, we called Bert Ennis, Weiss's enterprising publicist, who told us of the wonderful results already attained earlier in the week with the appearances of Elmo Lincoln. And Bert was right; wonders were accomplished.

Ben Amsterdam who, in addition to operating the livewire Masterpiece Film Attractions Exchange in Philadelphia, also conducts a successful theatre, owns the Eastern Pennsylvania rights to "The Adventures of Tarzan" and he personally met Elmo who was accorded a royal reception. This reception left no doubt that his Philadelphia admirers were pleased to have him in their midst.

Elmo Lincoln's initial appearance in Philadelphia (and incidentally the first time he had ever made a personal appearance) was at the Imperial Theatre, Second and Poplar streets. This house, with a seating capacity of one thousand, had sixteen hundred persons jammed into every nook and corner of the theatre to greet the mighty Elmo. A tremendous roar greeted his appearance on the stage, and many minutes elapsed before the house was quieted sufficiently for Elmo to make a little speech.

This incident was repeated at both the Iris Theatre, Kensington, and the Alhambra, South Philadelphia. At the former house, which seats approximately fourteen hundred, over two thousands were inside when Elmo Lincoln appeared before them. The Alhambra, one of the large Stanley vaudeville houses, was forced to line up hundreds of patrons outside on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday on account of the crowds desiring to catch a glimpse of the star in "Adventures of Tarzan."

Record crowds attended the personal appearances on Thursday at the Garden, Plaza, Lyric and Forest Hill Theatres in Camden. The warm reception in each of these houses proved conclusively that Elmo Lincoln stands high in the esteem of the theatre patrons of the Jersey city.

Because of the number of theatres covered Friday and Saturday, it would be well to tabulate the seating capacity and attendance figures.

Theatres	Capacity	Paid Admissions
		Matinee	First	Second
Astor	1,300	....	1,000	800
Bell	600	750	770	900
Royal	1,000	800	1,200	....
Richmond	900	1,800	2,000	....
Amber	1,000	900	1,700	1,300
Jefferson	900	1,100	1,000	1,200
Astor (Sat.)	1,300	800	1,200	900
Star	440	....	650	....

The Astor Theatre is not what one could be called a "serial" house. "Adventures of Tarzan," is however, drawing bigger every week than the first serial used. The theatre is playing high-class productions three and four days, using the serial the latter half of the week. Serial business has been developed, especially on Saturdays, which have shown a substantial increase in box office receipts.

Elmo Lincoln is a hero with the children. This fact was clearly brought out by attendance figures at the theatre visited on Saturday. The Richmond topped the list for attendance. How 1,800 persons jammed into a house with a seating capacity of 900 is a miracle; but still they were there. The children down front, wishing to obtain a close view of their hero, piled three and four in a seat; all the aisles were impassable with children and grown-ups. On the night performance, the same situation occured, with a few less persons in the house on account of the fact the appearance was made early in the evening.

That the pinch of a woman was nearly as bad as the claw of a lion, was impressed on Elmo Lincoln at the Jefferson on Saturday afternoon. After an enthusiastic reception at the finish of his talk, Elmo started down the aisle for the exit door. Youngsters and grown-ups jammed the aisles, which made it difficult for Elmo to make as swift an exit as he would desire. While he was forcing his way through the crowds, a woman reached over and pinched his arm, then turned to her companion and said, "Gosh, he's real. The pinch was real, and was not a caress."

The children are great followers of a serial star, their greatest wish is to hang on his arm, plead to be lifted, or ask him to shake hands. One little chap called to Elmo Lincoln from a crowd, "Elmo, you can lick ....., can't you?" He mentioned the name of another serial strong man. Elmo answered, "Sure I can," and this seemed to satisfy the kiddie. But the next night, the same little fellow, about ten years old, piped up, "You said you could lick ....., didn't you?" When Elmo answered in the affirmative, the boy turned to his companions and said, "I told you so." This must have settled a long standing argument, and also convinced the other boys that Elmo Lincoln is the strongest man in pictures, for he said so himself.

In making personal appearances at theatres, Elmo Lincoln desired to gratify the wishes of the public, and as a consequence, he goes on the stage in the make-up of Tarzan in the serial.

No little credit for the splendid showings incident to the personal appearances of Elmo Lincoln in Philadelphia should go to Walter R. Greene, exploitation and publicity director for Ben Amsterdam's live exchange. Mr. Greene is a pioneer in the field of motion picture exploitation and has been giving an excellent account of himself in Quakerville.

Primax Sues Shuberts on "The Lonely Trail"

From the showing the Fred Beauvais feature, "The Lonely Trail" at Shubert's Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York City, has resulted a suit for damages. This week Primax Pictures Corporation filed suit in the United States Supreme Court against the Shubert Vaudeville Exchange, Inc., charging breach of contract. According to papers filed, the picture was booked into the theatre on a percentage basis.

GUS EDWARDS'

"SCHOOL DAYS"

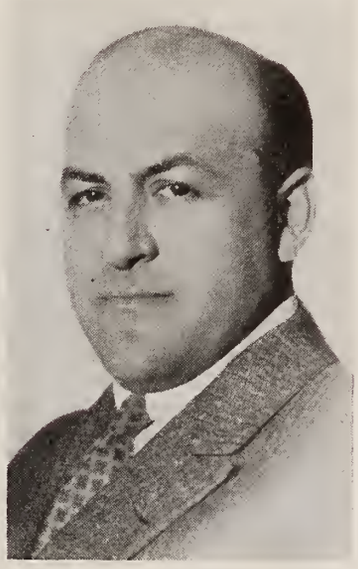
PREPARED AND EDITED BY ROGER FERRI

A Showman's Appreciation of a Showman's Picture

By JOSEPH PLUNKETT

Managing Director, Strand Theatre, New York City

I HAVE booked Warner Brothers' Harry Rapf production of Gus Edwards' "School Days" into the Strand Theatre for several good reasons. Most important of these, however, is my belief that it is one of the biggest box office possibilities that has been given exhibitors of this country in many a day. It is what the exhibitors of this country have longed for. It has everything—title, story and star. More than that it is splendidly directed and bubbles over with genuine human interest. I have no hesitancy in predicting a meteoric record-breaking career for "School Days."



I have booked, exhibited and witnessed many productions, but "School Days" is the sort of picture I would gamble on 52 weeks in the year without any fear. The laziest exhibitor in our field can't help make money with such a picture, for even if a mere handful of patrons attend the opening show he can rest assured that his second day's attendance will be capacity, for the picture is of such a calibre that it will make those few first nighters rave about it to their friends. Then, too, it's the sort of picture with which you can obtain seemingly impossible tieups. It's a picture that lends itself to all angles of exploitation. It is a mirror of life. To the young it is a revelation, while to the older folks it is a pleasant memory of happy days gone by.

I said the title is valuable, and so it is. It means something to every man, woman or child. I said it has a star; Wesley Barry is one of the greatest box office names in this country. He is an artist without an equal in his line. The story is true to life, replete with humor, romance and pathos.

The alert showman can accomplish wonders with "School Days." Everybody has heard, sung or hummed Gus Edwards' popular song, "School Days." The picture revives melodies that will remain dear everlastingly to Americans.

I have played most of the big successes, but I look forward to new records during the run of "School Days" at the Strand. It's the sort of picture, that, properly exploited, cannot help but establish new marks. It will make history for any theatre—and if it doesn't it will not be the fault of the picture, but the responsibility of failure must fall on the shoulders of the exhibitor.

"School Days" is more than a motion picture—it is an achievement that Warner Brothers can rightfully boast about and that the exhibitors of the country welcome.

Monopoly of Motion Picture Theatre, Is a Menace to Industry, Says Warner

AS MUCH as censorship is repugnant to the motion picture industry—liberty is essential to its progress. Only that which is free can hope to achieve success. And while censorship can be eradicated with clean, wholesome pictures, the monopoly on the show houses of the industry is a detriment to its progress. And this issue has been repeated so often that it is not necessary to go into detail about it."

That is the contention of Harry M. Warner, of the Warner Brothers, one of the real pioneers in the industry.

"But we cannot get away from the fact that while censorship is nothing more nor less than a slap at indecency," continued Mr. Warner, "the monopolization of the motion picture theatre by a certain number within its confines, has caused more havoc among the exhibitors—the exhibitors who are free from the shackles of the monopolists—than all the censorship laws could accomplish in a lifetime.

"We all know that the newspaper is not censored. And for what reason? Because they never dare to approach or expose the limit reached by those who are handling the reins of the industry. In plain language, newspapers in the majority do not care to tell their reading public all the filth of the world. Most of them give the public credit for having some sense of discrimination. But the producer of cheap claptrap forgets that the average person will gaze upon what is offered by him by the exhibitor, irrespective of the result upon the moral of the little folks, the young folks and the old folks. It is this claptrap that tends to ruin the value of the motion picture as a wholesome, entertaining and instructive medium.

"For the public mind is curious—curious to see what others most desire to see. And it is up to the producers to make only that which is enlightening, ennobling and of a decent character suitable for the enrichment and entertainment of the masses. There isn't a country in the world that has more motion picture fans than America.

"Everywhere there has been and still is for that matter, a cry of the depressing state of business among the motion picture theatre owners.

"Merely one evidence of what can be accomplished by the enterprising exhibitor is furnished in a letter I recently received from Harlan E. Woehrle, general manager of the Third Street Theatre, Easton, Pa. Mr. Woehrle's comments need no explanation.

"'It would be unfair both to you and myself were I not to voluntarily express my sincerest satisfaction without 'School Days' engagement. Realizing when contracting for 'School Days' that Easton, a city of hardly 35,000 population, was privileged to present this picture, we left nothing undone to arrange a presentation worthy of this distinction.

"'It is needless for me to comment on 'School Days' as a picture. I feel that you have a production which has universal appeal and I predict exceptional success for you in this release. The only exhibitor who will fall down with this production is the one who goes hunting and fishing when he should be running his theatre.'

"The very tone of the depressive wail would tend to convince the uninitiated member of the industry with the belief that the exhibitors were actually on the verge of ruin. And that with their ruin the producers and distributors would also be ruined. Can we who are watching the growth of the industry believe what is said? There are of course many exhibitors who will never make much money, but it is a startling and gratifying fact that in the eastern section of the country the motion picture business has increased its number of theatres. Many managers have added to their holdings. For example, there is one man in this game who controls a string of theatres situated in almost every section of the country, and he still goes on opening new houses almost every other week. Does that fact denote depression?"

Harry Rapf, Producer of Money-Making Features, Is Firm Believer in Prologue

THE public wants variety. Exhibitors have come to learn the value of music with pictures, the value of a ballet and other divertisements. These have all aided in the growth of the motion picture industry. And it is a fallacy, a downright disregard of what the public likes to see, to place prologue presentations on the scrap heap."

Harry Rapf, the producer of "School Days," starring Wesley Barry, is one of the few people in the industry who believes that the prologue is necessary to the showing of a picture. The beliefs of Mr. Rapf are based on the fact that he has been associated with the motion picture almost from its inception, and has also had a long and varid association with the producing end of the theatrical business.

"The producer with foresight," went on Mr. Rapf, "first considers the general presentation possibilities of his story. If this is taken from a broad viewpoint the exhibitor in the end will more than hail the production as a great box-office attraction. And the producer, having taken into consideration the salient features of a story and what can be done with it from a showman's standpoint, will not feel that his efforts have been in vain.

"The theatre-going public is forever seeking variety. It is proven by the vast vaudeville-going public and the musical comedy public who pack these places of entertainment night after night, week in and week out. For this reason, the exhibitor who, in addition to showing a motion picture with music will put over a snappy prologue, attracts both the vaudeville and musical comedy crowds. These people frequent the cinema houses because in them they get not only their usual entertainment, but also see a motion picture.

One of the big factors that caused Mr. Rapf to produce "School Days," with Wesley Barry, was that he could foresee the many attractions and prologue possibilities for exhibitors. He had in mind the Gus Edwards "School Days" revue which could be used as a prologue to the screen presentation. He knew that the musical score would be interpolated by the popular Gus Edwards melodies—melodies that will live forever in the memories of music lovers. And he could also see the special children's performances, and the simple inexpensive campaigns through which exhibitors could reach school children, school teachers, and club women.

All of these possibilities have come true. Exhibitor after exhibitor who has played "School Days" has taken advantage of specialties that virtually reek in the feature. There isn't a town or hamlet in America that does not possess some talented youngsters. It is a natural craving to give vent to expression whether it be literary, musical or otherwise. This fact has been capitalized by those exhibitors who have shown the Barry picture, and they have used home town talent to put over the prologue that is so esential to the attraction.

In conclusion Mr. Rapf said: "It is vital that the producers and exhibitor think about presentation. It is one of the biggest assets for the enterprising showman. It will beget publicity, and this coupled with a wholesome, entertaining and instructive photoplay will bring home the bacon for the exhibitor.

"The prologue should not be eliminated. I have studied theatre audiences for years, and I know that the public gets as much entertainment out of the prologue as it does out of a motion picture. Showmen should stick to the prologue idea, because it's a wonderful box-office magnet."

W. S. Nigh Gives His Version of Timely Picture

TAKE a steer and knock it on the head with an axe. Cut its throat simultaneously. And then skin the body while life still endures. That is a daily slaughter house routine, and a very repulsive spectacle. It is probably one of the few scenes overlooked to date for dramatic motion picture material, and I recommend it to those producers, exhibitors, directors and authors who love to revel in the sensational and sensuous, as evidenced in certain purposeless spectacle pictures heralded as masterpieces of the motion picture art."

Thus spoke William S. Nigh, the director of "Why Girls Leave Home," "School Days," and other well-known screen plays. It is Mr. Nigh's contention that the elevation of the motion picture to its highest estate cannot be attained by producing spectacular features without a big theme. And by theme Mr. Nigh means that a picture must contain an idea, a basic idea that is of universal appeal, at once wholesome, refreshing, entertaining and instructive.

"The influx of spectacular pictures whose meaning is devoid of sane reasoning," continued Mr. Nigh, "is a crushing indictment against authors, directors, producers and exhibitors who should know better. In art form a story must not only be true, it must seem true. It must let us see the processes going on within the characters at all times, so that we can understand and be convinced.

"This task is apparently too difficult and burdensome for some producers, authors and directors. Why? Because they have neither the skill nor the necessary knowledge of the human soul. The slaughter of a steer is repulsive, and it is surprising that those producers and directors who live in the realm of sensationalism and sensuousness have not grasped its thrilling and horrifying possibilities. For it should excel in harrowing effect such scenes as:

1—A sword entering a man's body, with a close-up of the flesh, and blood spurting.

2—Horses trampling women and children to death.

3—A senile old King dying of disease and frothing at the mouth because his mistress has another paramour.

4—Eight continuous reels of a male friend, hunnishly preying upon women, even to an imbecile one, and so forth.

"In place of all this rot and in my ignorance of what constitutes drama, I prefer to express myself in the picture of a boy saying good-bye to his dog."

"I'LL BUY UP EVERY SCHOOLHOUSE IN THE NATION"

Was what Wesley Barry, star of "School Days" promised to do when he became a millionaire. But then that's only a boy's dream and the hero of our story is a real boy you will love to meet

Big Houses Clamoring for Dates on Warners' "School Days" Film

The various exchanges releasing Gus Edwards' Harry Rapf production, "School Days," directed by William Nigh and State righted by Warner Brothers, are being flooded with requests for dates on this picture starring Wesley Barry. The Broadway premier will be given at the Strand Theatre, New York City, on Sunday, Jan. 29, with a special prologue. Managing Director Joe Plunkett of the Strand is planning an elaborate presentation of the production.

The engagement has been extensively exploited in New York with attractive black and white ads, and innumerable tieups with Broadway merchants. Huge, but attractive posters have been plastered in all parts of the city. On Friday, January 27, more than 1,500 school teachers and principals of New York and vicinity were the guests of Warner Brothers at a special showing at the Lexington Opera House. Indications early this week were that the picture will shatter all records at the Strand.

Livewire exhibitors throughout the country are seeking dates for the production. Sam Grand of the Federated Exchange of Boston has arranged for three days and date showings at the Modern, Beacon and Park theatres in that city early in February. Sidney Ascher, well known State righter and owner of Halsey theatre in Newark, N. J., is angling for "School Days" and is confident that he can keep it at his house for an indefinite run at a substantial profit.

Through the efforts of Eddie Bonns and Louis Marangella of the Warner publicity department a novelized version of "School Days," which was written by William Nigh and William De Leon, will be published in leading newspapers throughout the country. The first installment of this version will be published by The Newark Ledger.

Story of "School Days"

FRECKLED-FACED "SPECK" BROWN, a mischievous little orphan, loves his dog and fishing rod better than school. But his stern guardian, a deacon, threatens to give him a sound thrashing if he doesn't obey orders and attend to his studies. In the schoolroom, "Speck" cuts up all sorts of capers with the result that he is severely punished. It is during this moment that the teacher, a middle-aged woman, in an effort to prevent the deacon is reminded that she was hired purely to save her from the poorhouse and that if she cannot exact obedience from her children she will be fired.

Thus saved from further punishment, "Speck" wanders about the fields with his dog and best friend, Leff, an eccentric old inventor. He meets an old stranger and an acquaintance is immediately struck up. The two become good friends and in the course of one conversation "Speck" contends that he does not need an education to go through life. Developments disclose that this stranger is none other than "Speck's" uncle. His identity is disclosed to "Speck" who is sent to the city to pursue an educational career among society's youthful set. "Speck" reluctantly leaves his country friends, promising to send for them when he got "rich." With him to the city he takes Leff's invention. In the East and among the children of the "400," "Speck" is unpopular.

Meanwhile crooks meet the youngster and conspire to swindle him and his friend, Leff, by pretending to be interested in the latter's worthless invention. However, the plot is frustrated. Disgusted with his wealthy friends, "Speck" now longs for his friends back home and he returns via the freight route. He finds his lonely dog waiting for him and his little sweetheart praying for his return. He seeks his rich uncle and from him learns that he had been purposely sent to the city so that he might appreciate his plain and honest friends of his home as well as become convinced that education is a blessing to everyone and essential in the daily solution of problems of life.

"Advertise With Music"

"A copy of Gus Edwards' famous song, 'School Days,' is a twenty-four sheet in every home," said Eddie Bonns, director of advertising and publicity for Warner Brothers. "The possibilities of the Gus Edwards song in conjunction with the Wesley Barry picture became at once apparent, and incidentally it furnishes a novelty for the exhibitor.

"In other words the usual routine of exploiting a picture is given another angle. Music is one of the great constructive forces in America. Its appeal, no matter the form, is universal and in its universality the slogan, 'Advertise With Music,' becomes of vital importance in putting over the Warner Brothers' production, 'School Days.' Exhibitors can't go wrong when they advertise the Barry feature with music."

Warner Bros. Have Daring Animal Serial

Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, announces this week the release of his latest fifteen episode animal serial, "Shadows of the Jungle," co-starring Grace Darmond and Philo McCullogh, to the independent market. Overtures from some of the biggest distributing organizations and state-right buyers have already been made, but it is said that no definitive negotiations have been consummated.

The success that has attended former Warner serials, such as "The Lost City," and "Miracles of the Jungle," is declared to have furnished the incentive to produce "Shadows of the Jungle." According to Mr. Warner more than half the serial has been completed at the west coast studios by his brother Sam Warner, under whose direct supervision the serial is being made, and the first three episodes will be available for exhibition within the very near future.

For this latest Warner serial the entire menagerie of the Al G. Barnes circus, consisting of animals of every breed and description, is taking part under the supervision of world-renowned animal trainers. In addition to Miss Darmond and Mr. McCullough the cast includes Jack Richardson, Robert Agnew, Derelys Perdue, Mabel Stark, Captain J. R. Riccarde and hundreds of others. The story and continuity was written by Francis Guihan.

Warner Brothers Buy Chimpanzee

Jack and Sam Warner, at the West Coast studios of Warner Brothers, have purchased a chimpanzee to play in the new series of Monty Banks comedies now being produced under the supervision of Jack Warner. They have named the chimpanzee "Bozo." Monty Banks has completed his latest two-reeler, "Be Careful." Thelma Worth, a cousin and protégé of Betty Compson, is Monty's leading woman.

Showman's Exploitation Campaign That Will Go the Limit, For "School Days"

THE keen showman who has viewed "School Days" will know that he has an iron-clad guarantee that his patrons will be entertained. Here is one picture that the writer does not hesitate to say will break record after record. It is a showman's picture. It will make money for you if you only use ten lines in your newspapers because after once seen, it will set your city or town talking. But the showman who sits back and keeps the engagement of such a great production as "School Days" a secret never will get anywhere. "School Days" can break your box office record. The writer doesn't care what your figures are—this picture will turn the trick if you exploit it properly. And take it from such a keen showman as Joe Plunkett, managing director of the New York Strand Theatre, "School Days" presents the exhibitor with a hundred and one exploitation anglès.

To begin with, Mr. Exhibitor, remember that in "School Days" you have a picture that will fulfill every promise you make your patrons. Here is your chance to use those superlatives you have quietly laid away; here's a picture you can rave about. You can't say too much about it. That's how good it is. You've got melodrama, romance, adventure, pathos, humor, thrills, heart interest, and what not. Start talking about it to your friends the moment you book it. Run teasers in your newspapers, even if it is only an agate line. Keep the play dates before your audiences by flashing announcements of the engagement on the screen. Start meeting the owners of song shops. You'll need them. Call up the superintendent of your public schools and tell him that you've booked a picture that he and every school teacher should see. Tell him what it is. Tell him you've got a picture that is an education in itself.

At least a week before your opening make an appointment with your local school authorities. Arrange for a special showing of the picture at your theatre, inviting every school teacher in your town. Then after the showing announce to the teachers that you will give a ticket to the child who attains the best record that week in his or her class. Put this in writing and send the letter to the teacher. Let them understand beyond any doubt that "School Days" is a picture that no child should miss; solicit their co-operation in reaching the children by announcing the engagement at school.

You might also, through arrangement with the school authorities, arrange special performances for children. Also offer to admit free all red-headed and freckle-faced boys and girls. Get our your mailing list and get in touch with the grown-ups, tell them that it's Wesley Barry in "School Days" that is topping the bill. The children will have already heard the news from their teacher; daddy will hear about it and this letter will serve as a gentle reminder. Play the public, parochial and private schools to the limit. Get the kiddies into your house and you can't help but being forced to prolong the engagement of the picture.

But in attracting the children to your theatre remember that there are other ways. For instance, get in touch with the managing editor of your newspaper. Tell him that you want his newspaper to serve as host to the newsboys. You will give a special show in the morning and donate the theatre. Make this arrangement sufficiently in advance of your opening to assure you of good newspaper publicity. Keep feeding the paper with human interest stories about the story of "School Days," about Wesley Barry and Gus Edwards.

And that isn't all. "School Days" inspires a prologue in which your local juvenile talent can be used to advantage. Elsewhere in this section is the material for this "School Days" prologue; it is nothing more or less than a school act replete with human interest instead of the timeworn burlesque hoakum usually packed in such a skit. The dialogue is there. Your musical interruptions are cued. Staging of the production is inexpensive, for any furniture store in town will furnish you with the necessary "props," which include eight school desks and chairs and a teacher's table and a blackboard.

In properly exploiting this prologue you can also play with your newspaper. Under the auspices of the newspaper the most talented children of your town are selected. If you can not get the co-operation of your newspaper in putting this over, solicit the aid of the schools or your local academy of dramatic art. You might insert a reader in your advance advertisements issuing a call for local talent seeking a chance to prove its metal. In getting talent for the prologue don't overlook the "want ad" columns. They are read.

"Advertise With Music"

Another big asset in putting over "School Days" is to advertise the picture with music. In the words of Eddie Bonns, originator of the campaign, "advertise with music." Just as soon as you book the picture have your orchestra play Gus Edwards' "School Days," and keep hammering away at it. The publisher of the Edwards' successes, Joe Mittenthal, Inc., 1591 Broadway, New York City, will co-operate with you by arranging window tie-ups through their local agents and "boosters." Call on your 5 and 10 cent store managers at least two weeks before the opening and seek a window display.

The phonograph should play an important part in advertising the picture. Go to your local phonograph agent, explain that you have booked the picture, and get his co-operation to popularize the song. Sell him the idea of playing the "School Days" record, and if possible have the phonograph arranged so that the passersby will hear it. Supply him with cut-outs (for his window), on which he can advertise the song.

If it is possible use a sound amplifier, sometimes known as the Magna-Vox. This device is so arranged that by connecting horns by wire to the outside of your theatre, or along the main streets of your town and in the big department stores, the voice of a singer singing "School Days," or the music from a phonograph placed at some central point, can be heard distinctly and simultaneously by the people.

By consulting your electrician or phonograph agent you can learn the full details of the workings of this instrument. It may also be used during the showing of the picture. Properly installed, the orchestral music can be heard while the picture is being screened. The laughs of the audience will also register wherever you have horns connected.

Dancing academies, music teachers, restaurants and wherever music is played may be utilized to advertise the picture. An old fashioned "School Days" prize waltz contest will help, and it may be possible for you to conduct one on your stage after the show. If you try this stunt and offer a silver loving cup as a prize, you will also be able to get a window display from the jeweler who sells you the article.

Newspaper Contest

This contest idea used in conjunction with the 22x28 cartoon photograph of Wesley Barry, about to cut the string with a pair of scissors, will not only get your theatre considerable publicity, but it will also enrich the newspaper that runs it with considerable circulation.

The idea has been used successfully by the Brooklyn Eagle. Here is the wording of your contest, after making arrangements with your local paper to run the cartoon a few days or a week in advance of the showing:

Money prizes (sum to be decided by yourself) can be given to the successful contestants by the newspaper. It is not a difficult puzzle. The important thing is for the prospective contest to study the cartoon carefully. It is equally important that the rules and regulations be read carefully. The object of the puzzle is to obtain the longest possible list of names of the article, objects, things commencing with the letter "B" (for Barry), or any other letter you may choose, Mr. Exhibitor. For example, if the letter "B" is used, the following words can readily be gleaned from the cartoon—viz. Boy, Board, Bill, Barrel, Bull, Border, Box, etc.

Every word in the list must be a CONCRETE NOUN. It must be the same object, article or thing seen in the cartoon. Imagination does not enter into this contest. It is important that the contestant's list contain as few incorrect words as possible. Verbs, adjectives and abstract nouns combined with a few names of the objects or parts of objects which only the imagination enables the contestant to see, will deprive that contestant of a place among the winners.

School Advertising

You can interest the school teachers, and the local school board in "School Days," for the moral of the picture deals with the value of education. Arrange to give the school board and teachers a private showing, and secure their endorsement. You can also inaugurate both an essay and a drawing contest, restricting entries only to school children.

The essay contest can be based on "The Value of Education to School Children," or any other subject that the teachers sees fit to use, according to the respective grades they may be teaching. For the drawing contest, the drawing teacher should be furnished with a photograph of Wesley Barry, to be shown to the class, and all drawings should be done in free hand. To the boy or girl submitting the best likeness of Barry in the estimation of the drawing teacher, you should offer free tickets to the showing of "School Days." The winning drawings can be placed in the lobby of the theatre, and this will cause the youngsters to bring their friends and family to the theatre to see their drawing on exhibition and incidentally to see the picture.

To convince the school board and the teachers of the fact that "School Days" drives home the value of education, it is suggested that you use the book containing the reviews of the picture.

The four sets of slides on "School Days" are distinctly original, in that they are made from the newspaper comic strips, as shown on the bottom and other pages of the press sheet. There are two slides to each set. The originality of the slides can readily be appreciated when it is considered that seldom, if ever, has there been offered to exhibitors cartoon slides that helped to impress upon motion picture patrons the value of a picture.

Store Stunts

One of the best cut-outs that has been devised for a production measures exactly 13½x21 inches, and it is in five colors, lock easel on back, made of compo board that will not buckle. On the bottom is a space for placing either a strip or writing in chalk the name of the theatre.

Just about the center of the cut-out is a large blank space on which can be written with chalk the salient features that will make it possible for you to get one of the biggest commercial tie-ups that has ever been placed within your grasp. Every merchant can use the cut-out.

All stores handling stationery, school supplies, toy stores and similar merchandise can be linked up and the method of doing this is so obvious that it is not necessary to go into detail about this matter. Department stores, however, can work up an overall sale, and tie this up with a card reading:

x.....x
: "Strong Boys Need Strong Over- :
: alls. Wesley Barry in 'School :
: Days' Wears Never-Rip Overalls" :
x.....x

Automobile accessory stores and department stores can be tied up with the large oil painting (No. 12) of Wesley Barry in pajamas holding a candle in his hand. The auto shops can use a card reading: "It's Time to Re-Tire." The department stores can play up the fact that Wes' Barry uses their pajamas, etc.

A colored half-sheet, an actual reproduction of the six-sheet cartoon ad, can be used by every store in town. It can be pasted on windows, and it will attract the interest of people who will wonder what happens when Barry cuts the string. In this connection the merchant's wares will also be advertised, and right here you have your tie-up. Play this stunt up strong, and you will find that the merchant will be more than anxious to put this half-sheet in his window.

A novelty that will cause much word-of-mouth advertising for the picture, and incidentally tickle the palates of all those who will be privileged to receive one, is a high-grade candied lollypop. The pop, enclosed in a small bag containing the picture of Wesley Barry reproduced in two colors from the large cut on the front page of the press sheet, can be given at all children's matinees, and to every one who comes to see "School Days." The cost of the pop is very small.

Anyone who has studied the psychology of advertising will verify the fact that the most effective of all ads is something that moves or is alive. Following along those lines it is suggested that the manager secure a freckled face boy, red-headed, if possible, about 12 or 14 years of age. Provide him with a blackboard on an easel and secure a pantograph, a device used by artists to make exact reproductions and enlargements of anything they wish to copy. This is an inexpensive device that is made up of strips of wood, crossed, and with a pointer and crayon or pencil attached. They may be secured from any store selling artists' materials, and in fact a very cheap one is now on the market and is sold in toy stores under the trade name of "Draw-o-graph." With this device any child may copy exactly any drawing. Have the boy copy some of the cartoons shown in this campaign sheet and also write out various catchlines that you may wish to use. Of course, the pantograph is not absolutely essential, and if you can secure a boy who has a little drawing ability he could copy the cartoons free-hand, or even eliminate the cartoons and have the boy merely write various sales slogans.

House Employees

To carry out the general "School Days" atmosphere in your theatre it would be advisable to dress your ushers, if boys, a la Wesley Barry, in overalls and straw hats, or if girls in pinafores and sun bonnets. Even girls could wear the boys' attire, if deemed advisable, but of course this is optional with each locality.

Camouflage your box office as a little red school house and attach a large bell to the roof. This can be worked with a string inside by the cashier and can be arranged so as to be worked with the foot. Dress the cashier as a very prim school teacher with spectacles for the occasion.

To give "local color" to the occasion, it would be a very good idea to have photos of all local schools placed in the lobby and compare the modern institutions with the little old country school house of our grandfathers, such as shown in the pictures.

Lobby and Paper

The producers of "School Days" have exercised great care to follow out the spirit of the story and title in all the accessories put out. The slate is the "leif motif" or foundation to work on and this should be carried out in all special lobby cards, etc., that may be made up in order to link up directly with the posters, photos, cuts, etc.

A most complete line of lobby accessories, including lobby photos, in 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28 sizes, are available, as also are twelve different oil paintings in sizes of 30x40 and 40x60, which are illustrated in another section of the campaign sheet.

Special hanging cards (reproductions of slate) in colors should be suspended from every available spot in the lobby and on the marquee.

The lithographs on "School Days" have been made especially for their adaptability for cut-out and other purposes and a glance at the two three-sheets will tell any wise showman that they were "made to order." A novel idea which will attract much attention is to cut out the three-sheet showing a back view of Wesley Barry, mount this on compo or beaver board, and attach a suitable stand to hold the figure upright. Then proceed to dress this cut-out in practical clothes as suggested by the poster. A pair of overalls, a shirt, a pair of suspenders and an old straw hat will create a life-like figure that will attract the attention of all passersby.

The one-sheet showing Wesley Barry looking through a broken slate may also be constructed into a very effective lay-out as follows: Cut out the head of Barry from the poster, then mount the poster on fine muslin. Stretch this in a shadow box frame about 6 inches deep. Paste the picture of Barry cut from the poster on back of the frame just behind the blank space left in the mounted poster. At the bottom of the shadow box or in some suitable place, wire an electric light to a "flasher" socket, which may be obtained from any electrical supply store for less than a dollar. Connect this up and the effect is that of a broken slate with an intermitten light flashing behind it and showing Wesley Barry looking through the aperture.

A simple and effective stunt that can be inexpensively arranged is to install (for want of a better term), we will call a "Laughmeter." This consists of a large dial and a movable hand or pointer. The dial is scaled off or calibrated to register "snickers," "giggles," "chuckles," "smiles," "laughs" and "roars." The reading matter on the dial states that this machine is connected to the interior of the theatre and registers the impressions of the audince inside watching "School Days." An indicator can be attached to one side showing the results of past performances. This, of course, is made up by the manager. The pointer on the dial is arranged so as to be worked from the back by some employee and moves forward at certain intervals.

(The interior of a schoolroom, including a platform with teacher's desk at c. Blackboard on platform back of teacher's chair with texts and maps on wall. Window at r. and l. of platform. Eight desks arranged so that the faces of children can be seen by audience. Arrange desks in two rows, four at l. and four at r. of stage. Orchestra softly playing Gus Edwards' "School Days" as cue for rise of curtain. Stage dark with window shades down. Curtain rises slowly. Orchestra continues playing" School Days," while shouts of children playing outside are heard. TEACHER enters. Walks to l. window. Raises window shade. Sun spot with rays slightly lighting stage. TEACHER gazes into school yard, takes off hat and coat and rests then on desk.)

TEACHER: Play on my little children. Play on my little dears. You may never play again. Little do you realize the cares and worries of this world, so play on while you are yet boys and girls. (Straightening up and walking to r. window, raises shade. Flood stage lights. Takes off coat. Scream from off stage.) By God, what's happened? (Rushes to r. window.) Stop that. (Pounds on window and then runs to door) and exits. (Shouting ceases.)

TEACHER: (Off stage.) Stop, this nonsense! You come with me, Alice. (Enter with Alice, poorly dressed with tattered and torn dress and sweater) Now you take your seat and behave like any lady would.

TEACHER: The next time you do that I shall report you to the principal. (Walks to desk and from drawer takes bell. Goes to door and rings bell. Orchestra loudly plays chorus of "School Days." Children enter in following order and take seats, boys at r. and girls at l.: WALTER, OSCAR, MAC, SYLVIA, ROSE and BECKY. With seating of Becky orchestra stops playing.)

TEACHER: I warn you children that a repetition of such a fight as you enacted in the yard this morning will incur severe punishment for those responsible. Remember that. I shall never warn you again. (TEACHER sits at desk.) Now we'll lose no time with your lessons. (Detects absence of JAKE in first seat at r.) Where is Jacob O'Shaunnessy?

CHILDREN: (Unison.) How should we know? (Teacher pounds on desk with ruler.)

TEACHER: (Wielding ruler threateningly) There has been altogether too much absence and here's another warning: I shall keep all absentees after school two hours. Remember that.

JAKE: (Outside.) Vot, I should stay avay from school? Not for all the smoked salmon in The Bronx. (Name of local Jewish colony can be substituted for "The Bronx.")

TEACHER: (Gazing out of window at l.) There he is now.

JAKE: (Outside, peeps into school room from window at r.)

WALTER: Oh, there he is, teacher. (Pointing to window at r. JAKE pulls head away and rushes to door. TEACHER sees him.)

TEACHER: (Angrily.) You take your seat, Master O'Shaunnessy. (JAKE takes seat.) Now, Master O'Shaunnessy will you kindly give your excuse for being tardy.

JAKE: (Rising lazily.) Vell, teacher, it vos lik dees: Abe Levinsky had a date vid a doctor and hees mother said he voudn't go unless I vent.

TEACHER: Is that why you were late?

JAKE: Yes.

TEACHER: I'll see you after school.

JAKE: You're too late teacher, I've got a date already vid Becky after school. (CHILDREN laugh aloud. TEACHER steps down from platform.)

TEACHER: Any more of this nonsense and I'll send you home.

MAC: Don't let me stop you.

TEACHER: That's enough. Now children we will open school with a lesson in grammar. Jake, will you use the word "grammar" in a sentence?

JAKE: (Scratching head; puzzled.) Grammar? Oh, yes, I have it. My fader told my mother to buy some fish, but she forgot, so my gram' ma bought it.

TEACHER: (Angrily.) Sit down. You're impossible, hopeless. Master Higgins, will you kindly announce to the class the title of Miss Bianco's song. (MAC rises, walks to c. stage.)

MAC: Miss Bianco will now sing, "I Didn't Like Her Apartment So I Knocked Her Flat." (Takes seat.)

(ROSE BIANCO musical interruption.)

TEACHER: Oscar, who is, in your opinion, the world's greatest man?

OSCAR: (Standing sissified.) Oh, teacher, Woodrow Wilson is the greatest man in the world. (WALTER jumping up and raising hand.)

TEACHER: What is it, Walter?

WALTER: Why my father is the greatest man in the world.

TEACHER: Is that so? Why is your father the greatest man, Walter?

WALTER: Because he told ma it takes a great man to get booze, and he has a cellar full. (CHILDREN snicker. TEACHER calls for order.)

TEACHER: (Disgustedly) Sit down Walter.

(SYLVIA raises hand.)

TEACHER: What is it, Sylvia?

SYLVIA: I have a poem I want to recite.

TEACHER: Proceed, Sylvia.

SYLVIA: (Recites)

Love is like a punctured tire,
I'm very sure of that,
For after one big blowout.
He went and left me flat.

TEACHER: (Disgustedly) Absurd! Sylvia, you stay after school for that. How dare you speak of love in my schoolroom. Why you don't even know what love means.

SYLVIA: Yes, I do.

TEACHER: What is love, then, Sylvia?

SYLVIA: Well, ma said that love comes to a girl after she's lost her job, has no money and needs someone to pay her bills.

ROSE: (Rushing forward with hand raised.) Dat's a-wrong. Love, teach' is a tickling sensation of the heart that makes what you teach us about arithmetic looka wrong.

TEACHER: Why so, Rose?

ROSE: Well, teach', you say one and one is two.

TEACHER: And so it is.

ROSE: Not in love. In love one and one makes one, for doesn't the Good Book say "and they were wedded and made one."

TEACHER: That's enough of that, Rose; sit down. (ROSE sits down.) Now Becky will you oblige the children with a song?

BECKY: Vot shall I sing?

TEACHER: Sing something sweet.

BECKY: Alright. I'll sing, "And She Lays In Our Alley."

(BECKY sings her number.)

TEACHER: Now, Jake, spell Monotony.

JAKE: (Rising.) M-O mo, N-O no T-O toe, N-Y, ny, mo-no-toe-ny.

TEACHER: What does monotony mean, Jake?

JAKE: When a man has only one wife.

TEACHER: (To Becky.) What is independence?

BECKY: (Rising.) Eating onions and not caring who knows it.

(OSCAR raises hand with one finger extended. Restlessly moves about to attract attention of Teacher, who finally notices him.)

TEACHER: What is it?

OSCAR: May I be excused? (Moving restlessly.)

TEACHER: Yes. (Exit OSCAR.) Now my children, who discovered America.

ROSE: (Jumping out of seat, enthusiastically raising hand.) I know!

TEACHER: Well, who did discover America?

ROSE: Christopher Colombo.

JAKE: (Jumping up suddenly.) No, he didn't.

ROSE: Yes, he did; Colombo, an Italian, discovered America.

JAKE: (Stamping his feet.) No he didn't. (ROSE and JAKE start arguing, using emphatic "Yes, he did" and "No, he didn't," and making faces at each other.)

TEACHER: (Interrupting and hitting desk with ruler.) Stop this nonsense immediately. Rose, you sit down. (ROSE obeys order.) Now, Jacob, you are so insistent that Christopher Columbus didn't discover America, perhaps, you can tell us who really did.

JAKE: (Proudly.) Sure. Why my people discovered this country.

TEACHER: No, no, Jacob, Columbus discovered America.

JAKE: (Imitating.) No, no. Yes, yes, we did? How did Columbus come to America?

TEACHER: Why—why in a schooner.

JAKE: And where did he get the schooner?

TEACHER: Why, he purchased it with money.

JAKE: Dat's right, but where did he get the money?

TEACHER: Why he pawned Queen Isabelle's jewelry.

JAKE: (Satisfied.) Didn't I tell you my people helped discover this country. (OSCAR returns to seat.)

TEACHER: (Smiling.) Jacob, you're absurd.

OSCAR: (Rising.) Teacher, my sister Mildred found a pearl in an oyster this morning.

MAC: (Jumping out of seat.) Dat's nothin', my sister got a diamond from a lobster last night.

TEACHER: That'll do. Sylvia, what is meant by Scotch mist?

SYLVIA: (Timidily and stammering.) I-I-I-I d-d-don't k-k-know. But dad says that it's when a man asks you to drink and you don't hear him.

(BUS. WALTER crosses to ROSE and hurriedly hands her note...TEACHER detects him as he is returning to seat.)

TEACHER: Walter, you come here. What were you doing there? (Shakes him.)

WALTER: (Timidily.) I was inviting Rose to a jazz dance.

TEACHER: (Letting go of WALTER.) Why, do you dance? (WALTER nods affirmatively.) Well, then show the class just what you can do.

(WALTER does song and dance specialty.)

TEACHER: Now, Oscar, will you recite for us.

OSCAR: (Reciting)

Twinkle, twinkle little star
How I wonder where you are,

MAC: (Interrupting.) Aw, teacher, that's bum. Let him recite something good.

TEACHER: Master Mackenzie, don't you dare interrupt a speaker again. Oscar was doing splendidly, but since you are so anxious, perhaps you will recite a piece

MAC: (Reciting)

If she didn't have her hair bobbed,
If she didn't daub with paint;
If her dresses were to reach to where they ain't,
And she spoke just as she should:
Do you think she'd be as popular?
I hardly think she would.

TEACHER: Master Mackenzie, that's terrible. Why, where did you learn such a ridiculous verse? Do you know that it has taken master poets like Longfellow an entire week to finish a single sentence?

(JAKE laughs.)

TEACHER: (Detecting him.) Why, Jacob, what is there in that statement that seems to be so funny to you?

JAKE: (Rising.) Why, teacher, did you say it took Longfellow a week to finish a sentence?

TEACHER: Yes, you understood me correctly. And pray, what is it that is amusing you?

JAKE: Oh, noddings teacher, only my brother, Abe, has been in jail seven years and he hasn't finished his sentence yet.

(CHILDREN all laugh.)

TEACHER: Now, children, we will take up the subject of geography. Becky, from what country do we get grease?

BECKY: (Quickly.) Greece.

TEACHER: (To Sylvia.) Sylvia where were you born?

SYLVIA: (Standing.) New York.

TEACHER: What part?

SYLVIA: All of me.

TEACHER: (Disgusted.) Now, pupils, you will have to give me a little attention. (JAKE detected about to whisper to WALTER.) Jacob, I said I wanted a little attention.

JAKE: Dot's alright, teacher, I'm giving you as little as possible.

TEACHER: Jacob, you come here. (JAKE goes to front.) Do you realize that you are a very naughty boy. You must change your ways at once. Yon don't want to grow up to be a criminal, do you? (JAKE nods negatively.) Well, Jacob, perhaps you would like to tell your friends what you do want to be when you grow up to be a man?

JAKE: (Bashfully.) Oh, yes, teacher. I vant to be a baker.

TEACHER: And why a baker, Jacob?

JAKE: Pecause den I vill alvays hendle dough.

TEACHER: You sit down, Jacob. (JAKE sits down.) Now perhaps, Oscar, will sing us a ballad? Step forward, Oscar.

(OSCAR steps forward and sings a ballad.)

TEACHER: Now, children, you'll kindly answer my questions on subjects I will mention. Becky, what is a Bolshevik?

BECKY: A nut who's too lazy to work himself, but not too lazy to knock the country that's given him a home after his fatherland handed him walking papers.

TEACHER: Jake, what is a bath?

JAKE: (Pointing to Mac) Someting he never took.

TEACHER: What is Prohibition, Walter?

WALTER: A word found in the dictionary.

TEACHER: Oscar, use the world "poison" in a sentence?

OSCAR: If poison would kill my father, wood alcohol?

TEACHER: (Impatiently.) Come—come, children, refresh your memory. I must have correct answers to my questions. Now, Sylvia, name me an animal that can go seven days without water?

SYLVIA: My father.

TEACHER: Absurd. Your father is a human being?

SYLVIA: Oh, no, teacher, my mother called him an overgrown monkey this morning.

TEACHER: Nonsense. Besides your father must have water.

SYLVIA: Not while his bootlegger is alive.

TEACHER: (Disgusted.) Sit down Sylvia! (JAKE jumps out of his seat and raises hand to attract TEACHER'S attention.) Well, what is it?

JAKE: Vot's the name uv that animal you said came from the North Pole?

TEACHER: Why, polar bear, Jake? What made you ask that question?

JAKE: My father is going to be vun.

TEACHER: That's impossible. Your father can't be a polar bear.

JAKE: Oh, yes, teacher, he's going to be a polar bear at Mr. Becwitz's funeral.

TEACHER: Stop that, Jake. Perhaps you can serve your friends to better advantage if you will sing for us.

JAKE: Alright, I'll render a little ditty entitled "Bootleggers' Funeral Hymn" by Wood Alcohol.

(JAKE sings comic number.)

TEACHER: And now children we will join in singing a song we all know.

(TEACHER leads number. Suggestions-medley of Gus. Edwards' choruses from his more popular songs could be used in closing this number. After number teacher and children take their seats. JAKE ties string to inkwell and connects it with ROSE'S hair. JAKE quickly and unobserved takes seat.)

TEACHER: Now, Rose, will you———

(ROSE stands and in so doing inkwell drops.)

TEACHER: (Indignantly.) Who did that? (ROSE points to MAC.) Did you do that Master Mackenzie? (Jumps to her feet with ruler in hand.)

MAC: (Rising.) Naw!

TEACHER: Don't you lie to me. And just for that you will remain after school and be punished.

MAC: (Angrily.) You ain't my mother and you won't punish me.

TEACHER: If I were your mother I would make it a practice to teach you better manners.

MAC: (Boastingly.) Aw, you can't be anybody's mamma. Why, my father and mother said the only reason they gave you this job was because they wanted to keep you from going to the poorhouse. And—and—(TEACHER slowly drops ruler to floor, walks slowly to her desk and buries her head in her arms. Sobs-orchestra starts playing softly "Love's Old Sweet Song" and continues through to cue to stop.)

TEACHER: (Interrupting MAC.) You're right, Mac, I am not fit to be anybody's mother. (MAC takes seat.)

JAKE: (Walking to teacher with ROSE.) No, teacher, Mac was all wrong. You're a good teacher. (Both JAKE and ROSE pat TEACHER. She raises her head slightly, motioning them to return to their seats. They do so. Teacher slowly straightening up, leaves her seat and faces children.)

TEACHER: Master Mackenzie's parents probably are right. But I won't go to the poorhouse. I'll keep right on teaching—teaching the sons and daughters of babbling women. (Sobbing.) I-I-I'm sorry, my litle ones, and———

OSCAR: (Interrupting.) Mac didn't mean anything by what he said, teacher.

TEACHER: I know he didn't. You may all go home, children. School is dismissed. (Stop, "Love's Old Sweet Song") and Master Mackenzie, you will please tell your mother that a teacher, too, has a heart. (MAC starts toward exit. Turns.) That'll all. She'll understand. Wait! I don't want any of my scholars leaving school in sorrow. (Standing in doorway.) See I'm happy—I-I-I'm smiling. (Forces smile.) Now let us all sing that wonderful song—it means so much to your teacher.

(Ensemble chorus of Gus Edwards' "School Days." At close of chorus, orchestra continues playing softly, repeating, until final fall of curtain.)

TEACHER: And now children, you may all return home—to your mothers. (EXIT children singing "School Days." Singing continues softly offstage. Then humming, gradually drowning in distant.)

(TEACHER sobs as last pupil exits. Hesitates and rests against wall for a second, then walks to desk and dons hat and coat. Backstage humming of "School Days" continues as she walks to window, at r. gazes out for a few seconds, and pulls down shade. Break flood lights, darkening stage, but retaining spot working window at l, until TEACHER walks there and pulls shade.)

EXHIBITORS' NOTICE!

The MOVING PICTURE WORLD in its customary endeavor to give its exhibitor readers maximum service has compiled a prologue consistent with an artistic presentation of Harry Rapf's Gus Edwards production of "School Days." Exhibitors are welcomed to use of the prologue in its entirety or in part. It is suggested that throughout the prologue the theme be based on Gus Edwards' melodies. The specialties, however, should be confined to timely popular songs. While prologue was written around eight students, the dialogue can also be used in a six-student sketch.

School Days Is Refreshing

INTO a market crying aloud for wholesome pictures that are really interesting comes School Days, a production which William Nigh both wrote and directed for Harry Rapf and which Warner Brothers are releasing. Aside from its almost limitless exploitation possibilities School Days is a refreshing and satisfying entertainment in which every grown man and grown woman can find an echo of his own school experiences or of the experience he would have had if his youth had been spent in the surroundings provided for Wesley Barry. It is broad and plain in its humor, rich in its pathos and heart appeal and on safe ground in its encouragement to education.

One of its blessings is its strict avoidance of an elaborate plot. It requires no diagram to follow the simple forward movement in the unravelling of its narrative. It has, moreover, the best collection of interesting and picturesque youngsters ever brought together for the screen and they are all natural types, genuine and without that self consciousness that makes child prodigies so pathetic.

William Nigh has not made so absorbing and so human a picture since his "Yellow Streak," the play that really started Lionel Barrymore on his career as a screen star.

School Days is the sort of a picture which present conditions most require. It is a novelty and is as clean and sweet as a summer breeze blowing over the meadows.

We are moved to congratulate that enterprising firm of real showmen, the Warner Brothers, on this their newest venture. They will do more than make a great deal of money for themselves and the exhibitors, they will earn praise for presenting wholesome entertainment in an era when wholesome entertainment is the very best business for all in the industry.

One Of The Best Pictures Seen In Months

Wesley Barry in

"SCHOOL DAYS"

Harry Rapf—Warner Bros.

DIRECTOR ..... William Nigh
AUTHOR ..... Gus Edwards
SCENARIO BY..... ..William Nigh and Walter DeLeon
CAMERAMEN.....Jack Brown and Sydney Hicox
ART TITLES .....Hoey Lawlor
AS A WHOLE.....One of the most charming, most delightful photoplays screened in months. Sure-fire audience appeal
STORY.....None to talk about, but it isn't needed
DIRECTION.....Excellent. They'll talk about Nigh a lot after this PHOTOGRAPHY.....Splendid, especially outdoor stuff
LIGHTINGS.....Interior shooting could have been a lot better at times
STAR.....What a trouper Wes is? He's a delight to the eye in this SUPPORT.....Little for anyone to do except star
EXTERIORS.....Some beautiful locations magnificently shot
INTERIORS.....Tilford sets; suffered either from lighting or painting; very dark at times
DETAIL.....Splendid, including Prizma titles and "Hippy," a great dog
LENGTH OF PRODUCTION.....About 8,000 feet

Oh, boy, what a picture! What this one is going to do will be recorded in large fat figures. Because it's what your crowd has been waiting for for months. There's just this to be said. If you let the other fellow get it you're to blame. Because it's there with an audience appeal that is full of laughs and tears.

Wesley Barry carries off all the honors except those that belong to Director William Nigh. There is a long cast, but you can forget them. There isn't any story—and they need none. They just plant Wesley in a series of incidents and let it go at that, and they were smart. In this the general idea of Charles Ray's "Old Swimmin' Hole" was carried out.

They start out showing you Wesley influenced by a country ne'er-do-well inventor, who urges him not to worry about getting an education. Wesley loves to fish and play with his dog, and plays hooky and otherwise upsets the schoolroom so that he is finally sent home. The Deacon who adopted him tries to use harsh measures and then Wesley meets an old man (really his uncle) who arranges for Wesley to be sent to New York to school. His experiences in New York end with meeting a gang of schemers and they fleece friends of his patron by selling stock in the patent clothes pin, later stealing the money secured from the sale of stock. Wesley runs away and goes back home, convinced that an education is necessary to life and that money isn't everything.

The melodrama incidents are out of touch with the tone otherwise presented and can be readily cut. But other than this the production is close to being perfect. There is so much in it that your crowd won't mind the melodrama, although it slows the picture, which is complete without it.

There are so many incidents to arouse laughs and tears that lack of space prevents enumerating them. But as samples, there is the schoolroom scene with the stunts a mischievous boy pulls; the departure for New York with Wes saying good-bye to his dog and the latter chasing the train (sure-fire for tears), and many, many more, finishing with Wes wading out into the pond to meet his dog when he returns home. This is a wallop for fair.

Wesley does the best work of his career—even better than in "Dinty." No one else has enough to do to worry about them. The locations used for the outdoor stuff are scenic masterpieces. What appears to be poor lighting doesn't help the interiors, which are at times dark. Several of the earlier Prizma titles are too light to be effective.

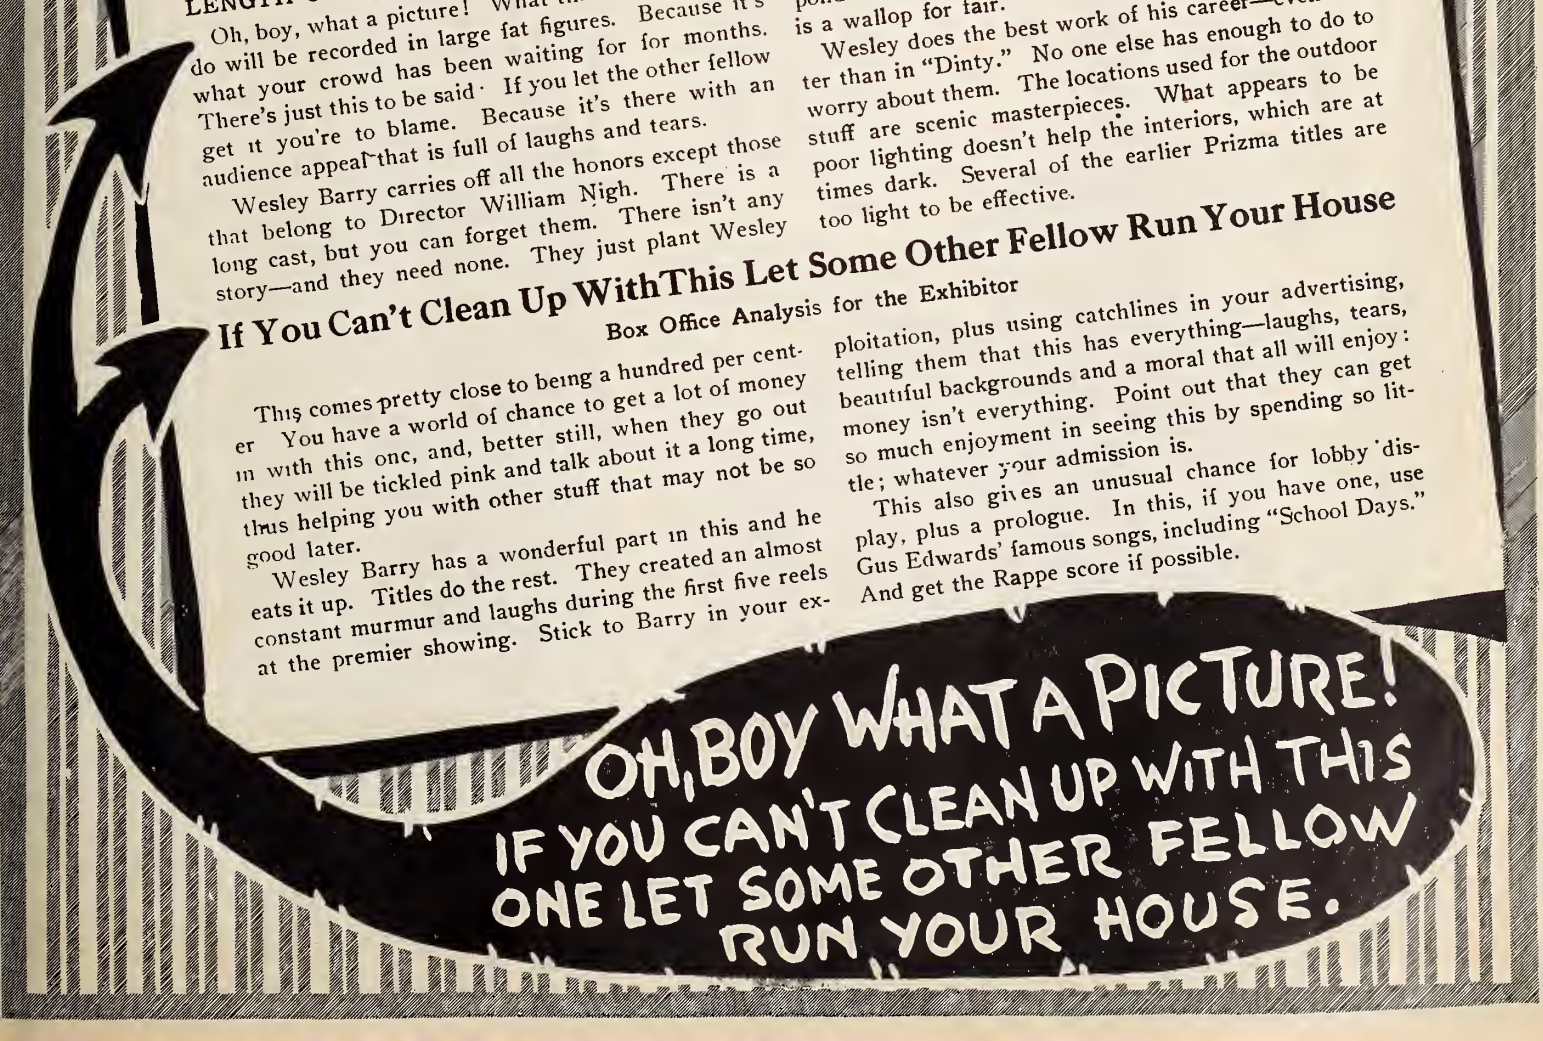
If You Can't Clean Up With This Let Some Other Fellow Run Your House

Box Office Analysis for the Exhibitor

This comes pretty close to being a hundred per center. You have a world of chance to get a lot of money in with this one, and, better still, when they go out they will be tickled pink and talk about it a long time, thus helping you with other stuff that may not be so good later.

Wesley Barry has a wonderful part in this and he eats it up. Titles do the rest. They created an almost constant murmur and laughs during the first five reels at the premier showing. Stick to Barry in your exploitation, plus using catchlines in your advertising, telling them that this has everything—laughs, tears, beautiful backgrounds and a moral that all will enjoy: money isn't everything. Point out that they can get so much enjoyment in seeing this by spending so little; whatever your admission is.

This also gives an unusual chance for lobby display, plus a prologue. In this, if you have one, use Gus Edwards' famous songs, including "School Days." And get the Rappe score if possible.



"SCHOOL DAYS"

(Harry Rapf-Warner Bros.)

Gem of a Picture; Sure-fire Box-Office Bet

LIKE the men who made a pathway to the door of the inventor of the mouse trap, exhibitors are certain to make a stampede in booking this gem of a picture. Once they show its audiences are certain to declare it one of the most appealing films ever made. It carries every quality for success. Juvenile interest is its predominant virtue, and the fact that Wesley Barry is the youthful guide who invites spectators on a sentimental journey to the days when "readin' and writin' and 'rithmetic were taught to the rule of the hickory stick," and so overwhelming is the appeal that one is sure to be transported.

Really "School Days" belongs to the class of better pictures. It not only tells its human little story, but there is much of spiritual uplift in its message for the young of the land. The tugs at the heart are finely balanced with the twinkles for the eye. Certainly the director, William Nigh, must feel highly elated over the achievement. He has saturated his story with intimate detail, every touch ringing true—every detail sparkling with humor and pathos that form a part of everyday life. There is not so much plot to the story. Rather does it score for its intimate slice of youth—revealed through charming and highly interesting episodes. Wesley Barry has already made a name for himself. But here he is going to impress many audiences with the fact that he is the most precocious youngster on the screen To watch him cutting up pranks in the little school house—to watch him fishing or taking the advice of some Simple Simon not to collect an education—to watch him attempting to outwit his guaradian—to follow him leaving for the city, the plan of his uncle being to mould character and teach him to appreciate the simple things of life—to follow him bidding goodby to his faithful dog, and watch the lovable pet running after the train—these are quaint little snatches which are going to sink deep into the heart. All of these slices of life are richly appealing. There is much similarity between this picture and Ray's study of boyhood —"The Old Swimmin' Hole." The freckled-faced Wesley in his quaint clothes, wearing a million-dollar smile—his appearance alone will kindle the admiration of audiences everywhere. It is understood that the picture is being trimmed of some superfluous detail. It could easily spare some of its melodramatic moments which composed the final scenes. This will give it coherence and compactness. The city sequences are rich when the contrasts are pointed between the forlorn youngster who dresses like a Broadway "bookie" and the little children of the rich. The rustic scenes are gems of photography—the subtitles, human and expressive. And what exploitation possibilities it possesses! Get this one quick. It means dollars for you and rich entertainment for your patrons. — Length, 7 reels. — Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"School Days, Dear Old Golden Rule Days." That was a song—a very popular one which swept the country a few years ago. The title has suggested a picture which carries a tremendous appeal—an appeal to the heart and the soul. Written by William Nigh and Walter De Leon and directed by the former, the picture takes one on a journey to the years of yesterday. Who is the guide? Wesley Barry, the precocious youngster whose adaptability for the part almost makes one believe that he might have been the inspiration for the song.

It is a picture charged with humanity—one filled with homespun touches. It shows the making of a youth—a boy inclined to delicious mischief, but who develops character by being brought up sharp with realities. He goes to the city and becomes disillusioned with its artificial exteriors. And he returns to the country —the wholesome boy again. A splendid picture with a splendid cast. "School Days" will be at the _____ next _____

PROGRAM READER

Do you remember that lovable song of a few years ago entitled "School Days?" Of course you do. How could you forget it? Well, it comes to the _____ theatre next _____ as a motion picture. This splendid offering is going to take you on a sentimental journey—back to the old district school, back to the old farm—back to the hey-day of your youth. It is a picture filled with the joy of youth, the delight of mischievous pranks and is rich in humor and sentiment. Wesley Barry is the star. Can you possibly think of any player more adaptable for the role of the little hero? Come and be royally entertained. Come and forget the worries of the day and be a youth again.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture suggests all kinds of exploitation. First you have the original song which can be put over with your music dealer. You can arrange for a prologue suggestive of a school-room—the set taking the entire stage. There can be rows of desks with a teacher presiding at the desk back-stage. Each pupil can recite something or sing a song, and there are plenty of juvenile songs on the market to exploit. This idea is practical and entirely appropriate. Bill it as a rich, humorous and appealing story of youth—youth growing up back on the farm, youth going to the district school. Feature Wesley Barry. Use circus exploitation if you think the picture demands it. Any freckle-faced boy can be used for a number of novel stunts.

WESLEY BARRY IN

(WARNER BROS.)

Seven reels of good clean comedy of a type that cannot fail to strike a responsive chord in the hearts of most picture-goers. "Wes" Barry at his best in a role well suited to his talents. A Harry Rapf production directed by William Nigh, who collaborated with Walter DeLeon in writing the story.

If properly exploited, "School Days" should prove a money-maker for every exhibitor who books it. It has that boyish touch that lingers with everyone whose early days were spent in a country school. It is full of genuine humor, little touches of pathos and will appeal to any audience with a sense of humor and any who admire clever acting and clever production.

Wesley Barry's "Speck" Brown is typical of almost any neighborhood and the incidents that are told in the film's unreeling are for the most part in the run of everyday life. The story is not so wonderfully clever, but the situations are, and the manner in which each incident is worked out holds the interest to the end. The subtitling is exceptionally well handled and has been kept to the minimum. Many of these are in Prizma colors.

A musical score has been prepared especially for the picture and includes many of the well-known Gus Edwards melodies, which will aid materially in putting the picture over.

Supporting the freckle-face star are George Lessey, as Deacon Jones; Francis Conlon, as Leff; Nellie Spaulding, as Leff's wife; Margaret Seddon, as the teacher; Arline Blackburn, as his sweetheart; Hippy, a clever dog; J. H. Gilmore, as "Speck's" uncle; John Galsworthy, as Hadley; Jerome Patrick, as Wallace, a lawyer; Eveline Sherman, as Miss Wallace, and Arnold Lucy as the valet.

"Wes" plays the principal role, that of "Speck" Brown, a country boy who has been raised by hard-hearted Deacon Jones. The deacon insists that "Speck" attend school, but when the teacher defends the boy against his vicious guardian, Jones turns against her. "Speck" becomes acquainted with a stranger who comes to town and finally he realizes his ambition, through the stranger, to go to New York City and have plenty of money. At a private school he continues his boyish pranks and is snubbed at a party he gives to his wealthy neighbors. A couple of crooks plan to make him the "goat" in a scheme in which his friend Leff, an inventor of a patent clothes pin, is involved. Disgusted with society and realizing that money cannot buy him happiness and friends, he returns to his boyhood town and finds happiness there.

Wesley Barry gives a good account of himself in the role of the poor country boy suddenly transplanted to the city, and it is as fine a piece of acting as the screen has seen in some time. Under William Nigh's direction the little touches of humor are nicely brought out and the picture at a private showing in Chicago, Nov. 27, met with hearty approval.

GLANCING through the list of productions being released through State rights exchanges, one can not help but enthuse over their quality. Another interesting fact is that producers and distributors are co-operating more than ever before and because this is so the market is getting better productions.

There is still another interesting observation that prompted us to give thought to what is transpiring in this field. We refer to the care taken in the selection of box office titles for productions. The day of sensationalism in titles, sensationalized because some one entertained the opinion that they drew them to the box office, also is gone.

A title with a genuine punch, that tells something and gets people a-thinking the first time they see it constitutes a box office asset. Warner Brothers take particular pride in referring to the titles of their pictures. And we don't blame them. They've selected money titles—something on which the exhibitor can depend from the outset. They tell something. They attract the attention of the spectator and then hold it.

Warner Brothers introduced Why Girls Leave Home. Some looked at the title, read it and then smiled—they smiled because of the memories that it refreshed. But they didn't forget and the title attracted them to that little jingling booth that means so much to this industry. Then came Ashamed of Parents, another capital title that means something and inspires exploitation that suggests many money-making stunts. Now along comes School Days—Gus Edwards made that title famous on the vaudeville stage and later he incorporated it into a wonderfully successful popular song.

SCHOOL DAYS is a simple yet, in our opinion, one of the best titles ever used for a motion picture. It means something to everyone. It recalls happier days. It means something to the little boy and girl as well as to the elders. Here is a title that is fascinating and will win the co-operation of local business men. Why? Because it is a money title. No enterprising business man will or can afford to pass up the chance of tieing up with a picture with such a magnetic title. It inspires co-operation from sources never before opened to motion picture enterprises. And what is more it is the old box office that will benefit.

We saw School Days and we're happier because we did. It is everything that the title suggests: clean, wholesome, refreshing, human, entertaining, humorous at one time and pathetic at another time—but it's a wonderful picture. Its appeal is to everybody, regardless of age, creed or color. If we had our way about it we would invite every school child in America to see this picture. And we would expect the grownups to come, for it makes them years younger.

A picture like School Days is a gift in such depressive times as these. It tends to relieve the burdens and worries of unfortunate and unhappy folks and brings them back to other days—carefree, happy days of yesteryear. There is Wesley Barry, just an American boy. You actually feel as though you've known the character he portrays for years, so real is it. There is that "kid" romance of other days that makes one feel happy to be among the living. Here is one of the things that truly make life worth living

School Days will do this industry a world of good. It will counteract against the attacks of censorship advocates and make "Blue Sunday" reformers blush with shame. Here's a picture you can show your public seven days in the week—Sunday included—and dare your local reformers to step in and prevent you from bringing sunshine to hard working people on their one day off by bringing back memories that are ever fond.

Gus Edwards has brought sunshine into the hearts of millions through his vaudeville version of School Days. But the screen has immortalized it.

WHILE School Days has a box office star and a good story, it is the title that will attract fans to the theatre. And that means dollars.

Titles are not to be considered trivial. They have their value. And like everything else of value they merit the

SYNOPSIS

School Days was inspired by the title made famous by Gus Edwards and his vaudeville sketches, but the title only was borrowed, for the story is original, concerning "Speck" Brown, a happy-go-lucky "regular" boy, brought up in the country. Wealth soon smiles on him and the deacon sends him to school in the city. And about the lad is built an interesting story of romance and youthful adventure that is magnetically human. It is a "kid" romance that must be seen to be fully appreciated.

REVIEW

Warner Brothers gave the trade Why Girls Leave Home. Now they bring School Days. If it were for the title alone the alert showman would lose no time in grabbing it because of the many exploitation possibilities it offers. A splendid title that a hustler should make pack his house. But while the title means a lot and inspired the story that is unfolded, there is another asset that must not be overlooked, and that is the fact that there is a corking good "kid" tale that will bring back fond memories and at the same time serve as healthy food for the million of "kid" fans in this country, who should eat up this brand of picture. But there is more; there is a box office star—Wesley Barry, whom Harry Rapf managed to get through an arrangement made with Marshal Neilan. Wesley does the best work of his meteoric career in this production.

Properly staged, School Days should prove a clean-up. Here's a picture showman, who have been complaining about a scarcity of pictures that invited exploitation, can not overlook. It affords tie-ups of all sorts. Here's a chance to prove yourself a good producer of musical reviews; here's your chance to revive those "kid" school acts that always have gone over so big. Here's a chance to prove to yourself the calibre of showman you are. The Warners have given you a wonderful picture that has story, title and star. What more could a showman ask?

As entertainment it carries a punch in every reel. There is a romance that is as cute as it is fascinating. There are laughs by the bushel and chuckles galore. And pathos, too, for Wesley makes a real American boy, and one loves him for it. The rest of the cast gives good support. Bill Nigh and Walter De Leon furnished an interesting story. Nigh's directorial hand is ever present for the story is smoothly told. The photography is flawless.

If you praised Why Girls Leave Home you'll rave over this. Harry Rapf again has furnished the Warner Brothers with a feature of which they might justly feel proud.

THE CRITICAL X-RAY
Do not for a minute believe that "School Days" merely chronicles the days of the kiddies to whom reading and 'riting and 'rithmetic is the bane of their early existence—far from it. There is a real human story written around the early episodes of a country boy's life.
The fact that it held over two thousand people rapt, making them laugh, cry and applaud at will, proves that Wesley Barry's latest starring vehicle can hold its own against all comers.
For beauty of rural scenes, of country lanes and daisy-studded fields, we have seen nothing finer displayed by the camera's art. These restful and quieting vistas of lowlands, swimming ponds and sleepy meadows afford an exquisite background to the very natural story.
And yet it is all so simple that by explaining in cold print the story is robbed of much of the charm which must be seen to be appreciated. Perhaps in a way it follows the story of Gus Edwards' song, "School Days," but it has been developed beyond the limits of those written words and offers contrast by the boy, "Speck" Brown, being sent to the city by a rich uncle, who discovers his nephew being illtreated by a hard-hearted Deacon. The incidents occurring in the rich home in New York, wherein "Speck" dresses like a young gentlemen, has a retinue of servants and attends a private school in a liveried sedan, hold considerable humor. Some of the tricks he practices on the French tutor, such as placing limburger cheese in his pocket and then into the jar of pomade with which the dandy instructor waxes his mustache, brought it close to the verge of farce, yet withal, it faithfully depicted the character of the mischievous youngster, who tabooed education as unnecessary.
Back again to the rural community "Speck" returns to find that the only happiness is in freedom far removed from the artificiality of a city mansion. The human touches were nicely placed and blended with the more boisterous comedy elements. Tears were drawn by the display of deep affection for the freckled youngster shown by a dog. This lovable canine accompanied the boy on all of his secret fishing tripe and when his master is sent away to the city the poor animal followed the train for miles along the railroad track until he fell exhausted, looking sorrowfully after the fast disappearing train. This dog added so much to the appeal of the story that the boy and animal actually carried the film to success.
Wesley Barry as "Speck" offers more entertainment than the combined efforts of a dozen male stars could suggest. He is a born actor and his freckled countenance registers every thought of mischief or sorrow.
Of the supporting cast John H. Gillmore stood out vividly for a consistent performance of the rich uncle, and Mergaret Seddon, as the sad and patient school teacher, compelled admiration for truly fine work. There were many children in the picture and scenes at the wealthy city home gave opportunity for some classy dancing by these nimble-footed kiddies. Of course, there is more to the story, but what's the use of spoiling your pleasure. Just go and see "School Days." It is a treat and will reach deep into your heart unless you are atrophied and cannot respond to the recollections of childhood. It will exhaust your adjectives of surprise and appreciation.

In "School Days," an eight-reel film production based on the vaudeville playlet by Gus Edwards, Warner Bros. have turned out a screen story worthy of a verse creation by James Whitcomb Riley in its spirit of spontaneous, sympathetic humor. It promises to be the making of its young star, Wesley Barry, of the snub nose and opulent freckles, and the author, William Nigh, particularly, and in general of everybody concerned in its production.

The picture had an invitation preview at the Hotel Astor Dec. 1. The title is practically all that survives from the stage piece. William Nigh and Walter De Leon have written an original story around the school room bit, although the presentation is accomplished by a reproduction of the act with ten youngsters in a singing and dancing specialty, using the same children who appear in the film, accompanied by Margaret Seddon as the teacher.

Wesley Barry is featured by arrangement with Marshal Neilan. The novelty programs for the preview describe the film as produced by Harry Rapf, and directed by William Nigh, the scenario writer.

The film is a really notable achievement in development of effective, intelligent comedy and genuine sentiment. These two elements should carry it alone, and in addition it has extraordinary beauty of natural scenic background and astonishingly good acting by a score or more of youngsters from 8 to 14 years.

The one jarring note of the production is a defect in the story. It starts in the humble surroundings of a country school and shifts to the homes of wealth in an exclusive suburb of New York. There are two distinct stories, and the merging of interest is not well managed. This, however, is a minor shortcoming. The fine sentiment, the natural comedy, and the splendid sincerity of spirit that pervades the whole thing outweigh any other consideration.

The appeal of the poor country orphan boy is invincible. He is a sort of twin brother to Cinderella. Done by Young Barry, all the innate pathos and humor of the character is realized a hundred per cent. The picture has been drawn by Nigh in a tender spirit of fun, and the direction carries out the conception in an appropriate vein of unaffected sincerity. Nothing could be more touching than the parting of "Speck" and his dog "Hippy," and the reunion is quite as moving a passage. It would be a hard-boiled fan that could sit through some of these passages without moisture in the eyes. But there is always a sympathetic smile behind the shadow of a tear. This elusive quality of humor is the highest attainment of the picture art, and in this picture it has rare expression.

"Speck" is the country orphan boy farmed out by the asylum to a hard taskmaster in The Deacon, who overworks and mistreats him. He is a mischievous kid and gets himself in wrong with the school teacher by his pranks. The Deacon threatens to send him back to the asylum if he doesn't attend to his chores and his schooling, but just then a stranger appears on the scene to rescue him. "Speck" is invited to lunch in the mansion with the stranger, who turns out to be his uncle. Uncle, it appears, left the village when he was a youngster, deserting his sweetheart to seek wealth in the city. He got the wealth, but now lonely age is upon him and the wealth seems futile. Therefore he sends Speck to the city to learn that money is not all. In town, under the protection of Uncle's rich attorney, "Speck" comes in contact with fashionable kids who snub him properly and make him long for his old country pals.

When the lesson has been driven home that education is necessary to making his way in the world, "Speck" runs away from the city, back to the simple country, and the moral is complete. Upon this bare skeleton there is built a splendid story structure with convincing character drawing and interesting incidents that will keep any audience of youngsters and grownups absorbed. It's a safe prophecy that the picture will develop into a memorable one of the year.

CRITICAL ESTIMATES OF NEW FILMS

The Warner Picture.

Warner Brothers have made a picture the schools of the country can accept for presentation without hesitation. It is Gus Edwards's "School Days," a study of the American boy in his bare-foot days and later in his city togs. It was shown at the Astor Thursday night to an audience that seemed to appreciate the efforts of Harry Rapf, the producer, and William Nigh, the director, to paint American boyhood and carry a lesson while entertaining. Wesley Barry is the boy, and he has proved he can act with or without Marshall Neilan. Many of his friends were afraid he might "fall down" without Mr. Neilan's helping hand. But Wesley proved he has real ability, and that is something in these days when so many make-believes creep into pictures. Parents who rave over the scarcity of proper material for the little folk can cheer up. Here is a film for the children, and one their parents can enjoy with them.

The eternal small boy to whom a bath is a punishment and a school hook an unnecessary evil has been so well portrayed by Wesley Barry in Gus Edwards's "School Days," produced by Harry Rapf for Warner Brothers, that this motion picture promises to be a screen gold mine. It has been well done, so well, indeed, that big time and small time audiences alike will find it full of delightful incidents, good acting and the eternal appeal of unquenchable youth.

And those who urge clean, wholesome, amusing entertainment films for the young and impressionable can at last say, "Here is a picture we can use without changes in the classroom." Quite apart from being rare good fun, "School Days" carries a good citizenship moral that any child can grasp.

The pre-view arranged by Warner Brothers last Thursday evening in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Astor carried the invited guests straight back to the little red schoolhouse. Small girls in pinafores and Pickford curls and equally youthful boys in knickerbockers acted as ushers. The old school bell announced the opening of the program. As a prologue a Gus Edwards revue of popular songs staged in a schoolroom won applause. The programs were replicas of slates.

Wesley Barry never appeared to better advantage than he does as Speck Brown, the freckled, mischievous hero of "School Days." Harry Rapf, the producer, has caught the spirit of the small boy perfectly in arranging the settings. The country scenes show some fine photography. Hoey Lawlor must be credited with unusually amusing art titles.

Speck Brown's story is that of the small boy taken from an orphanage and adopted by a flinty old deacon. Speck's preferences lie in the direction of playing hookey and shouldering the fishing rod with his dog Hippy. The Deacon never spares the rod or forgets that Speck should earn his board at the woodpile.

A rich uncle appears unexpectedly, decides to make Speck his adopted son, and sends him on to New York, where the freckled youngster moves in a rich set, gets his own car and valet, and falls victim to a confidence man. Eventually, of course, Speck returns to the country lanes and simple folk.

After Wesley Barry, stellar honors in "School Days" go to Hippy.

The "School Days" revue was written and staged by Jack R. Loeb, with a musical score arranged by Leo Edwards, orchestrated by John Rehanser. Erno Rapee directed the melodies.

"School Days"—a "Pre-Showing."

The pre-showing idea has come to be rather a general thing for the more important pictures. A prominent place is taken and the picture is shown to an invited audience. "Staged." That is to say, with all the trimmings. Last night at the Hotel Astor it was "School Days." We went expecting to be interested in the audience. And found the picture so exceptionally good that we forgot the audience. After the cheers for the owners, producers, directors, camera men, authors, composers, title writers, and the cast it settled down to a story that really has an idea. Fancy that—an idea. Back of a human-interest story which will sweep the country. It is not as sentimental as the title. Much of it resembles Booth Tarkington. One of the best pictures of the year. Young Wesley Barry is irresistible and he is in all of the scenes. One, when he leaves his dog, is superb. And the orchestra with a score by Leo Edwards and conducted by Erno Rapee à la the Capitol.

TELEGRAM—NEW YORK, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 2 1921.

Freckled Wesley Is Hit in "School Days"

Wesley Barry, that much-befreckled youthful star of filmdom, wins more admiration from cinema fans and weaves himself still deeper into the hearts of Young America in his latest laughing screen hit, "School Days."

William Nigh wrote the screen version of the stage success made famous by Gus Edwards and also directed the freckled Wesley through a host of laugh provoking antics which are apt to augur badly for the much harassed school ma'am of today, if all the kids start aping Barry in the schoolroom.

The film was given a private showing last night in the ballroom of the Astor Hotel and was voted a "Babe Ruth" in the "laughter league." Admirers of the youthful film star claim that Nigh's screen creation of "School Days" is by far the best picture Barry has been in.

The film will be released for public showing during Christmas week, when thousands of school kids will be on their holiday vacation and able to get a lot of pointers on new tricks to spring in the classroom shortly after New Year's Day. Wesley seemed to run the gauntlet of all the old ones and furnished some new ones that brought forth hearty waves of laughter.

Birmingham Amusements Inspector Makes Theatre Cover Up Babylon Nude Figures

CENSORSHIP of the poster is the logical sequence to the censorship of the film. Birmingham, Ala., has recently appointed an official Amusements Inspector, who is supposed to keep Birmingham entertainment purer than the driven snow, and she is right on the job.

Griffith's film, "The Fall of Babylon," done over from "Intolerance," has recently been purchased by Lynch for the Southern Enterprise exchanges in his territory, and one of the posters is a color reproduction of Rochgross's famous painting of the same title, a work of real art which hangs in the Luxembourg Palace in Paris.

The painter knew more about Babylon than he did about Birmingham—if he ever heard of the town made famous by Octavius Roy Cohen's darkey stories, and he painted the inhabitants suitably dressed for a hot summer day.

Shocked the Inspector

L. R. Towns, of the Strand Theatre, displayed some of the lithographs for the engagement of the Griffith film, and the Amusement Inspector, who chances to be a woman, was terribly shocked. That might be all right for Paris, but she refused to accept Parisian standards for Birmingham, and Towns and District Supervisor R. B. Wilby were ordered to cease debasing the morals of the State of Alabama with such vile exhibitions of licentious undressing.

Something had to be done, so the house painter put on a pair of smoked glasses and proceeded to dress all of the ladies in water color mother hubbard wrappers. It was not Babylon, but it was decent, and apparently it satisfied the Inspector, for up to the present writing we have heard nothing of Towns being sent to the hoosegow.

Paper Is Better

We think that cute tissue paper skirts would have been better and would have gained more of a laugh. Possibly it was felt that kidding the Inspector might have brought on a series of persecutions, but on the other hand a campaign might have exposed the narrow-mindedness of the official who sets herself up as the arbiter of morals for an entire city and overrules the best judgment of the art critics.

Too Much "Modesty"

Where nudity is deliberately resorted to in order to create a false impression and sell tickets, we believe that the offenders should be jailed with or without the aid of a censor, but to object to a standard work of art reproduced with the honest intention of advertising a film by a leader in the art seems to be drawing the point too fine.

Birmingham should have the grace to be ashamed of its representative. If the morals of the town are such that they can be ruined by a work of real art, no censor is going to be able to save the population from perdition.

Jumping Spectres Are Lobby for Live Ghosts

Walter Lindlar's lobby idea for "Three Live Ghosts" is one of the simplest and yet one of the most effective he has offered. In a nutshell he hangs the ghosts in the lobby and each time the entrance door opens they do a dance of death on the atmosphere.

You bend pieces of wire to form the head and shoulders of the spectres, drape these with any light, white fabric, heavy enough to be lettered, and hang them from a line across the arch. Each ghost is suspended by a spiral spring. The springs they sell in the ten-cent stores for canary cages are just the thing, if you make the ghosts light enough, and they should be as light as possible. With a system of cord and pulleys the line is connected to the entrance door, and each time the door is opened the line is given a tug which causes the ghosts to dance. The doorkeeper can give the necessary impetus when patrons are not there to supply the motive power.

The artist has supplied the wiring diagram, but we think that this is too complicated. A single connection can be made to the line and the shock will set all three figures in motion without a direct connection to each. It all depends upon the weight of the ghosts.

It should be noted that the box office is also draped to suggest a ghostly head with the cashier looking out of the nose slit and feeding tickets through the mouth. If your doors are like those in the cut, you can also paint faces on these. Don't throw the idea over because it sounds too simple. The simplest ideas are generally the best. Give it a trial.

Tackled the Taxis

There are only ten public hacks in Marysville, Mo., and George Fuchs tied them all to "The Sheik" with cards reading: "We will take you to see 'The Sheik' at the Empire Theatre." It made business for the cabs and that, of course, helped the theatre attendance.

Advertised One Title by Means of Another

Using one title to advertise a second was a double cut worked by W. C. Johnson, of the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga.

He had Norma Talmadge booked in "The Sign on the Door," and followed her screen advertising with a slide reading, "Note the Sign on the Door as you go out." The sign on the door was for "Don't Tell Everything," displayed on the inside panels of all exit doors. No one overlooked the signs.

Mr. Johnson also used two doorknobs. The first merely read, "Not to be disturbed. Remember this Sign on the Door." The next night a second doorknob was put on the same residences giving the house and date. The doorknobs were the Greene style, which must be removed by hand and cannot be blown off by a wind short of a gale.

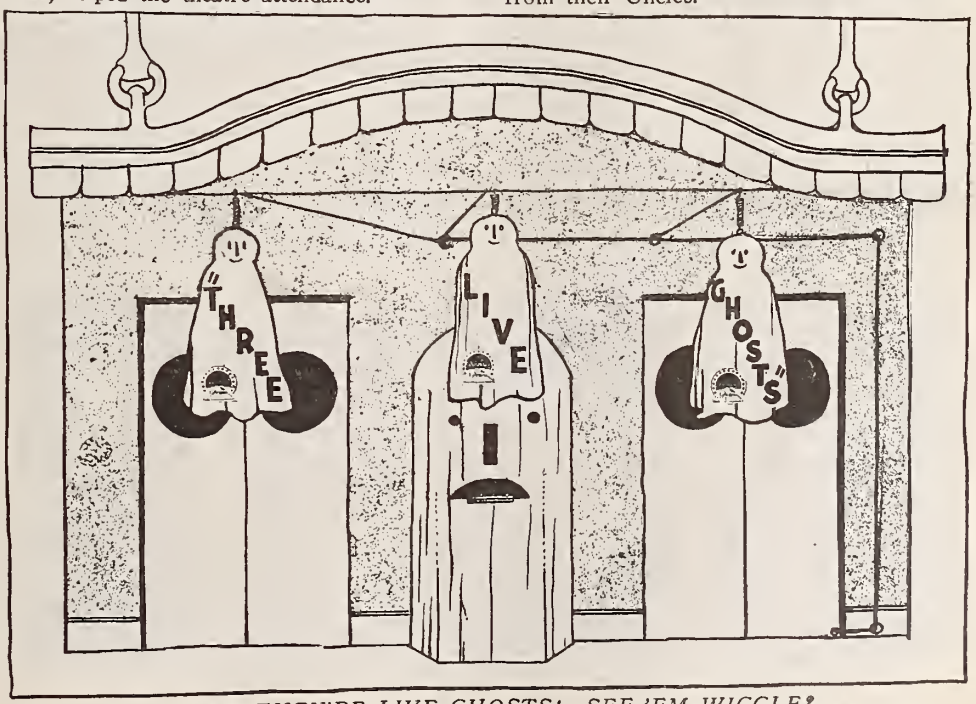
Because Miss Talmadge was such a sure seller, and to give a change from lavish displays, the only lobby work was the star's name in three-foot electric letters. That was sufficient to get them in and left the patron in a receptive frame of mind for the next big lobby.

Masked the Ladies

The Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, used the girl "newsboy" stunt for "Ladies Must Live," tying up with the Record, which supplied the papers free to unemployed women and sponsoring the scheme. Each wore a mask. Of course they wore more than the mask and sash, but these were the essentials.

The mask made the stunt more interesting.

We wonder why it is that the photographs showing this stunt sent in from the different towns always show at least one woman in a fur coat. It seems to be a sort of trade-mark. Perhaps they are selling papers to save the coats from their Uncles.



SURE, THEY'RE LIVE GHOSTS! SEE 'EM WIGGLE?

Lindlar's lobby idea for the new Paramount release is very simple. You hang the ghosts on spiral springs, hook them to the entrance door, and the patrons supply the motive power for the excellent animated lobby display

Won a Window Showing on Cutout Three-sheet

Phil Gleichman won a window display for "Ladies Must Live" with no more material than a three sheet cutout. It was the snappy bathing suit pose of Betty Compson, and it went into a drug store window to advertise cosmetics.

THE GLEICHMAN WINDOW

An insert card was also used, being painted up to work in with the store show as well as for the picture, the argument being that Miss Compson endorses the brand of cosmetics on display.

It does not take much to win a window if you can hit a merchant just right. The trick lies in being able to please him on the jump instead of going in and running a guessing contest as to what he wants.

Hyman's Novelties at the Mark Strand

Figuring that George Arliss will attract the highest class of patronage, Edward L. Hyman has arranged a very unusual program for the Mark-Strand, Brooklyn, the week of January 29.

EDW. L. HYMAN

The overture will be the familiar Raymond, of Thomas, with the orchestra flooded blue and the windows of the setting in amber. House lights will be in pink.

Then comes Wotan's Farewell from the Valkyrie, probably the first time this Wagner selection has been used as a production number in a picture theatre. This is a bass solo, and the soloist is discovered in a mountain set, only his head being lighted by a shaft of white light. At the proper point in the progress of the number he will seem to be enveloped in flames, this being a combination of blown chiffon and a flame disc in the stereopticon. A transparent sky will carry on the flame effect.

The Topical Review will be shown and then the Czardas from Deliebe's ballet, Coppelia, will be danced by two soloists. A blue cyclorama will be used, without extra ornamentation. The dancers will be spotted pink and straw from the sides of the stage. The orchestra will be flooded blue with the stage strips one-half amber and blue.

A vocal solo, sung as a concert number, will follow, to permit the set to be made for the third production. This will be Curran's The Dawn. The soloist will be spotted from the booth.

The last production will be Swear in this Hour from Verdi's La Forza del Destino. This will show a battlefield set, with a jutting rock in the foreground and a mountainous country for the backing. The two sololists will be in uniform of the period of the opera and one, with a bandaged head, will be discovered reclining upon the ground. The lighting will come from two 1,000 watt lamps, one in magenta and the other orange, their rays crossing and blending.

Then come George Arliss in "The Ruling Passion" and James Oliver Curwood's "The White House," a shorter subject.

The organ postlude will be Dunn's Chanson Passionee.

Over the Circuit

Harry Royster, Des Moines Paramounteer, got out a four-page paper, apparently a new issue, when the Paramount production played Blank's Strand Theatre, Plattsburgh, Ia. It was mostly stuff from the press book, played up in newspaper style, and the back page was Boasberg's C. C. T. Co. copy from the Toledo district—the one in which employment was promised 8,000 workmen.

At Royster's suggestion the printer who did the initial job held the form of the four-pager and is selling them all through that territory through Jack Curry, who handles the accessories in the Des Moines exchange.

As the issue now requires only a new head and a few changes in the type, the papers are supplied at only $14 a thousand, and they make splendid heralds.

You can imagine the effect of slipping one of these wildcats in a small town.

Honest Patrons Hurt Chance for Big Story

Some time ago, you may remember, a Tampa manager spent most all of the night part of Sunday morning fixing up a lobby with money bags, and then spent a couple of days trying to recover the money bags which were stolen before the church-going crowd had had a chance to see.

Nothing like that happened to S. S. Wallace, Jr., and he is peeved because the entire town of Columbia, S. C., refused to steal a real dollar bill from a lobby display.

He had Ethel Clayton in "Wealth" and he noticed that the three sheet had a figure in which the star was smiling pleasantly at her outstretched hand. He mounted the sheet and cut out the figure, placing a real dollar bill in her hand, to give her something to look at.

From the bank he borrowed several money bags, which he filled with washers, borrowed from the hardware store, and he set this figure up in his lobby, the bags holding it upright.

His idea was that someone would steal the dollar and he had a good news story planted. But no one took the bill. Perhaps they were more honest or perhaps they suspected some catch, but several thousand people passed up the chance to make a little money, and Mr. Wallace was bilked of an elegant story. He had to rest satisfied with having pulled a money making stunt at the low cost of forty-five cents and a little borrowing.

TWO ONES AND TWO THREES FOR A NEW PARAMOUNT

On the left the first one-sheet is a blue ground with orange splash and white lettering; the next has a red splash, white letters and a black ground. Both of the threes have the red on black with white lettering—all good color combinations

Got a Big Banner by Working with Charity

Working on "Little Lord Fauntleroy," A. L. Snell, of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala., writes that he obtained permission to erect a banner on the Court House by devoting the center to the Salvation Army and taking the ends for the attraction. The banner cost only $8 and as it was the first time the public building ever had been bannered, the local talk was worth many times that cost.

He adds that the admission tickets good for school children when presented with fifteen cents (the regular matinee price), worked well, 370 of the 1,000 distributed coming into the box office. This was the direct result of talks made by Mr. Snell in six schools in town, and the talks were made possible by tickets to the teachers.

Entirely apart from the 370 tickets coming in, the stunt probably brought others, with their parents, to the night shows, so this is not the full return on the stunt, but merely the visible result.

YOU HAVE SEEN THE PARTS OF THIS LOBBY BEFORE

You may not think so, but look back a few issues and find Noble Hearne's lobbies on "The Millionaire" and "Sure Fire." The material in those form the display for Universal's "A Parisian Scandal," with Marie Prevost. The greenery is for Christmas

Has Bright New Lobby from Stored Material

Noble Hearne is doing some unusual lobby work for the Frolic Theatre, San Francisco, but he is not spending a lot of money to get his pretentious effects, for he counts on using his material over and over.

He has a bad space to work with, for you cannot get the entire effect from any single viewpoint since the lobby is on an angle to the sidewalk and the passer-by must enter the lobby to get the full picture. Mr. Hearne's problem is to make the display so attractive that people will stop and give it a good look, yet he cannot spend all of the prospective profits to acomplish this result.

Plays Repeaters

He does it by re-use of the material. In this display for Marie Prevost in Universal's "A Parisian Scandal," the box office is boxed in with the safe used for "The Millionaire," and the palings of the park fence on either side are the wooden rods used to suggest the bank vault in the same production. The rods are also used for two nonpracticable gates. The house at the rear of the lobby is painted on the sky cloth recently used for Sure Fire. The hedge is new and is made of chicken wire thatched with sprigs of cedar, a capital idea.

Mr. Hearne recalls to us the fact that he first broke into this department some years ago with a circus front for Bessie Love in "The Sawdust Ring," one of the first, if not the very first of the now prevalent sawdust stunts.

If you had Picture Theatre Advertising business would be better.

Snow Lobby Scored Hit with Australian Crowd

Because it is hot in December, the Crystal Theatre, Australia, played up a snow lobby for the First National's production of Curwood's "Back to God's Country."

The box office was snowed in with pasteboard and a cyclorama was used in back of the lobby with cutouts from the threes and twenty-four sheets including the scene where Nell Shipman is overlooked taking a bath.

A large banner above supplemented the lobby work and makes the display look very like the American lobbies.

The foot pad stunts used on several of the Curwood pictures were worked, being stamped upon the sidewalk with a wheeled device, greatly expediting the painting. As few street stunts are permitted in Australian cities, the tracks leading to the theatre were of the strongest selling value.

Another interesting point was a real dog sledge of a type unknown in the southern hemisphere, and the nearest approach the management could find to the Eskimo huskies.

Skied a Fashion Show

Strand Brothers, a department store in Great Falls, Mont., has three tiers of show windows, and when "Ladies Must Live" played at the Capital Theatre the store staged a fashion show tie-up in the second tier of windows, advertising heavily.

This was done at the suggestion of Rick Ricketson, the Salt Lake Paramounteer, and in a letter to him the advertising manager says in part:

"As an advertising stunt and selling feature it was a grand success, drawing a larger crowd than we have had the pleasure of bringing out by any similar attraction."

They close with an assurance of their readiness to co-operate the next time opportunity is offered. That's the practical test—to leave the advertiser ready for the next.

Live models were used to offset the second floor location, and the crowd swelled out into the street to get a better angle, helping the ballyhoo along.

Garment Matinee Sold Coogan in Los Angeles

Harry D. Wilson, press man for the Jackie Coogan productions, succeeded in jazzing the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, for the premier of "My Boy."

He took the old potato matinee idea, which has been working for the past ten years and adapted it to the new production through a hook-in with a local association, the Assistance League.

WHAT THE KINEMA GOT

"My Boy" is the story of a waif, and it was announced that it was desired to help other waifs. Here is how one waif was helped:

Because it was a general charity, all of the papers got behind the idea of the free matinee for all who brought discarded clothing for those in real need. Several truck loads of clothing were delivered to the ushers stationed at the side doors, who exchanged passes for the bundles and then the kids went around front and waited for the doors to open. Standing them out for a little while makes a wonderful ballyhoo.

Wilson offers these suggestions. Hook to the idea of the waif in the play and the waif in the streets.

Get some local society, if you have to form one of your own.

Supply Pictures

Send a camera man out to get some pictures of the kiddies to be benefited and supply the editors with cuts. Be certain to take in any orphanage or home, and include a lot of cripples.

Arrange for sob stories, and try and hook in a few pictures of the society women who are interested in the movement, to give tone to the idea.

Do this and you can steal all the space there is.

He also suggests a newsboy matinee, which he worked; but First National has worked the newsboy gag to a standstill between Jackie and Wes Barry.

Put Up a Counter in Lobby of His Theatre

T. W. Young, Jr., who does big town stuff for a small town house, the Frances Theatre, Dyersburg, Tenn., borrowed a counter and some gloves and hosiery from a local shop. These he put in his lobby with cutouts of the shopgirl and the society leader from "Her Face Value," with a card between reading, "Which will you choose? The picture will decide."

This cost only his time and a couple of passes.

But Mr. Young forgot the best angle on this stunt. Some time ago the trick was to have a bargain sale in the lobby. He could have arranged with the store to work off some job-lots in the lobby and the salesgirls would have been supplied by the store and the society leaders by the audience.

That stunt was a winner for a while, but it seems to have been forgotten lately.

Paramount Was Agent for Santa Claus Drives

Paramount exploiteers seem to have been busy around the Christmas season getting into local movements for the benefit of the Paramount pictures and their users.

The latest report comes from Indianapolis, where the News staged a Christmas party in conjunction with the Salvation Army. Oscar Kantner, who is said to be the only Paramounteer with a night bell, got busy and tied-up the home office to a proposition to trade Paramount portraits for contributions of toys, and then the Ohio Theatre, the Paramount first-run house, came in with an offer of a free ticket to each kid who made a donation.

In return the News played up a layout of Paramount stars in its office window, giving one of the best locations in town, for the window is used for important bulletins and people naturally look to it.

The net result was more than one thousand toys, and as many happy children of the poor, a splendid advertisement for a couple of weeks and the belief in the minds of theatregoers that the Ohio Theatre is the leader. It worked well all the way around, and from the viewpoint of publicity, the News stories alone were worth the cost of the photographs and more than worth the cost of the tickets to the theatre, for they were, of course, given out for the dull weeks preceeding the holidays. The kids came down where they might not have done so ordinarily, they went out sold on the Christmas bill, and the entire family had to come.

Played for the Men

Because it was the week before Christmas when he played Charles Ray in "Scrap Iron," Manager Roy Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., figured that the women would be too busy with Christmas presents to come to the theatre, so he worked for the men, painting the barber shop mirrors instead of the soda fountains. It cost only $2.75 to hold business normal in the toughest show week of the year.

He had a lobby display of a prize ring, but rain prevented its use as the lobby was not protected and the water would have ruined the colors.

THE POTATO MATINEE HAS BEEN CLEANING UP AROUND CHRISTMAS. HERE IS ITS SUCCESSOR

The Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, hooked the initial production of Jackie Coogan in "My Boy" to the Assistance League of Southern California and gave a special show to which any child could be admitted on the donation of old garments. It brought a tremendous footage in press stories and jazzed things around the Kinema for a local ballyhoo

NOTE THE CONVERTED SIX-SHEET FRAMES ON THE LEFT
Charles F. Eggers, of the Lyric Theatre, McKeesport, Pa., wanted to use the Paramount Clive posters on "Experience," but he had only six-sheet boards for them. Putting in strips gave him something new in the display line at slight cost

Cost Only Fifty Cents to Hold Up a Business

Alex. P. Robert, who is a student manager for Southern Enterprises at the Strand Theatre, Salisbury, N. C., paid only fifty cents for a stunt which held up business and might have broken a record save for unseasonably cold weather.

He had Gladys Walton in "High Heels" for a Friday attraction, and the house opened with a record breaking Monday. He figured on holding up the business, so he sold the largest store on the "High Heels" idea, putting a case in the lobby with twelve pairs of high heeled shoes of various models, several of the window cards for the attraction and a lettered card for the house and store. The merchant reciprocated with cards in his window and a special sale of high heeled shoes only for the latter half of the week.

Sold Him on Slides

The results were so good that he has come in on the slide service and is hungry for more exploitation ideas, and Robert got a lobby attractor at the cost of a couple of padlocks for the borrowed case.

He was a pupil of Lem L. Stewart at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, and he has done his teacher full credit on his first stunt.

A Plugger Ballyhoo

There still are a few new ideas. One of them was sprung recently by the Palace Theatre, Troy, N. Y.

Troy has a lot of shirt and collar factories. The factories all have a lunch hour. "Over the Hill" has a plugger song.

The Palace management hired a leather-lunger singer to warble the plugger song in the factories during the lunch hour. It was better than the theatre thought it would be, for it crowded the house with no other special exploitation and only the usual newspaper advertising. This is a great stunt for factory towns, and it will be even better if you take the trouble to write a good "spiel" to preceed the song.

Adapted Book Lobby for a Perambulator

Perhaps you cannot have your cake and eat it, too, but Frank H. Burns, who does the exploitation work for the Phillips Theatre, Orlando, Fla., figures he can use a lobby display for a perambulator and in the lobby too, if he plans ahead.

He took the Lindlar book lobby idea as his chief exploitation stunt for "Little Lord Fauntleroy," but he had it made so that it would go on a truck, and for four days he had the perambulator all over town, parking it on a side street, across from the theatre corner when the house was coming out.

When the film came to town, the display was lifted off the truck and set around the box office.

This not only gave a good lobby, but those who had seen the truck on the street and had decided to go were reminded that now was the time. It was an intimate hook-up between the street advertisement and the lobby display, and herein lies its greatest value. This slant improves the value of the original idea.

It cost only $25 and was helpful in bringing a $450 increase, but tack cards, liberal newspaper work and a production also helped to bring the business up.

Has Special Throwaway

The Minneapolis Paramount Exchange invented a special folder for "The Little Minister," in which the cover carries the big type catchline, "No matter what your faith, you will enjoy meeting 'The Little Minister.'" This is illustrated by a trimmed mat of Betty Compson.

Inside are two pressbook cuts printed upside down, and the back is left blank for the imprint of the house, giving the details of the run. They are inexpensive, and they have worked very well for the first-run houses. Out there they cost $4.25 a thousand, including the theatre imprint, but if you have these made up special they should be cheaper, because it is then all one job and does not have to run through the press an additional imprint.

HERE IS AN ADAPTATION OF THE LINDLAR BOOK LOBBY
Frank H. Burns, exploitation man of the Phillips Theatre, Orlando, Fla., and Manager H. B. Vincent worked it so that it could be put on a truck or used as a box office jacket, or both. It worked outside for several days and then went under cover

Jazzed to the Limit on Sennett's "Molly O"

W. C. Patterson, of the Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., went the distance on the Mack Sennett production of "Molly O," with Mabel Normand and released through First National. He wanted to tell the world and he did, with special paper and all the hook-ups including the "Molly O" biscuit, which were demonstrated in the lobby during the showing as well as at the leading groceries.

His greatest accomplishment was getting in 400 car cards at a cost of $15 for printing. The street railway advertising was handled by a special concern, but the car company retained the right to put posters at the front and rear ends of the cards for their own announcements.

Patterson persuaded the company that advertising would mean business in that more people would use the cars if more people came to see "Molly O." They agreed, and as they could not charge for the space, they gave it to him.

He had to pay for twenty-five block 38-sheets though, for the use of double sized paper necessitated the removal of centre bars on the stands, which were laid out for 24s because no one ever uses 48s down there. The moral effect of the extra size was well worth the cost, however.

There were several window displays, but they offered nothing new in decoration. That is one trouble with the merchandise hook-ups. The goods do the hooking up and most windows do not go beyond a picture or two, plus the selling signs. The managers do not have to think up new ideas, so the windows are all alike. This makes it easy for the managers, but it is hard on the press agent who cannot make the trade papers because he has nothing new.

Mr. Patterson used one new stunt, however, for three pairs of shoes were given to the first women who could get them on, a small size being selected. This shoe display was the same as that used in New York by the manufacturers of the "Molly O" shoes.

Ten thousand postals were sent out just before the showing, special cards being printed to get a Christmas atmosphere, and with all of the merchandise hook-ups telling about "Molly O" bargains the papers of the papers were fairly peppered with the name. It all helped to make one of the biggest weeks the new Metropolitan has yet had, and the record will require some beating.

Specials Paid Well

For "Don't Tell Everything," S. S. Wallace, Jr., of the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., used in addition to his regular advertisements a series of one-inch scatters, telling the joint appearance of the three stars. With no other special work this brought the opening receipts up to the opening day of "The Sheik." The scatters ran for a full week in advance and up to the opening day.

PRAISED "MOLLY O" ON TWENTY-FIVE 48-SHEET BOARDS

W. C. Patterson, of the Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta, doubled up the usual 24-sheet and had special block posters printed for the showing of the big Mack Sennett-First National release, using twenty-five selected stands

Exploited Two Titles for Six Dollar Bills

Three dollars per title is pretty cheap exploitation.

A. L. Snell, of the Imperial Theatre, Gadsden, Ala., had Harold Lloyd in "Among Those Present" and Tom Moore in "From the Ground Up." He exploited them both at a total cost of six dollars.

He had several hundred cards printed up inviting the holder to be "Among Those Present" at 503 Broad street, for an evening of fun. The card was good for one admission "when accompanied by the proper credentials." No one knew what the credentials were until they went down to investigate and saw over the box office a large sign reading, "Get your credentials here." They saw the point and bought tickets.

Arrangements were also made with an optician to give a free ticket with each pair of horn rimmed glasses sold during Lloyd week.

For "From the Gound Up" Mr. Snell located a building operation and put a sign on the brick hoist reading, "This building is going 'From the Ground Up.' Be sure to see the finish at the Imperial Theatre this week." If he had only had Lloyd in "Never Weaken" he could have made the single building serve for the two stunts.

Passes for Presents

Louis Hanmore, of the Broadway Theatre, Newburgh, N. Y., had some 500 cards printed up for New Years, reading:

New Year's Greetings
The Broadway Theatre

Takes this opportunity to express its confidence that 1922 will be the most prosperous and happy New Year you have ever experienced, and to correctly start you upon your amusements, would appreciate your attending, as its guest, any show given at the Broadway this week. This card, presented at the box office, serves as your ticket. Again the heartiest of New Year's Greeting is extended to you by the Broadway Theatre.

It was signed by the manager in ink, on the proposition that it was a good enough scheme to be worth doing well.

As the card carried only one admission, and there were few soloists, Mr. Hanmore made a financial clean-up wholly apart from the good will engendered by the courtesy. Save that up for next year. And note that the manager was careful to have a good attraction, "Don't Tell Everything," leading off the week, so the recipients could feel they were getting something real.

Sold On a New Angle

The Hippodrome Theatre, Lancaster, Ohio, sold the Western Union hook-up on "Over the Hill" from a new angle.

Instead of asking for a hook-up, the management told the telegraph people that they could run a special receiving desk in the lobby on condition that the W. U. paid the cost of a huge fake telegram to mother over the marquise.

It was pointed out that the company would get additional business at proportionately small cost. The manager saw the point and came in, also taking "Over the Hill" cards into all the branch offices.

Sometimes you can sell a man that which he will not accept as a gift. It worked that way here.

Study your man and then sell him a stunt and he will appreciate it all the more.

TEN-COWBOY BAND BALLYHOOED "THREE WORD BRAND"

That sounds almost like poetry, but there was more truth than poetry in the box office figures following a three-day standout at the Capitol Theatre, Great Falls, Mont. A candy matinee brought every kiddie in the town

Sold Three Word Brand with His Ten Man Band

Will Steege, of the Capitol Theatre, Great Falls, Mont., put out a cowboy hand when Bill Hart was due in Three Word Brand. He hired a hay wagon—it not being the haying season—and sent them around town in that, and it gave him a three day standout and brought so much business that Steege did not worry about a special stunt to put over the first episode of a new serial. He had them anyway.

Candy Matinee

He announced a canday matinee for Saturday and played to 665 children, although he says about 25 kids is the usual juvenile attendance. They all came for the candy and stayed for the show, but Great Falls must be a blamed funny place to play to only 25 children at the average Saturday matinee.

Why "Lord Fauntleroy" Stayed for Two Weeks

F. C. Cross, of the Goodwin Theatre, Newark, invited "Little Lord Fauntleroy" to bring his toothbrush and spend a week in Newark just before Christmas. And it worked so well that he held over for a second week.

He tied up the schools to a special ticket entitling them to half price. He sold the Superintendent on the idea and was permitted to distribute the tickets through the principals of the various schools. The tickets were good only at the matinees.

A Contest Worked

Then he tied one of the local papers to a contest with prizes for the best answers to five very simple questions, and the tickets were sent in time for use as Christmas presents. Each was personally signed by Mr. Cross and carried a greeting across the face.

This worked for the regular papers and Mr. Cross made a special campaign in the Jewish papers to make it unanimous.

It pulled so much business that he held the film a second week to give them all a chance or, as Charlie Moyer puts it, he was "compelled in justice to the people of Newark and surrounding suburbs" to hold on.

This gave him a chance to work a midnight matinee New Year's Eve, starting at 11:15.

Putting the girl ushers in Fauntleroy suits pleased both the kiddies and the bald heads, but for once the bald heads wanted back row seats instead of the location traditionally assigned them down in the front row.

Philadelphia Curious Were Sold on a Stunt

Philadelphia managers have been selling their patrons—in a double sense—on a stunt invented by Eli M. Orowitz, the Philadelphia Paramounteer for "The Little Minister," though it will work on any big picture. He suggested it for the Betty Compson production merely because that was what he was trying to sell.

The gag is based on the inherent curiosity of mankind, and consisted of an apparently personal note mimeographed on cheap paper and cast upon the streets, slightly crumpled, to suggest that it had been read and thrown away.

The text ran: "Dear Mary—We're all going to Benn's Orient Theatre Thursday night. I don't know what it's all about except that they're going to show the surprise picture of the year. Meet us there, sure? Bill."

The notes were picked up and read and a lot of people were influenced, even after general comment on the note revealed the fact that it was an advertisement.

His Desert Lobby Sold Sheik on Eight Dollars

Not having the material for a tent front for "The Sheik," T. W. Young, Jr., of the Frances Theatre, Dyersburg, Tenn., made a desert lobby from a back drop, two loads of sand and some cacti.

The sand was about two inches deep except where it was piled around the plants, and the drop was a flat color without special painting. It cost only $8 to produce, but it sold a 25 per cent. advance.

He tied the book stores to copies of "The Sheik" for three weeks before the showing and sent out 300 mailing cards, of which 250 were directly effective in that the recipients came. He took his window display ideas from this department, merely having to sell the idea.

THIS IS NOT A LOBBY DISPLAY FOR "WHAT DO MEN WANT?"

It is a side product of the intensive promotion of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" at the Goodwin Theatre, Newark. All of the girl ushers were dressed as Fauntleroys, and they were as real as the store Santa Clauses to the kiddies Isn't Wanda Hawley's Stocking Well Filled?

Around Christmas the Strand Theatre, Spartanburg, used a combined display for Wanda Hawley in "The Love Charm" and the season. A Fireplace was built in the lobby and from the mantel depended a pair of stockings. In the top of one of these was a head cutout of the Realart star and in the other a small cupid shooting at her, while a heart background was used to fill in.

The fire pot was filled with red gelatine and four small lamps on flasher sockets gave a capital fire effect. This seems to be a new idea in a fire stunt. The sockets are cheap and safe and the flashing light will give a much better effect than the single steady globe.

The stocking idea will come in handy next December. Put it in moth balls.

FOUND WANDA HAWLEY IN A CHRISTMAS STOCKING

Santa Claus was not as nice as that to us, but that's what happened to the manager of the Strand Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., when he played the Realart attraction, "The Love Charm," just before the holidays. He has a new fireplace idea

This Agile Locomotive Could Do a High Jump

Alex Lukowski, of the Strand Theatre, Knoxville, turned bridge builder when "the Iron Trail" was extended to his theatre and put up a very real looking trestle in the lobby resting upon masonry supports that were all right if you did not try to lean upon them.

Then he turned machinist and evolved a twelve foot locomotive which was lettered: "The Iron Trail" on the cab and "Rex Beach's Sensational Alaskan Railroad Drama. A thrill every minute," on the boiler. The number is the telephone number of the house.

This cutout used the lobby for a roundhouse in the mornings, but before the crowd came it was raised to the trestle where it would be out of the way. It formed an excellent attractor, but it would have cost very little more to animate the wheels and that would have doubled the effect and more. With an illuminated cab and a headlight throwing its beams on a card up in the corner, the efficiency of the device could have been trebled at small cost. Even as it stood, the stunt helped greatly.

Loan Collection Enticed

For "Three Word Brand," C. M. Watson, of the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ga., used a collection of old muskets, revolvers and pistols, hanging them from wires in the lobby ceiling, following the idea recently exploited in this department.

It cost three passes and built business 30 per cent.

Are you making this department pay you all you can get out of it by using the stunts suggested here? You can make real money.

Wireless Telephone to Sell a Universal

Capitalizing the growing use of the amateur wireless telephone set, Daniel J. Burns, of Proctor's Theatre, Elizabeth, used the ether to press agent the showing of Universal's "Conflict" at his theatre.

THE RADIO TELEPHONE

Each morning during the run a local amateur sent out a message giving the chief thrills in "Conflict" and adding that Universal was contributing a percentage of its film rentals that week to a newspaper Christmas fund and urging the listeners-in to attend the theatres showing Universal subjects.

This not only brought good local stories, but the New York paper staging the Christmas fund gave the stunt a write up.

The radio telephone is new in New York, but the California Theatre, San Francisco, used the device a couple of years ago to broadcast a concert and Pat Argust, of Colorado Springs, went into the deal even more deeply, staging daily concerts.

THIS TRICK ENGINE COULD JUMP TEN FEET IN THE AIR

Of course it needed a little help, but they had it on the lobby floor at non-showing times and put it on the trestle when the crowd wanted to come in and it helped the crowd decide that it wanted to see "The Iron Trail" at the Strand, Knoxville

THIS LOBBY HAS AN ELABORATE ELECTRICAL DISPLAY

William Cutts, of the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle, has his lobby permanently wired for light effects and he enhanced this display for Universal's "Conflict" through the use of flashers and stereopticon designs of his own planning

Changing a Greeting Helped a Form Letter

Getting out a form letter is not merely a matter of writing something and then putting it on the multigraph.

Recently a form letter concern in Omaha conceived the idea of getting up a form letter for "The Sheik," to be sold the exhibitors in that territory. Before the letter was sent out it was taken over to Harry Watts, of the Strand.

In the original it began—

"The best ever—
'The Sheik.'
Don't miss it."

Watts looked the letter over and objected. He figured that the play was sold—or killed—on those three lines. The reader was asked to buy before he was interested. He sat down and wrote this copy:

Dear Friend—Was it you—or somebody else—who asked us about "The Shiek?" I just can't recall—so many people inquired—but anyway, here is the news I wanted to tell you:

"'The Sheik' is coming to town."

There was enough more to fill the page, but it was read because interest had been gained—and not killed—in the opening. In its new form the letter sold in quantities down to the third run houses, and it sold the patron all along the line.

Emotion Machine Moves to Help Texas Manager

The emotion machine, originally devised by one of the Southern Enterprises managers in the Lynch district, was adapted to "The Sheik" by W. E. Paschall, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, and got a lot of attention.

This cut gives a better idea of the machine, but does not show the essential feature. This is a false dial, of white paper, pasted over the glass face to conceal the numerals representing pounds. On this are lettered or painted such emotions as love, hate and jealousy. In this version only symbols were used on the dial, these being interpreted by the corresponding symbols painted on the front of the stand. You step on the machine, note the symbol indicated by the pointer, step off and find the companion symbol on the chart.

A card reads: "Emotion register. Climb on. This machine registers your emotions. This device was used by Rudolph Valentino in properly gauging his emotions for the big scenes in 'The Sheik.'"

It won a lot of attention, particularly from the women, whose giggles and shrieks helped to make this a real ballyho. Get a scale that will weigh without the insertion of a coin, or trick the slot machines. In the original device a fan motor was used with a wire lightly striking the blades to suggest the hum of machinery. This helps.

The box on the left of the machine is filled with more than 500 replies to the misspelled words contest in the double page hook-up for the same attraction, which was another helpful stunt.

Clemmer Lobby Sold "Conflict" on Effects

William Cutts, of the Clemmer Theatre, Seattle, is strong for lighting and trick lobbies, and he has his rather shallow space wired so that he can get big effects with the permanent installation instead of having to pay for special wiring on each effect. He paid only once and now he can do practically anything without trouble or expense.

His display for "Conflict" was in two parts, cut from each other by the log cabin box office. On the left, which has the greater display value, he emphasized the punches of the play with the log jam scene, the ride and minor stunts, while on the right he played up the suggestion of the supernatural with cats, bats, rats and the other implements of the witchcraft trade.

Lighting Effects of Short Duration

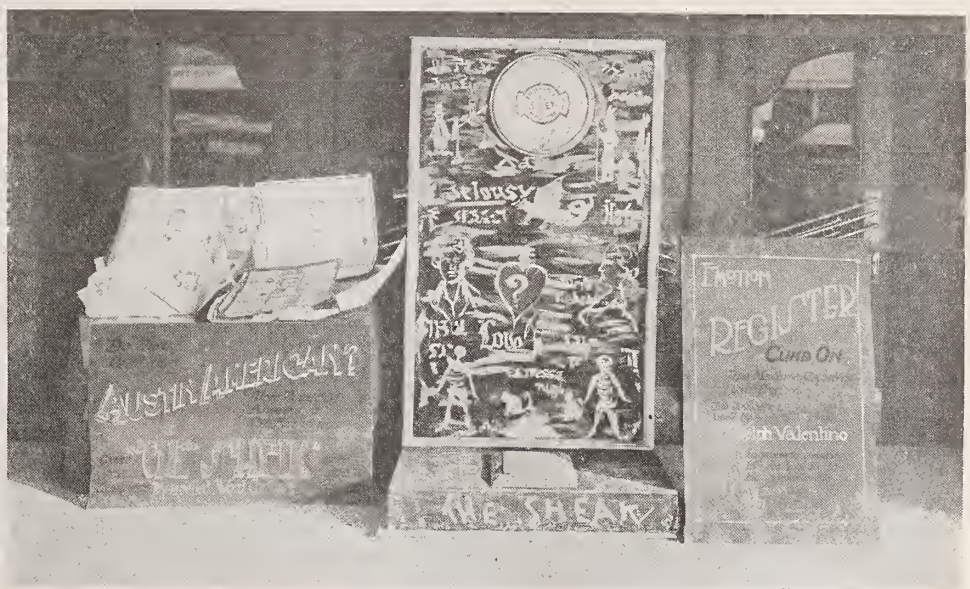
The lighting effects work for ten seconds with a twenty second rest and are entirely automatic, so that once the juice is switched on there is no further attention required. In this display, for example, stereopticons gave running water, rolling clouds, lightning flashes and the like, while a wind machine worked overtime.

Above the box office was the end of a huge log. This end was covered with scrim and at the periods of rest was lighted from the front by red bulbs. In the display period white lights faded the scrim and threw up a portrait of Miss Dean taken from the one sheet.

The picture was run for Saturday and Sunday and the seats were sold an average of nine times each in that time, showing to 9,279 persons in two days, and this in spite of a blizzard which seriously impeded traffic.

Played Reviews to Win

Because the trade papers gave extra good reports on William S. Hart in "White Oak," Thomas G. Coleman, of the Strand Theatre, Memphis, got behind the story and offered it as Bill's best. He played it to the limit and a comparison of receipts shows an increase of about 20 per cent. in the business over recent Hart plays.



THE EMOTION MACHINE NOW TURNS UP IN TEXAS

W. E. Paschall, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, adapted the idea to "The Sheik," offering the machine as that used by Valentino in registering his emotions while playing the part. The basis of the stunt is a weighing machine or scale

HERE IS A NEW STYLE OF TENT LOBBY FOR "THE SHEIK"
It was devised by Frank H. Burns, of the Phillips Theatre, Orlando, Florida. This involves less draping than the usual style of Lindlar lobby and the red, yellow and green make a tremendous flash in so large a mass of color

Simplified Tent Front to Advertise "The Sheik"

Frank H. Burns, publicity man, of the Phillips Theatre, Orlando, Fla., and H. B. Vincent, manager of the theatre, simplified the Lindlar lobby on "The Sheik" and got a good effect with practically no building. They obtained strips of red, yellow and green bunting and made a stright curtain for the arch, slitting on both sides for entrance and exits. This was all there was to it, but it looked well, and the colors fairly shouted in the Florida sunlight.

They also sent out two riders on good horses in Arab costume, each carrying a banner, and made a try for window hook-ups. They were unable to get the latter because the merchants wanted their windows for the Christmas display and could not be made to understand that a display would help attract attention to the other articles in the window. The book store did put in some additional copies of the Hull novel, and they sold so many that next time they will probably be in a more receptive frame of mind.

The stunts used built up the business and added to the universal good report of this picture in Southern territory.

Simple Ballyhoo Idea Brought Important Run

Playing Constance Talmadge in "Mamma's Affair" as a second run at the Rialto Theatre, Jacksonville, put out this very simple clown ballyhoo and make a clean-up. The stunt seemed to strike the theatregoers just right. It made them laugh, so they figured that the First National offering would do the same thing, and the picture played to better than usual receipts.

The banner reads: "It's Mamma's Affair if she treats me like a baby. See Constance Talmadge at the Rialto."

The stunt was inexpensive, yet it worked better than some other ballyhoos costing much more, because it went over just right. The management was careful to get the tallest "baby" they could stuff into the carriage, and this was about nine-tenths of the stunt, so far as the effect goes.

This result again demonstrates the fact that it is not the cost of a stunt which makes the effect, but the results achieved.

GET A P. T. A.

Something Fishy About These Dayton Doorknobs

Getting hold of a die to cut out a fish shape about seven inches long gave the Columbia Theatre, Dayton, an original doorknob on "A Connecticut Yankee."

The background was crimson, with white letters, and a blue string was run through the mouth of the fish. On one side was "Get in the swim—but—don't be a fish. Follow the crowds to the Columbia." The reverse was "'A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court,' Mark Twain's greatest comedy."

These were not only used for doorknobs, but they were hung from automobile steering wheels, in the street cars, in stores, and wherever a peg could be found. Ten thousand hangers were used, and the distributing cost was covered by passes, so the stunt was inexpensive in proportion to the returns, and better than a straight hanger because of the novelty of the shape and the legend.

The best part of this sort of advertising is that once the legend has been read, each additional card—and the average person saw hundreds, reminds the spectator, giving a cumulative effect that is unusual.

Changed Their Opinion

Just because a lot of western pictures are more or less thundery, Ogden, Utah, started in to agitate against all western pictures, and H. E. Skinner, of the Alhambre, felt that he should do something about it.

What he did was to book in Paramount's "The Call of the North" and give a special advance showing to the reformers. After they had seen the picture he made a tactful address in which he pointed out that an outdoor picture could be made without two-gun men and the rest of the familiar ingredients.

They agreed with him and virtue proved its own reward, for they told the town and mothers came and brought their youngsters to see the personally endorsed play.

THIS CLOWN BALLYHOO GOT THE SECOND RUN MONEY
It's a simple enough stunt, but it just happened to tickle the fancy of the Jacksonville theatregoers and they figured that Constance Talmadge must be funny in First National's "Mamma's Affair," and they piled into the Rialto

Cost but Two Dollars to Sell "Exit the Vamp"

Two weeks before "Exit—the Vamp" came to the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., William C. Johnson put signs on all exit doors reading, "Exit—the Vamp." He offered no explanation when patrons asked, but a week before the playing date he started to run slides telling the audiences to watch the exits as they were free from vamps.

He worked up an interest that brought in about twenty per cent. more than the regular business, and it cost him only two dollars for the extra money. That makes dollars almost as cheap as the mark.

Convict Press Agents Touted "Over the Hill"

It is old stuff, but the Fox production of "Over the Hill" was boosted in Auburn, N. Y., by giving the pre-showing, for which the Fox contracts provide, to the convicts in the State Penitentiary.

This always makes a good "human interest" story for the newspapers, and all the papers had reporters there for the showing. And, of course, the convicts welcome anything that breaks the monotony of their drab existence, and some of them can write wonderful letters. They did in this instance, and these appealed to the public because somehow a convict seems to be set apart from the rest of mankind in the thoughts of a majority of the people.

Letters from the convicts, even in a prison town, impressed the populace and the police department had to help the fire department out by assigning special officers to regulate the crowds outside the house while the station fireman regulated the number of those admitted.

It gave the Auditorium management an entire new set of records for by days, the run, money, attendance and enthusiasm.

Built Own Chariot

When "The Queen of Sheba" played at the Capitol Theatre, Altoona, it was figured that a woman driving the chariot would prove a good street stunt. The trouble was that there was no chariot to be found, so a carpenter was called in and a platform was built upon the front wheels of a truck, with a canvas framework for the body. It looked as good as a real circus article and cost less to make than the freight would have come to on a borrowed prop. They even sent the stunt to nearby towns, but in the wintry weather the "Queen" wore more underclothes than Sheba ever heard of. Judging from the picture union suits were unknown in Sheba at that time.

This Partial Title Had a Real Appeal

Voluntown, Conn., is only a 700 town, and it was shaken to its ultimate depths when not long ago the sign "Bar" appeared above Union Hall, the local picture house. It was forty years since the word had been conspicuously displayed in the town, for local option had put the saloon under cover long before the rest of the country went dry, and here, in the second year of prohibition, the word went up, shamelessly and in great big letters.

Howard James, who runs the hall, would give no clew. He just smiled and looked mysterious, but he told the old soaks not to get excited and assured the fanatics that there was nothing to worry about. That was all he would say.

Three or four days later he added to the sign until it read "Barbarian," but he had made his point and the picture played to all the business there was. The stunt cost him forty cents for four rolls of wall paper, which was pasted on a stock backing, painted with alabastine and lettered.

New England is the poorest exploitation section in the country, but Mr. James seems to know what's what, and he cleans up with his small house. The stunt is a capital one and will make real money.

Four Typical Examples of Good Shea Singles

These four single spaces from the Shea theatres offer two unusually good small designs. It is worthy of note that the circular advertisement for Over the Hill probably sold better than the black oblong, because it was more distinct in outline and because it had the advantage of surrounding white space. Many exhibitors will probably feel that the larger and blacker display will get the most attention, but this is not the fact. The circle in the white space is more distinctive and stands out better than the larger area of black, both by itself and in the paper. It is not size but distinction which counts and the circle, it has been proven, will give a better result than a square because it is further removed from the angled outline of all the other newspaper spaces. It works in precisely the same way as the diagonal sash, which always gets more attention than the straight across band simply because it is a variance with the general plan of the layouts. This is always providing that the angle is not so acute as to make it difficult to read the line without inclining the paper. On the other hand that black oblong shows a remarkably good treatment of the space. The title is so large as to come up distinctly and the small lines are put into a white mortise, which not only makes it more easy to read the lines, but which commands far more attention than would the same letters in the same size, but in white against the black. Each letter gets all of the benefit of the comparatively large white space. The two lower examples are more along the regular lines. They show the two halves of one week, Betty Compson in The Little Minister playing the first half, while Tom Moore in From the Ground Up comes in on the fourth day, Buster Keaton in The Boat being held for the entire week. The stocking design on the left is a part of the Christmas appeal, while the design on the right is hooked to the drama. Both are well done, but they suffer from comparison with the more open displays above. That Over the Hill advertising has a display that would stand an enlargement up to a one sheet size and be good all the way along. It would be interesting to watch this advertising artist's work in a series of original spaces, but Mr. Franklin has found that the combination Saturday and Sunday advertisement brings him the best results and these vary but little from week to week, as the artist has always the same space to work in. It makes business, but it does not make for variety.

Changed Form

It comes almost as a shock to note that the Elmwood Theatre, Buffalo, has cut its eight page folder program to a single sheet with a mailing face. For many years the Elmwood held to a standard form, covering two weeks. Now it has changed from a three change to a two change program, comes out weekly and in condensed form. It looks well, but somehow we shall miss the old form for a time, we had grown so used to it. It is now operating in conjunction with the Shea houses, which possibly accounts for the change. The Elmwood, however, was careful to retain the general type design, so the departure is not so abrupt as it would have been with a complete change of form, and we think that in the long run the weekly single sheet will be found more advantageous than the bi-weekly. Lodge secretaries know that to send their notices out too far in advance hurts the attendance at the meetings. A lot of people forget the date, and a two-week program is apt to slide on the second week unless the recipients attend the first week and have their memories refreshed. It's a small thing, but advertising is made up of attention to small things. It costs twice as much for stamps, but the additional postage will probably come back in the form of additional tickets sold, and show a profit on the investment.

Million Dollar House Needs Better Artist

The Grand Theatre, Pittsburgh, is advertised as a million dollar theatre, but it is advertised like an old time store show. This is rather better than the usual display for the Grand. It gets a display for the star and the title, and the small letters are not as muddy as usual, but it looks about $999,999.70 short of the million dollars. Those who go week in and week out probably care nothing for anything but the fact that Barrymore in a new play will be seen there. Others who know the house for what it is may be sold on the Barrymore name, but there is nothing in the advertisement itself to indicate either a good house or a good show. There was a time when most of the Pittsburgh theatres used this sort of display, but now better things are being done by the other houses and we think that the Grand is making a blunder in not following suit. It is possible in the thirty-five lines across four to get a big display, but it should be done with type and not with the cheapest sort of hand printing. The average school child of six can do almost as well as this small lettering, and why a first class house should permit this botch to be its representative in the Sunday papers is a thing difficult to understand. Much more could be done in 45 lines across three, and it is possible, in the long run, to get good type composition in Pittsburgh. Other houses have proved that. It does not stand comparison with papers such as the Washington Post, but "the type work is better than this amateurish lettering and elementary display. Boston at its worst never beat this, and yet week after week it is passed over probably because the house is doing a good business and does not feel the need of better work. Some day it will, and then it may be too late to change advertising heads. No back country daily does worse than this. Few do one-half as bad. We have learned a great many things in the last ten years about theatrical advertising and we knew something about it to begin with, but we have never been able to figure out why some managers are so stone blind to work what is worse than poor.

Two Part Display Is Nicely Proportioned

This display from Loew's Columbia Theatre, Washington, should be seen in the page to show to advantage, for its chief merit is that it makes the space it fills stand out above the surrounding advertisements. It is 105 across three; not a very large size for Washington, and without the sash it might have been relegated to the rear, but the diagonal with the cuts of the three players comes up well, and it dominates not only its own space, but the adjacent territory, as well. The names of the stars are well played up in the only heavy type in the space and the matter directly below hooks them to the title. The matter on the left is the selling talk on the story and sells from that angle, just as the other offers the star gazer his bait. "Vivid" and "fascinating" are the only adjectives used to sell the story and yet in fourteen lines the copy writer has sold the idea to a lot of people who may not care for star names. He tells simply and without undue stress the components of the plot and leaves it to your own good judgment to decide whether or not you want it. We think that more persons will be sold on that style of appeal than on the fulsome praise which sometimes makes a reader believe that the agent is lying to hide the lack of merit in his play. This display is nicely arranged and it goes to show that it is not always the largest type which makes the strongest bid for notice. At that, there seems to be one line too many of the black face. The "and" should have been much smaller or, better still, the three names could have been run without a break and then be followed by an "all three" in a much lighter and smaller face, running into the talk of the play. It is very good as it stands.

Bell's Long Display Is a Deep Sea Diver

To get an even display for a dramatic feature and a Harold Lloyd, Nelson B. Bell, of the Crandall houses, Washington, did a dive and went 145 lines down three columns. He does precisely what he set out to do. He gives two attractions an equal chance at the patrons dimes, and he adds a panel for the extras. It is not as pretty as some of his other recent work, but he puts utility before beauty, because he figures that the man he is working for is running a theatre and not an art gallery. It is a good display of its kind and should commend itself to Newark and other managers where the double feature is prevalent, for it gives an absolutely even break between two titles. Here the second title is a short one, but it will sell just as strongly as the longer drama feature, and so they are given a 50-50 split in a very orderly lay-out. It is all type, save for the lettered signature, and it gets over so clearly that each of the panels carries about double the average text without weakening the display. It is not a useful form except for the sale of a dual attraction, but for that duty, this is an exceptionally good layout.

A Baltimore Theatre Has Brand New Design

Getting entirely away from the usual is the advertisement for Fox's Thunderclap at the Century Theatre, Baltimore. It takes 165 lines across four for about 70 lines of essential copy, but it is a remarkably clever attractor. Above are two races in the usual past performance chart form, with a fourth race below. The third race is the Century program for the week, ringed as the bettors ring their choices. The bill runs the overturn to Tancredi. The Moonshiner, a vocal solo, the racing drama, and the organ solo. The rest is the showing times and winds up with "Equivalent booking odds—better than Checkers." It is all different and so much out of place on the dramatic page that everyone will give at least a look and almost everyone will read it through, the "wise" ones with a quiet chuckle and others in an effort to find out just what it is. It probably got more readers than any other advertisement on the page, and it probably sold a large percentage of the readers, for the smart idea suggests good entertainment, just as the poorly written copy can kill the best of features. This works so well that we think that in a paper which is generally read for its racing dope it would pay to take a space in the form charts to advertise the play where the newspaper will permit this to be done. It will interest most of the lovers of racing who consult the dope sheets, and it will reach them there in their most receptive frame of mind. We think Baltimore is too conservative to permit such a thing to be done, but the idea may be useful to others on this or any other racing play with the name of the horse in the title.

Made a Wide Border Replace Missing Cut

Cleveland got the new Griffith production of "The Two Orphans" only a few days after the New York opening. Apparently there were no cuts yet made up and the premiere had to be put over with the use of all-type displays, but in this 85 lines across two the Hanna Theatre gets a very nice display and the white border gives more of a real display than would a cut with the space filled with type and line. The same display would have cost four times as much with a cut, for then a space twice as wide and deep would have been required to get the same result. Perhaps the lack of cuts was a blessing in disguise. The display is well done, but the valuation of the lines does not show up so well. The name of the producer—and this story will sell because it is a Griffith production—is hidden under the top line, "The Season's Event." The fact that this is a new Griffith production does more to tell than it is an event of the season than to put it into words, and a better practise would have been to start off with "David W. Griffith presents." That would have landed the fans and the floaters alike, for Griffith is a name to conjure with. Even with the copy as it is, the throwing of the third and fourth lines into one would have yielded a little white space which, if distributed above and below the name would have given it much greater prominence. There is more sale value to the Griffith name than to "presents a dramatic epic." Another mistake, we thing, was to give Kate Claxton a larger letter than the Gish sisters. A lot of the present day playgoers remember Miss Claxton but vaguely, though "The Two Orphans" was her standby. The name means little now, but Lillian and Dorothy Gish mean a lot. They should have been played up better, even at the expense of the Claxton prominence. The use of a light italic in place of the eight point full face for the minor lines would have made the bold face still more prominent. A lot of this comment is largely academic. It's not a poor advertisement as it stands, and it probably sold the tickets to capacity. This is not so much a criticism of the display as an analysis of the values to the end that the readers of this department may, on occasion, turn their own displays out in the best possible form instead of merely good enough. To do that may necessitate standing over the printer, for on the face of things, this is a well set display ad. It is merely that it could be bettered.

Stanley Advertising Shows Nice Value

Here is another section from the advertising of the Stanley houses in Philadelphia, in which the value of the lines is nicely appraised. The chief appeal is the title of the play, "The Little Minister." Just above is the assurance that this is the Barrie story, and above that is the fact that Betty Compson is the star in the Paramount production. It is all as compact as could be desired, and the relative value of star and title are very accurately indicated.

A NICE BALANCE

We have already noted the improvement in these more recent Stanley advertisements, but this is one of the best examples we have seen of a thoroughly good valuation. The small bank below the title tells of the success Maude Adams made in this play and carries the assurance that a brilliant production has been made for the screen. There is not a line too much copy nor a word too little. It is a model in its way. The attractor, too, helps along, for the figures are enough out of the ordinary to command attention and to those who know the story will recall the minister and Lady Babbie. We do not believe that the recent Stanley advertisements are matters of accident. There is evidently a better liason between the copy writer and the compositors. They are given to understand what lines are to be played up and which are to be held down. You can do the same thing if you will take the time to educate the foreman in the office in which you are set. Don't bother with all of them, if there are more than one. Select the most intelligent, educate him, let him set you properly and then give you some extra proofs which you can send to the other papers with instructions to follow the same general display, and then kick if these instructions are not carried out. It is not sufficient merely to mention the type sizes. We did that the other day and got a lot of machine lines that looked like something the cat had been worrying over. When we kicked we were told that they had followed the markings. Then we took the job back, had it reset and gained a very pretty display with the same markings, plus a threat of pulling the job out if they did not use display faces instead of the machines. Most large offices now use the machines for everything up to 36 point, and everyone gets the face that happens to be on the machine, whether it is appropriate to the job or not. It is easier to set a machine line than to work by hand, but it seldom yields the same results. Watch the printer and make him do a good job.

Mister Smith's Spaces Show Real Art Design

In many points this display from Mister Smith's Theatre, Indianapolis, suggests the work Charles Bracker did for the Rochester Star Theatre. It is surprisingly good except for the signature, which might have been given a little more prominence. It is artistic in its planning and execution. The space is well laid out, the drawing is attractive, the legends are clear and the selling talk clearly lettered, though here a nice type italic would not only have been a little more clear, but it would have set off, through contrast, the lettered legends above. But that is a small thing to complain of when the general effect is so superior. Some years ago when S. Barret McCormick was in Indianapolis at the Circle, and was not too busy to shoot his advertising along, we used to get the displays from this sister house. Then the signature was invariably the reproduction of the electric sign in front of the house, for the theatre was still new and in need of identification. Recently we have seen little of the work from Indianapolis, and this display comes like a ray of light from a darkened room. It is something to get enthusiastic about, for it is good in all of its component parts. It is not an absolutely perfect attempt, but it comes close to one hundred percent. It is not a pretty drawn design with poor type display, nor is it a good type display with a poor attractor. It is a consistently good display in which the attractor calls attention to the type and sends you to the reading with the idea that the play offered must be good because the figure is so appealing. If the same man did the lettering and drew the figure work, he's a wonder, for it is seldom that one man can do so well in both divisions. Even Bracker was at his best when he made the printer supplement his drawings by putting his layout ideas into the right type display. We do not believe that even Mr. Smith's artist always does as well as this, for that drawing is good enough to be framed as a work of art, and the balance of the white margin preserves its admirable proportions. It is rather deep for its width: 140 lines across three, and this does not always give a good result, but here the display is really a picture and a caption and it would spoil the picture to shorten it and hurt the type display to pull it in. It is too good to spoil with a single column reproduction—but it is too deep to reproduce in two. It would take up too much space.

—P. T. A.—

Jazzing the Display Tells the Features

Here is a just once from S. Barret McCormick for the Allen Theatre, Cleveland. He calls it Jazz-a-Week and except for the Harold Lloyd comedy it seems to be mostly production stuff with a vaudeville performer leading the list. The copy is written in jazzy style and set in a jazzy fashion, and McCormick thinks so well of the title design that he has had it copyrighted. The features are dotted all over the quarter page space and are set in at different angles. They can all be read without turning the paper quite upside down, but there are two set in at right angles to the bottom line and most of them are angled. It is a crazy looking outfit, and that is just what it is meant to be, to carry out the idea of the jazz. This is a good thing not to try unless your newspaper prints from cast plates, for the banks of type can be set into the form and made solid enough for the steam table where it would drive a man crazy trying to get a decent lock-up in a chase with side sticks. Because the form is something entirely unlike anything McCormick has yet done, we believe that this Sunday space was read with the closest attention, and that every line got over. And we think that he could do the same thing next week and fall so flat that the proverbial pancake would look like a sphere in comparison, but there is small chance that McCormick will repeat. He knows too much for that. It's a curiosity, rather than a model, yet it may be that some time you will need something of this sort, and if you remember the layout you'll have a time and brain saver. It is a capital example of its kind and Lloyd's "A Sailor Made Man" fits into the scheme of things as though the production had been especially contrived for the Allen bill. It wasn't, of course, but McCormick skilfully builds a part of his program on the picture, a production prologue that gives him a fine chance to riot with color and girls.

—P. T. A.—

The fact that an opposition house is using vaudeville probably explains the move.

News of the West Coast

By A.H.GIEBLER

Propaganda to combat magazine and newspaper articles which have carelessly or maliciously attempted to paint Hollywood as a modern Babylon with a touch of Sodom and Gomorrah will be sent out jointly by the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce, the Motion Picture Producers' Association and the Screen Writers' Guild, according to a plan proposed this week to film representatives and Hollywood business men by Benjamin B. Hampton.

Mr. Hampton was principal speaker at a get-together meeting held in Hollywood. He pointed out the necessity of removing the smirch which some writers give Hollywood, and suggested a joint propaganda committee to see that novelists and special writers visiting Hollywood are properly escorted and shown Hollywood as it really is. He also favored war on the type of landlords who hang out "no dogs or movies" signs.

Frank E. Woods, supervisor of production at Lasky's, spoke for the Screen Writers' Guild, and Wedgewood Nowell for the photoplayers.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Hal E. Roach Film Laboratories, Inc., was held last week at the Roach studio, and officers were elected for the coming year. Walter Lundin was elected president; Charles Parrott, vice president, and J. L. Murphy, secretary and treasurer. Mr. Murphy will attend to the business of the laboratory in connection with the purchasing department, of which he has charge. The Roach Laboratories has just concluded a very successful year, all the studio output now being handled by Charles Levin, in charge of the plant.

The Empress Theatre, of Redlands, California, has just been purchased by B. Lichtig and George Bourke. The sale included the building in which the theatre is located, and the property is valued at approximately $25,000. The new owners have taken possession and are planning a number of improvements. The theatre is one of the most attractive playhouses in the city.

Mr. Lichtig has recently returned from South America, where he represented a large film company in Brazil. He owned a motion picture theatre in Buenos Aires, and before that had houses in Cuba, Mexico and Panama.

Mr. Rourke hails from Seattle, where he recently owned a playhouse. He has been engaged in the motion picture and theatrical business for the past fourteen years, in Portland, Seattle, Spokane, Butte and Denver.

Whole Country to Get Close-up of Boy Star's Famous Freckles

The country at large is going to get a close-up of the most famous freckles in the world, for Wesley (Freckles) Barry, the youthful star, has begun a tour which will take him to most of the important cities where he will make personal appearances. He is traveling in the uniform of a United States Junior Naval Reserve cadet, and the members of that organization are planning to give him rousing welcomes at every stopping place.

Barry's first appearance will be at the Chicago Theatre, the new Balaban and Katz house, during the showing of "Penrod," the Marshall Neilan picturization of the famous stories and starring the freckle-faced one. The national premiere of the picture will begin at the Chicago on January 30. Barry will appear on the stage of the theatre in an act written by H. C. Witwer, the humorist. Accompanying "Freckles" are Pete Smith, Neilan's director of publicity, and Frank Vaile, the star's tutor.

Los Angeles gave him an official send-off on Wednesday, the day on which he started on the first leg of his transcontinental tour. Mayor Cryer and other officials greeted "Freckles" when he appeared at the city hall in his naval uniform. The mayor handed him a letter of introduction, a message to Mayor Thompson of Chicago and a basket of oranges from the mother navel orange tree of the present great orange industry in Southern California, for presentation to Mayor Thompson.

Rockett Film Was Released January 22

A cast headed by Grace Darmond features "Handle With Care," the Al. and Ray Rockett production released by Associated Exhibitors on January 22. According to all reviews, Associated Exhibitors state, exhibitors are assured of a production which should prove highly satisfactory.

Associated Exhibitors has prepared an especially complete line of accessories and exploitation ideas which are fully described in the campaign book.

R. Ingram Picture Shown at Lyric

"Turn to the Right," Rex Ingram's production in motion pictures for Metro of the famous John Golden stage hit, written by Winchell Smith and John E. Hazzard, will come to the screen publicly for the first time the evening of Monday, January 23, at the Lyric Theatre, New York.

Zane Grey's "Wildfire" First Hampton Picture for Goldwyn

Benjamin B. Hampton has completed the first of his five productions to be released by Goldwyn and a print is expected at Goldwyn headquarters within a few days. The photoplay is "Wildfire," adapted from one of Zane Grey's most popular western novels. Claire Adams and Carl Gantvoort have the leading roles.

"Wildfire" is a western racing drama with a big climax. The heroine is seen riding, tied face down to the back of a wild steed. Tod Sloan, the famous jockey, makes his reappearanc in the saddle in this picture. A new canine screen star makes his entry into films; he is Rin-tin-tin, a German police dog.

In the cast are Jean Hersholt, Tod Sloan, Mary Jane Irving, Frank Hayes, Babe London, Walter Perkins, Charles Arling, Harry Van Meter, Helen Howard, Audrey Chapman, John Beck and Captain Stanley Bingham.

Associated in a directorial capacity with Producer Hampton were Eliot Howe, Jean, Hersholt and Dick Rush. The scenario was written by E. Richard Schayer.

"Fools First" Neilan's Next

Marshall & Neilan has purchased the rights of Hugh MacNair Kahler's "Fools First," which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, and will use this plot as the basis for his next First National picture.

By special arrangement with Marion Fairfax, who has been responsible for many Neilan scenarios, Neilan will write a dramatic story based upon Kahler's plot. Contracts have already been signed with Claire Windsor, Richard Dix and Claude Gillingwater. Frank O'Connor will direct. Actual "shooting" will begin next week.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Here are extracts from news available at press hour from publications of the industry boiled down to a sentence. They present the views of Moving Picture World (M.P.W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E.H.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitors' Trade Review (T.R.); Film Daily (F.D.).

The Lane That Had No Turning

(Agnes Ayres—Paramount—4,892 Feet)

M. P. W.—Miss Ayres starts upon her career as a full fledged Paramount star in a picturization of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel of the same name. Her first appearance as such is a worthy introductory vehicle.

N.—Heavy story of revenge and self-sacrifice.

F. D.—Will depend largely upon the preferences of your patrons.

T. R.—Story lends itself well to the screen.

E. H.—An excellent picturization of a thrilling story by Sir Gilbert Parker.

Foolish Wives

(Erich von Stroheim—Universal—10 Reels)

M. P. W.—The moments of greatness and the dramatic incidents are so widely separated with what seem like endless scenes of absolutely no narrative value that practically all force is dissipated. During the slow progress of the tale there are numerous evidences of bad taste.

F. D.—The most important and immediate need of the picture is absolute and certain cutting.

N.—A monumental symbol of film progress.

T. R.—"Foolish Wives" will be one of the most talked about pictures of the year.

E. H.—The chief criticism aimed at the von Stroheim production is its length and too much von Stroheim.

The Leather Pushers

(Reginald Denny—Universal—Two Reels Each)

M. P. W.—It has been the good fortune of Universal to produce that "something different" in offering the new series, "The Leather Pushers." Even the most obvious objection to such a subject has been surmounted. It does have an appeal for women as well as men.

T. R.—There is a novelty to this series, and the exhibitors claim they are looking for something novel.

E. H.—They are the real goods in screen entertainment.

N.—Three "rounds" of the fastest action we have seen in some time.

The Law and the Woman

(Betty Compson—Paramount—6,461 Feet)

M. P. W.—Taking the popularity of the theme for granted, it must be said that the director gives them what they want in an artistic dressing.

T. R.—Bids fair to win widespread popularity.

E. H.—Very skilfully produced.

N.—Clyde Fitch play adapted with good success. Exceedingly well done.

F. D.—Absorbing if murder mystery atmosphere is not disagreeable to individual's taste.

Hush Money

(Alice Brady—Realart—4,819 Feet)

M. P. W.—Holds the unceasing interest of the spectator.

E. H.—The story is one which should prove mildly satisfying in any community.

W.—Mild entertainment built on poor story.

N.—Slight material for feature length.

No Defense

(William Duncan—Vitagraph—5,700 Feet)

M. P. W.—Public taste has improved somewhat and demands something besides vigor and he-man tactics, which is the extent of William Duncan's offering in this feature.

T. R.—"No Defense" is a melodrama that has a plot somewhat of the Enoch Arden type, but with a new twist given to it.

N.—Adventurous melodrama carries snappy action.

E. H.—A diverting and well acted story of society and political intrigue, replete with dramatic situations.

Don't Get Personal

(Marie Prevost—Universal—5 Reels)

M. P. W.—Marie Prevost star of an attractive light comedy.

F. D.—Once more the former Sennett bathing beauty succeeds in holding the attention (or is it the eye?) in a picture that without her would certainly be dull.

T. R.—It will prove acceptable to those who are not sticklers for studied plots and who are out for entertainment that need not necessarily be lifting and inspiring.

N.—Star scores in episodic and sketchy comedy.

E. H.—A clever little comedy, with Miss Prevost its particularly bright and scintillating star.

M. P. W.—Ralph Connor's story is spiritedly pictured by Hodkinson with a good cast.

T. H.—"Cameron of the Royal Mounted" is genuine Northwest drama, packed full of diversified and thrilling action.

N.—Vivid, thrilling dramatization—interesting departure.

F. D.—Good atmosphere and action in typical royal mounted story.

E. H.—This is another good story of the Northwest Mounted Police type and with better exhibition values than most of those which have gone before.

Gleam O' Dawn

(John Gilbert—Fox—4,178 Feet)

M. P. W.—Fox introduces unusually promising star in John Gilbert.

T. R.—Fully up to the accepted standard.

N.—New star does well in frail character study.

W.—An average entertainment a bit weak in story.

A Department for the Information of Exhibitors

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

The box office is the dependable guide for all exhibitors on moving picture productions. In this department your brother exhibitors tell the story of the success or failure of the various releases. Your frank reports on all pictures are solicited for this department. You are helping yourself and others by sending them in. Use the blank printed in this department or better still write us that you'd like a free supply of report cards.

First National

CHILD FOR SALE. Very good production, title draws crowd, will stand raised prices, book same, good moral, 100 per cent. pleased, fine acting throughout. Advertising; special, 100 per cent. more. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair, bad storm, bad roads. W. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisc.

CHILD THOU GAVEST ME. Wonderful, strong drama, liked by all. Give us more of them. Barbara Castleton a real one. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. C. S. Bovee, Florence Theatre, Elk Point, S. Dakota.

CUP OF LIFE. Fell down according to previous records on "Lying Lips" and "Mother O' Mine." Too much foreign atmosphere. Why can't American producers stick to pictures dealing with American life? My public doesn't want foreign pictures. Advertising; billboards, mailing list. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; fair. L. O. Davis, Perry Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

HAIL THE WOMAN. Although the first two or three reels are a little "strong" for refined tastes, after they see it all they will say, "A 100 per cent. knockout." Advertising; all types, posters and photos. Patronage; family. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

JIM THE PENMAN. Not a picture that patrons will comment favorably upon. Barrymore not adaptable to motion pictures. Advertising; usual. Patronage; better class. Attendance; poor. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

LAST OF THE MOHICANS. Our personal opinion of this is that it is just fair, but it drew well and the comments were very favorable. Advertising; trailer did the business, slides, program and lobby. Patronage; mixed. Atendance; good. W. H. Pike, Majestic Theatre, Las Vegas, Nevada.

MOTHER O' MINE. Very fine, an extra good picture with a wonderfully strong appeal and a climax that makes them grip their seats. Advertising; special billboard and newspaper. Patronage; high class. Attendance; just fair, on account of Christmas shopping. Geo. O. Monroe, Gilbert Theatre, Beatrice, Nebraska.

NOMADS OF THE NORTH. Everybody satisfied. Many say it is the best picture I have ever had. Curwood subjects always good, draws for me. No mistake booking this one, good for all classes. Advertising; one sheets, photos, window cards, general alarms on telephone. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; very good. R. E. Groninger, Dreamland Theatre, Glasford, Ills.

NOMADS OF THE NORTH. Truly a wonderful picture from every standpoint. All Curwood pictures are a good drawing card, in my opinion. Advertising; one six and two ones. Patronage; small town. Attendance; very good. J. F. Schlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, N. C.

PECK'S BAD BOY. A good picture. Other's opinion "Peck's BAD Boy" is GOOD Advertising; nearby towns, newspapers and posters. Patronage; good. Attendance; good. Chas. G. Howe, Elk Theatre, Longview, Texas.

SILENT CALL. Excellent picture, appeals more to men and boys. Very fine pictorial feature. Good box office attraction. Advertising; billboards and mailing list. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; good. L. O. Davis, Perry Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

A SMALL TOWN IDOL. Here is the most elaborate comedy I ever saw. It pleased 100% but didn't do the business it should have. Advertising; posters, etc. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; fair. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Miss.

SMALL TOWN IDOL. Much better than any of his previous feature length comedy. Advertising; splash lobby and billboard. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

STRANGER THAN FICTION. Fine for a change, not a strong feature but one that pleases a good majority. Advertising; regular. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. George O. Monroe, Gilbert Theatre, Beatrice, Neb.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. A great picture and one that appeals to all. The more we get of these, the better our business will be. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. C. S. Bovee, Florence Theatre, Elk Point, South Dakota.

TRUTH ABOUT HUSBANDS. Good clean picture, fair business. Nothing but kindly words by patrons. Pleased all. Advertising; posters and dailies. Patronage; best. Attendance; fair. Chas. G. Howe, Elk Theatre, Longview, Texas.

TRUST YOUR WIFE. Consider this just ordinary. Pleased 75%. Star did a little real acting in this. Advertising; photos, sheets and newspapers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; 520 (fair). A. La Valla, Bethel Community Theatre, Bethel, Conn.

TWO MINUTES TO GO. One hundred per cent picture. Pleased everyone who saw it. Chas. Ray the star. Advertising; regular. Patronage; usual. Attendance; fine. Peebles, Queen Theatre, Denison, Tex.

THE WONDERFUL THING. A very good picture which pleased my patrons thoroughly. Advertising; billboards, lobby, newspapers, heralds. Patronage; better class. Attendance; poor. W. R. Fairman, Queen Theatre, Bryan, Texas.

Fox

ADVENTURER. Picture might have been O. K. if print was good. Worst print I ever ran in house. Shame to allow Wm. Farnum to be shown in print like this. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. W. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisc.

ANY WIFE. It has all the necessary elements to make it a good entertainment. Pearl White shows her ability as an actress. Advertising; posters and papers. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. J. Carborell, Monroe Theatre, Key West, Florida.

COLORADO PLUCK. A fair picture, but patrons want Russell in Western stuff. They think this Western, but are fooled. Fox should turn out more Russell pictures like "The Iron Rider," "Twins of Suffering Creek," etc. M. Oppenheimer, Empire Theatre, New Orleans, La.

QUEENEY. A real nice picture, clean and no killing in it. Good program picture. Advertising; usual. Patronage; regular. Attendance; fair. Geo. C. Poindexter, Broadway Theatre, Hopewell, Virginia.

QUEEN OF SHEBA. A knockout. The biggest and best spectacle we ever showed. We got out the maximum crowd and they were all pleased. Admission advanced from 22c to 45c. Advertising; 22x28 in store windows, special lobby, slides, trailer, handbills and program. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. W. H. Pike, Majestic Theatre, Las Vegas, Nevada.

THE ROUGH DIAMOND. An entirely different Mix picture with plenty of vim, vigor and vitality. It is packed with thrills and it pleases. Advertising; street posters and heralds. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Miss.

Goldwyn

DANGEROUS CURVE AHEAD. Excellent program picture. Did not draw, but will please everyone. Light domestic comedy-drama nicely produced, cast fine. Business poor. Advertising; nothing extraordinary. Patronage; industrial, small town. Attendance; good. P. W. Kunze, Orpheum Theatre, Stoughton, Mass.

DON'T NEGLECT YOUR WIFE. Here is a real picture of the days of '61. I was afraid of it, but it went over big, and will please any audience. Mack Sennett's "Hard Knocks and Love Taps" is great. Mack shows his old time style in this one, boost them big. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

HOLD YOUR HORSES. By far the best comedy-drama out this year, you positively cannot promise too much on this one. A fine, interesting story, and a laugh every ten feet. Tom Moore has never been a drawing card here. Advertising; extra strong. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; very poor. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

THE INVISIBLE POWER. No good, no special by any means. Goldwyn must release better pictures or lose. Advertising; very good advertising. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. Charles O. Paul, Dreamland Theatre, Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan.

AN UNWILLING HERO. Consider this Rogers' best picture to date. Titles worth price of admission alone. Advertising; regular photos and posters. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

WET GOLD. Very good picture, fit for any lady to see. Ralph Ince does great acting and is good anywhere any time. Advertising; lobby cards, paper, one sheet. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; fair, bad night. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

WHAT HAPPENED TO ROSA. Not up to the Normand average. Would say stay away from it. Advertising; billboard. Attendance; fair. G. H. Jenkins, Minocqua, Wis.

Wid Gunning, Inc.

WHAT DO MEN WANT? How do they get away with it? If you can find the moral hidden in this bunch of sordid, doubtful stuff, you may be able to excuse it. Advertising; tie-ups with merchants, special displays. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good, but fell off. E. W. Large, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

Hodkinson

THE WESTERNERS. Just a fair Western program picture. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. L. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Calif.

Metro

IDLE RICH. Bert Lytell is getting to be a drawing card because Metro has given him some good stories in his last three. This one is very good and a big Sunday night crowd liked it. Advertising; regular. Attendance; good. W. H. Pike, Majestic Theatre, Las Vegas, Nevada.

THE MAN WHO. Pleased 100 per cent. A small exhibitor who can't pull a picture of this class over had better get out of the game. Patronage; average. Attendance; good. E. H. Haubrook, White Center, Seattle, Washington.

A MESSAGE FROM MARS. Pleased certain patrons, but personally think this is one of worst pictures Bert Lytell has ever starred in. Advertising; posters and slides. Patronage; general. Attendance; poor. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburg, N. Y.

PLEASE GET MARRIED. Pleased about fifty per cent. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. L. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Calif.

POLLY WITH A PAST. A very clever little picture. Pleased 100 per cent. The first print out of Dallas that I could run. Advertising; lobby, newspaper. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. G. E. Shilkett, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Okla.

TRIP TO PARADISE. Bert Lytell the whole show. All good except the last part which dragged and left a bad taste. Advertising; newspaper, program and cards. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. A. G. Pearson, Pearson's Theatre, Somerville, Mass.

Paramount

THE AFFAIRS OF ANATOL. A good fashion show, but absolutely free of plot. Advertising; slides, window cards, heralds, one sheets, programs, two newspapers. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. R. S. Moore, Gem Theatre, Snyder, Okla.

AFTER THE SHOW. Good picture and well liked by patrons who saw it. Do not step too heavy on advertising special production. Advertising; two 24 sheets, twelve one sheets, two newspapers, lobby. Patronage; the best. Atendance; fair. H. B. Barr, Rialto Theatre, Enid, Okla.

CAPPY RICKS. Splendid, took well. Attendance low on account of rains. Star well liked here. Advertising; lobby, newspapers and slides. Patronage; family. Attendance; fair. W. J. Clark, Rialto Theatre, Eureka, Calif.

DANGEROUS LIES. Same old British picture, that no one likes. Very little interest in it. Advertising; usual. Patronage; regular. Attendance; very poor. Geo. C. Poindexter, Broadway Theatre, Hopewell, Va.

HALF AN HOUR. Just mildly amusing; not the kind of story for Dalton. Advertising; newspapers. Attendance; poor. T. M. Hervey, Unique Theatre, El Paso, Texas.

INSIDE THE CUP. Greatest sermon ever picturized. Made tremendous hit with what few church people saw it, but as usual could not get them out. Personally enjoyed it very much. Advertising; special banners, etc. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

LADIES MUST LIVE. Exceptionally good, pleased majority of patrons, something different. Advertising; billboard, N. P. lobby, handbills. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. G. E. Shilkett, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Okla.

THE SHEIK. We played this one two days and did a wonderful business, but honestly, the exchange got all the cash. I paid too much for the picture. I'll venture to say I didn't make over ten dollars clear in two days. Advertising; every possible means. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Miss.

THE SHEIK. A very good picture. Pleased 100%. Wonderful acting, stars are well liked here. Advertising; hand bills, slides, bill boards, newspaper, lobby. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; S. R. O. for three days. G. E. Shilkett, St. Dennis Theatre, Sapulpa, Okla.

SOMETHING TO THINK ABOUT. A wonderful production that pleased all who saw it, but failed to draw. No fault of the picture. Advertising; post cards, ones, threes and sixes. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; poor. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Miss.

TESTING BLOCK. Think Hart had better let C. Gardner Sullivan write his stories. Patrons already losing interest in him and this picture don't help him any. Very crude. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

WHAT'S YOUR HURRY. Good picture that holds your attention throughout. Advertising; newspaper. Patronage; down town. Attendance; good. T. M. Hervey, Unique Theatre, El Paso, Texas.

Realart

EVERYTHING FOR SALE. A good picture and May McAvoy very charming, and these people do not hold you up on prices. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. C. S. Bovee, Florence Theatre, Elk Point, South Dakota.

HOUSE THAT JAZZ BUILT. This one a little light, but patrons said fine. Pleased 90%. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. E. S. Corr, Princess Theatre, Thompson, Iowa.

SPEED GIRL. Picture only fair, but good enough to satisfy. It's some puller for we "packed 'em in." Advertising; usual billboard and newspaper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; very good. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

R-C

BARRICADE. Excellent, received more comment on this picture than any I have run in a long time. A few classed it above "Humoresque." Advertising; billboards, newspaper. Patronage, small town. Attendance: fair. R. H. Hightower, Crystal Theatre, Dublin Ga.

THE BARRICADE. This one gave good satisfaction, but it is not a great picture, so don't promise too much. Will appeal strongly to Jews. Ran with Chaplin's "Idle Class," this is as good as anything he ever did. Advertisin; extra. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

FOOLISH AGE. Starring Doris May, good photography, but failed to please, overdone. Advertising; photos and paper. Patronage; better class. Attendance; good. J. I. Wright, Rex Theatre, Bevier, Mo.

POSSESSION. Nothing good about this but the photography, poor story, as told by the picture, no drawing power. Patrons disappointed. Advertising; extra newspaper adv. two papers. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. G. H. Rardin, America Theatre, Longmont, Colo.

Selznick

BLUE PEARL. Another good one that exhibitors can't go wrong on. Will stand all the boosting you wan to give it. Pleased. 100%. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Ala.

CHIVALROUS CHARLEY. Best Eugene O'Brien yet. He's a good star but patrons are tired of "Sweet" heroes. Pictures like "Chivalrous Charley" will increase his popularity. Advertising; usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; poor. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

HANDCUFFS OR KISSES. Good picture, best Elaine Hammerstein has done. Did not please everyone, but a fair percentage liked it. Advertising; usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Ark.

A MAN'S HOME. Very good picture. Good cast, should please any audience. Patronage poor on account of cold weather. Advertising; newspaper, bill boards, heralds, window cards. Patronage; neighborhood. J. A. Emery, Star Theatre, Bar Harbor, Maine.

United Artists

WAY DOWN EAST. The best picture this theatre ever played. The ice rescue scene stands out as the greatest single scene ever filmed. Griffith is still the master. Advertising; lobby, 24 sheets, special newspaper ads. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. E. W. Large, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

Universal

ACTION. A very good Western play. Hoot Gibson is good. Advertising; as usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance, fair. Micheal Leszcynski, Pastime Theatre, Depew, New York.

DANGER AHEAD. The picture pleased, a nice little story of New England with a spice of good comedy. Not a special, but a good program picture. (California's coast is not New England's tho). Advertising, regular, posters. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. O. V. Drew, Acme Theatre, Vinal Haven, Maine.

DAUGHTER OF THE LAW. This is in the class with "Outside the Law," and consider it is Carmel Myers' best. Will please 100%. Don't be afraid to boost it, as it will be all you can claim for it. Advertising; ordinary. Patronage; community. Attendance; fair. U. G. Replagle, Grand Theatre, St. Mary, Ohio.

DOUBLE DANGER. A dandy Hoot Gibson two reel western comedy-drama. Just the kind of stuff everybody likes. Shoot 'em to us Mr. Laemmle. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

THE FOX. A good Western but I can't see where they can claim it to be the first super-western ever filmed. Advertising; special and newspaper. Patronage; high class. Attendance; Not what I expected. Geo. O. Monroe, Gilbert Theatre, Beatrice, Nebraska.

LURING LIPS. Good picture but poor title for our bunch. Advertising; lobby, papers, slides. Patronage; lumbermen. Attendance; good. W. J. Clark, Orpheum Theatre, Eureka, California.

OUTSIDE THE LAW. About five good reels stretched into eight. Priscilla Dean saves this doubtful special. Advertising; photos, posters, heralds, newspaper ad. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. Kenneth Thompson, M. W. A. Hall, Hancock, Wisconsin.

PLAYING WITH FIRE. This city likes Gladys Walton well. Great picture for town people. Miss Walton can't make 'em fast enough for me. Advertising; local newspaper and billboards. Patronage; general. Attendance; great. Harold Clouse, Hollywood Theatre, Highwood, Minn.

RAGE OF PARIS. Well produced and pleased the women, but too much "mush" for the men. Advertising; regular posters and photos. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. A. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

REPUTATION. Good picture, nothing to rave about. Weather and other conditions not favorable to good business. This one didn't pay us. Advertising; newspaper, lobby. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. W. R. Walker, Classic Theatre, Dartmouth, Canada.

REPUTATION. Trade papers said this was fine, guess I don't know, but hardly any one liked it at all. Acting fine, but we don't like this kind. I did not say much about it and am glad of it. Patronage; community. Attendance; fair. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Illinois.

RICH GIRL, POOR GIRL. This star, Gladys Walton, always pleases and this was no exception, good program. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. L. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Calif.

Vitagraph

BRING HIM IN. Good picture, but drags in some of the places. Some patrons liked it and some knocked it. Advertising; three newspapers, window card, programs. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. J. Edw. Mitchell, Strand Theatre, Waverly, Mass.

STEELHART. Fine picture, first one of star's features. Ran this second run. Did a very good business for second run. Patrons well pleased. Patronage; middle class. Attendance; fair. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

Warner Bros.

WHY GIRLS LEAVE HOME. A good picture, drew fair for two days. Advertising; lobby and program. Patronage; family. Jas. J. Christie, Third Avenue Theatre, Watervliet, New York.

Comedies

THE CHAUFFEUR. (Fox). This is a highly amusing two reel comedy, starring Clyde Cook. This star has never failed to get the laughs here. Advertising, throwaways. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

HAUNTED SPOOKS (Pathe). Very good comedy. Harold Lloyd does much better work in this than in "High and Dizzy." Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

HIGH AND DRY (Educational). A splendid good comedy with many new and surprising situations. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Ark.

PLAYHOUSE (First National). Consider this one of the poorest of Keaton's comedies, not as good as the ones he made for Metro, although First National raised the price on us for it. The laughs are few and far between. Ran with "Kismet," a wonderful production. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; only fair. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre Harrisburg, Illinois.

Serials

WINNERS OF THE WEST (Universal). The kind of serial to get behind and boost. I have a bad night for it, but it sure is good. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. L. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal.

Short Subjects

AESOP'S FABLES (Pathe). Sugar coated pills of wisdom, yes they are that and some more. They are good entertainment for adults and the kids eat them up. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. A. L. Middleown, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

DEATH TRAP (Pathe). Good two reel subject. Tom Santschi series have all been good so far. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wis.

State Rights

BLACK SHEEP (Federated). Good western, little slow in places, but at that it will please all. Dandy fight in the last reel. They will go out well pleased. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

EYES OF THE WORLD (Clune). Very deep play. 50% unable to understand unless book has been read. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. W. S. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

"Where Is My Wandering Boy To-Night?"

Equity Special Feature Has Splendid Box OfficeTitle With Entertaining Human Interest Story

Reviewed by Roger Ferri

In addition to having a title that should prove an excellent box office magnet, this new State right special of which much has been heard in the past few months is in possession of a really splendid human interest story—a story that will not fail to entertain once your patrons are brought inside the house. The only objection any one can find with this picture is that perhaps it is too realistic and a page taken from life itself, but it is the picturization of human events that the theatre public of today seems to demand and unless we are entirely wrong, "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" will be held responsible for shattering many records.

Just how much profit an exhibitor can reap with this production depends entirely on the manner in which he exploits it. With a good draw title, a mother story that not only entertains, but brings tears as well, this picture lends itself to all angles of exploitation. The title is borrowed from a famous hymn with which every man, woman and child is acquainted. But back of that title is a good production, artistic and realistic. The story is smoothly told. Scenically it is one of the prettiest features offered on the State rights market.

Every character is real. There is a good old kindly mother, a good bad son, a sweet trusting and loyal sweetheart and people met daily in the city and in the country. It is a story of good folks. It is a story of Main Street and Broadway, of the soda fountain and the cabarets, of the little church and the crowded dance halls, of a mother and her wayward boy, of a country lass and a chorus girl.

"Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" does not lecture. It is entertainment that is at all times enjoyable. There are human thrills, action, romance and adventure. It is a long way from the warmth of a comfortable country homestead to the breadline on the Bowery, and from the village store to Sing Sing; yet the adventure of Garry Beecher links them in a fascinating theme that you can rightly recommend your patrons to digest.

Cullen Landers as Garry is youthful and successful in a role that is common in life. But the honors for acting go to Virginia True Boardman as the mother and Ruth "Patsy" Miller as Lorna Owens. Their work will not soon be forgotten by those who view the picture. The rest of the cast satisfies. J. P. Hogan and Millard Webb collaborated on the direction and turned out a picture of which they can feel proud.

The Story

Garry Beecher meets chorus girl, with whom he falls in love. Forgetting his mother and lifelong sweetheart, Lorna, he goes to the city, but arrives to see his ideal leave in the company of a millionaire. He returns home, but is tempted to rob his former employer. With plenty of money he returns to the city, seeks out Veronica and starts on a career of reckless spending. His money runs out. Despite this fact he buys the girl a diamond necklace. He is unable to pay and threatened with arrest, he seeks to recover the necklace. The girl refuses to surrender it, but when Garry angrily demands it, she steals into her boudoir, quietly summons the police and then hands the necklace to the youth, just as the police arrive. Garry is arrested on a charge of grand larceny, convicted and sentenced to ten years in prison. Back home his mother and sweetheart patiently await his return. Realizing that his mother's heart is broken, Lorna sends her letters with Garry's signature. These letters come as a Godsend to the brokenhearted mother. In prison, Garry saves the warden from an attack from one of the prisoners. A friendship between Garry and warden results. The warden learns of Garry's mother and urges the boy to write to her. A wholesale break is perpetrated by the prisoners, who seize the warden, hold up the guards and escape. Garry follows. The prisoners with the warden securely tied, commandeer an engine. The dash for liberty starts. Garry commandeers an automobile. A race between engine and automobile follows. At a crossing Garry gets the opportunity to jump on the engine. A bitter fight with two of the prisoners results in a victory for Garry, who grabs the warden just as a freight train is sighted coming in the opposite direction. At the crossing, he grabs the warden and jumps to a bank to safety. A moment later the collision comes. The warden, grateful to Garry, devotes his time to securing a pardon for the young boy, who, wiser and a better son, returns to his lonely mother and awaiting sweetheart, never to leave home again.

"Saturday Night"

Should Make Any Night a Banner Night For Exhibitors—Paramount Picture.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

Under the distinctly catchy title, "Saturday Night," Paramount releases a picture that has many strong points of box office advantage, the principal ones being the name of Cecil B. DeMille as producer and a magnetic cast. Exhibitors have surely found that his patrons will flock to a theatre showing a DeMille production because they know that they are going to get what they want in their screen entertainment. And if careful introductory propaganda is planted enforcing that the film deals with a modern problem of inter-class marriage another box office advantage will be realized.

After a theatre manager has gathered in his crowd he may rest assured that it will suffer no disappointment, in the matter of entertainment. "Saturday Night" is amusing in the extreme. And it presents an underlying problem that has far from negative appeal—that of the mistake of marriages contrasted in haste between persons of different social classes. The film is so effective in the latter matter that it often has the appearance of being interesting propaganda against what has falsely come to be known as democracy. It proves conclusively that, except in rare instances, like to like and kind to kind is the best policy for happiness in marriage. And it does what should be done, in pointing out that each division in the socal plane is quite all right in its own way.

The production has been staged with the customary DeMille lavishness and attention to detail. Some instances of lack of restraint in telling the story are present, but they in no way destroy the entertainment value of the whole. Mr DeMille worked from an expert scenario made by Jeanie Macpherson, who also wrote the original story, which is in part an absolutely new variation upon the Cinderella theme. But the director and author are not wholly responsible for the success of the picture. Much credit for this belongs to the cast. Although all the members of this group seem to give inspired performances, special mention should be made of Leatrice Joy, first, and Conrad Nagel next. Miss Joy does the best work of her career and makes a difficult characterization that will be talked about, because so many have tried to do the same thing and have utterly failed owing to no realization of the value of restraint.

"Saturday Night" was chosen to play at the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, New York, simultaneously during the week of January 22 and as this publication goes to press records were being set up in both houses.

"A Virginia Courtship"

May McAvoy Charming and More Beautiful In a Sentimental Story of the South.

Reviewed by M. A. Malaney.

One who has followed the starring career of May McAvoy cannot help but believe that this charming little actress has a particularly bright future ahead of her. She has been seen in three pictures: "Sentimental Tommy," "Morals" and the present one, "A Virginia Courtship," which comes near to being as good as "Morals." Certainly it has an appealing, though not highly dramatic story, an excellent supporting cast and beautiful settings. It is romantic comedy, and only the introduction of a counterfeiting plot keeps it from being pure romance.

Miss McAvoy is a hoyden. Although the principal romance does not concern her, she becomes involved in a love affair, too, and by the time the picture is over, there are two weddings scheduled. All the scenes are laid in the South, most of them upon two adjoining estate. Those who like romance, and plenty of it, in the Blue Ridge Mountain country, will get their fill in "A Virginia Courtship." Whether the star is popular enough to get them in to see it, certain it is that the folks will go away with a very pleasing taste and more words of admiration for May McAvoy.

The Cast

Prudence Fairfax.....May McAvoy
Colonel Fairfax.....Alec B. Francis
Betty Fairfax.....Jane Keckley
Squire Fenwick.....L. M. Wells
Tom Fairfax.....Casson Ferguson
Constance Llewellyn.....Kathlyn Williams
Dwight Neville.....Richard Tucker
Buck Lawton.....Guy Oliver
Zeb ..... Vern Winters

The Story

Prue is the adopted daughter of Colonel Fairfax, a lovable old bachelor, who has never married because of a misunderstanding with his sweetheart, Constance Llewellyn, twenty years before. They had lived upon adjoining plantations. Constance left for the North, married another. Having become a widow, she returns to her old home after these years. This develops an embarrassing situation, and the Colonel determines to leave. Prue attempts to consummate the old romance, and in doing so develops one of her own even more unusual. The colonel's nephew comes home from an agricultural college and they fall in love. Meantime Neville, a neighbor, has fallen in with a gang of counterfeiters, and he has by trickery attempted to raise money to buy the colonel's estate, at a sheriff's sale. Prue is instrimental in unfolding the plot, and causes the arrest of Neville, after she has been seized by him and imprisoned in his home. A surprise meeting between the colonel and his old sweetheart has been arranged and the story ends with happiness for both of the loving couples.

Advertising Catchlines:

Take a Trip to the Sunny South in Midwinter Without Going from Town. See May McAvoy in "A Virginia Courtship."

A Modern Love Story and One of Many Years Ago. See This Strange Contrast in "A Virginia Courtship" With May McAvoy.

Exploitation Angles: The best thing we know of in exploiting this is to play up May McAvoy stronger than ever. The play was produced on the stage so long ago that the present generation would not be familiar, so would suggest that you say nothing about this. Bring out the fact that it is a very modern story interwoven with a romance of bygone days. There is a big cast. Mention their names in your ads. Comment of theatre patrons as they go out after a McAvoy picture is about her beauty. That's the particular thing they see in her and that's why she should be relied upon in boosting this picture.

"Dangerous Pastime"

Lew Cody Reappears As the Irresponsible Lover In Light Drama Made By Gasnier.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

With a story that is flimsy and unreal, Lew Cody's "Dangerous Pastime" does not carry a definite marketable appeal. In a picture of this type, where the star appears in one of his irresponsible-lover roles, and where the prime motive is lightness and frivolity, it is necessary more than in a feature with a stronger theme, that the characterizations be pointed and the comedy smart. There is a more than promising start in this case with enough surprises to promote frequent thrills of anticipation. Up to the moment of the he-vamp's meeting with the conspiring widow, the picture is a success and is not ordinary. But continuing from that point, the lady's tactics in attempting to compel his lover are so weird and unnatural that the spectator is inclined to think that the scenes before him are a dream from which the chief performer will presently awake. But such was not the author's plan. It has all been presented as actually happening and when it is all over and the philanderer escapes from the siren's net and poison and wanders back to the little girl who has been waiting there is a distinct impression with the spectator of having received rather fleeting, inconsequential entertainment.

The cast, as a whole, gets admirable results with fragile roles. Lew Cody, who in this instance is a type rather than an actor, offers a consistent performance. Cleo Ridgely is too likable personally and possessed of too honest features to be a success as a wicked vampire, although she dresses the part, with excellent judgment.

The Cast

Barry Adams.....Lew Cody
Mrs. Stowell.....Cleo Ridgely
Celia ..... Elinor Fair
Mrs. Gregor.....Mrs. Irving Cummings

Story by Wyndham Martin.
Scenario by H. Tipton Steck.
Directed by James W. Horne.
Length, 5 Reels.

The Story

Barry Adams has proposed to Celia in 57 ways but she refuses because she believes he is too fond of adventure and "affairs" to settle down. After the fifty-eighth refusal, he starts out in search of adventure and finds it shortly in receiving a mysterious note from "The Lady of Orchids." He traces it and finds that the lady is one with whom he was in love some time previous. She tries to rekindle the flames but he is not interested. More determined to win him, she drugs him and keeps him guarded in an isolated country place. He manages to get away only to run into her again and upset another of her romances. He returns, as might be expected, sadder and wiser, to the girl who has waited.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

His Sweetheart Refused Him Because He Was Too Fond of Philandering—He Went Forth in Search of Adventure and Got It! And Returned With the Pleasant News That There Was Only One Woman in the World For Him.

Exploitation Angles: Play up the theme of the story along with the star, for they go together. Pile it on the question as to whether old love can ever be reawakened. Get interest in the theme and it doesn't matter how thin the story may be. If they like Cody, they will like him in this.

"The Strength of the Pines"

William Russell Is Cast in a Sturdy Role in a Sturdy Picture by Fox.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

"The Strength of the Pines" is far more favorable to William Russell than have been some of his recent features. In this, he is cast as the usual red-blooded hero, but with somehow more of a purposeful and pointed characterization than is customarilly his. The frequent mistake of over-emphasizing the romantic and sentimental value of his performance has been almost entirely omitted, and the harder qualities which are far more characteristic in his case, have been brought out. This does not mean that the picture is lacking in a love motive, but only that it has been tempered to suit the star's personality. A similar improvement is shown in the selecting of Irene Rich to play the strong, womanly role opposite. She is an attractive, ambitious type and lends character to every scene in which she participates.

Some of the situations of danger are too forced. For instance, the idea of the two staying over a second day after their marvellous escape from the band of law-breakers who would be sure to continue their pursuit shows an implausible degree of foolhardiness. Also the liklihood of venturing forth for revenge in a storm that threatens death at the start, is so slight that the picture here is liable to be criticised.

The Cast

Bruce Duncan.....William Russell
Linda ..... Irene Rich
Simon Turner.....Lester Bates
Bill Turner .....Arthur Morrison
Elmira Ross.....Lule Warrenton

Story by Edison Marshall.
Scenario by Louise Lewis.
Directed by Edgar Lewis.
Length, 4,382 Feet.

The Story

Bruce Duncan, just out of college, receives word that Linda, supposedly his sister, is in danger. He hastens West and learns that her father's property has come into the hands of the Turner's, who forged the deed years previous to Linda's return from the orphanage where both she and Bruce were raised. Bruce discovers that she is no relation to him, but that both were placed in the orphanage together to escape the abuse of Turner, after their father died. Only one person is living who is witness to the forgery and the story concerns Bruce's attempt and difficulties in getting back the property, which he does through the girl's assitance.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

The Strength of the Forrest Was An Inspiration to the Man Who Had Willed to Bring About Justice to the Girl Who Had Been Robbed of Her Home and Happiness by a Gang Who Had No Scruples—and What He Willed, He Accomplished.

Exploitation Angles: Play up the star and sell through him.

"The Midnight Stage"

Speed and action mark this three-reel Pathe Playlet, which is the first of the new series. This production has been cut down from five reels in which it was originally issued, and the elimination of two reels has striped the picture down to the very meat of the story. Frank Keenan is the star, and he appears in a dual role, that of a bandit, and also a ranchman and gambler. Mignon Anderson is cast as the gambler's daughter and the cast also includes such well-known players as Thomas Guise, Joseph Dowling and Ernest C. Warde. It is an interesting Western story, following the general lines of the stage success, "The Lyons Mail," and is effective melodrama that will satisfy the average audience.—C. S. S.

"Grand Larceny"

Claire Windsor's Beauty Helps Goldwyn Picture Built On Familiar Theme.

Reviewed by Marguerite Kemp.

The well-known theme of the busy husband and the neglected wife is given another screening in "Grand Larceny," in which Claire Windsor's winsome beauty, Elliott Dexter's charming personality, and Lowell Sherman's uncertain ability as an actor are linked together in a fairly entertaining story. The plot hinges upon the thought that stealing a man's wife is grand larceny, and the culprits will be punished as any other criminals. In the producer's effort to create sympathy for all concerned, the story suffers a few weak spots, with an air of not quite ringing true.

The picture has no exterior scenes, but the interiors are arranged with excellent taste; the furnishings of the two homes, as well as the country club, being charming examples of home-like rooms. Miss Windsor's beauty is enhanced by beautiful gowns, and her expressive eyes and charming smile give her characterization great appeal. Lowell Sherman lacks a note of sincerity throughout, and has an unfortunate habit of rolling his eyes.

The picture is well named and the theme is consistently carried out in the sub-titles.

The Cast

Kathleen Annixter.....Claire Windsor
John Annixter.....Elliott Dexter
Barry Clive.....Lowell Sherman

Story by Albert Payson Terhune.
Scenario by Bess Meredith and Charles Kenyon.
Directed by Wallace Worsley.
Length, 5,227 Feet.

The Story

John Annixter, a stern lawyer who believes in punishment for all wrong-doers, marries Kathleen, a Southern belle, to whom flirting is the breath of life. Immersed in his work, he allows Kathleen to go about under the escort of his friends. During his absence, she is annoyed by the attentions of Barry Clive, who misunderstands her flirting. As Barry is begging forgiveness, John enters. The Annixters are divorced, for the husband will not allow a word of explanation, but calls the situation Grand Larceny and declares the culprits will be punished. The seed of jealousy and suspicion thus planted makes the life of Kathleen and Clive (whom she marries in her helplessness), a constant torture, and at an accidental meeting of the three Clive begs Annixter to take Kathleen back. Kathleen at last asserts her independence, and declares she will have neither of them, but will work her way out of the tangle alone.

Exploitation Angles: Grand Larceny in most States involves theft to the value of $50 or more. Sell on the "What's a wife worth?" angle and tie the town in a knot with your talk if you cannot persuade the local paper to take up the matter for you.

"A Charmed Life"

Vitagraph has opened this comedy, which features Jimmy Aubrey, with some more or less conventional laugh-getters—such as skating on soap and a typical scene of confusion in a restaurant when the lobster comes to life. There is some attempt at plot when repeated references to the South Sea Isle are made as preparation for the hero's landing there eventually. This stimulates curiosity and the island scenes when they do arrive have the expected appeal, as there are a number of attractive girls who participate.—M. K.

"Call the Witness"

Here is an amusing single reel Pathe Comedy, starring Snub Pollard, assisted by Marie Mosquini, which is built along unusual lines. It deals with a couple who seek a divorce. In court, the wife tells her story of how the husband comes home intoxicated and while she is working over the washtub, treats her brutally. The husband then tells his side, which is exactly opposite, how he came home tired, found nothing to eat, piles of dirty dishes, etc., and men hidden under tables and in closets. The matter is finally settled, when the landlady is called to the stand and tells the truth about the matter, which ends in a reconciliation.—C. S. S.

"Wife Against Wife"

Cast Shines in Whitman Bennett-First National Production.

Reviewed by Clarence L. Linz.

"Wife Against Wife," a First National production, while not a brilliant picture, presents some bits of very clever acting. Pauline Starke, as Gabrielle Gautier, a Parisian model; Percy Marmont, as Stannard Dole, an artist who is the victim of an unfortunate marriage; Emily Fitzroy, as Mrs. Dole, and Edward Langford, as Dr. Ethan Bristol, handle their parts with exceptional ability.

Mrs. Dole, as the soured wife who would not relinquish her husband and who later vented her vindictiveness upon the artists' model, was the subject of considerable comment on the part of the audience. Portraying a very unlovable nature, Miss Fitzroy presented the part with such success that it was well taken.

The remaining member of the cast, Ottola Nesmith, as Florence Bromley, assistant to Dr. Bristol, is worthy of mention for her part in the production.

Mrs. Dole.....Emily Fitzroy
Florence Bromley.....Ottola Nesmith

Adapted from George Broadhurst's Play, "The Price."
Scenario by Dorothy Farnum.
Directed by Whitman Bennett.
Length, 6,000 Feet.

The Story

Gabrielle Gautier falls in love with an artist, Stannard Dole, who is spending his vacation in Paris. He leaves before finishing the statue for which she had posed as the model. She sees him later in New York and is amazed to find that he is married. She becomes very ill and Dole gives her over to the care of a friend of his who is a physician. The physician marries her, and Dole, declaring at the last that Gabrielle was his real inspiration, dies. Dole's wife tries to separate Gabrielle and the doctor, and is temporarily successful, but their child reunites them.

"Scenic Distortions"

One of the most interesting novelties yet seen on the screen appeared at a Broadway picture house this week. It was "Scenic Distortions," a Lyman H. Howe Film Fantasy, distributed by Educational. The cameraman was shown "hogging" the screen while automobiles and people and animals walked upside down or appeared greatly distorted. Evidently the camera faced mirrors, either concave or convex, as suited the fancy of the cameraman.—S. S.

Movie Chats No. 75

This Movie Chat gives a diversified number of entertaining and instructive pictures. For instance, there are "shots" of cunning Indian papooses, showing the way they are wadded and swathed in the contrivances that their mothers carry on their backs. Then there are also films of scientific subjects, which have to do with electrical matters, and others which inform the spectator, and show in detail the beating heart of a fish which has been extracted from the body. It is stated that the hearts of the lower vertebrates can beat for hours, days or even weeks if kept under certain conditions. Pictures of historic sites in New York State, and views of the Capitol at Albany, the oldest capital city in the United States, are interesting.—T. S. daPa.

"The Forgotten Woman"

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

The Cinderella theme has once again found its way to the screen in "The Forgotten Woman," in which the heroine makes the usual grade, from rags to riches—all this through the romantic intercedence of an admirer. From a life that is almost the last word in sordidness and abuse, she finds a happy relief one evening in attending the first "dressed-up" party of her life, and learning after a melodramatic adventure that she is actually the daughter of fortune. The story is a typical example of the screen material that occasions the frequent taunt "it happens only in the movies." It is entertaining at times, but too far removed from common experience to be deeply appreciated.

The case assists notably in keeping up the interest. Pauline Starke's ability in portraying the tragic and pathetic is one of the most sincere contributions to the picture and Alan Forrest is an attractive Prince Charming. A realistic character bit is offered by Laura Winston, in an unlovely role. The lives of the shantyboaters in the South is the background for the story and if extreme wretchedness and squalor accompany the existence of this people, the scenes are indeed typical.

The Cast

Julian LaRose.....J. Frank Glendon
Dixie LaRose.....Pauline Starke
Keith Demming.....Alan Forrest
"Sis" Maloney.....Laura Winston
Joe Maloney.....Roy Coulson
Colonel Demming.....L. M. Wells

Story by Evelyn Campbell.
Scenario by Catherine Carr.
Directed by Park B. Frame.
Length, About 5 Reels.

The Story

Dixie, a water waif, is "adopted" by wretched Mrs. Maloney and her son, Joe, both of whom make her life miserable, finally fooling her into a marriage with Joe. He is arrested on his wedding night and sent to prison. Sometime later Dixie is found by Keith Demming, who falls in love with her and takes her to the first party. That night Joe returns, but the unexpected appearance of Dixie's father saves Dixie from a life with Jo. He is accidentally killed and she is free to marry Keith.

"Step This Way"

This two-reel Mermaid, released by Educational, has both good and bad comedy, with the latter predominating. Its chief fault is that it too obviously tries to be funny. This lack of spontaneity, and a repetition of supposedly comic stunts until they become wearisome, makes it drag. The circus backgrounds are generally effective and help in the working out of some hearty laughs, but an endless chasing of two men by a cop detracts from the stuff that is amusing.—S. S.

"The Grim Comedian"

Lloyd's Goldwyn Production Seeks to Prove Man Has No Control Over Fate.

Reviewed by Sumner Smith.

Starting with the philosophical overture that life is a grim comedian, this Frank Lloyd production for Goldwyn of Rita Weiman's story bends its dramatic narrative toward proving the cynical premise. It is constructed as a story told by a man who was obliged by relentless fate to give up the girl he loved, but the man is so vividly delineated as a selfish trifler with feminine hearts that he fails at the end to arouse the fullest measure of sympathy for himself. It is, however, a thematic story, and succeeds in driving its point home.

Lloyd has seen to it that all the possible elements of drama and some of melodrama are used. Therefore, while the plot action differs from that of the usual run of films, after all the picture is only one more of those dealing with the horror of a mother at finding her old beau making love to the daughter she wishes to keep free from sex entanglements. This time the story has a theatrical environment.

The film is unquestionably dramatic. An interest in the characters is established at the first and steadily increases as the plot is developed and the suspense becomes acute. Jack Holt's acting is largely responsible for this. His characterization of the man-about-town is so true—and stern that it robs the character of possibilities for commiseration at his fate. This is not wholly Holt's fault, as scenes are introduced showing him playing with various women—an unnecessary touch, it seemed. The other players do not rise to any great emotional heights, though Phoebe Hunt in the mother role tries her hardest, but are merely adequate. Of them John Harron as the boy sweetheart is perhaps the most convincing.

The Cast

Marie Lamonte.....Phoebe Hunt
Harvey Martin .....Jack Holt
Dorothy .....Gloria Hope
Old Dad .....Bert Woodruff
Gracie Moore.....Laura Lavarnie
Billie Page .....Mae Hopkins
Geoffrey Hutchins .....John Harron
Carleton Hutchins .....Joseph J. Dowling

Story by Rita Weiman.
Adapted by Bess Meredith.
Directed by Frank Lloyd.
Photographed by Norbert Brodine
Length, five reels.

The Story

Marie Lamonte, an actress, leaves Harvey Martin, a man-about-town, when her daughter Dorothy leaves a convent to join her. Her one thought is that the child be kept sweet and unsullied by the influences of the world, and she welcomes the attention paid Dorothy by Geoffrey Hutchins, a boy who shows promise as a painter. Martin meets and falls in love with the girl, turning her head, but, though his love is true, gives up Dorothy in response to the pleas of her mother.

Exploitation Angles: Play both the star and the author,, and touch only lightly on the theme, giving more of your space to selling the theatrical life idea, for the stage appeal will be stronger than the straight story to most patrons.

"Handle with Care"

Grace Darmond Featured In Satirical Comedy Distributed Through Associated Exhibitors.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

There are several entertaining moments in "Handle With Care," an Associated Exhibitors production, together with some good comedy situations. The story is built on the theme of the neglected wife, but in this case the husband employs unusual methods to prove to his wife that she still loves him. It is played as a satirical comedy and thereby loses some of its force and does not at all times get over. The nature of the story would appear to lend itself better to farce comedy.

The production starts off well, but does not keep up the same pace throughout, and there is considerable excess footage. The cast contains several well-known players, all of whom give fine portrayals. Grace Darmond, who is featured, is attractive, wears beautiful clothes and is entirely satisfactory. Harry Myers appears as a cad, James Morrison as a quiet young chap, and William Courtleigh as an elderly "perennial lover." With such names as these, it would appear that box-office value was sacrificed in the selection of Landers Stevens, who is not so well known, for the role opposite Miss Darmond; however, Stevens is satisfactory in this character.

The story is not altogether logical, and played stright, it stretches the credulity to believe that the husband was to have employed the tactics he did in "taming" his wife.

The Cast

Jeanne Lee.....Grace Darmond

The Story

Jeanne, wooed by five men of different types, chooses David Norris, a lawyer. Two years later she thinks she has made a mistakes, reminding David that while he neglects her the others said they would die for her. He agrees to give her a divorce if either of them will elope with her, provided he is given the opportunity to prove they are worthy. After varied experiences with each, during which she finds that her proposals to elope are either turned down on flimsy pretexts, or accepted from ulterior motives which David exposes showing their unworthiness, Jeanne finds that she really loves her husband and everything ends satisfactorily.

"Hold the Line"

This Sunshine Comedy with Jimmie Savo works up to some very funny stunts in connection with learning to become a foot-ball hero. The physical tests and contortion which he undergoes are funny to an almost uncanny degree and the effects in this scene, although necessarily accomplished by a trick are sufficiently natural to take one's breath away. The grandstand scenes, too, mark this Fox subject as being considerably more pretentious than the average.—M. K.

"Why Men Forget"

Nothing to Redeem This English Picture Released by R-C.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

If the Robertson-Cole Company felt that it just had to release another bad picture it might be said that it could have found one or two in this country without going abroad for one. However, this enterprise in finding poor pictures seems lately to have become a habit with the firm, so it evidently wished to point out that it would not play favorites in nationalities. "Why Men Forget" is an English importation that has nothing to redeem it, nor anything that would justify more than the slightest consideration.

It makes a great to do concerning characters about which the most interested spectator could not find anything to claim his interest. They are utterly negative. It is morbid and never for a moment holds the attention, but the fault does not lie with the original material upon which the picture has been founded, but in the treatment. "Why Men Forget" is said to be an adaptation of George Gissing's novel, "Demos."

A good exploitation stunt might be to have patrons guess the connection between the title and the story.

The Story

The story concerns Richard Mutimer, who is discharged for taking up the time of the men in a factory while listening to his socialistic utterances. He becomes suddenly wealthy through the death of an uncle. Then he proceeds to forget his old sweetheart, Emma Vine, and marries a society girl. The uncle's will is found and the estate, it is disclosed, belongs to other heirs. But there is ingrained in each character a liking for the things of the past—the chauffeur wants his Coney Island, his wife prefers the more refined entertainments. The chauffeur and the girl of the laundry soon drift toward each other and the millionaire proves his heroism to the heiress who believed that trait could be found only among the strong-armed poor.

"The Ruling Passion"

Story, Direction and Acting Maintain High Standard in United Artists' Picture, Starring George Arliss

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

Any lingering impression that the genius of George Arliss is limited to character roles is completely dispelled after seeing his fine handling of a conventional part in "The Ruling Passion." This is a picture with an exceptional appeal—that afforded by splendid acting and directing of a very human story. Evidently not intended as a one-star vehicle, it has not been distorted into that by the star who shows throughout, the good taste that marks the whole offering, and gives his undivided attention to the business of acting, and not posing. The happy result is a well-balanced, normal production.

The situation in the narrative is one that has confronted thousands of active business men who have discovered that a little physical labor is a fine cure for mental exhaustion, but the theme has not been developed as propaganda, but first, last and always as entertainment. It is the depiction of an experience which, although unusual, might actually have happened to any man of intelligence and imagination. As one of the shrewdest, most intellectual actors of the screen, Mr. Arliss is perfectly suited to the leading part and his fantastic humor is an impetus to many delicious comedy scenes. There is a refreshing quality about the performance as a whole which, added to the ingenious unfoldment of events, gets the interest and clinches it. The sub-titles, because of their apt composition and infrequency, are especially commendable. The direction, by Harmon Weight, is superb and the continuity is especially expert.

There is, however, one important question to be raised—What, where and when is "the ruling passion" promised by the title?

The Cast

Length, 7,000 feet.

The Story

James Alden is told by the family physician to retire, because of his nervous mental condition. Dissatisfied with nothing but social interests, he slips it over on his wife and daughter, by looking for a "job" and finding it, as part owner of a garage, unknown to them. In this he finds such bitter competition that he is kept on the alert to make a go of it. Many of the complications are amusing, one of these being his daughter's interference because of her interest in the partner, although she is innocent of her father's connection with the business. In the end he is successful—and his daughter is too.

"French Heels"

Discrimination Shown in Casting of Irene Castle in Hol-Tre Production—Distribution By Hodkinson.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

Picture Irene Castle as the lily of a lumber camp, and you have the startling, but artistic, contrast which has been accomplished in "French Heels." Far from the lumber yards, however, are the first scenes which depict the popular danseuse at her best, as she is known and admired on Broadway. And quite as perishable and theatrical are these first surroundings as the latter ones are real and natural, a circumstance which promotes the guess that both the serious and the frivolous will find entertainment in this picture.

The metaphor of the lily holds good further in describing the star. Always lithe and decorative, she is at the same time, so passive that she is unfitted for moments of emotional expression. Fortunately this has been realized better than in many of her former releases, and no great dramatic strain has been placed upon her. In fact, her role and the entire feature has been planned to exploit her in the most attractive way, and to minimize her limitations as an actress.

Miss Castle's dance numbers are charmingly representative of her art, and her associates and the sets used for these scenes assist in an effect of smartness and good taste. They are not too long to bore those who do not like dancing. The latter part, devoted to her uncomfortable stay in the wilds, is too long, however, for the sake of the dramatic interest. As usual, special mention should go to the clothes worn by the star who can teach every woman something about style.

The Story

Palma May decides to commercialize her talents as a dancer to make her living after the death of her father and brother. Lieut. Tabor, her brother's "buddy," manages to meet her one night after seeing her dance, and falls in love with her. The two marry and go out West to win Tabor, Senior's approval. Keith Merwyn, Palma's manager, is jealous and follows. Palma is not suited to life in the rough lumber camp and pines for old Broadway. Merwyn meets her one evening and offers to take her back to New York with him. She is about to accept when her husband is hurt in a lumbermen's brawl. "The Fox and the Grapes"

One of the very best known of Aesop's Fables serves as the basis for this Paul Terry cartoon comedy, into which he has injected one of his typical stories filled with laughs and clever stunts, including a bird that is a crack golf player, and several mice that steal the grapes, make hootch, and get tipsy. The fox, of course, does not get the grapes, and upon being chased by the dog cop says he did not want them as they were sour anyway.—C. S. S.

"Headin' West"

Fist Fights and Fine Horsemanship a Feature of Universal Western, Starring Hoot Gibson

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

Two or three good fist fights, plenty of fine horsemanship and hard, fast riding, not only by the star but by the leading lady and practically the entire cast, help to make "Headin' West," a Universal production starring Hoot Gibson, a satisfactory offering particularly for audiences that like Western pictures.

Although there is a novelty in the introduction, where the hero makes his appearance as a tramp at the ranch by dropping in a parachute from an aeroplane in which he has been stealing a ride, the general run of the story is similar to numerous other cowboy films, as there is the crooked foreman heading a cattle rustling gang, and other familiar devices. The story is not always logical and coincidence has been rather overworked. There are some refreshing comedy touches in which a diminutive white puppy plays an important part.

Hoot Gibson as the young chap who gets a job on the ranch and after proving his mettle turns out to be the heir to the property, fits the role to perfection. He is a wonderful horseman, and in the fights he makes them seem real and you feel that he is not winning simply for screen effect but is thoroughly capable of thrashing his opponents; besides, he has a pleasing personality. Louise Lorraine is not only attractive as the girl, but also proves that she is a fine horsewoman. In fact, the horsemanship in this production is unusually fine and thrilling. The remainder of the cast is satisfactory and there are several fine photographic shots.

The Cast

The Story

Bill Perkins, war veteran, bumming his way across country in an aeroplane, disembarks via parachute at a familiar spot on the map. Landing on a ranch, he wants a job, fails in a trial as a horseman as one of the men has played a dirty trick on him, but is accepted as the cook's helper. The crooked foreman, to get even with a girl who has high ideas, persuades Bill to impersonate the missing heir to the property. At an opportune moment, the masquerade is revealed, Bill has, however, discovered that the ranch gang are cattle rustlers, and finally not only lands them all in jail, but proves that he is really the rightful heir, and incidentally wins the girl's love.

"The Last Trail"

Superb Action and Lighting in Fox Rendition of Zane Grey's Famous Story.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

For several reasons "The Last Trail" is a picture with unusual magnetism. The value of good photography in lending color and feeling to the action is finely illustrated here. In the scenes of spectacular riding, the long shots of artistic interiors, in the tense close-ups and in countless other instances the lighting is so skillful that the effect of illusion is greatly increased.

The picture has more than technical merit. The action, individually and collectively, is vivid, and splendid directing is evident in the building of both the important scenes and the smaller ones.

The conflict is continued and varied and, instead of being inserted for merely spectacular reasons, it is always substantiated by dramatic circumstances. There is a slight strain of humor, particularly in some of the sub-titles, that adds more than casual interest. Of the many thrills, the best, perhaps, is realized in the fight on the precipitous stone embankment and the on-rush of the waters following the explosion of the dam. Here there is a speed that is unbroken. Maurice Flynn and Wallace Beery deserve credit for the success of this scene as well as many others. Rosemary Theby has a dashing role which she does with verve and the entire cast proves remarkably responsive.

The Story

The operations of a lone bandit known as "the night hawk," have held a frontier town in terror and when a stranger appears in town on horseback and does not reveal his identity, he is regarded as suspicious. Winifred, engaged to William Kirk, who is engineer of the dam construction, shelters the stranger from the sheriff. Kirk manages to get the stranger jailed, but he escapes. Then Kirk, taking Winifred with him, attempts to trap the bandit in a cave but after shooting the bandit discovers that he is not the stranger after all. Kirk decides to steal the employee's payroll and blow up the dam so as to make a get away. This he does, but is caught, and Winifred and the stranger, who proves to be an engineer sent out secretly to oversee the works, escape after an exciting experience.

"Convict 993"

Irene Castle is star of the second of the three-reel Pathe playlets which were originally issued in five reels. As with the first one, excess footage has been eliminated and the story materially speeded up. It is a romantic, mystery drama wherein the outcome is carefully concealed almost until the final close-up, in fact, some may consider that this is overdone as the sub-titling is designed to make you believe that the heroine is a crook when in reality she is a detective who even went to the extent of serving a month in jail to get a line on a notorious gang of crooks.

The story is interestingly told and provides as good or better entertainment than many five-reelers. The production was directed by William Parke and interpreted by a cast of players who are prominent today, including Helene Chadwick, Warner Oland, Paul Everton, Harry Benham and J. H. Gilmour. Miss Castle is excellent in the leading role.—C. S. S.

"Rainbow"

Vitagraph Uses Familiar Pollyanna Material in This Feature Starring Alice Calhoun.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

If there is one screen heroine who has fulfilled her quota of public offerings, it is, it seems, the little girl who has gone through reels and reels of patient kindnesses, adding sugar to the lemonade of life wherever she goes. Not infrequently she first appears as the innocent child of the open, who has been at once daughter and mother to some poor old man, in this case three old men, who stand in danger of being swindled out of property. Her trip to the city, where, wearing a hick hat and carrying seventeen bundles, she visits a rich relative, follows. The subsequent events can more easily be guessed than written and the most natural guess will in all likelihood be in line with "Rainbow."

Upon Alice Calhoun, has the unfortunate task of playing this most superlative of all Pollyannas, fallen. Any restraint from being unduly harsh in criticism is due to her charming personality which is as usual, delightful.

The Story

"Rainbow" is a tale of a young girl brought up by three doting self-appointed daddies. It gets its name from the heroine, Rainbow Halliday, a young girl of the "Pollyanna" type, and presents a contrast of the care-free life in the country with the artificiality of society. While the heroine moves from the simple life into high society, her head is not turned and she is not spoiled by polish. In fact, the spectator leaves this girl as he finds her—the simple, innocent country maiden attached to the three daddies but polished by contact with the world.

It is cleverly distributed by Pathe and featuring Snub Pollard, assisted by Marie Mosquini. Pollard is cast as the governor, whose life is in constant jeopardy because of the bomb throwers who use every conceivable means to get him. Eugene O'Brien in the role of a city chap who goes to the country to claim his deceased uncle's farm and finds that he has been defrauded by the village squire, is rather interesting and entertaining and is afforded many opportunities of retaining his popularity with his many admirers. Rural life with its many amusing scenes are faithfully reproduced. Length, About 5,000 Feet.

The Story

Bruce Edwards, returning from the city to take possession of the estate willed to him by his uncle, finds that Squire Willets claims ownership and shows documentary proof. Mrs. Gordon, mother of June, with whom Bruce is in love, has proof that Willets is a scoundrel but warns Bruce not to tell because Willets holds a mortgage on her property and she is afraid to offend him. Bruce works secretly, but is falsely accused of theft by the Squire who has him jailed. A friend prys the jail lock, and Bruce escapes. He makes the Squire believe, by a clever ruse, that the swamp land which the Squire had traded for the estate is valuable for manufacturing purposes and gets back his uncle's property. He and June leave for their honeymoon and the Squire learns that the swamp is worthless.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Union Displays Good Sense

For the reason that I do not wish to subject the union to any possibility of a come-back, at least until I see what, if any backing it will have in its move, the name of the union from which the following letter was received will be kept secret.

May say, however, that the letter is under the official seal of the union and the union is a projectionist (operator) union in a well organized town (100 per cent., sofar as concerns projectionists) of something like a half million population.

Just what it might be possible to accomplish in the matter of securing adequate representation on the executive board and in the International office I cannot say, but I do not regard the office of International President as among the possibilities for the projectionist end. And anyhow a change in International President might not be a wise move.

I do not know, because I know but little of Stage Employee Lempke, the present International President.

He may be a very capable man, and the fact that he has apparently either himself used, or has allowed those subordinate to him to use what opportunity they possessed to injure me, weighs as nothing. I am for the man for International President who can bring about the greatest amount of good for the men, remembering always that the mere forcing up of wages is not all that is to be accomplished.

Charles Shay was THE man, but he is out and I don't believe could be induced to return to office.

A Fight Should Be Made

I do believe, however, that in any event a fight for two things should be made, and this department, with whatever influence it may have, is at the service of those who may wish to make it, always provided a sufficient number of unions signify a willingness to take up the matter to make it worth while.

There are many progressive unions. How many of you are willing to make a campaign for (a) at least one international officer other than members of Executive Board AND two members of the Executive Board. (b) The changing of the "Moving Picture Machine Operater" in the name of the organization to Motion Picture Projectionists.

Unless further change were made in the name it would then stand:

International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Motion Picture Projectionists of the United States and Canada.

Any union willing to take up this matter must write this department, under its seal. Its name and location will NOT be divulged without its own official consent, but I suggest that this sanction be given.

The letter reads:

Mr. F. H. Richardson,
Projection Dept., Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Dear Brother Richardson: Your article in December 24 issue of the Moving Picture World, regarding the I. A. and our lack of adequate representation on the Executive Board and in the International offices, was read and commented on at our last meeting.

This local desires to inform you that it fully indorses the article in question and believes that every "operators'" local should start immediate action to obtain a fifty per cent. (50%) projectionist representation on the Executive Board of the I. A. at the next convention.

This local has adopted as its slogan: "A PROJECTIONIST FOR OUR NEXT INTERNATIONAL PRESIDENT," and have already instructed our delegates to agitate along these lines.

Signed by Secretary and Sealed.

P. S. My own personal comment is: more power to your trigger fingers—that is if you use the typewriter the same way I do.

And there you are, gentlemen. The projectionists of this country certainly are entitled to at least a larger representation than they now have in the official family of their organization; also they most certainly are entitled to select the official name they shall be known by. Personally I am not looking for a fight, but I am for anything which is for the best interests of the projectionists, and a fight (if fight it must be) won't give heart failure.

Managerial Incapacity

Ordinarily I pay no attention to unsigned letters, but this time I will take a chance and print one. It comes from New York City. Here it is:

Some time ago one of the members of my local was "fired." As was the proper thing, the local officials attempted to save the brother his position, because there was no just cause for his dismissal. But this brother is an independent chap who has a few "international flags" (greenbacks) tucked away. He told the union officers to lay off, as he did not care to work for a manager who for any reason, or no reason at all, did not want him.

The chief objection the manager had to him was the fact that he kept and USED a pair of field glasses, which the other projectionist (the manager's pet) did not use. The projection distance was about one hundred feet. The manager's contention was that the use of the glasses proved that the projectionists' eyesight was not good.

I am working under somewhat similar conditions, and following the advice given in the projection department some time ago I procured an opera glass, though previous to that time I thought it foolish for a projectionist to buy a glass to use on his job.

Manager Reads the World

My manager reads the World from cover to cover, but was not in the game when you gave the advice named. By defending the man who was let out I have incurred the other manager's enmity, and he might convert my own manager to his way of thinking with regard to the glasses proposition.

I would therefore ask you to comment on the matter in the department, if you will.

As I have intimated, my friend is making no squawk about loosing the job, and if this were inserted over my own signature he might get "sore." His former manager prefers Snappy Stories to trade papers, so will not see what you may say about the matter.

Really, Mr. Incognito, I shall lose no sleep if he does. Sometimes it is a pleasure to tell a man he is own brother to an ass, and this is one of them.

The distance of projection is approximately one hundred feet. It is absolutely necessary to the keeping of definition (focus) perfectly sharp—or as sharp as it can possibly be made. that the projectionist have a very sharp view of fine detail on the screen.

Has He the Gall?

Will this wisehimer "manager," who I would imagine really would prefer Snappy Stories to a projection department, have the gall to tell me that a man with normal eyesight can examine detail in the foliage of a tree when he is one hundred feet away as well as he can at half that distance?

Can any man, for instance, see and examine the veins on a leaf when one hundred feet away? Will even the most stupid addlepate declare that the projectionist can possibly secure the best possible definition unless he can see very clearly every fine detail of a picture, and will he have the chilled steel nerve to say any pair of normal eyes can examine fine detail at a distance of one hundred feet, especially when compelled to look out of a comparatively light room through a port hole of none too great size.

The manager who did the firing is the one who should have himself been fired. What business was it of his anyhow, if the man was delivering the goods on the screen?

THE GATEWAY
Cartoon by G. W. Walker

For his information let me say that only last night I was in the projection room of the Capitol Theatre, of which Samuel Rothafel is manager, and Cecil Wood, chief projectionist, exhibited to me, with pardonable pride, a pair of forty dollar glasses which are kept solely and wholly to examine the picture with and see that it is in sharp focus.

The really wise manager will, if his projection distance be as much as one hundred feet, procure a good glass, and instead of firing his projectionist for using it, fire him if he does not use it, and use it regularly, too.

From Santa Fe

I was genuinely surprised to receive a letter from Santa Fe, New Mexico. Its writer is right up to date, for he signs himself W. H. Stevenson, chief projectionist, El Onate Theatre. He says:

Dear Mr. Richardson: This is a letter from the one who shoots the stars and starlets through the lens ports of the most unique theatre in all America.

It is possible the quaintness of the theatre may suggest to your mind the thought that the projection may also belong to another age. If so, please dismiss the thought. Through the help given by your Handbooks and nearly twelve years reading the projection department I am able to say that our projection is nearly all we desire it to be.

Actual experience counts for a great deal, but if we did not have the Handbook and the department I very much doubt if we would have either the equipment or the screen results we have today.

I have been helping shoot and shooting pictures for nearly twelve years, and although I have never directly asked your help, your Handbook and the department have nevertheless been my standbys during all that time, and today I would just as soon miss a meal as miss a copy of the Moving Picture World.

Great Strides Have Been Made

Great strides have been made in the improvement of projection room, but recently the president of a nearby local union came into mine with Friend Manager. He looked around and said to the manager: "There is only one thing I can see wrong with your booth, and that is you should not have those windows opening out to the outside. The "operator" will be looking at the street paraders instead of at the screen."

I informed him that there were plenty of men in the profession who would look at the screen instead of at the street, and that he need not hire street lookers.

We have an up-to-date projection room. It is well ventilated and is one any projectionist should be proud to work in. If he cannot put the results on the screen with such equipment it is time he learned some other way of making a living. There is a short article on page 946, December 24 issue. I will try and send you projection room photographs soon. Keep the good work going. More and more power to you and to your pen.

From the article in December 24 issue we learn that the El Onate is probably the only theatre in the world built on the Indian Pueblo plan, or design of architecture. I certainly would like to have some photographs of it and of its projection room.

Agrees With Stevenson

I must agree with the local president, Friend Stevenson. While it is very true that you are in a pretty reasonably warm climate, and while what you have said is true, still I have consistently opposed projection room windows which could be "looked out of."

One reason is that, while as you say, good men will not leave their projector when it is running, still sad experience has shown that a very large percentage of men will, and the window, especially if it overlooks a street, is an ever present temptation to them.

We have men like yourself who will not be tempted, but they are, I am sorry to say, sadly in the minority. Then, too, such windows flood the projection room with light at matinees, which operates to injure the sharpness of the view the projectionist has of the screen.

I am, of course, glad that we have helped you. You will find the new Handbook to very far over-top all previous editions. My compliments to you on your good and conscientious work. Keep it up.

Wants Help

J. M. Jacobs, motion picture projectionist, South Boston, Va., says:

Have been having trouble with my arc lately. Thought maybe you could help me. Have been using a motor generator set until recently, but it has broken down and now I have to use A. C. With D. C. from the M. G. set I used ¾ cored carbons above and ⅝ below, which same I continued to use after the set broke down.

Found I got fairly good results, but was not satisfied, so had manager order some A. C. White Special carbons of the same sizes, and in one of the lamps the lower gets red hot in a few seconds after the arc is struck. In the other the results are fairly good.

The lamp, the trouble is it takes current through a 30 to 60 ampere A. C. to A. C. Compensarc; the other takes current through a rheostat.

Have examined all connections and find them to be O. K. Have a 144-foot distance of projection. Don't you think it would be better if I used the same size upper and lower—say ¾ inch carbons in upper and lower, at least as long as I use the White A. C. Specials? Any information you may give me will be highly appreciated.

Overloading?

It is possible you have a high voltage, and that your Compensarc is delivering considerably more than its rated amperage, thus overloading the lower (5/8) carbon. Your manager should supply you with an ammeter, which he can obtain for a comparatively small sum from the United Theatre Equipment Corporation, 25 West Forty-fifth street, New York City. I would as soon think of running a theatre of my own without an ammeter as I would of running it without any other absolutely essential piece of apparatus.

First: When the show is finished for the day, have enough extra wire handy—you can probably borrow some from the light plant, if you haven't any—to extend the wires sufficiently for the purpose.

Disconnect your wires from both the lamps, and connect those now connected to projector No. 1 to the lamp of projector No. 2, and vice versa. If you find the trouble follows the Compensarc, and that the lamp the trouble was in operates all right when connected to the rheostat, then the trouble is pretty certainly located in overloading of the carbon, though it will nevertheless be well to carefully examine the inside, or gripping surfaces of your carbon jaws, and be sure they are flat, smooth and clean, because if they be rough, warped or scaled, there will be arcing or high resistance between the carbon and metal, which generates heat in proportion to the amount of the trouble.

If Jaws Are In Good Condition

If you find the jaws to be in good condition, and that the trouble changes with the changed connection, then it is reasonably certain that your Compensarc is delivering too much current, because a five-eights cored carbon should not, under any circumstances, be overloaded to that extent with sixty amperes.

If your Compensarc has a sixty ampere maximum capacity (are you sure it is not a special machine wound to deliver 70 or 80 amperes?) then it is possible that it is working on high voltage, and is itself overloaded, though it would be possible that it would deliver high amperage without injurious overload.

To determine the latter point, get a good thermometer and measure the temperature of the surrounding air near the Compensarc. Then bed the thermometer bulb in a small ball of putty, and place it, the putty, in contact with one of the Compensarc coils, during the running of one full reel of film. If the temperature of the coil is not to exceed 72 degrees Fahr. in excess of that of the surrounding air, then the Compensarc is taking no harm from overload, or anything else.

Briefly, the trouble is one of two things, viz: overload of the carbon or poor contact between carbon and carbon jaw, qualified by the fact that it may be a combination of both.

NOTE: If you switch wires and find it necessary to splice the wires to make them reach—as will probably be the case—it is not necessary to solder the joints for such temporary use. Just clean the wire ends well and wrap them tightly together.

If you have no wire large enough, but have smaller wire, you have only to use it doubled as many times as may be necessary to make it equal a No. 6. For instance, four No. 12 or three No. 10 wires will be all right, meaning by that that you must have that many for each side of the circuit.

$7,616,000 Is to Be Expended Upon These New Picture Houses

THIS week we report seventy-five new picture houses, whose erection is now being planned or actually under way.

Although the estimated expenditure for but forty-six of the new houses are stated, it totals up to the comfortable sum of $7,616,000.

Three of the houses call for an expenditure of $1,000,000 each, one will call for $500,000, two will cost $400,000 each and three of the houses will cost $350,000, $300,000 and $275,000 respectively.

Two will cost $250,000 each and two other houses will each cost $200,000.

One house will call for $180,000 and two will cost $175,000 each.

At an expenditure of $100,000 each, three houses will be built, another will cost $80,000.

Three houses will call for $75,000 each, one will cost $70,000 and one will cost $60,000.

Two houses will call for $50,000 each, three will cost $40,000 each, while two others will cost $35,000 each.

Six of the houses will cost $30,000 each and four others will each cost $25,000, while four smaller houses will be erected at an expenditure of $20,000, $15,000, $11,000 and $10,000 respectively.

The Geographical Distribution

The new houses will be geographically distributed as follows:

California, three; Colorado, two; Connecticut, one; Delaware, one; District of Columbia, one; Georgia, one; Chicago, five; remainder of Illinois, three; Indiana, two; Iowa, three; Kansas, one; Maine, 1; Baltimore, one; Massachusetts, one; Michigan, three; Minnesota, one; Missouri, one; Nebraska, two; New Jersey, four; New York State outside New York City, five; New York City, five; Ohio, four; Pennsylvania, nine; South Carolina, one; South Dakota, one; Tennessee, one; Texas, three; Virginia, one; West Virginia, four; Wisconsin, three, and Wyoming, one.

In addition to these new houses, nine items refer to the improvement and renovation of picture theatres already built and in operation.

Seating the Late Comers and Cutting Down the Usher's Mileage Simultaneously

TWO," said the usherette, and the head usher let a pair of patrons through the ropes to be guided down to the two vacant seats. "Three," said another usherette, who had just returned from a scouting expedition at the front of the house, and three more picture lovers were escorted forward. By the time that these parties were seated, usherette Number One reported another vacancy and a lonely individual was passed in to occupy that seat.

They were energetic, hard-working little usherettes and they could spot vacant seats as if they made them to order, but the amount of time they spent trotting back and forth kept the crowd piling up in the back aisle just a little bit faster than it was being seated.

And if pedometers had been part of the usherettes' costumes, they would have shown a mileage which would have represented an appalling amount of wear and tear on the theatre's floor coverings.

THE INDICATOR IN SERVICE
It is hung by a strap from the usher's neck, leaving the hands free to operate

Until quite recently, this method of seating late-coming patrons individually or in parties has been the only available one. No usher could stand up at the front of the house and shout out the vacancies without disturbing the show, and in order to avoid confusion in the aisles, it was not possible to seat more than one party at a time.

Seating Patrons with Celerity

But now along comes a device that eliminates this inconvenience, saves time, and abolishes unnecessary walking, to and from the seats, by the ushers, and seats the patrons one by one or by parties with a celerity that will reduce the standees at the back of the house to a minimum as long as the vacant seats hold out.

The device, which is the invention of Wilfred L. Guerin, vice president of the Guerin Theatre Seating System, Inc., of New Orleans, resembles in appearance a small camera with a leather covered case. On the front of this case are arranged two rows of small glass jewels, which may be illuminated by means of tiny incandescent bulbs at the will of the usher, who carries the device hung from a leather strap around the neck.

The upper row of jewels, when illuminated, are snow white, while the lower row are light red. The upper or white row of jewels indicate two or more vacant and adjoining seats. The lower or red jewels indicate the single and separated seats which are unoccupied.

What the Device Accomplishes

Equipped with this device, the usher, standing at any row of seats, can flash a signal to the head usher as to how many seats in that row are unoccupied and whether they are singles or ensuite. The proper number of single individuals or parties may then pass down the aisle to the row indicated and are quickly seated. The usher then passes on to another row where there are vacancies, signals the number and arrangement of the unoccupied seats therein, and another batch of patrons are cared for. This operation may be repeated, by the usher, row by row, until every vacancy in the house is filled.

Not a word need be spoken by the usher in the aisle to the head usher and as the jeweled lights simply glow without casting light rays in the faces of the audience, there is nothing to distract the attention of the patrons from the picture.

Light, Compact and Practical

The whole device is light, compact and practical. The necessary lighting batteries, incandescent bulbs and the jewel signal lights are installed in one casing and the location of seats, either single or in groups, may be indicated by the usher at the same time with the use of but one hand.

The apparatus, which is known as the Guerin Junior Vacant Seat Indicator, constitutes a particularly important step forward in efficient theatre management, and houses so equipped are bound to acquire an edge over those which rely upon the older methods of communication between ushers.

Powers in Traymore

W. Q. Keene of the Motion Picture Equipment Corporation, visited Harrisburg last Friday and reports business outlook very good there. Two Type "E" Power's machines have been installed at the Traymore Hotel, Atlantic City.

Norris Turns Inventor

Louis Norris, formerly an inspector in the Universal Chicago office, but now at Dwight, Illinois, where he operates for the Blackstone Theatre management, has invented an automatic motor-driven re-wind machine that can be set for a certain footage and stops wherever arranged for on a measurement dial.

Narcey of Simplex Now Public Projectionist

Dave Narcey, who for the past five years has been in charge of the Simplex Factory Service Department, has severed his connection with the Precision Machine Co. and is now operating with Hy Silverman, the Public Projection Rooms, at 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

DAVE NARCEY
Late of Precision, now with Public Projection Rooms

Mr. Narcey entered the employ of the Simplex organization as a road and service man, and in this position his experience as a practical projectionist for fifteen years stood him in splendid stead and earned for him an enviable reputation among Simplex and accessory circles. With the new policies of Simplex distribution, some years ago Mr. Narcey was placed in charge of the service division at the Simplex offices and in this position came in contact with thousands of users of the Simplex machines.

Mr. Narcey assures his friends that in the Public Projection Rooms where four Simplexes are rendering day and night service, they can be assured of the finest sort of treatment.

New U. T. E. Distributor Opens in Dallas, Texas

The accompanying illustrations show the attractive front and the well arranged interior of the show and ware rooms of the General Theatre Equipment Company, distributors of U. T. E. equipment, which have been recently opened in Dallas, Texas.

Leon S. Goldman, president of the General Theatre Equipment Company, announces the sale by his organization of two U. T. E. Proctor automatic projectors to the new Elm Street Theatre, a Dallas house, which will be opened in the near future.

In addition to the battery of projectors, the equipment for the Elm Street Theatre included a Hallberg motor generator.

New House for Troy

The Mitchel H. Mark Realty Company, of New York has just taken a twenty-year lease of property owned by Edward, Joseph and William Murphy of Troy, and Frank P. Dolan of Albany as the site for a new Strand Theatre which will be erected in Troy. The contract for erecting the house has been let to Shapiro & Son of New York. The house will cost about $400,000 and will seat 2,000.

The new theatre will be modeled somewhat after the Albany Strand, but will be more elaborate in some respects. The lobby will be one hundred and ten feet long and entirely of marble. It will terminate in two stairways leading into the orchestra pit and two leading to the balcony.

Swaab Reports Eight Simplex Installations

Lewis M. Swaab & Son, Philadelphia distributers of the Simplex machines, report the following installations and sales in their territory. Lagger Brothers' new theatre, Coatesville, Pa., two type "S" Simplex machines, G. E. generator and Superlight screen; also ticket chopper and other accessories. This theatre will seat 1,000 and is thirty by one hundred and ninety feet.

Two Simplex Mazda equipped machines for Edward Brown, P. O. S. of A. hall, Gordon, Pa. Two Simplex machines on the U. S. S. Chaumont.

Two Simplex machines for the Point Breeze Theatre, to replace equipment. Two Simplex machines at the Ridge Avenue Theatre and also two more for the Masonic Home, Elizabethtown, Pa.

They Agree with Us

January 20, 1922.

My Dear Mr. Keyser:

Your article, "An Extra Projector on the Floor Is Worth a Drawerful of Spare Parts," on page 216, January issue, of the Moving Picture World, is the best advice to exhibitors I have ever read in any publication anywhere. I agree with you from the first word to the last.

I have been in the game for about fifteen years and ten of them were spent in the projection rooms. An extra projector in the projection room for emergency use only is the only way to secure satisfactory screening.

The trouble with the average exhibitor is that he doesn't seem to realize the importance of the projection room equipment. I have worked in houses that, from all outward appearances, were the last word in picture theatres, with a 2x4 projection room and two old projectors that would be a disgrace to a five cent honkey tonk. These same houses would pay any amount to film service, but ask them for an extra projector and they would holler blue murder.

I know there is not a real projectionist in the country that does not agree with your article and I can hear every one of them that read it shouting, "amen brother." How any wide-awake exhibitor can read your article without realizing the importance of an extra projector for emergency use is beyond me.

Yours very truly,
CHARLES H. AMOS,
Manager, Strand Theatre,
Spartanburg, S. C.

January 9, 1922.

E. T. Keyser,
Equipment Department,
Moving Picture World.

We have read your "Better Equipment" editorial, and wish to state that it strikes the right "spot."

We recently had a case of this, where the exhibitor had one machine and in carrying the head out of the booth somebody dropped it and broke the main casting. He was simply compelled to borrow, beg or steal another mechanism.

We have had several cases where we were compelled to fix the mechanism within a few hours and assist an exhibitor to give a show with the same mechanism that day.

It seems even to pay more than one way for the exhibitor to have an extra projector on the floor, and an article of this kind is a benefit to all concerns, and we believe more especially to the wide-awake exhibitor, and we can commend on this article.

With best wishes, we remain,
Yours very truly,
MONARCH THEATRE SUPPLY CO.,
Memphis, Tenn.

January 13, 1922.

Dear Mr. Keyser:

Permit me to say that I have given the article, "An Extra Projector, Etc.," careful consideration.

As an exhibitor of almost three years' experience, will say that I have never experienced the same trouble with my machines two consecutive times. The broken or sprung part always happens where you least expect it. Furthermore, I wish to say that I have kept an emergency head for two years.

With the above remarks, you can see where I stand on the subject.

Very truly yours,
T. W. YOUNG, JR.

DON'T BELIEVE

WHEN Alan Dale in The American says:

"Here is a picture that is a triumph of imagination—a scintillant example of adroit intelligence. It does what the stage can never do. It gets away from what we call 'movie stuff.' It would make a movie fan of the screen's bitterest foes. You must see it. It is so well done, it is such good fun, it is so clever. An overwhelmingly excellent story. Don't miss it. Take my tip. It is an achievement. It is a colossal surprise."

WHEN the Evening Mail says:

"Without hesitation, one of the pictures of the year. A masterpiece. Unlike anything that has gone before. Rare delight. Only superlatives can do it justice. A true triumph. Much more could be said, but it isn't necessary. Just take a tip, though. If you don't see it you will miss one of the rarest treats that the films have granted in many a day."

WHEN the New York Telegraph says:

"'One Glorious Day' is one glorious picture. It is more fun than any picture we have ever seen with perhaps one exception. Exquisitely made."

WHEN the New York Herald says:

"A delightful skylark. One of the unique pictures of the season."

WHEN the New York Sun says:

"It stands in a class by itself, in an original vein. Excellent entertainment."

WHEN the New York Journal says:

"Broadway never before saw anything quite like 'One Glorious Day.' As comedy, as romance and as an example of what the screen can do for real entertainment it is illuminating."

WHEN the New York Telegram says:

"As a comedy it deserves to rank as one of the finest ever made."

WHEN the New York Evening Post says:

"'One Glorious Day' leaves one with a chuckle in one's throat and new respect for the producer. It is whimsically conceived, finely photographed and chock full of humor which leaves memories of a highly entertaining character. It is an event of no little importance."

WHEN the New York Times says:

"Can anything imaginative come out of Hollywood? It can. It has. It is 'One Glorious Day.' Full of spirited comedy, the whole story moves briskly. A skilful and ingenious piece of work."

WHEN the New York Tribune says:

"Whimsical and altogether delightful. Something that has never before been done on the screen."

— don't believe it — UNTIL

You see and play "One Glorious Day" yourself. Then you'll agree that these criticisms, the finest the New York papers have ever run, are all actually deserved!

A Paramount Picture

THE CRITICS!

But read what they say—

Rivoli Has Glorious Spook Comedy With Will Rogers—Dog Star at Capitol.

NE GLORIOUS DAY" is Will Rogers running wild on spiritism. One reason why his comedies are always so irresistible is that, under their utter nonsense, he has always a solemn wink at human frailties—his last was a sly dig at the Romeos of life. In this latest he has the Maeterlinck idea of a stranger from the land of unborn souls who enters the body of a retiring scholar and relives all the adventures which he has merely inhibited desires of [illegible] original tenant. "I [illegible] to beat up Ben and [illegible]," muses the disembodied professor wistfully, as he watches the unearthly visitor [illegible] tired of this feeble body and deserts it for a more vigorous one, leaving the professor to benefit by the dashing reputation gained by a glorious day of havoc.

All these [illegible]urdities are woven together so cleverly that the result has an undertone of eerie poetry. The spook itself is a masterpiece of conception and photography—it is a transparent pollywog creature, a cross [illegible]

The picture also is in an original vein, and taken as a whole is excellent entertainment. When Rogers was here in the flesh he said something to the effect that the picture industry should make at least one film in a good one. "One Glorious Day" is the good one of the four, and we wager that it is far better than the other three.

ONE GLORIOUS DAY, with Will Rogers, Lila Lee, Alan Hale, John Fox and others, directed by James Cruze, written by Walter Woods and A. B. Barringer; "Western Ways," with Trumps, directed by Clyde E. Elliott; "A Rural Cinderella," a comedy; "Pierrot Dance," by Marjorie Petersen. At the Rivoli.

Can anything imaginative come out of Hollywood? It can. It does in "One Glorious Day," and is now at the Rivoli this week.

Many people out there studiously unoriginal and [illegible] dreamed of both the [illegible] comic possibilities of spiritism on the screen, but most of them have about given up hope of ever seeing any of these possibilities realized. They may now take heart, however, for a good many of the comic possibilities, at least, have been realized in "One Glorious Day." It is a spiritistic spree and so it goes, with many sidesights and off-shoots into spirited comedy, the whole story moving briskly, with only the necessary dips into routine movie romance, and frequent flights into original fantasticality. And the best of it all is that the picture is imaginatively done. Such a story would be dreary without suitable settings, acting and cinematography. Everything depends on its treatment. So its high success is due, first of all, to the director, James Cruze, and his staff, including especially his cameraman. The production of the picture involved almost continuous double exposure, and some exceedingly difficult feats with it. But there doesn't seem to be a missed shot in the whole photoplay. It is a skillful and ingenious piece of work.

But this is not all. There's also the acting. Will Rogers, as Professor Botts, is a revelation. See him first when the Professor's spirit is at home, and then when Ek occupies his body, and you'll say again that Will Rogers can be a good deal more on the screen than just himself. In his hands, Botts is Botts, and when he is supposed not to be the real Botts any more, he certainly is not Botts. And John Fox as the disembodied Ek is a delight. His costume and makeup must have been designed by some one who had had a comic dream of sprites, and Mr. Fox—is he a boy or a man?—brings to the part all the sprightliness and sprite it needs. The others in the cast are also good.

Broadway never before saw anything quite like "One Glorious Day." As comedy [illegible] amplest [illegible] screen can do for real entertainment, it is illuminating.

Broadway has something new at the Rivoli theatre in "One Glorious Day." As a comedy it deserves to rank as one of the [illegible] made. As romance, it is enchanting. As an example of what the screen can do for entertainment, it is illuminating. And all because of an excellent fantastic story, inspired director and Will Rogers, he of whom it is said that the epigrams and the homely [illegible]

Will Rogers of the "Follies" and Spiritualism—it sounds like a wild prank arranged by a "Follies" showgirl! Somehow one never thought of chewing gum and the psychic blending. Yet Rogers does it, making spirits jump through a hoop without once using his lariat.

This delightful supernatural skylark is a mingling of "The Return of Peter Grimm" and "Peck's Bad Boy." The

It's a treat to watch Rogers giving a real characterization in this new type of dual role, as himself and his own ready to wear spook. Credit should probably go to the director, Jame Cruze, for overcoming Rogers's usual tendency to kid a part. By numerous quaint touches in the early episodes he makes the abstracted Professor as real and lovable a figure as in Belasco's play. "The Professor's Love Story," and even when he is mooning over atavistic poetry there is no suggestion in a tongue slyly poked at the spectators. In the violent contrast, when Ek gets control of him, and he briskly [illegible] off tables, bumping his nose in the relief that he can still sit about palpably, and jumps on a saloon piano with an impish leer, one would swear that another spirit had hold of him than Rogers is the logical player for Shakespeare's Puck.

Miss Lee gives the best work as the housekeeper daughter, and the rest of the [illegible] Alan Hale, threw themselves [illegible]—into the story. Though he is about ten much sometimes, little John Fox as Ek gives a spirited impersonation of Ariel with a gnomelike Thanksgiving mask. The theme itself is not entirely new to literature—H. G. Wells once wrote a short story of a mischievous spirit seizing another's body—but it is new enough to the screen to make this one of the unique pictures of the winter, killing incredibility with a laugh. By its predominantly light treatment it succeeds, with a subject that many persons take very seriously, in mixing gunpowder and jam. And among other joyously whimsical touches is the final suggestion that when Ek finally does get born Dempsey had better watch out.

[illegible]sical and altogether delightful is "One Glorious Day," which Jesse L. Lasky presented [illegible] at the Rivoli, with Will Rogers and Lila Lee as the stars.

By ALAN DALE.

LILA LEE.

When the cynics laugh at the oft-repeated assertion that "the picture industry is still in its infancy" (like the Infant Phenomenon it has taken a long time growing up!) force them to see "One Glorious Day" and they will recant. It cannot be otherwise.

"One Glorious Day" is a sort of comedy version of "Peter Grimm," with effects that are magnificent,

It is so well done. It is so satisfactorily presented. It is such an artistic achievement. It is such good fun. It is so clever. And yet, for those who know their subject, it is so perfectly relevant and possible. But—the majority does not know the subject. For the majority there is the ebullient humor; there is the delightful photography, and there is the overwhelmingly excellent story.

Don't miss "One Glorious Day." Take my tip. It is an achievement. It is a collossal surprise.

"One Glorious Day" is one glorious picture. It is more fun than anything in the cinema line we have been permitted to see.

John Fox is Ek, and with the aid of trick photography he makes him do the most incredible things. Incidentally, the camera work offers some startling double exposures and some rare views of the more secluded streets of infinity. The film is exquisitely made. If it carried a serious theme it would no doubt become the talk of the season. As it is, it will only be hailed as a wealth of gorgeous nonsense.

FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY NUMBER

Dated March 11th
Out March 3rd

THIS publication started delivering a service to the motion picture industry fifteen years ago. On March 11th we will celebrate our fifteenth birthday.

Our first issue was a small sixteen-page affair.

The staff was small; the whole industry was in its infancy then. Today our staff numbers approximately sixty people and we are represented by correspondents in the principal cities of the United States, Canada and Europe.

We have lived through the various phases of the picture business, encouraging when encouragement was necessary and criticizing when criticism was in order.

All during this time our object has been to build up the motion picture industry in all of its elements. All trade papers in this field are fashioned after Moving Picture World—almost department for department. This is indeed a great compliment.

We were the first in the field and have set the pace ever since.

The fifteenth anniversary number will go a bit into history——the individuals', the corporations'—big events of the past.

We will also make a few predictions [illegible]ture on our own account.

It will be a great number. Be sure to be in it. Have your past performances on record with the accomplishments of the others, telling the trade what you have done and what you are going to do—in the fifteenth anniversary of "Reckless Chances" has everything which the name implies. It's a speedy railroad story of daring adventure and nervy action. It opens with a train robbery, an automobile crash, an astonishing rescue and a desperate hand-to-hand fight. It has a wonderful vein of comedy, in addition to its excitement, and a romance which laughs at danger.

If there was ever a feature which has the very essence of audience appeal, its title is "Reckless Chances."

The Knickerbocker Tragedy

IN common with all the nation, the moving picture industry is shocked by the tragedy which followed the collapse of the roof of the Knickerbocker Theatre in Washington. Scores of human lives were lost and the calamity has not been approached in the realm of the theatre since the Iroquois fire in Chicago.

Superficial investigation discloses that the roof fell because of the weight of tons of snow piled upon it by the great storm that centered around the capital and held sixteen States in its grasp. Our best advices point out that the construction was approved by the architect and the Washington building authorities and it appears probable that the ordinary strain of weather would have had no effect upon it. Subsequent examination may reveal other causes and fix the responsibility, as twelve official investigations are in progress.

We extend our special sympathy to Mr. Harry Crandall, one of the foremost exhibitors of the country and a man highly respected in his community and in our industry. Upon him falls a heavy sorrow because it happened that the dreadful toll of life was taken in his theatre, and doubtless through no personal fault of his whatever.

It might have happened in any one of a thousand houses under like conditions, where it had been necessary, as it almost always is necessary, to leave the technical business of construction to others.

Following great calamities there always is an outcry demanding that someone be blamed and punished. We trust that the investigations, therefore, will be conducted carefully, calmly and with the sole object of ascertaining the facts. A debt is due to the dead and bereaved ones and justice also is due to the living.

It is unnecessary to suggest to exhibitors everywhere that they set about immediately the examination of their theatres by qualified experts to make sure, doubly sure, against the possible repetition of this frightful accident.

The safety of the patrons is of first importance, and the industry and the public is assured that the small proportion of accidents in the thousands of moving picture theatres throughout the country is due to the care that exhibitors already have exercised in having their construction fully tested.

Let no voice be raised in criticism until the official investigation fixes the responsibility. In the interim let us express fully the sorrow which this apparent act of Providence has brought to our door.

Arthur James

High Spots in the Week's News

MORE than a dozen investigations are under way to determine the cause of and responsibility for the Knickerbocker Theatre disaster in Washington, D. C., on Saturday night, January 28, when, according to the official statement, ninety-five persons were killed and 140 injured. Four investigations are being made by the municipal authorities at the instigation of Congress, one by the Department of Justice, another by army engineers called in by the engineering commissioner of the district, and several private investigations, including one by the American Society of Civil Engineers. Scores of lawyers are examining the ruins to obtain evidence for suits. The initial theory that the weight of snow caused the disaster now seems to be giving way to the theory that a defective girder was responsible, but there has been no official statement as yet. The whole industry sympathizes deeply with Harry M. Crandall, whose career has reflected honor upon it.

While the industry was fighting tooth and nail last year to defend itself against unjust and embittered attacks in the various legislatures, its representatives consoled themselves with the thought that 1922 ought to give them a temporary rest. Few legislatures were scheduled to meet, they knew, and the only really big fight they expected was to be the Massachusetts referendum.

But it hasn't worked out that way. The storm signals are up all along the line. Threatened censorship is the chief thorn. They're talking it again in Chicago, in Cleveland, in South Carolina, in Mississippi, and in other localities various taxes to make miserable the life of the exhibitor are being considered. So it's up to exhibitors and producers alike to get into the scrap. The N. A. M. P. I. is doing the Paul Revere now.

Wid Gunning comes forth with a revolutionary plan for direct exhibitor-producer partnership. Boiled down, the plan is this: He will supervise three producing units which, in the next year, will make four pictures each. Exhibitors will contract to play these twelve films and share in their profits, having paid in advance for as many pictures as they see fit. They will receive a proportion of the 50 per cent net profits, equal in ratio of the cash payment made by them on signing the contract to the total cost of the twelve productions. Each of these will be sold at a $300,000 national quota, but as the maximum cash outlay per picture is set at $100,000, only those exhibitors participating in the raising of the first $100,000 on each picture will share in the eventual profits.

William A. Brady and the Rev. John Roach Straton are at last to have their long-discussed debate on "Sensational Preachers vs. the Stage." The time, the date and the place are 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, February 12, Calvary Baptist Church, New York City. Brady has stipulated that the clergyman is to apologize to the theatrical profession and cease attacking it, if he loses.

Has it occurred to you that perhaps motion pictures are becoming more a woman's entertainment rather than a man's? Roy L. Manker, vice-president and general manager of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, says it's so; that the great majority of scenarios are built upon the experiences, preferably the suffering, of women. He also says that if half the time were devoted to making perfect scenarios as is considered necessary to produce a good novel or short story or play, there would be a wonderful improvement in screen literature.

The advantages of India in a production way are described in this issue by Moving Picture World's correspondent at Calcutta. He says: "India has a vast and rich literature in the vernaculars, and it will take centuries to exhaust the subjects that might with advantage be transferred to the screen."

"Let me tell you that our arrival in Rome woke no hospitable echoes," said Abraham Carlos, in charge of the production of several Fox pictures abroad. He was talking to W. Stephen Bush, Moving Picture World's correspondent, in Italy. "The daily press showed itself quite unfriendly to our enterprise, and made it plain to us that we were considered vulgar trespassers on sacred soil."

Charles Ray has affiliated with the United Artists. He will continue to be an independent producer under his existing arrangement with Arthur S. Kane. "Fewer pictures, but bigger and better, will be my slogan from now on," says Charlie.

Evelyn Laye, versatile English stage actress, hailed by Myron Selznick as a screen find, is coming to the United States to play in Selznick Pictures. She is a beauty of the fresh, invigorating English type, a blonde who ought to register exceptionally well on the screen. The date of her arrival is dependent upon the completion of some English contracts.

Randolph Bartlett has resigned as advertising manager of Selznick to head Paramount's titling and editing department, and Watt L. Parker, for four years a Selznicker and well known as a demon cueist, succeeds Bartlett.

William D. Taylor Is Murdered in His Los Angeles Apartment

WILLIAM D. TAYLOR, the well known Paramount director, was shot to death during the night of February 1 while in his Los Angeles apartment, according to a "flash" from Famous Players just before press time. The discovery was made the following morning. He was seated, fully dressed, in a chair in front of his desk, apparently having been in the act of writing a check when the shot was fired. The bullet came from behind and passed downwards through his neck to his heart.

There is no clue to the murderer except in a peculiar chain of circumstances occurring within a year. About eight months ago, while Taylor was in Europe, his Los Angeles apartment was entered and all his clothes and jewelry, valued at $800, taken. During last Christmas Week, while he was on location, the apartment was entered again. This time the thief left pawntickets for the earlier thefts and the note that he would return again.

Taylor was born in Ireland in 1877. Ten years ago he entered the American film industry as a director. He has served with Ince, Vitagraph, Morosco, Fox and Famous Players. Just before his death he was engaged in editing two forthcoming Betty Compson features he recently finished. He was unmarried, president of the Los Angeles Lodge of the American Motion Picture Directors' Association and a member of the Los Angeles Athletic Club. One of the great directors of motion pictures and a man who claimed many friends, he will be sorely missed.

The Heavy Rental Prices Involved

WE have no desire to enter into controversy with any trade paper in the field on the subject of the reviews of moving pictures. We prefer that the exhibitors themselves carefully examine the reviews of all and then decide which fulfill the following requirements:

HONESTY.

SHOW JUDGMENT.

FULL COVERING OF THE PICTURES RELEASED.

Recently "Foolish Wives," a million-dollar production, was released and two of three trade publications gave it unbounded praise, both as a production and as an attraction. The third praised the sets and their lavishness and let it down easy.

Moving Picture World was a conspicuous exception in this as in many other instances. One review and one special criticism were published in the same issue dealing with this subject for which the exhibitors of the United States were to be asked record prices.

Our judgment, given fairly and without bias, was that the production was not only unworthy of recommendation to exhibitors but a flagrant violation of picture standards. We stood and still stand one against three—telling the straight, unbiased truth, trying to look at this production with exhibitor's eyes for exhibitors, without reference to the amount of money spent on it or the amount of advertising which might follow in the wake of high praise from us. The fact that newspapers generally supported our view is not under discussion. We are speaking only of trade publications.

Much as we might regret the loss of money to the producer if the picture failed to yield the expected return, we nevertheless, with neither malice nor savage satisfaction, told the exhibitor what we felt he was absolutely entitled to know.

For our own benefit as well as yours, we suggest that when you see "Foolish Wives" you write us a line and tell us for publication or not (as you wish) whether our show judgment and your show judgment agree or differ.

We shall be glad to make this a test case with the exhibitors of the United States, and if you find us not only honest and fully frank but right in our decision, we believe you will be as glad to say so as we are glad to continue to print what we believe to be the truth.

This is a case in point, a most important one, because of the heavy rental prices involved, but we regard all reviews as important if they be truthful and if they are written from a showman's point of view for showmen.

You can be assured that Moving Picture World's business office never rewrites a criticism to tickle an advertiser, that reviews are not omitted to save a producer's face, that we don't praise unless the picture in our judgment deserves it. We do praise when the goods are good goods because exhibitors are also entitled to know what pictures are likely to make money for their box offices.

Let there be no dust-throwing in this important question of reviews. You, as showmen, do your own judging and make use of the reviews which are written by men who insist on telling the truth to exhibitors regardless of good fellowship and good advertising.

United States Supreme Court Upholds Decision Against Picketing by Unions

THE United States Supreme Court has dismissed for want of jurisdiction the appeal brought by the Kansas City Motion Picture Machine Operators, Local No. 170, International Alliance Theatrical Stage Employees, Grover Childers, Chester Edmonds, William Weston, Frank Chesney, Harry Randall, Mr. McCullough, J. A. Payne and D. A. McCullough from the decision of the Supreme Court of Missouri in the picketing case involving John E. Hughes and Wesley H. Briner, copartners, doing business under the name of the Eastern Theatre.

This case presented the question whether the enjoining of peaceful picketing by a labor union is a violation of the right of free speech and personal liberty guaranteed by the first and fourteenth amendments to the Constitution.

On June 13, 1916, John E. Hughes and Wesley H. Briner, of the "Eastern Theatre," brought suit against the above to enjoin them from picketing the theatre where a moving-picture show was being conducted.

Mr. Hughes had been a member of Local No. 170, but ceased to be such member prior to the institution of this proceeding, because of his refusal to pay a fine imposed upon him for a claimed revelation of business of the union. Hughes is said to have thereafter claimed to have acquired an interest in the Eastern Theatre, alleging he had no interest as an owner in the business, and his action in so doing, it is alleged, was a subrefuge exercised for the purpose of ultimately destroying defendants' organization, breaking down the standard scale of wages regulating hours and conditions, etc., "because it was against the rules of the union for a member to have an interest in a show and conduct it himself."

Following a refusal to comply with the demand of the union, picketing was commenced April 16, 1916. The picketing was conducted in a peaceful and orderly manner.

The proceeding was defended on the ground that picketing, when conducted in an orderly and peaceful manner, was lawful and within the right of the union to inform the public and one another concerning the attitude of the Eastern Theatre toward union labor, and that the petitioners were merely exercising the rights of personal liberty and free speech as guaranteed to them by the Constitution of Missouri and the Constitution of the United States.

Court Issues Order

The circuit court issued a restraining order which on final hearing was dissolved. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of Missouri, which court on April 1, 1920, reversed the decree of the circuit court, "with directions to set aside the judgment dissolving the temporary injunction heretofore granted and to issue a permanent injunction against defendants, restraining them from picketing in front of plaintiffs' theatre." A petition for a rehearing was filed and overruled by the Supreme Court on April 30, 1920.

The unions asserted that they made no attempt to destroy the business of the Eastern Theatre but they did claim the right to advise one another or the public, when they do so in a peaceful manner, concerning any person or persons against whom they have what they believe to be a legitimate grievance, not to deal with such person or persons. If employees may lawfully organize themselves into associations for their mutual protection and betterment, they charged, they have the right, in order to accomplish that purpose, and in the exercise of their constitutional privilege of free speech and personal liberty, to inform the public by information and persuasion of the unfair attitude toward them of any person or persons.

The result of the decision of the Supreme Court of Missouri is a holding that picketing is per se unlawful in any way conducted and under all circumstances. The United States Supreme Court upholds the Missouri tribunal.

To Test Quality and Quantity of Air in Picture Theatres

Health Officer Fowler, of the District of Columbia, is working for cleaner air in theatres. Tests to determine the quality and quantity of air in the theatres of Washington are now under way.

To determine the volume of fresh air entering the theatres an anemometer is used, an instrument which measures air currents, consisting of a finely balanced propeller of isinglass which is revolved by the air and the revolutions recorded. In determining the quality of air, however, H_2O, or plain water, will be used. Bottles filled with water will be emptied in the theatres and then corked, the place of the water being taken by the air, which will then be taken to a laboratory and analyzed.

The smaller theatres will be visited first, after which the larger houses will be investigated. The analysis is part of the health office's campaign for better air in public places, a similar investigation of the quality of air in telephone booths having just been completed.

Many Investigate Washington Disaster; Other Cities Checking Up on Theatres

Now Hold Belief Defective Steel Caused Collapse —Much Sympathy for Crandall

MORE than a dozen investigations are under way to determine the cause of and responsibility for the Knickerbocker Theatre disaster in Washington, D. C., on Saturday night, January 28, when, according to the latest official statement, ninety-five persons were killed and 140 injured by the collapse of the roof during a raging snowstorm.

Four investigations are being made by the municipal authorities at the instigation of Congress, one by the Department of Justice, another by army engineers called in by the engineering department of the district, and a number of private investigations, including one by the American Society of Civil Engineers. Scores of lawyers have been examining the ruins in a search for evidence upon which to base suits for heavy damages.

The echoes of the dreadful catastrophe are still reverberating throughout the country. Theatre inquiries have been started or proposed in scores of places. The New York State Legislature already is considering a bill amending the general city laws by providing that no building in a first or second class city, except one or two family dwelling houses, can be erected or altered unless the work is intrusted to the superintendence of a master builder, who must have a certificate of qualification from the building department, for which a fee not exceeding $100 may be charged.

Mayor Hylan has started an investigation of the structural safety of all New York City theatres, picture houses, dance halls, boxing clubs and other places of assembly. Thirty-eight inspectors already are at work. No adverse report on a place of assembly had been made as Moving Picture World went to press.

Believe Girder Defective

The original theory that the weight of snow caused the collapse of the Knickerbocker's roof is now disputed by several persons, who attribute it to a defective steel. Colonel Charles Keller, engineer commissioner for the district, in particular holds this view.

"Unless there was faulty or defective material," he is quoted as saying, "the weight of the snow was not alone sufficient to cause the collapse of the roof."

Colonel Keller is said to be satisfied that the concrete roofing was manufactured according to specifications and that the roof had been sufficiently anchored to meet all demands upon it.

"There may have been some defect in the steel, for instance," he is quoted as saying, "which ordinary inspection would not reveal. That would account for the collapse. So far as I can determine there is no evidence of deterioration in the concrete or other material. The roof was constructed to stand a load of twenty-five pounds to the foot and the snow placed no such burden upon it."

City in Mourning

Harry M. Crandall, whose career as an exhibitor has reflected honor upon the motion picture industry, closed his five other Washington houses until further notice, and announced this was not done because any of them were considered unsafe, but because he and his associates did not desire to accept money for amusement while the city was mourning those who lost their lives.

The flags on every public building of Washington will fly from half mast for ten days, by order of the district commissioners. President Harding has cancelled a White House reception because of the tragedy.

Congress is under fire from certain newspapers which severely criticize the method of government in the District of Columbia—the district commission. The commissioners are appointed and supervised by a Congressional committee which the newspapers and certain Congressmen charge with being negligently conducted. It is said that "nobody wants to be on that committee." The cry is raised that the district should have its own government instead of being the "plaything of Congress."

President's Statement

President Harding on Sunday issued the following statement:

"I have experienced the same astounding shock and the same inexpressible sorrow which has come to all of Washington and which will be sympathetically felt throughout the land. If I knew what to say to soften the sorrow of hundreds who are so suddenly bereaved, if I could say a word of cheer to the maimed and suffering, I would gladly do it.

"The terrible tragedy, staged in the midst of the great storm, has deeply depressed all of us and left us wondering about the revolving fates."

How Washington Feels

Harry M. Crandall was the victim of circumstances. Evidence thus far presented points to an unusual occurrence, a catastrophe of a kind that may never again be visited upon the city. And the people of the city, the right-thinking people, are not inclined to place the blame upon Mr. Crandall or his organization in advance of a finding of fact.

Everyone feels the effects of this catastrophe, but it is being viewed in a sober-minded way. There are the usual

"God, But That Dog Is Magnificent!"

SOMEWHERE, in the complex recesses of every human heart, there is a vibrant, sincere and deep-rooted quality. It is love for a dumb animal. That quality is a life-long one beginning early in childhood with the eager stretch of soft baby fingers towards some furry ball of life and ending in old age with the affectionate pat of a withered, wrinkled hand on some dumb beast whose kindly eyes and rough caresses are eloquent with unspoken love. It is a basic quality, this love common to human hearts, upon which much hangs.

There is no finer representative of this dumb race than the dog. By sheer devotion, sagacity and forbearance he has enshrined himself forever in the hearts of all mankind.

From his ranks now comes a great artist—great because he is utterly unconscious of his superb playing, unconscious, too, of camera and director. He is Strongheart, Belgian police dog, who brings eternal glory to the screen and to himself in First National's, "The Silent Call," directed by Larry Trimble.

It has remained for the screen to give the animal actor a fair chance; to rescue him from the unnatural hoop-jumping, barrel-spinning antics of the indoor stage and bring him into his own in a real story amidst God-made sets—gloriously free of the block and tackle artificialities of man.

Strongheart is a star whose virile, unconscious acting leaves little to be desired. He gets under your skin and touches the chords of deep emotion. He sends you away refreshed as one having visited an oasis in the monotonous desert of human entertainment. And he makes you glad to shout in your neighbor's ear: " God, but that dog is magnificent!"

A. J. CHALMERS.

"knockers" just as there were people who stood around the ruins just out of curiosity waiting only for a view of the bodies. It is indeed regrettable that this horrible loss of life had to occur, but it is apparent as a result that the building laws perhaps are more to blame than anything else. These laws are in the process of revision, it is said, yet army engineers who looked over the plans of the ill-fated theatre are reported to have expressed the belief that they were properly drawn.

Keller Investigating

The plans for the building were drawn by Reginald W. Geare, as were the plans for the other Crandall theatres. Both he and Colonel Keller, engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia, are of the belief that according to the plans and specifications there was not sufficient snow piled upon the roof to strain any part of the supporting truss sufficiently to cause the break, in the event that every piece of steel in the network of supports forming the truss was perfect.

Colonel Keller is going over the great masses of wreckage with a view to satisfying himself as to the nature of the material actually used in the construction work and to determine whether or not it actually came up to the requirements of the specifications. With his assistants he also is making a careful study of the plans and specificaitons for the building to see whether or not all requirements in the interest of safety were provided for.

50 Tons of Snow

It is estimated that as much as fifty tons of snow had lodged upon the Knickerbocker roof. At the weather bureau it was figured that the snowfall of twenty-six inches would produce a weight of ten pounds to the square foot. The building laws require that the trusses shall be able to stand a strain of 25 pounds to the square foot over and above the weight of the roof. Mr. Geare has been unable to state any cause for the accident and could only hazard the guess that some part of the material was faulty, as every requirement of the building inspector's office had been complied with.

Coroner Nevitt has ordered the Police Department to summon architects, builders, owners of the theatre, officials of the building inspector's office and witnesses to the theatre collapse to an inquest. The coroner's jury has already made a survey of the ruins. The Department of Justice has undertaken an investigation; the Senate and the House District of Columbia committees are both considering a probe of the accident, and the city heads are doing the same thing.

Crandall Suffering

Harry M. Crandall, one of the best liked men in the industry, was overcome by the accident. The strain upon him has been terrific for he is a "regular fellow" and there is no one in Washington or anywhere else who can say that he ever did harm to anyone. His reputation is assisting him materially in this trying time.

Ever since the first news of the disaster found its way into the newspapers of other cities, quantities of letters and telegrams have been received by him. There have come proffers of aid, it is said, and messages designed to bring cheer to him, for he is suffering, as any other really human person would.

The members of the Crandall organization have largely refrained from issuing statements. Many remarks have been accredited to them, but the World correspondent was informed that all connected with the company are so dazed with the events of the fateful Saturday night as to be unable to concentrate on any statement that would be of any real value.

These men must await the outcome of the several probes that will be undertaken. The corporation faces innumerable suits for damages, and in legal circles it is said that its liability will rest upon the findings of the investigators. If it is found that the plans and specifications and the construction work itself was passed by the building inspector's office, the corporation will be absolved of all responsibility for the accident, and the belief is expressed that such will be the case.

Friends of Mr. Crandall point out that he personally is not to blame for the catastrophe, as he is not a builder or architect and must of necessity depend upon the skill and knowledge of others in the construction of his theatres. The plans are drawn and the theatre built, and then the playhouse is accepted by him as a going proposition.

O'Donnels Killed

Dominick F. O'Donnell, for many years connected with the film industry of Washington, and Mrs. O'Donnell were among those who lost their lives. Mr. O'Donnell at one time headed the Pathe exchange in this city and has held other important posts. At the time of his death he was one of the officials of the Federal Film Company, dealing in State Rights productions.

Employes Killed or Injured

The following theatre employes killed or injured in the crash:

Killed—Joseph W. Beal, G. S. Freeman, Ernest E. Natiello, William Tracy, all musicians, and Mrs. F. G. Mirsky, pianist.

Injured—Oresto Natiello, orchestra leader; John Klenner, John Prezioso, Alphonso Van Poucke, Edward A. Williams, musicians.

Date Set for Hearing on Anti-Censor Bill

There will be a hearing before the Ways and Means Committee at the State Capitol, Albany, N. Y., February 14, on the bill introduced by Assemblyman Louis Cuvillier, of New York City, calling for the abolishment of the New York State Motion Picture Commission.

Inasmuch as this hearing is scheduled for the opening day of the New York State convention of exhibitors, opportunity will be afforded all attending the convention to hear arguments presented by both sides.

The hearing will be held during the afternoon.

The Hays Rumors

RUMORS finding their way into the daily newspapers have linked Will H. Hays with various plans, projects and promotions of which Mr. Hays is probably as uninformed as the editors who give their columns over to the sensation of the hour. Among the really prize hoaxes was a story in the dignified New York Times that Mr. Hays was promoting a Long Island moving picture colony builded around a church with the idea of offsetting the horrible and horrendous sins of Hollywood. Mr. Hays, who is on a brief holiday preparatory to his new labors, will doubtless be entertained by this startling news. Another rumor was that Col. Arthur Woods was considering an offer of $50,000 a year to become Mr. Hays's assistant. Whether the Supreme Court of the United States and Premier Lloyd George will figure in the next rumors is a moot question.

In the meantime Mr. Hays will not announce his plans until he is ready to announce them and when he does they will be important.

Ten Years at Auburn

Morris Taitus, 27 years old, who pleaded guilty to complicity in the theft of films with a potential value of $250,000, was sentenced to ten years in Auburn last week. Taitus was employed as shipping clerk at the local United Artists' exchange. He was arrested in El Paso, Tex., following a long chase.

Much Hostile Legislation Is Brewing Though Few Legislatures Will Convene

Battles Must be Fought in Illinois, Ohio, Mississippi, New York, South Carolina, Massachusetts, Washington, D. C. and Maryland Industry Is Working Hard to Win the First Referendum

TROUBLE signals for the industry are up in many sections of the country. Censorship and blue law bills, drastic exchange housing restrictions and many other regulatory measures comprise the mid-winter crop of threatened enactments which the organized industry must combat during the next few months.

The fact that 1922 is an off year for legislative sessions in a large number of states has not lessened the defense burden. Instead, it apparently has added to the difficulty of simultaneously warding off blows from various angles, because the reformers have launched their attacks this year in cities and communities where the absence of legislative sessions have kept them away from the city capitols.

In Illinois, for instance, the legislature does not convene this year. But according to advices just received by the N. A. M. P. A., in Chicago the censorship agitation has been vigorously resurrected and an ordinance has just been introduced providing for the establishment of a department of motion pictures with three commissioners, including one woman, at an annual salary of $5,000 each. It would divorce Chief-of-Police Fitzmaurice from the control of exhibition.

Would Rule Advertising

The proposed enactment provides that "no banner, poster, sign or other like advertising matter that is immoral, improper, obscene, sacrilegious or salacious shall be approved," and that no permit shall be granted for the showing of a picture that is "immoral, unpatriotic, or holds up to scorn or ridicule any nation or the people thereof, or portrays riotous, disorderly or other unlawful scenes, or has a tendency to disturb the public peace or debase the public morals."

The judiciary committee of the Chicago City Council will consider the proposed measure on February 6. Several aldermen have denounced the resolution.

Cleveland Investigation

From Cleveland comes word that the Chamber of Commerce through its municipal committee, is investigating the entire question of censorship. In a letter just received by Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association, from Dale Brown, secretary of the committee, he states that the committee is investigating "the entire question of moving picture censorship with a view to making recommendations as to whether or not censorship is the proper method of correcting an existing evil, or if it is an improper method." Mr. Brown states further that should the committee arrive at the former conclusion, it would make a recommendation as to "whether or not the municipality, the state or the national government should exercise this function."

Governor Russell Hostile

In Mississippi the present legislature has before it a censorship measure which was advocated by Governor Lee M. Russell in his annual message. In this message Governor Russell said: "I cannot too strongly urge the very great necessity of establishing by statute law a censorship of the motion pictures used in this state. The right kind of pictures should be encouraged. This new enterprise is possibly the greatest educator in the land with the exception of the schools, and if properly censored, may be continued to the great entertainment and education of the whole people * * * * You can easily draft a law to have these pictures carefully censored before being presented to the public. The expense of this censorship should be borne by the exhibitors, who should be required to pay a small tax or license sufficient to meet all expenses of the censor."

In New York a blue law bill which would close every picture theatre in New York on Sunday has been introduced in the legislature by Assemblyman Clarence W. Hausner, of Montour Falls, Schuyler County. It provides that "the exhibition of a motion picture or pictures on the first day of the week, if a fee be charged for witnessing such exhibition, is forbidden. Every person aiding in such exhibition by advertisement, posting or otherwise, and every owner or lessee of any garden, building or room, place or structure, who leases or lets the same for the purpose of any such exhibition, or who assents to the use of the same, for any such purpose, if it be so used, is guilty of misdemeanor. In addition thereto, every such exhibition, of itself, annuls any license which may have been previously obtained by the manager, superintendent, agent, owner or lessee, using or letting such building, garden, room, place or other structure or consenting to such exhibition."

The South Carolina Legislature is now in session. Three bills have been introduced which if passed would cost the industry several hundred thousand dollars a year in that state.

One provides for the imposition of a privilege tax on all picture companies doing business in South Carolina. Under the terms of the bill $5 a reel would be charged for every original print shown in the state and $2.50 a reel for every duplicate. This legislation was recommended by the governor. Another measure provides for a state luxury tax of 1 cent on every 30 cents admission. A censorship bill is also pending.

In Massachusetts a serious situation confronts the industry. At its last session the Massachusetts Legislature enacted a censorship law which would have been effective January 1, 1922, had not the National Association in conjunction with the Allied Theatres of Massachusetts secured a referendum by obtaining and filing 25,000 petitions. This automatically stayed the operation of the law until it has been voted upon by the public at the next general election in November, 1922.

This will be the first time the public of any state has been allowed to express its will regarding motion picture censorship. The reformers in Massachusetts who sponsor the censorship measure are working assiduous. The organized industry, however, is not inactive.

Washington and Maryland

In Washington, D. C., several measures of grave importance are pending. One bill provides that all theatres in the District of Columbia shall be closed on Sunday. Another, introduced by Senator Myers, of Montana, provides for censorship, a Federal picture censorship bill, introduced by Congressman Bland of Indiana, is also pending, together with several unusual bills affecting the industry which were introduced by Congressman Herrick of Oklahoma. Then, too, there is Senator Meyers' bill calling for an investigation of alleged "political activities."

In Maryland a bill is pending which provides for a referendum on the question of Sunday opening in Baltimore. At present no pictures can be shown in Baltimore on Sunday. There has also been introduced in the Maryland Legislature a bill providing for the imposition of a fine of from $50 to $100 for the exhibition of a film without a trailer.

Other states in which legislative sessions are now in full swing are New Jersey, Rhode Island, Virginia, Kentucky and Maine. In all of these there have been censorship battles in the past. In both Louisiana and Georgia legislative sessions will convene. in the summer.

Albany Convention Expects About 1,600; Exploitation Proving Highly Successful

IN order to keep all exhibitors in direct connection with arrangements for the annual convention of the New York State M. P. T. O. in Albany on February 14, 15 and 16, a bulletin service has been inaugurated by the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association. This bulletin, written in a breezy way has aroused such enthusiasm that the coming convention will set a new record for attendance.

According to George Roberts, president of the Albany association, who spent the first part of this week in New York city with Samuel Suckno, also of Albany, close to 1,600 persons will attend. For instance, the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York has chartered a special train which will leave the Grand Central station at 2 o'clock on the afternon of February 14. Banners on the outside of the cars will advertise the convention.

G. F. Stanton, city passenger agent of the New York Central lines, has arranged that all district passenger agents will line up the exhibitors in Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo and other of the larger cities in order that they also may travel as individual bodies. Some idea of the demand which has come for hotel reservations during the last few days can be gained from the fact that in one day Samuel Suckno received requests for nearly 150 rooms.

Mail to Carry Slogan

All mail being sent out from film exchanges in New York, Albany and Buffalo during this week, and up to February 13, will carry the following postscript: "The talk of the State—a good time for all—February 15— at the Movie Ball."

This slogan was adopted in Albany last Saturday at a meeting of the exchange managers of that city. It was at once sent to E. C. Fox of Buffalo, chairman of the committee of exchange managers in Western New York, promoting the publicity of the convention, and to Joseph Klein of New York, who is doing the same thing in the metropolitan district, with the assistance of William E. Raynor, I. E. Chadwick and Samuel Eckman.

A total of 115 slides advertising the ball on the night of February 15 are being used in as many theatres within a radius of 100 miles of Albany. All salesmen from film exchanges in the state are carrying with them this week attractive cards advertising the convention and which are being left in hotels and theatres. A diamond shaped card advertising the ball is also being used in all street cars in Albany, Troy and Schenectady, and suburban lines out of these cities. Tickets for the ball have been placed on sale at a dozen place in each city.

Six more booths have been added to those already sold, making a total of twenty-seven which will be at the convention. The state officers are planning to arrive in Albany three days before the opening. All concerns taking booths have received letters to the effect that all decorations must be in place not later than Monday night.

There is going to be, in all probability, some genuine surprises at the banquet in the way of speakers. The committee handling this part of the program has been promised some of the most prominent men in national and state affairs. Senator James J. Walker will be toastmaster.

Goldwyn Mid-Winter Sales Convention Shows Spirit of Aggressive Optimism

WITH a full attendance of branch managesr from the twenty-two Goldwyn exchanges, a spirit of aggressive optimism prevailed at the mid-winter convention of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation at the Congress Hotel in Chicago from Monday to Thursday of last week.

Bringing reports from all sections of the country, many of the branch managers were firm in their belief that the period of depression was giving way to normal conditions and that there was every reason to expect an improving market for pictures with drawing power.

Among the home office executives who addressed the convention were Samuel Goldwyn, Alfred Weiss, F. A. Gudger and A. S. Aronson, all of whom expressed confidence in the ability of the industry to meet the present situation. Abraham Lehr, vice-president in charge of production at the Culver City Studios, discussed production policies in making box office attractions.

It appeared to be the opinion among both the branch managers and the home office executives that much of the present depression can be dissipated by properly aggressive business methods, a better fighting spirit and less talk about bad conditions. All of the managers were heartily in favor of giving exhibitors every possible assistance in exploitation, as thorough exploitation is being found a more and more essential factor in building up attendance.

Again the Moving Picture World leads in the number of reviews. Sixteen in this issue. That's service.

How American Producers Work in Italy in Atmosphere of Distrust and Satire

Papers Laugh at "Those Prosperous Yankees" Trying to Do Classic Subjects

Rome, January 10.

By W. STEPHEN BUSH

"HOW American Producers Work in Europe"—an interesting theme surely. The most recent and I am inclined to think not the least illuminating chapter, is here contributed by one of our biggest companies, the narrator being Abraham Carlos, at this time the alter ego of William Fox in Europe and some adjacent continents. I am adding the last two words advisedly for when I met Mr. Carlos today in the Hotel Excelsior he was on the way to Africa and Asia.

"We are leaving tonight," said Mr. Carlos, "for Brindisi, where we will embark immediately on board our chartered steamer and proceed by water to Alexandria, from there to Cairo and thence to Jerusalem, where we expect to arrive the latter part of this month. We hope to be back in Rome by the end of February. I am heading the party, which consists of J. Gordon Edwards, our director; Mike Miggins, our assistant director; our two principal cameramen, Ernest Haller and Benjamin Miggs, together with Henry Ametta, interpreter, an Italian whom we brought with us from New York.

Expensive Proposition

"We are going into the Holy Land to film 'David the Shepherd King.' Our coming to Rome to produce 'Nero' was inspired by our desire for a perfect picture and not by any hope of working on a cheaper basis. The latter is indeed more or less of delusion. Americans are squeezed and overreached every hour of the day and we were no exception to the rule.

"Let me tell you that our arrival in Rome woke no hospitable echoes. Of course we expected no joyous welcome from the native producers or from the trade press, for nowhere on this continent do they hail American competition with any degree of perceptible joy. An Italian company had started work on a 'Nero' film but abandoned its plans upon our arrival. The daily press of Rome showed itself quite unfriendly to our enterprise and made it plain to us that we were considered vulgar trespassers on sacred soil.

"One of our party in a spirit of harmless banter mentioned casually that we had come to buy the Coliseum and there was a tempest of indignation. The European mind acts most queerly and unfavorably to the American joke. However, when it became definitely known that we were going to film 'Nero' we at once became objects of suspicion and ridicule. The papers laughed at 'these preposterous Yankees' trying to do a classic subject. Let them stay at home, it was said, and continue to make those cowboy pictures, which they can make so well. Let them leave Roman subjects to the Romans. Not only the newspapers were full of this disdainful attitude; many times I heard the gossips under the colonnaded arches of the 'Esedra' denounce between sips of 'strega' and the little black coffee what they were pleased to describe as 'American impudence.'

"Those Ignorant Americans"

"One day while filming scenes for 'Nero' we took pictures of the 'Fontane Trevi,' the best known and most striking of the Roman fountains. Immediately there was a perfect howl or laughter on every side. The papers asked us in biting italicized editorials and in letters from indignant readers whether we did not know that the Fontane Trevi had been built about 1,500 years after Nero had been laid away. I had been negotiating for the loan of the Italian cavalry garrisoned in Rome and in the course of the negotiations I had to call upon the Minister of War. That gentleman was particularly indignant.

"'I understand,' said he in hostile accents, 'that you people are making a burlesque of Nero, one of our great classic subjects.'

"I modestly 'allowed' that we were doing our best.

"'Well,' continued the minister in cutting tones, 'don't you know that Nero had been dead more than seventeen centuries when the Fontane Trevi was finished. Look at the inscriptions. You are falsifying history.'

"I submitted that we had covered up the tell-tale inscriptions and that as the Fountain was built strictly upon models that might have been taken from the period of Nero we were quite justified.

"The Minister thereupon said something that sounded like 'those Americans,' implying that we were altogether hopeless.

An Impious Shave

"Then another storm of protest arose. It became known that we proposed to have a beardless Nero. Here we were laying impious hands on one of the most cherished traditions of Roman history. Some one said we were going to finish by having Nero wear a sombrero and appearing in competition to William S. Hart. We pointed to several beardless heads of Nero in the Capitoline Museum but to no avail.

"However, the worst was yet to come. We gave our picture a most impressive ending, but subdued and in part eliminated the tragic element. Now, as you probably know by this time, nothing is more offensive to an Italian audience than a happy ending. The public here want to see the cast look like a casualty list when the last reel is well under way. All these incidents only added spice to our work and Nero is now on its way to the states—12,000 feet of it, to be exact, and we are turning our faces east.

Plans in Holy Land

"I am here now since May and I have learned one thing: There is no such thing as a substitute for location and atmosphere in historic plays or in any production which depends for its success on authentic locations and genuine atmosphere. Hence we are going to produce the great duel of David and Goliath on the very ground where it took place. The battle of the Israelites and the Philistines will also be enacted on strictly historic soil.

"Once in the Holy Land we will make a short stay in the Valley of Eloh, famous in the life of David, and we also propose to go to Bethlehem where Samuel anointed David. Our expedition, or perhaps I should call it our caravan, is quite formidable now, consisting of four loads of paraphernalia. When we leave Cairo it will be as long and imposing as any circus, for in Cairo we expect to buy big quantities of special tents, costumes, arms, shields, spears, sandals, etc. A story like 'The Shepherd King' must have the real atmosphere just as 'Nero' could not have been successfully filmed anywhere except in Rome and its environs."

Supers Sub-Normal

Of the trials which the American producer must expect when dealing with natives, from supers to stars, Mr. Carlos had much to say. The European is today decidedly hostile to Americans. Our philanthrophy and our martial air are either forgotten or misrepresented and these facts are constantly coming to the surface in all dealings.

The supers especially cannot be distinguished from blackmailers. Their intelligence is far below normal. When an attempt was made at the company's expense to lighten their burdens and break the fierce rays of the Roman midsummer sun by erecting tents for their comfort, they resented the innovation, though scarcely a day passed but one of them was taken to the hospital as a victim of heat prostration.

I understand that other big American companies are considering a venture in Educational Begins Series of District Sales Meetings Before Trip to Coast by E. W. Hammons

THE first of a series of district sales conventions was held by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., in New York Monday, January 30, nine branch managers from the eastern part of the United States and Canada meeting at the Pennsylvania Hotel for an all-day discussion of sales problems and the outlook for the coming year.

The series of meetings of which this is the first are to precede a trip to the Pacific Coast by E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., on which Mr. Hammons will confer with producers and make arrangements for product for the season of 1922-1923.

Following the eastern meeting, conventions will be held in Chicago and in Kansas City before Mr. Hammons goes to Los Angeles.

The district managers who attended the New York meeting were George T. Ames, New York; John J. Scully, Boston; B. A. Simon, New Haven; J. H. Morgan, Albany; E. G. Dodds, Buffalo; C. S. Goodman, Philadelphia; Howard Beaver, Washington; Joseph Kaliski, Pittsburgh, and O. R. Hanson, Canada, whose headquarters is at Toronto. The meeting was conducted by Mr. Hammons and Henry Ginsberg, domestic sales manager for Educational.

One of the principal objects of the meeting was to get the view of the district managers as to the wants of the exhibitors. Mr. Hammons desires to get the latest reports from the theatre owners and managers all over the country before he begins negotiations with producers as to new product.

A feeling of optimism pervaded the meeting. Reports from the various districts were unanimous that Educational Pictures on the whole were serving the short subject needs of the exhibitors as no other organization has ever served them before.

Captain G. McL. Baynes, head of the Kinograms Publishing Company, addressed the meeting and described the efforts that his organization had made to build up the best type of news reel during the year that Kinograms has been handled by Educational. He promised the same effort to keep up the advance during the second year with Educational, which has just started. The managers replied that the progress made by Kinograms was such that it stood at the very top of the news reels, and they assured Captain Baynes of a big year ahead.

Following the business session, the managers viewed "The Battle of Jutland" and the first three pictures of the new Robert C. Bruce "Wilderness Tales," after which they attended a dinner at the Pennsylvania.

Mr. Hammons and Mr. Ginsberg will leave New York on February 18 for Chicago, where the second of the series of district conventions will be held on February 20 and 21. Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Indianapolis, Louisville and Chicago branches of Educational Film Exchanges will be represented at this gathering by their managers.

After this meeting Mr. Hammons and Mr. Ginsberg will travel to Kansas City, where the managers of the branches at Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha, Des Moines and Denver will meet.

Mr. Ginsberg will then proceed on a tour of the southern branches, working his way through the key cities back to New York, while Mr. Hammons will go on to Los Angeles. He plans to spend two weeks there in conferences with the producers and the local Educational management. After the completion of next year's plans with the producers, Mr. Hammons will return by way of San Francisco and Seattle, where he will confer with Educational district heads in these cities.

By the time Mr. Hammons reaches the Coast he will have as accurate a resume of the desires of exhibitors throughout the country as it is possible to obtain.

Production in Italy

Europe and may have some interesting data for you in my next letter. Europe is and will ever be the great historic background of first-class historic-spectacular films, but the backgrounds will never be sought simply they are pretty. Of pretty scenery there is an abundance on our side of the water.

Blow to Italian Production

The collapse of the Banco di Sconto, known in New York as the Italian Discount and Trust Company, has been a crushing blow to Italian filmdom. As is well known in Italy, and indeed throughout Europe, this bank had much to do with the formation of what is sometimes referred to as the Italian film trust, the "Unione Cinematografica Italiana." The bank had aided somewhat, it was said, in the original overcapitalization of the U. C. I. Much had been hoped from an invasion of the American market so long closed to Italian productions.

The concern was badly in need of ready money when, as I was told, they succeeded in selling three of their pictures to American interests at the tremendous figure of $300,000. The amount was paid in notes of $50,000 each and on the strength of these notes the tidy sum of 20,000,000 lire, almost $1,000,000 was advanced by the bank.

I have in my previous letter commented on the general unmarketability of Italian films in the U. S. and I believe that the future will amply justify the warning. An occasional success may come out of Italy, but the chances are always the other way.

Oriental Subjects Best for Indians; Natural Advantages Are Going Begging

Calcutta, December 22, 1921.

ENOUGH has, I believe, been written in these columns in my previous letters to demonstrate what an amount of energy and money is being wasted daily in India on so-called film-production, and how economy could yet be the salvation of the people engaged in this important industry. As stated already, production, in the sense it is understood in this country, by persons who have more enthusiasm than brains, is most in evidence in the Bombay Presidency and in Calcutta. On a very much smaller scale, Madras also is trying her hand at the game, the big promises made by one of the "pioneers" in that presidency to the representative of a trade journal in London some time ago not having materialized yet.

For Indian productions, scenario writers need not go out of the country for their themes. India has a vast and rich literature in the vernaculars, and it will take centuries to exhaust the subjects that might with advantage be transferred to the screen. There are religious mythological, historical, social and domestic stories, that surpass anything in point of interest and "grip" that has yet been filmed, and for one thing, followers of the "purity-in-pictures" movement could not possibly raise their fingers at these subjects, as Indian social customs and domestic practice are too strict and rigid to permit of licence or licentiousness, lawless love or lewdness in the relationship between the sexes.

Fascination of the East

It is useless for Indian producers to copy "Wild West" pictures or those painting New York in scarlet. We have seen them and are seeing them and will go on seeing them in pictures produced in America or any other country in the West. Nor would the people of the West care to see imperfect reproductions of their lives and activities in pictures produced in India. The fascination of the East over the West can hardly be described, and Indian photoplays dealing with purely Oriental subjects will, by sheer force of novelty, draw the attention of the West.

Oriental subjects have much to recommend them, and I, for one, think producers in India will not be making the many grotesque mistakes that dabbling in adaptations from Western stories is sure to occasion. Indian companies left to their own resources are indeed under the same disadvantage in producing Western pictures as Western companies labor under while essaying stories with locations in, say, India.

Unless you have educated Indians to help you along, to explain the many differences in dress, manners, etc., of the many races, creeds and sects that constitute the population of India, you are liable to make some fatal mistake or other, even if you have lived for years in India. I have seen more than one American or British film, the story of which is laid in India, and laughed at the mistakes made by the producers. A man described as a Hindu, in one story, for instance, has borne a Mohamedan name and worn a Mahomedan dress. Again, a person described as a Raja (which is a Hindu title) has worn the dress of a Nawab (a Mahomedan title).

Inaccuracies

There are a hundred and one little things in Indian life that the casual observer does not take note of, and inaccuracies in the depiction of Indian life follow as a natural sequence. Similarly, Indian producers are liable to make just as big mistakes, though these might not be just as glaring.

From the standpoint of finance, too, pictures of stories dealing with the country and its people are strongly to be recommended. The locale is there; the settings and scenery and the very characters that you would depict are there—all ready to be made proper use of. And as the bulk of your actors must be Indian it would be much more natural for them to play Indian roles than European or American, and naturalness counts so much that this very important point cannot be lightly brushed aside.

Oriental Influence

Don't we see today a growing tendency among the more prominent American producers to tackle Oriental subjects with all the resources at their command? A very great demand exists for these subjects and the supply is very meagre indeed. What huge successes William Fox has made of "Cleopatra" and "Salome',' not to speak of "A Daughter of the Gods?"

Are not the scenes portraying the lines:

"If I were a King of Babylon
"And you the Christian slave"

in "Male and Female" among the most enchanting in this Cecil B. De Mille creation on behalf of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation? Is it not a fact that Selig's "Garden of Allah" owes its success to its Oriental theme? Has Louise Glaum appeared in a more alluring picture than "Sahara?" Is not the Robertson-Cole production, "Kismet," a novelty in the domain of photoplays? And what about the recent Paramount offering, "The Sheik?"

I have mentioned these titles at random, as they came along, just to show the big field for Oriental subjects in general. The many wonderful pieces of architecture that exist in India await exploitation at the hands of the film producer; mighty rivers, gorges, waterfalls, aerial ropeways, mountains, valleys, eternal snows, gorgeous vegetation, arctic cold and torrid heat are all at your beck and call. Lovelier weather or atmospheric conditions could not be had eleswhere in the world for indefinite periods.

Indeed the film producer in India, if he will only turn his activities along the right channel, could serve the West as well as the East with photoplays that cannot fail to charm and appeal. So far, however, his energy has been wasted. I wonder if it is left to an American organization to seriously consider the subject-matter of this article and decide to govern a company raised in India and help this country gain a worthy place among film producers of the world.—"INDIO."

Picture Cameras Are Subject to 10% Tax

The Bureau of Internal Revenue has just issued Regulations No. 47 relating to sales by manufacturers under sections 900 and 904 of the Revenue Act of 1921. These new regulations meet the changes made in the taxing system by Congress when it repealed the consumption taxes and provided manufacturers' sales' taxes.

The Regulations point out that process and motion picture cameras are subject to the 10 per cent. tax provided in the new law and that lenses for these must pay a like levy..

Hunter Denied Injunction Restraining Hodkinson Firm Handling His Picture

JUSTICE WHITAKER, of the New York Supreme Court, has denied the application of T. Hayes Hunter for an injunction restraining the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation from disposing of, distributing or exhibiting "The Light in the Clearing," to which Hunter claims the Hodkinson people have no legal right.

According to Hunter's complaint, he brought suit in the Los Angeles courts against Otto Bollman, doing business as the Dial Film Company, and recovered a judgment of $31,000 against Bollman on an alleged breach of contract of employment, and placed the judgment in the hands of the sheriff, who levied on the film negative, which was placed in vaults for safe-keeping. Hunter charges that subsequently Bollman or some one acting under his direction brought it to New York. Recently, Hunter says, he learned through trade papers that the film was offered for release by Hodkinson.

William W. Hodkinson, however, said his concern purchased the play in good faith, giving the Dial Film Company $78,000 for it, after it had been convinced its production had cost $159,485, and that his concern had no knowledge at the time that Hunter had any legal lien against the picture.

$1,000,000 Worth of Film Stolen; Thief Punished

Three to seven years at hard labor in Auburn prison was the sentence doled out in Buffalo to William Pearson, 1233 South Harding avenue, Chicago, when the prisoner pleaded guilty to the theft of films from the United Artists' company. Pearson was arrested in Chicago, where he gave $25,000 bail, waived extradition and went to Buffalo to give himself up. He pleaded guilty to a charge of grand larceny, first degree, when arraigned before County Judge Thomas H. Noonan.

Morris Taitus, the former shipping clerk at the Buffalo United Artists exchange, who pleaded guilty to a similar charge as that against Pearson, was scheduled to be sentenced Friday, January 27. Taitus was arrested in Texas after a long chase by detectives. The market value of the stolen films is said to be $1,000,000, and the intrinsic value, $50,000, or eight cents a foot.

Story Should Not Be Subordinated to Spectacular in Films, Says de Mille

MAINTAINING that the story is the important thing that the pictorial side of the photoplay must always be subordinated to the story, William de Mille, Paramount producer, sounds a note of warning to the screen workers who specialize in gigantic spectacles, in a recent interview.

"The story is the vital thing in the photoplay," Mr. De Mille declared. "The picture must always be subordinate to the drama. It is my belief that many photoplays fail because their producers permit the pictorial possibilities to run away with the story. Drama is sacrificed for picture. The picture may be exquisitely beautiful. But after all the picture is but a medium. The story—not the pretty picture—is what the people go to the theatre to see.

"More attention to story and less to the picture means better photoplays. And better photoplays are what the public is constantly demanding."

Mr. De Mille is now making "Bought and Paid For."

Junior Movies Start

Junior Movies, under the patronage of the Albany Mother's club, and directed by Mrs. F. W. Clark, of Syracuse, got under way in Albany last Saturday morning. F. F. Proctor has donated the use of the Leland theatre for these movies. "The Courtship of Miles Standish" was the first picture shown. Mrs. Nathan L. Miller, wife of the Governor, was one of the patronesses.

Goldwyn and Photoplay Offer Chance to Young Women Wanting Screen Career

IN keeping with Goldwyn's frequently announced desire of obtaining new faces for the screen, Samuel Goldwyn, president of the company, and Photoplay Magazine have inaugurated a contest to be known as the Photoplay-Goldwyn Screen Opportunity. It is not merely a contest, but a quest for a new actress of ability and an opportunity for some girl not on the stage to realize her ambitions to make a career for herself in motion pictures.

The first choice of the judges in this contest will receive a year's contract to appear in Goldwyn pictures. The announcement of the opportunity appears in the March issue of Photoplay Magazine.

All women over 17 years of age who are not professional actresses are eligible to enter the contest. During the period of the contract, the winner shall receive a salary equal to that being paid competent actresses playing in motion pictures at that time.

Goldwyn will pay the transportation of the winner and of her mother to and from the studios at Culver City, Cal. By the terms of the contest Goldwyn will have a three years' option on the services of the winner.

Other entrants, in addition to the winner, will be considered for use in Goldwyn pictures. Motion picture tests will be made of those selected as the best screen possibilities. The tests will be made at the Goldwyn exchange nearest the residence of the entrant, transportation charges of those chosen to be paid by the company.

Photographs of entrants in the contest will be received by the New Faces Editor of Photoplay Magazine, 25 West Forty-fifth street, New York City, up to July 1, 1922, when the contest closes. The winner will be announced in the September issue of Photoplay Magazine. The judges will be Samuel Goldwyn and James R. Quirk, editor of Photoplay Magazine.

A Few Reformer Reflections

A GOOD reformer is just as good as anybody else who is good. But a bad reformer is just as bad as anybody else who is bad. Reformers have their mission to perform, even as you and I. But when too much professionalism enters the game, then the reformer in turn needs just as much regulation as the professional baseball player or business man.

The present wave of reformation appears to be the instigation of professional reformers who make their living in that field. Why should the people's own favorite amusement—the films—be the butt of reformers' attacks today? Well, don't professionals in any line have to keep busy to earn their shekels? Positively!

Since the reformers have been working a little overtime to give our fair land the "blues," the newspaper editors and leading citizens have expressed disapproval of their ways and means. And these opinions have met with the hearty approval of audiences when screened in "Topics of the Day" films. Just to give you a chance to form your own opinion that too much censorship is dangerous, we scissored these paragraphs for our readers:

VERY TRUE

Human nature is something to train and refine; it can't be destroyed. Even the fool reformers ought to know that.—Houston Post.

Americans Must Not Be Too Sure of Argentina

A big demand for American films exists in Argentine according to a report to the Department of Commerce from Trade Commissioner Brady at Buenos Aires, but American producers are warned not to feel too sure of the field but to follow closly the requirements of the people, lest the lower-priced European film supplants the American product. Prices of our films in Argentine are so much higher than the European that distributors often place one or more European films on the program in order to balance the cost.

There are 128 operating picture theatres in Buenos Aires alone, it is stated, with 2,250,000 paid admissions per month, and not less than fifteen established producers in the country, but most of the films are poorly set, poorly managed and poorly acted.

C. B. DeMille and P. Erbe Are Coming from Europe

Cecil B. DeMille will arrive in Los Angeles February 8, according to cable information received at the Lasky studio. The producer will sail from England January 28, arriving in New York February 3. He will travel directly West to begin production work on "Manslaughter," the Alice Duer Miller story which he is to produce for Paramount.

Mrs. Cecil B. DeMille will meet the producer when he arrives. Mrs. Paul Iribe also will meet her husband who accompanied Cecil B. DeMille on his vacation trip. With the party going West will be Jeanie Macpherson and Clare West, scenarist and fashion designer, respectively, for Cecil B. DeMille productions.

First National Offers Trip to Los Angeles to Nine Best Exploiteers Among Its Exhibitors During First National Week

NINE of the most enterprising exhibitors of the country are being offered temporary employment by First National. Despite the fact that the salary connected with these positions will be only one dollar a week early indications have pointed to a flood of applications for these positions.

They will be offered to the exhibitors of First National productions during First National week, February 18 to 25 inclusive, who put on the best advertising and exploitation campaign in connection with Anniversary Week. The lure in the salary offer is that these exhibitors will be required, by the terms of their positions to make a trip to Los Angeles and to personally meet all the First National stars, producers, directors and artists. Their stay in Los Angeles will be exactly one week and during that time all their traveling and hotel expenses will be paid by First National.

To facilitate the efforts of exhibitors in qualifying for these jobs First National's advertising department has prepared an abundant amount of advertising paper and accessories. This has already been shipped to the various exchanges and will be available without charge to all exhibitors participating in First National Week.

The only condition laid upon applicants who seek to join the ranks of "Dollar A Week Men" is that complete descriptions of their advertising and exploitation campaigns, accompanied by photographs of their achievements must be sent into the publicity department of First National pictures not later than March 20, 1922. Photograph and accounts of lobby displays, ballyhoos, presentations, special signs or banner arrangements will be accepted as evidence of qualifications in the selection of the nine dollar a week men who will go to Los Angeles in the company's employ.

The prime object in offering these temporary positions is to give exhibitors of First National pictures, as far as possible, an opportunity of watching some of the great productions in the making, to become personally familiar with the methods under which First National secures its attractions and to know the intimate side of the geniuses who create such pictures.

In order to distribute this information over the greatest possible area the officials of First National have decided to divide their offers of positions into three different classes. Three of these temporary posts will be allotted to managers of theatres seating 2,500 or more; three to managers of theatres seating from 1,000 to 2,499 and three to managers of theatres seating less than 1,000. Applicants for the trip must state under which classification they are to be considered.

Pathe Anniversary Contest to Celebrate Brunet's Fourth Year as Executive Head

JUST as all departments in the Pathe organization are uniting in an elaborate celebration of Paul Brunet's fourth anniversary as executive head, their zest for the occasion is quickened by Pathe arrangement with Harold Lloyd. They consider the constructive character of the specifications of the new Lloyd contract to be highly advantageous not only to Pathe and Lloyd but to the great multitude of picture patrons.

On March 6 Paul Brunet will have served four years at the head of Pathe Exchange, Inc.—two years as vice president and general manager, and two years as president. In recognition of the facts that during this period the growth of the business of Pathe Exchange has been greater than during its entire previous career, its independence as a purely American concern consumated, and that Mr. Brunet's many other achievements have practically benefited not only everyone in and connected with the Pathe organization but have been instrumental for the general good of the entire picture industry, the Pathe forces have united in an elaborate celebration of the Brunet Fourth Anniversary.

The nature of this testimonial, as announced by General Manager Elmer Pearson, will be an elaborate variation on prior annual "Brunet Anniversary Contests," with prizes for the winning branch exchange teams in each of the five divisions ranging from $2,500 down to $500. The actual contest in sales and collections will open on Monday, February 27, and close on Saturday, March 25. In case of a tie each of the contesting exchanges thus tying will be awarded the full prize for which they tie. But in this instance there will be a preliminary contest covering six weeks, which will determine a new division classification—not geographical, as heretofore, but based on the standing gained by each branch in the preliminary contest. Thus, all branch exchange teams will benefit by a "running start."

On becoming General Manager of Pathe, one of Mr. Brunet's first acts was to insure, as far as possible, the constantly profitable operation of the highly efficient exchange system which he had already perfected.

A characteristic achievement of Mr. Brunet's was the complete success of his broad-minded offer of physical handling of their film to producing organizations which desired to release and exploit and distribute their own product. Quite a number of worthy and growing concerns seized this opportunity, thereby solving profitably one of their most perplexing problems while further insuring uninterrupted activity of all the Pathe branches. A prominent existing arrangement of this sort is that enjoyed by Associated Exhibitors, which has released several successful multiple-reel Harold Lloyd Comedies, besides many of the most popular features screened in the last two years, including "The Devil," starring George Arliss.

BOOSTING THE NEW YORK STATE EXHIBITORS' CONVENTION

Censors Entrenching

In all probability the force of the New York State Motion Picture Commission will be augmented by six inspectors who will seek violations of the law. Commissioners Cobb, Levenson and Hosmer were at the State Capitol in Albany last week and appeared before the budget committee, in connection with the appropriation which the commission is asking for its expenses. The commission had originally asked for twelve inspectors, but this, it is understood, has been cut in two. These inspectors will receive $2,500 a year and traveling expenses.

What They Think of Him in New York

THE New York Tribune editorially speaks of Senator Jimmy Walker, the talking movie, in connection with Ward's Island, on which is located an insane hospital and kindred things:

"Senator Walker complains bitterly that he was refused admission to a number of the institutions of Ward's Island, and demands that something be done about it by the state authorities. Mr. Walker is right. Something ought to be done about it. We hope that something will be. We can see no reason whatever why Mr. Walker should not be admitted instantly to any or all of the institutions on Ward's Island."

Myron Selznick Hails Evelyn Laye, English Actress, As Screen "Find"; Possesses Exceptional Versatility

AN ocean liner from England will bring to the United States in the near future Evelyn Laye, distinguished English stage star, who has been engaged by Vice-President Myron Selznick to be introduced to the American photoplay public through the medium of Selznick Pictures. The time of Miss Laye's arrival has not yet been definitely set, being dependent upon the completion of English contracts under which she is now working.

While Miss Laye has not previously appeared in this country she can scarcely be said to be unknown here, as her success has been much too big to be confined to the British Isles. She is one of the acknowledged "finds" of recent years in the amusement profession.

Like most English girls who get anywhere on the stage, she is possessed of an extraordinary versatility which is well illustrated by that of Marie Tempest and Madge Lessing, whose ability to do any thing theatrical audiences seem to require for their entertainment has always been the marvel of the public.

Miss Laye is a beauty of the fresh, invigorating English type. Her mild blonde coloring bespeaks for her a pictorial screen impression of great promise. Up to the present time she has not appeared before the motion picture camera in any photoplay productions of importance.

Just now Miss Laye has the stellar role in the big C. B. Cochran production, "The Fun of the Fayre," which is running at the Pavilion Theatre, London. Earlier appearances were as star in "The Shop Girl," which ran successfully at the London Gaiety Theatre which has become as famous throughout the British Isles for its beautiful girls as has Ziegfield with his "Follies" in the United States. Miss Laye also played the title role in George M. Cohan's English production of "Mary" which is still so pleasantly remembered along Broadway.

Parker to Handle Selznick Advertising; Bartlett Goes Over to Famous Players

WATT L. PARKER, for four years connected with the Selznick organization in varied capacities, has been promoted to the position of advertising manager for the Selznick Enterprises following the resignation last week of Randolph Bartlett, who has joined Famous Players as chief of the film titling and editing department.

Mr. Parker comes into his promotion as a result of years of faithful and energetic endeavor. He first became affiliated with Selznick in 1917 when the Select Pictures Corporation was organized, serving for a time as salesman in the Washington office and later as assistant branch manager in that territory.

In 1919 he came to New York as a member of the publicity department and for the past two years has been chiefly occupied in compiling and editing campaign books. Two months ago he was named assistant to the director of advertising and upon Mr. Bartlett's resignation last week the department was turned over to Mr. Parker.

Bartlett has been connected with Selznick off and on for three years. He was originally in charge of advertising and publicity, then titled pictures and then returned to his former post. One defection from Selznick was to represent Photoplay on the West Coast a year or two ago. At that time "L. J." gave him a gold watch engraved with the words "To the man who can come back."

Native of Canada

Canada was Bartlett's original home. He has had a thorough training as a newspaperman both in the Dominion and this country. Especial qualifications for the work he is to do for Paramount have been shown by him recently in his titling of a number of important pictures in collaboration with Julian Johnson. Most of them were foreign pictures, a couple released by First National.

Futile Rush for Free Film

ONE of the best ways of judging the circulation of a periodical and of determining how thoroughly its text is perused is to print a mistake. Then the protests come like a cloudburst. New York columnists have tried this stunt to learn that their "cracks" are widely read.

It wasn't intentionally that Moving Picture World carried a misstatement in announcing, in a tiny item and in small type, that the army had loaned a war film to a certain theatre. The item was published several weeks ago in good faith.

Then the cloudburst descended—on the Chief Signal Officer U. S. Army, in the form of many letters. It appears that many theatres wanted to borrow the film. So a lieutenant who evidently had to answer all this correspondence, dictated a letter to Moving Picture World, asking for a statement that the army does not lend films, and closing with "The War Department is not in the film renting business."

Moving Picture World regrets the error and the extra work it has caused the lieutenant.—Editor.

SCENES FROM "ONE GLORIOUS DAY," WITH WILL ROGERS AND LILA LEE. A PARAMOUNT PICTURE

Charles Ray Signs with United Artists; Plans to Make Fewer and Better Pictures; To Remain an Independent Producer

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, that Charles Ray, prominent film actor and producer, has become affiliated with the "Big Four," comprising Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and David W. Griffith, through which organization Mr. Ray's future productions will be distributed.

Mr. Ray will continue to be an independent producer under his existing arrangement with Arthur S. Kane, who for the last two years has been presenting all the Ray features to the public.

Negotiations for this newest big contract in the film industry were conducted by Mr. Abrams for United Artists and Mr. Kane on behalf of Charles Ray, all final details being settled late Thursday, (January 26) when confirmation was received by wire from Mr. Ray, who at present is in Los Angeles. In his message Mr. Ray said he felt "honored and delighted" at being associated with the "Big Four" in the production of photoplay features.

Mr. Ray's plans are to make fewer, bigger and better pictures. This was his announced determination when he was in New York city a few weeks ago, at which time the negotiations which ended in the present United Artists contract were begun.

"This is pre-eminently the day of big pictures," Mr. Ray said at that time. "For a long time I have believed this and now I know it, and for a long time I have been desirous of being able to give more time, thought and labor to my feature productions. In all probability I will cut my productions down to two really good pictures a year. And by 'really good' I mean the very best that is in me,—the very best that I can give to the public.

"Fewer pictures, but bigger and better, will be my slogan from now on. Bigger pictures from the standpoint of everything that can be put into them through additional time, additional cost and additional work, and better pictures from the standpoint of story, plot, direction, settings, photography—everything, in short, that goes to make a bigger and better production.

"I have long been an exponent of the open booking plan for pictures, for it is perfectly clear that the program system and the star series system are for the 'weak pictures' on release lists. I feel that exhibitors should not be forced to buy and play inferior films in order to get superior ones, nor should a really popular star be penalized by being made to carry the load of lesser attractions.

CHARLES RAY

"Those stars whose features are being distributed through United Artists—or the 'Big Four'—know full well that each of their productions must be marketed individually and that each and every picture must, therefore, be the very best their art makes possible.

"I want to make pictures so good that every one of them will find a ready market. But to do that I must have more time for the individual production; must have time to find the proper story vehicle; time for its preparation in the best possible manner, and time for actually making the picture to the very best of my ability, plus that of my working associates.

"Fewer, bigger and better pictures—that is what I aim to give to the industry and to the public from now on."

Film Developing Co. Sues Powers Products

Taxing the Powers Film Products with creating a situation that has seriously injured their business, the Film Developing Corporation has brought suit in the New York Supreme Court for $25,000 damages. The plaintiff charges the defendant brought a suit against them to recover $3,008, and on a allegation that they were a foreign corporation, obtained a warrant of attachment against assets of their concern, which were levied on by the sheriff. Declaring this statement to be false, the plaintiff alleges that Supreme Court Justice Mullen was convinced of this and vacated the warrant of attachment.

It is alleged that by this time, however, the damage had been done, that the Powers concern knew the allegation to be false when it obtained the attachment, which the plaintiff alleges was given wide publicity and impaired the standing of the Film Developing Corporation.

Gunning Offers Exhibitors Chance to Finance and Share in Profits of Twelve Films He Will Produce

AN outline of a simple but revolutionary plan for exhibitor-producer direct partnership is announced by Wid Gunning, as follows:

"Under the plan Mr. Gunning will personally supervise the work of three distinct producing units which, in the next year, will make four productions each. Instead of securing the loan of the necessary money from financial interests which would receive 50 per cent. of the net profits, Mr. Gunning's proposition is to go direct to exhibitors who wish to play these twelve productions and have them sign a contract wherein they agree to play these twelve pictures, each within ninety days after release date, between the period of September 1, 1922, and September 1, 1923, and he will pay to the exhibitors the profits.

"Under the contract the exhibitor will pay in advance, on signing, for as many productions as he sees fit, this advance payment to apply against the last of the twelve productions. In addition to the pictures, the exhibitor will then receive a proportion of the 50 per cent. net profits, equal in ratio of the cash payment made by him on signing the contract to the total cost of the twelve productions.

"The contract provides that if there have not been twelve productions delivered on or before September 1, 1923, the amount of money advanced by the exhibitor which has not been applied against productions actually delivered shall be returned to him in cash with interest at 8 per cent. Full details of the plan, which is unusual in scope, are contained in this week's issue of the Wid Gunning house organ. Conservative figuring in the detailed statement shows exhibitors participating in the partnership receiving practically all of their rentals back as their share of the profits.

"Each of the productions will be sold at a $300,000 national quota, but as the maximum cash outlay per picture is set at $100,000, it is easy to understand that only those exhibitors participating in the raising of the first $100,000 on each production will share in the eventual profits."

In connection with the new plan, Wid Gunning issued the following statement:

"It is time to quit talking about independence. It is time to act. For years creative brains and men who owned theatres have both been juggled and manipulated by men who sat at desks in New York and did no actual work but secured most of the profits. Now I am going to bring into actual partnership the directors who make productions and the theatre owners.

"I am going to stand personally responsible for the success of the productions and draw no salary for doing so. I am going to organize three production units to make four productions each, totalling twelve Class A special features. I am going to divide the profits, half to the theatre owners and half to the director and myself.

"I only entered distributing because I was forced into it. I am a producer. I immediately placed the selling organization I had to take charge of on a profit sharing basis, making every employe a partner. That was all right, but after all, the real problem is always good productions.

"I now present the simple solution of all film problems—direct partnership between producer and exhibitor. This is the only way to successfully defeat Wall Street's intention to completely dominate this industry. The menace is not distant. It is here now. We must act at once."

Watertown Showmen Fight for Supremacy

Nowhere in New York State is there a more strenuous fight for patronage going on than in Watertown, a city of 30,000, where a couple of veteran showmen of recognized ability, Nathan Robbins, handling a string of three recently acquired theatres, is pitted against Charles Sesonske, who is handling the Avon. One evening last week a special train was run from Carthage to Watertown, a distance of perhaps twenty-five miles, stopping at all intermediate stations and bringing hundreds to the Avon in connection with its "Thirty Thousand Week" program.

During the first three days of the week "The Lane That Had No Turning" was shown, and during the last three days "The Three Musketeers." There is also vaudeville.

Legion Repudiates Statement It Wants Federal Censorship

The American Legion, through National Commander Hanford MacNider, has repudiated the statement published in the Morning World on January 26 that the American Legion is in favor of federal censorship of motion pictures.

Before the Congressional Committee investigating motion pictures at the instigation of Canon Chase at Washington, W. H. Field, purporting to speak for the American Legion, said: "The American Legion also advocated strong federal control of the movies in order to suppress objectionable films." It now develops that Mr. Field's statement is untrue.

In a telegram to Victor M. Shapiro, commander of the S. Rankin Drew Post of the American Legion, Hanford MacNider says as follows:

"National Executive Committee has made no such statement as one you attribute to Mr. Field. The question has never come before them to my knowledge. Have no idea upon what he bases his statements."

For Small Showmen

In the last issue the department Selling the Picture to the Public contained forty-three stunts. Of these but four cannot be done for less than ten dollars, one stunt cost forty cents, one two dollars, one six, one eight, one $2.75 and many of them not only cost nothing, but made a friend of some local tradesman.

Read this issue with broader vision, and you will find that you have several hundred press agents suggesting ideas that you can use, no matter what you can afford to spend, and all it costs is the price of the yearly subscription.

Exploitation does not require money so much as it needs brains and hustle—particularly hustle.

Palmer Photoplay Opens Office in New York City

The Palmer Photoplay Company of Los Angeles has just opened up a New York office at 527 Fifth avenue, and has appointed as manager, Mrs. Frances Elijah, who has demonstrated her success as a writer of superior scenarios. D. W. Griffith and J. Parker Reed are among those who have accepted her scripts.

"The New York branch office has been established because of the immediate availability of popular photoplay material," said Roy L. Manker, vice president and general manager of the company, who was in New York this week. "Our aim has always been to keep in close touch with the producer and by having a representative in the East we will be able to study more effectively the commercial angle of the industry."

Hodkinson Goes West

Kenneth Hodkinson, general manager for United Artists Corporation has gone for an extended business trip during which he will cover United Artists branch office in Chicago, Minneapolis, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, Dallas, Atlanta and Washington, D. C. Mr. Hodkinson will be away from the New York offices for eight or ten weeks.

Noble Seeks Receiver for "Big Timber," Saying Maritime Refuses to Release it

SEEKING the appointment of a receiver to take over "Big Timber" who may supervise its exhibition, and to compel an accounting of the receipts that may follow, John W. Noble of Magnolia Road, Great Neck, L. I., has filed suit in the New York Supreme Court against the Maritime Motion Picture Company of Canada, Lloyds Film Storage, Inc., and the Tremont Film Laboratory Corporation, Inc.

According to the complaint, Noble, on August 19 last, contracted with Associated Exhibitors, Inc., for its production and exhibition, and ten days later made another contract with the Maritime company, to produce and finish the picture, in which they and Noble would have a joint ownership. After its completion, Noble says, it was stored with the Lloyds and Tremont concerns, which Noble says now claim to have a lien on it for accrued storage charges.

That a controversy of some kind not disclosed in the complaint has resulted in the present situation is evidenced by the assertion of Noble that the Maritime Motion Picture people have refused to remove the picture from the storage vaults or allow it to be delivered to Associated Exhibitors, Inc. The result of this, Noble asserts, is that Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has cancelled the contract with him. Noble further asserts that the Maritime people threaten to remove the picture, which has been insured for $50,000, from the jurisdiction of this state and offer it for sale elsewhere, thereby reducing, he says, its value, while on the other hand, Noble says, if it is continued in storage it will decrease in value.

Carroll Testifies

Earl Carroll, producer and scenario writer, testified last week in his own behalf, in his suit in the New York Supreme Court against Herbert Brenon, the British and Colonial Cinematograph Co., Ltd., the Republic Distributing Corporation and others. Carroll is seeking by injunction to restrain them from exhibiting "Twelve Ten," of which he claims to be the author. He also demands an accounting of the proceeds derived from the play. The hearing will be continued.

Still Urging Duty

A duty of 50 to 60 per cent. on foreign motion pictures based on American valuation, was urged by the Actors' Equity Association in a telegram sent by John Emerson, president of the organization, to the National Association of Manufacturers' Tariff, meeting in Washington, D. C., on January 30.

Similar sentiments were expressed by Paul N. Turner, representative of the association, in an address before the meeting.

Exchanges Given Time to Comply with Fire Law

A delay of three months in enforcing the fire regulations which were to become effective March 3 has been announced by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The new regulations call for the installation of sprinkler systems and vents in all moving picture vaults in the District and provide other safeguards. They were first proposed a year ago but it was found necessary to give the exchanges time in which to comply. While the exchanges for the past year have made efforts to secure quarters which would comply in all respects with the new regulations, several projects for erecting special exchange buildings fell through and the local exchange men recently appealed to the Commissioners for an extension of time.

While some of the city officials were opposed to granting a further extension the exchange men showed that it would be impossible for them to comply with the regulations by the time set and the Commissioners finally decided that any exchange manager who filed plans for his improvements with the building inspector before March 3, or who has started building operations before that time, will be given three months in which to complete the work.

Sub-Franchise Holders Indorse First National

More than two dozen franchise holders of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., comprising the Colorado, New Mexico and Wyoming territory, unanimously indorsed the action of the First National Get-Together at Chicago last October and delected an advisory board of four members for the region, in conformity with the new policy outlined in Chicago. The convention, which was held at the Brown Palace Hotel, Denver, January 1, makes the indorsement of the Chicago Get-Together unanimous throughout the country.

Elected by States

The advisory committee of four members was elected by states, two going to Colorado and one each to New Mexico and Wyoming. The members elected were Alvah G. Talbot, of Denver; M. G. Gerhart, of Collins, Col. James F. Lynch, of Laramie, Wyo., and Gus Kohn, of Las Vegas, N. M. Of these, Messrs. Talbot and Lynch had served as delegates to the Chicago Get-Together and were especially urged to serve on the advisory board because of their contact with the national officers and their familiarity with conditions.

Do Dramas Cater Exclusively to Women? Roy L. Manker Sees Possible Danger

By MARY KELLY

THE scenario that sells and the one that doesn't, in other words the picture that pays and the picture that doesn't, were recently analyzed in a few pointed remarks made by Roy L. Manker, vice-president and general manager of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, who for several years has made a study of screen material both from the standpoint of business and art.

"I am not so sure but that the tendency to regard the screen as the voice exclusively of woman is largely responsible for this 'slump' which we have all been trying to talk down, with varying success to be sure," Mr. Manker said this week while in New York where he is making a short stay.

"We have been saying for so long that our picture theatres are patronized mostly by women, that it is the women who can make or break the success of a production, that, in an abandoned effort to avoid disaster, pictures have been created with the definite aim of pleasing women. The obvious result is the great quantity of scenarios built upon the experiences, preferably the suffering of women.

"Men, however, do not have the palate for this type of entertainment that their wives, sweethearts and mothers do and rather than take a chance on having to witness the troublous tales of the misunderstood wife, and the girl who pays, men prefer to stay at home. They have been so fed up on pictures that are only fashion reviews, too, that many men are content to classify the screen as a purely feminine hobby and refuse to take it seriously.

"Introducing facts here, I might mention that 70 per cent. of the stories turned in by our students which sell are written by women—and most likely from a woman's angle. This is true despite the fact that over half, in fact 60 per cent. of our students are men. Now and then we all see a picture which has enough punch and enough humor to make as great a hit with men as with women. But this is not often."

Among other dangers prevalent in scenario-writing which Mr. Manker mentioned is the general misapprehension of the seriousness of this art. Too often, he explains, it is the idea of the aspiring writer that he has found the way to easy money as soon as he conceives a screen plot. The rapidity with which many are obliged to work is partly responsible for this.

"Forget all the talk about inspiration and try to earn success," he offered as the chief thing to be remembered. "If half the time were devoted to making perfect scenarios as is considered necessary to produce a good novel or short story or play, there would be such an improvement in modern screen literature that the whole industry would enjoy a new prestige. Such work can not be done overnight. Neither should the writer consider himself a success after he has merely sketched out his big idea. It is the way that he chooses to develop his idea that is the test of his originality.

"I might say also that we are trying especially now to discourage imitative writing. Too much of what is submitted is merely an off-shoot or revised version of what has been seen on the screen a hundred times, or read in magazines. It has sold once, so the lazy conclusion is that it will go again. If the scenariost will look to life and his own imagination instead, he stands a winning chance. In scenario production, as in any other industry, it is the man who can create, who stands on top."

The purpose of the Palmer Company from the start has been to keep in close touch with the successful producers so that an accurate account of the popular methods of scenario writing and producing can be followed. The aim of the school has been to make the course practical and profitable and the success of many of its faithful students, in selling to first-rate producers has proven that its system is constructive.

"Perhaps one of the greatest services we are doing the screen is our effort to reduce the number of writers to a minimum," Mr. Manker advised. "Not how many but how few we can accept as students, conscientiously, is the rule. We discourage thousands whom we feel are lacking in creative and dramatic perspective.

"Another point of interest to the industry is our effort to discourage expensive productions. Big casts and spectacular pageants often accompany the first attempts and our instruction is correcting this fault and indicating that some of the best dramas produced have been cheap and simple. This results not only in more salable scripts but in a more highly concentrated, more artistic product, as a rule."

Select New York Exchange Moves to Godfrey Building

The return of the New York exchange of Select Pictures Corporation to the fourteenth floor of the Godfrey building at 729 Seventh avenue, was officially accomplished on January 27.

As a part of the move from the Leavitt building the advertising and publicity departments were transferred to the second floor of the Hooven building at 117 West Forty-sixth street. The firm's purchasing department and warehouse is at No. 142 West Fifty-second street.

Murray with Gunning

Robert J. Murray, formerly associated with Harry Campbell in the Boston office of Fox Film Corporation, has taken over the Boston office of Wid Gunning, Inc., according to an announcement from the Gunning home office. Alex Weissman, who headed the Gunning Boston office, goes to Pittsburgh as manager of the Gunning exchange there.

A BOSTON Clergyman stands accused of trying to poison a fellow human being. According to the precedent set by the reformers this should bring about a Congressional investigation of the clergy with legislation requiring all ministers of the Gospel to submit their sermons to a politically appointed board of censors before they deliver them to their congregations each Sunday. Each pulpit might carry a license card reading "This sermon is delivered under License 41144 issued by the New York (or Federal) Board of Sermon Censors."

Absurd? Why of course it's absurd, but no more absurd than Canon Chase's regulation of pictures to a censorship point, no more absurd than any of the censorships of the screen, the stage or the daily newspaper. For offenses against decency or against morals let there be prompt action and a trial by jury. This we all, as law abiding citizens, believe in. Anything less than that or more than that is human slavery and the more thought you give the subject the more you will realize how monstrous a crime against liberty is the censor in principle and in action.

Announcement is made that George F. Blaisdell, for many years a valued member of the Moving Picture World editorial family and subsequently serving as its editor, has become associate editor of the Exhibitor's Trade Review. We extend our hearty congratulations to our contemporary as well as our sincere good wishes to Mr. Blaisdell, predicting for him a full measure of success in his opportunity for service to the industry, to which he has given faithful and efficient years.

We call your attention, in this issue, to another of the special articles on European conditions from the able pen of W. Stephen Bush, who is touring the Continent for the express purpose of giving exhibitors of this country a first hand slant on the foreign markets and foreign productions and exhibiting conditions. Mr. Bush is well known to the readers of Moving Picture World and it was because of his especial knowledge of American conditions and his training as a keen observer and accurate writer that he was chosen for this important mission. No service of like importance is being rendered to the readers of any other publication in the trade.

Elsewhere in this issue Mr. Wid Gunning announces a new policy which amounts to a partnership between exhibitor and producer and which is presented in detail. The new plan will begin its operation next September.

Scenics with a New Twist

WE have seen the first showings of the new series of short subjects by Robert C. Bruce and note that novelty and drama have found their way into the thousand feet portions in which these delightful fragments of beauty are issued by Educational. The first, "And Women Must Weep," is adapted from Kingsley's "Three Fishers," and the Arthur Symon's poem "The Fisher's Widow." With the drama that lies in great beauty and the majesty of nature, the story of the sea is impressively presented. This is followed by a great woods episode called "Missing Men." The third is "A One-Man Reunion," and to our mind it is the best in point of novelty and genuine human appeal. It is the short story of a prisoner, returned after twenty years to a boom town that has fallen upon evil days and has been deserted. With a dog as his only companion the lonely old man staged a celebration and enacted all the roles of the merrymakers. Because it has imagination and is rich in pathos this picture is a contribution to the dramatic art of the screen. It deserves even higher praise than its very good companions in the series. The only one of the series which is strictly a scenic takes its place among the really great. It is called "My Country," and is made up of the cream of astonishingly beautiful views of the Pacific Northwest. To describe the scenes in justice would take the pen of genius. They fairly ravish the senses and feed the soul by their exquisite detail and the grandeur of the subjects. For all theatres we take pleasure in recommending them as calculated to delight the spectators.

ARTHUR JAMES.

"Prodigal Judge" to Continue at the Cameo; Vitagraph Special Meets with Enthusiastic Approval

"The Prodigal Judge," the Vitagraph special production which has its initial performance at New York City's newest metropolitan-district playhouse—the Cameo Theatre—on last Saturday, will continue at that attractive B. S. Moss house for at least another week.

The story, based on the novel by Vaughan Kester, proved to be especially suited for the screen, and the visitors at the Cameo who are familiar with the original story expressed their delight at the faithfulness with which the story has been filmed.

The opening performance at the Cameo on Saturday night was a gala occasion, despite the howling snow storm outside. The theatre was jammed at the evening performances, and a distinct "first-night" atmosphere prevailed.

Jean Paige, who is a featured member of the all-start cast of this special, was in the audience, as was Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph; B. S. Moss, head of the Moss Circuit, controlling the new jewel-box theatre; Maclyn Arbuckle, who plays the role of the judge; Ernest Torrence, who plays his faithful friend, Mahaffy; Earle Fox, who appears opposite Jean Paige in the picture, and a number of others well known in the stage and screen world.

There were numerous members of the Lambs Club in the audience, to do honor to their fellow-members, Maclyn Arbuckle, Torrence, Earle Fox and Horace Braham, who is also a member of "The Prodigal Judge" cast. Maclyn Arbuckle made a brief address between the first and second evening performances of the picture. His comments were confined to certain little experiences during the filming of the special, and he stated it was a distinct pleasure to have taken part in a film of this special sort, clean, human, American.

Practically every New York newspaper critic, in subsequent reviews, agreed with this characterization of the picture. The New York Evening Telegram said that "it was eminently successful because it is a clean, wholesome American story, and earned the applause the capacity audience gave it." The New York Sun commented upon its excellent casting, acting, direction and faithfulness to scenic and costuming details. The Mail called the picture the best of any bill which has been presented thus far at the Cameo, describing it as "a really excellent example of how a written novel should be screened." The New York Tribune praised the authentic atmosphere of the original and the reflection of "that whimsicality in Kester's work which is too often apt to shrivel under the glare of studio lights."

Edward Jose, the director of this special, could not be present at the occasion of the opening, as he is now in California directing another Vitagraph production.

The presentation of "The Prodigal Judge" at the Cameo was a pre-release, the actual general release of the picture being announced for next month. Already the charm of the picture has been heralded throughout the country, and bookings are reaching the Vitagraph exchanges in unprecedented numbers.

Nehls Is Working Out Some Project

Several large film manufacturing projects are in contemplation by Richard R. Nehls, known to the trade through his activities as general manager of the American Film Company, following a long connection as manager of George Kleine and other film organizations for twenty-three years. No details of Mr. Nehls' plans have yet been announced, but it is known that he has recently been spending considerable time on the West Coast and a number of rumors have come from Los Angeles of large projects in connection with which his name has been mentioned.

Mr. Nehls is a member of the Los Angeles Atheltic Club and on the board of directors of the Cinema Merchantile Company, of California, which is the purchasing agent for a large number of studios. He has been spending much of his time recently in Los Angeles and at Santa Barbara.

Finishes Film

Mack Sennett and his staff of assistants have completed "For Love of Money," for release through Associated First National Pictures.

Film Given Preview

"Smilin' Through," recently completed by Norma Talmadge for First National, was given a preview showing—its first—at the California Theatre in Venice, Calif., last Monday night, and won acclaim from the spectators who crowded the house, it is said.

Starts Nine New Productions

With nine new pictures in preparation or in the process of production activity at the Paramount west coast studios in Hollywood is at high tide. All of the company's production units are busy and will soon be augmented by the addition of the staffs of John S. Robertson and George Fitzmaurice, who have been producing pictures in England and other European countries for the last six months. Nine productions were completed at the Paramount studio on the coast in January.

Among the new productions under way now in Hollywood are "Over the Border," with Betty Compson and Tom Moore in the leading roles, and "The Cat That Walked Alone," a George Melford production featuring Dorothy Dalton, and including Wanda Hawley and Milton Sills. Pictures to be started during the month of February are: Cecil B. DeMille's "Manslaughter," "The Dictator," starring Wallace Reid; Thomas Meighan in "Our Leading Citizen," story by George Ade; "Val of Paradise," with Jack Holt and Bebe Daniels; Agnes Ayres and Conrad Nagel in "The Ordeal," "The Gilded Cage," starring Gloria Swanson, and "Blood and Sand," with Rudolph Valentino and May McAvoy.

Paramount pictures completed during the last month include "The Green Temptation," "The Red Challenge," "Beyond the Rocks," "Across the Continent," "The Proxy Daddy," "Bought and Paid For," "The Heart Specialist," "The Sleepwalkers" and "Through a Glass Window."

Elinor Glyn Made Supervisor of Paramount Film

Elinor Glyn, English author, who gained a world-wide reputation through her novel, 'Three Weeks," and who gained laurels in a new field through her authorship of "The Great Moment," Gloria Swanson's first starring picture for Paramount, has been officially named supervisor of "Beyond the Rocks," the new Gloria Swanson picture which she also wrote.

The official credit which Mrs. Glyn thus receives is a fitting recognition of her invaluable services in the filming of the present production. She first came to this country more than a year ago and was present at the Lasky studio throughout the filming of "The Great Moment."

Watching every detail of the production, she has been the court of last resort in the various problems which Director Sam Wood has been called upon to solve, to the end that the picture promises to be one of the most perfectly staged that Paramount has ever turned out.

Public Demand Very Strong for "Little Minister"

Paramount's Portland, Ore., Exchange reports to the home office that the public demand for the Penrhyn Stanlaws production, "The Little Minister," starring Betty Compson, has been so great in that city, where it has been playing the Columbia Theatre, that the Columbia management has been forced to extend the engagement another week.

Th Columbia has one of the most discriminating clienteles in the Northwest, and this is the first time that a production has met with such high honors there.

Comedy Title Is Changed

The title of the latest Mack Sennett-Billy Bevan two-reeler, has been changed from "The Blockhead" to "The Duck Hunter." "The Duck Hunter" is third of the series of twelve Billy Bevan comedies being made by Sennett, for release through First National. It was directed by Roy Del Ruth, and cut and edited by Allen McNeill.

Joins Educational

Ray Gray has been added to the big production staff working on Mermaid Comedies being made for Educational release. Mr. Gray will assist Bob Kerr in the direction of pictures under the supervision of Jack White.

Gratifying Success Realized by "Stardust" Everywhere

Baltimore and Pittsburgh are the latest cities to capitulate to the charms of "Stardust," the First National attraction starring Hope Hampton which has met with success in many places. At the close of the showing in Baltimore, Guy L. Wonders sent the following telegram to the First National headquarters in New York:

"'Stardust' just finished phenomenal week's business at Rivoli, turning them away at every night performance. Saturday, last night of week's engagement, both box offices stopped selling tickets at 7:45 and hundreds were turned away. Compelled to ask for extra police to keep those waiting in line for a block and a half at box offices. 'Stardust' unanimously declared a great picture by the press and public, and in my opinion an audience picture that every franchise holder should lose no time in booking to stimulate his business. My personal congratulations to Miss Hope Hampton."

Harry Davis of the Grand Opera House, Pittsburgh, shot this wire:

"Hope Hampton's personal visit to the Grand Opera House, Pittsburgh, and the simultaneous showing of her First National photoplay, 'Stardust,' were highly successful from both attendance and entertainment viewpoints. Miss Hampton combines beauty with a delightful personality and possesses wonderful screen possibilities. The large crowds which gathered at the Grand were strong evidence of her growing popularity, and there is no doubt that with the proper stories and presentation she will attain a success equal to that of any other star. Miss Hampton is without question a hit both on and off the screen."

Carl Laemmle Makes Statement Anent "Foolish Wives"

Carl Laemmle, President of Universal, has issued a statement on the company's "million dollar production." In part Mr. Laemmle says:

"'Foolish Wives' is not being, and shall not be, used as a club to make exhibitors buy other pictures.

"'Foolish Wives' is being handled as a totally separate and distinct unit of the Universal company's business. It is standing on its own merits, just as other Universal product stands on its own merits.

"If we have any pictures that the exhibitor considers not good enough for his theatre, or pictures which for any reason he does not or cannot use, that is his business. It will have no affect on his dealings with us when it comes to booking "Foolish Wives."

"I cannot imagine a more asinine thing for a producer to do than to force an exhibitor to take something he does not want in order to get something he does want. I cannot imagine anything more certain to arouse bad blood between exhibitors and producers than just such practices as that."

Paramount Arranges for Photoplay Editions of Two Big Productions

The Paramount publicity department has completed arrangements with the book publishing firm of Grosset & Dunlap for the publication of a special photoplay edition of "Burning Sands," the novel by Arthur Weigall, which is soon to be produced as a Paramount picture by George Melford, producer of "The Sheik." The photoplay edition will be issued simultaneously with the release of the picture. Dodd, Mead & Company, the original publishers of the book, are now co-operating with Paramount to the extent of featuring the line, "Coming—a big Paramount Super-Special," in their advertising.

Arrangements have also been completed with the firm of E. P. Dutton for a photoplay edition of "Blood and Sand," the novel by Vicente Blasco Ibanez, which John S. Robertson is shortly to produce for Paramount with Rudolph Valentino and May McAvoy in the leading roles. This edition also will be ready to be issued at the time the picture is released.

The author of "Burning Sands," Arthur Weigall, has lived in Egypt and Arabia all his life and is an authority on those countries. The situation in his story is described as just the opposite to that in "The Sheik." The woman, being in love with the man, goes out on the desert to capture him and bring him back, and she does. Paramount's intention is to produce the picture with the same splendor of settings, photography and costumes as characterized "The Sheik."

Leah Baird Star in New Picture

An advance announcement from Associated Exhibitors states that "Don't Doubt Your Wife," the first feature of a series starring Leah Baird, will be released in March. It was directed by James W. Horne, under the supervision of Arthur F. Beck.

Completing "Jim"

Thomas H. Ince's latest production, "Jim," is now being completed. It is for First National release.

Shows Election

"Electing the Pope," a motion picture visualization of processes in the selection of a new Pope at Rome, was embodied as a feature of the current issue of Fox News.

"One Glorious Day" Is Highly Lauded by New York Newspapers

Paramount's special comedy, "One Glorious Day," with Will Rogers and Lila Lee, has taken New York by storm, according to a statement from the Paramount office which cites the various criticisms of the New York newspapers as evidence of the unanimous praise being bestowed upon the picture by those who have seen it at the Rivoli Theatre.

The papers which praised it were the New York Sun, the Telegram, the Evening Post, the Times, Alan Dale in the American, the Tribune, and the Herald.

First Co-Star Feature Ready

"Any Night," the first feature of the Co-Star series of the Amalgamated Production, Inc., whose pictures are being distributed through East Coast Productions franchise holders, has been completed. According to Franklyn E. Backer, the cast includes Robert Edeson, Marshall Tully and William Courtleigh.

Production has been started on the next release, "The Greater Duty" from the story by Walter Rivers. G. M. Anderson, Frank Campeau, Carol Halloway and Melbourne MacDowell are in the cast.

Mickey Coen Back

Mickey Coen, president of the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation of Minneapolis, Minn., arrived home this week following a two-weeks' trip to New York with Ben Friedman, also of Minneapolis.

Books Vitagraph

Poli theatres in Hartford, New Haven, Bridgeport, Worcester and Springfield have booked Vitagraph's special, "Flower of the North," by James Oliver Curwood.

United Features Syndicate Helps Publicize "The Leather Pushers"

Through the instrumentality of the United Features Syndicate, "The Leather Pushers," the Universal-Jewel-Colliers series of H. Witwer's ring stories produced by H. L. Messmore, will receive nation-wide publicity in the leading newspapers of the country. Already eleven of the important dailies in the key cities of the country have arranged to publish the twenty "rounds" of the squared-circle narratives.

The series first received national publicity in the pages of Collier's, wherein it was featured as being the outstanding literary effort of 1921-1922. Immediately following its release by Collier's, "The Leather Pushers" was published in book form by G. P. Putnam & Sons. Arrangements have been completed between Universal and Grossett & Dunlap to re-issue the Witwer stories in a popular-priced edition, illustrated with "still" pictures taken directly from the film itself.

This quadruple publicizing of the Universal-Jewel-Colliers series probably sets a record in co-operative exploitation and is an achievement from which exhibitors should derive considerable benefit. That theatre-owners realize the advantages to be gained from this comprehensive publicity is evidenced by the encouraging bookings received.

"Round 5" has just been completed by Harry Pollard, who is directing the series. Reginald Denny, the star, will be supported by Norma Schearer, co-star of "The Stealers," "The Man Who Paid," "The Trail of the Law," and "Channing of the Northwest." Hayden Stevenson, Sam Ryan, Charles Ascott and a host of pugilistic celebrities add to the excellence of the cast.

"The Leather Pushers" is of such unusual merit that Universal has been able to book these short-reel subjects into the highest class houses houses in the country.

Gerald Mygatt Writes Article in Praise of Verne H. Porter

Editors are so often caustically criticised by authors that when one of the writing fraternity writes in praise of an editor the public can be certain that the eulogy is sincere. Verne H. Porter, new editor-in-chief of the scenario department of Cosmopolitan Productions, and formerly editor of Cosmopolitan Magazine, is the subject of a commendatory article by Gerald Mygatt in the Authors' League Bulletin under the title of "Our Friends the Editors."

Mr. Mygatt finds in Mr. Porter a great friend of aspiring authors. He says in part: "His belief in authors takes an exceedingly definite form in his innate ability—it's really a gift—to make authors write right. He makes you write simply because he knows you can write; that's all there is to it. You may be discouraged when you go in to see him; you may have an idea that won't sell; you may have any of the myriad ills from which writers suffer. When you come out of Verne Porter's office you are on the crest of a new enthusiasm, a new self-confidence. It has happened, to my knowledge, to dozens of authors, dozens of them.

"And I have seen him spend just as much time and just as much genuine interest over a writer who hasn't the faintest chance of landing a story as he does over the man or woman who is blocking out a new serial."

Of Mr. Porter's previous experiences Mr. Mygatt writes: "He left home when he was thirteen, during his first term of high school. He says that he skipped away because he was too bashful to go to school, but I only half believe this. Anyhow, he got a job as an A. D. T. messenger in Seattle at eighteen dollars a week, became 'straw boss' of his fellow urchins, and little by little, in what spare time he had, he learned telegraphy. He worked at this until he was seventeen, when in spite of his father's desire for him to study electrical engineering—the mathematics scared him away from that—he got a job as a cub reporter at ten dollars a week on the Spokane 'Chronicle.' His experiences as a telegrapher in handling Associated Press matter had given him the general hang of newspaper style and had also inoculated him with the newspaper germ.

"Porter wandered around the country a good deal, as newspapermen do, and in all hung his hat in the city room of some fifteen papers. He was a city editor at nineteen, a managing editor at twenty-two and a newspaper editor-in-chief at twenty-three. In the meantime he had been writing fiction and articles—and selling them. Then it was that Ray Long, who had been buying stuff for the 'Red Book,' 'Blue Book' and 'Green Book,' took a trip West to look Porter over.

"Mr. Long told me once that he was greatly relieved when he walked into Porter's office. "'The only thing I was afraid of,' he said, 'was that Verne was an old man.' (Porter is now only 32 years old.)

"Porter went with Ray Long as a special writer, and soon became editor of the 'Green Book,' as well as associate editor of the 'Red Book' and 'Blue Book.' Porter left Chicago to take a try at the motion picture business, but when Mr. Long became vice-president of the International Magazine Company, he promptly began telegraphing for Verne Porter to be editor of 'Cosmopolitan Magazine.'

"Porter's own opinion—an opinion dragged out of him after much brow-beating—is that his biggest asset is a real liking for and an immense interest in people. He is wrong. The biggest asset he owns is his smile."

Film Is Said to Be Widely Booked

Reports from many first run houses indicate, says Associated Exhibitors, that the Allan Dwan production, "The Sin of Martha Queed," is being booked extensively.

A recent statement from that office included the following first run theatres in a lengthy list of those which have shown the picture: Loew's Circuit, New York; Republic, Brooklyn; Broadway, Lawrence; Strand, Portland Me.; Rialto, Fall River, Mass.; Olympia, Lynn, Mass.; Victoria, Providence, R. I.; Colonial, Easton, Pa.; Rivoli, Philadelphia; Colonial, Allentown; Savoy of Wilmington, Del.; Goodwyn of Newark; Auditorium of South Bend; Niles of Cleveland; Royal, Sioux City; Isis, Indianapolis, Ind; Miles and Regent of Detroit; Strand of Nashville, Tenn.; Fairfax of Miami; Lyric of Springfield, Ill.; Criterion and Delmar (day and date), St. Louis, Ill.; Rialto, Louisville, Ky.; Strand, Charleston, W. Va.; Liberty of Dayton; Palace, New Orleans; Pantages of Memphis; New Pantages, Los Angeles; Loew's, Seattle, Wash.

Government Asks Fox Film Showing

The first official recognition accorded a motion picture news service by he United States Government is the proud achievement of Fox News, according to statements from Fox Film Corporation.

Upon request of Secretary of State Hughes, arrangements were made through the Washington representative of Fox News for an official showing of several hundred feet of film which were embodied in the Fox News reel released during the first week of the Disarmament Conference. The film, entitled "War or Peace," illustrated the destruction wrought by war in contrast to the accomplishments and progress realized in time of peace.

"If Winter Comes" Will Not Be Made by Paramount

Plans for the production of A. S. M. Hutchinson's widely read novel, "If Winter Comes," as a Paramount picture have been abandoned for the present, it is announced, because John S. Robertson, who was to have directed the picture in its original locale in England, is now on his way to Hollywood to make Paramount pictures in the Paramount-Wilshire studio. Mr. Robertson, as soon as he arrives in Los Angeles, will begin production on Vincente Blasco Ibanez's novel, "Blood and Sand," starring Rodolph Valentine, with May McAvoy heading the supporting cast.

Metro Says "Turn to the Right" Will Have Lengthy Broadway Run

For the four hundred and forty-fourth time Metro says, "Turn to the Right" brought cheers from a Broadway audience, when Rex Ingram's production of the John Golden stage hit was presented in motion pictures by Mr. Golden and Marcus Loew at the Lyric Theatre, New York, the evening of Monday, January 23.

The film premiere of this play by Winchell Smith and John E. Hazzard was, it is said, perhaps even more auspicious than the initial spoken performance several seasons ago—a performance, it will be recalled, which was to be repeated until the total number of enactments had reached four hundred and forty-three.

For all that the members of the audience were what producers might refer to as hardened theatregoers, persons high in the social, financial and artistic worlds and not easily caught by the illusion of the stage and screen, there was a great demonstration of enthusiasm at the film presentation of "Turn to the Right," Metro reports.

According to Metro, those who regard theatrical openings with an eye to their box-office stamina hazarded the prophesy that "Turn to the Right" would remain on the screen on Broadway as long, if not even longer, than the play did on the stage of the Gaiety.

Rural comedy drama was a departure for Rex Ingram from the style of production in which he won fame. "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and "The Conquering Power," but he came from the new field with increased prestige, it is stated.

The showing Monday was before a specially invited audience that was as representative as that which had attended the premiere of "The Four Horsemen of the Apoclaypse." It was the occasion for the gathering of leading figures in society, business, the theatre, motion pictures, education and painting.

John F. Seitz, the photographer, whose work in "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and "The Conquering Power," had established him as one of the most artistic camera men in the profession, was again the recipient of extraordinary praise for the artistry of the backgrounds. The cast, which includes Alice Terry, Jack Mulhall, Lydia Knott, Harry Myers, George Cooper and Edward Connelly, all scored individual hits. As in the case of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," the skillful hand of June Mathis, who, with Mary O'Hara, adapted the piece to pictures, was apparent.

Strand to Show "Bride's Play"

Following a highly successful presentation at the Rialto Theatre in New York, "The Bride's Play," starring Marion Davies, will be shown by Edward L. Hyman at the Mack Strand Theatre, Brooklyn, the week of February 5.

In addition to the feature picture Mr. Hyman has arranged to present Geraldine Farrar and Wallace Reid in a condensed version of "Carmen" to which has been set the musical score of the opera.

"The Bride's Play," a Cosmopolitan Production released by Paramount, was written by Donn Byrne. The picture was directed by George W. Terwillinger and the scenario was prepared by Mildred Considine.

Pathe Has Strong Collection of Releases for February 12 Week

Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces a notable collection of releases for the week of February 12. Heading the list is the latest Pathe Playlet, "Via Wireless," a photodramatization of the stage melodrama of the same name written by Winchell Smith and Paul Armstrong. Gail Kane is co-starred in the offering with Bruce McRae. Other prominent roles are played by Harry Weaver, Brandon Hurst and Paul McAllister. George Fitzmaurice directed the production, which enjoyed a big success as a feature photoplay. The production is in three reels. The Pathe Playlet concerns itself with intrigue, love and mystery, and presents a variety of thrills of a spectacular order.

"Look Out Below" is the current reissued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. The spectacled comedian appears as a love-sick youth who is enamored with Bebe Daniels. Searching for a place to spoon without interruption, both seat themselves upon a steel girder which is lying near a building undergoing construction. A few moments later they find themselves at the very top of the new skyscraper, having been hoisted up by a derrick controlled by Foreman "Snub" Pollard. Their frantic efforts to get down, and Harold's hair-raising antics at such dizzy heights make sure-fire comedy.

"The Mysterious Voyage" is the seventh episode of "White Eagle," the new Pathe serial starring Ruth Roland. A thrilling climax is provided by the sinking of the ship and the escape of all the principal characters in lifeboats.

"Stage Struck" is the title of the latest Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard. The moustached comedian appears as a Stage-Door Johnnie, and is assisted by Marie Mosquini, who plays the role of the leading lady. The comedy is a decided satire on the old theatrical "barn-storming" days.

"The Villian in Disguise" is the current animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables," produced by Fables Pictures, Inc., and created for the screen by Cartoonist Paul Terry.

Paramount Lists Three Big Pictures for February 5 Week

Three of the biggest paramount pictures of the season, all of them, Famous Players-Lasky says, worthy of being classed as super-specials, appear on that company's release schedule for February 5. They are Cecil B. DeMille's production, "Saturday Night;" Betty Compson in the Penrhyn Stanlaws production, "The Law and the Woman," and the special comedy. "One Glorious Day," with Will Rogers and Lila Lee.

Leatrice Joy, Conrad Nagel, Edith Roberts and Jack Mower play the leading roles in "Saturday Night," which was written by Jeanie Macpherson. The cast also includes such screen luminaries as Julia Faye, Edythe Chapman, Theodore Roberts, Sylvia Ashton, John Davidson, James Neill, Winter Hall, Max Fisher, leader of the famous Ambassador Orchestra; Zelma Majar, Betty Francisco, Lucien Littlefield and Lillian Leighton.

The story, which is said to have a wide human appeal, treats of the subject of mismated marriages.

The late Clyde Fitch's fine drama, "The Woman in the Case," was scenarized by Albert Shelby LeVino for Paramount, and under its screen title, "The Law and the Woman," presents Betty Compson as its star. With the excellent continuity to work upon, Mr. Stanlaws has builded what critics have called one of the most perfect examples of dramatic construction which the screen has yet reflected. Suspense is maintained throughout, and it is not until the last hundred feet that the tension is relieved.

Miss Compson's leading man is William T. Carleton, while Casson Ferguson plays the victim of the murder. Cleo Ridgely, former Paramount star, is seen in the heavy role, and others in the cast are Henry Barrows, Helen Dunbar and Clarence Burton.

When audiences see "One Glorious Day," Paramount says, they are bound to declare it one of the most unique things ever seen in pictures. It is a distinct novelty—a burlesque on spiritualism, with melodrama and heart interest liberally mingled and the merriest of comedy running all through it.

A. B. Barrington and Walter Woods wrote the story and the latter adapted it for the screen. It concerns a wandering soul looking for an earthly home—an aggressive spirit named "Ek."

James Cruze, the director, certainly is entitled to share the honors of the picture with Will Rogers and Lila Lee, the featured players. Incidentally, there is a very realistic fight between Rogers and Allan Hale.

After being out for almost two days, a jury in a justice of the peace court at Winchester, Ind., in the case of Roll Wenger, proprietor of a moving picture theatre at Union City, charged with operating his theatre on Sunday, returned a verdict of guilty and fixed his fine at $5 and costs. The case was taken to Winchester on a change of venue from Union City. The trial was the second for Wenger, the jury disagreeing at the former hearing after a deliberation of forty hours. Just what effect this action will have in regard to the operation of theatres in Union City on Sunday is not known at this time.

Miss Dalton has just completed "The Red Challenge" for Paramount, in which she is the star. It was directed by Paul Powell.

Legion Helps Make a Christie Comedy

Christie has finished a comedy for Educational release called "Oh Promise Me," which was made in close co-operation with the Hollywood Post of the American Legion. Many of the scenes were taken in and around the Legion Clubhouse, which is near the Christie Studio, and virtually every male part was enacted by a member of the Legion.

Neal Burns, who was in the army, has the leading role. Practically all the younger members of the Christie staff were in some branch of the service, so they fitted naturally into the story, which has to do with a returned soldier and his American and Parisian sweethearts.

Goldwyn Believes It Has Winner in New Gouverneur Morris Film

Goldwyn officials are confident that their concern has another big melodrama success in "Yellow Men and Gold," made from Gouverneur Morris' adventure novel of the same title. A finished print has just been received at the New York headquarters and everybody at the Goldwyn offices is telling everyone who will listen what an absorbing and unusual photoplay it is.

Irvin V. Willat was engaged by Goldwyn especially to direct this picture. Richard Dix and Helene Chadwick are featured. Rosemary Theby was especially engaged and Henry Barrows makes his bow as a Goldwyn player in this picture. Others in the cast are Richard Tucker, Fred Kohler, Henry T. Herbert, William Moran, Goro Kino, George King, William A. Caroll and R. T. Frazier.

The story has much of the romantic fervor and melodramatic action of "Treasure Island," as it deals with two rival bands of treasure seekers competing for a Spanish galleon, loaded with golden and silver ingots.

Dorothy Dalton Is Featured in Paramount Film

Once again in Paramount Pictures, one of those casts which Paramount says, may be almost literally termed all-star, has been supplied for "The Cat That Walked Alone," a George Melford production which features Dorothy Dalton, with Milton Sills and Wanda Hawley in two of the prominent parts and a number of others of note in roles of importance.

Tie-up With Civic Organizations Guarantees Wausau Exhibitor Big Saturday Matinee Attendance

A remarkable instance of theatre management enterprise is reported by Pathe, for which local conditions in many other cities and towns undoubtedly are favorable. Briefly stated, the theatre in the case reported went out and secured a contract with a committee representing four of the most influential local organizations whereby its Saturday afternoon attendance was guaranteed to be not less than 500 admissions for a period of twenty weeks. Heretofore his Saturday matinees never came near that mark.

The Stuart Theatre, Wausau, Wis., is the house in question, and its live general manager is E. C. Bostick. The local organizations which made themselves responsible for profitable receipts for the house covering the period stated are: The Y. M. C. A., Boy Scouts of America, the Y. W. C A, and the Parent-Teachers' Association of the Grant, Lincoln, Franklin and High Schools of the town. These organizations were represented by a special committee of which G. C. Driesbach was chairman.

The original inspiration for the enterprise of the Stuart Theatre management was contained in the Wausau Record-Herald's report of the regular monthly meeting of the Lincoln Parent-Teachers' Association, at which resolutions were passed relative to motion picture attendance of children. General Manager Bostick's quick eye noted especially these paragraphs in the resolutions:

"That if any manager or owner of a local theatre will submit his programs for Saturday afternoon matinees to a competent committee of public school teachers, will eliminate all features of which this committee shall disapprove, and follow as far as practicable their suggestions for features to be presented, we will pledge him our patronage and support insofar as we allow our children to patronize our theatres.

"That we invite other Parent-Teachers' Associations in the city, and all other organizations interested in the welfare of children, to adopt similar resolutions."

Mr. Bostick was especially interested in these resolutions as he knew himself to be in a position to satisfy the Parent-Teachers' Association respecting the character of programs he had to offer. His position as a representative citizen of Wausau, as well as that of leading local motion picture exhibitor, made his services acceptable in immediately carrying out the purposes of the resolutions. Besides, he wanted to add to his bookings of Pathe short subjects, which he foresaw, would meet all the requirements of Parent-Teachers' Associations and thus bring to his theatre profitable new patronage.

Manager Bostick found Pathe Branch Manager S. G. Honeck at Milwaukee fully alive to the situation. H. A. Wolfgram, of the selling staff, was assigned to the work of co-operating with the Stuart Theatre management in convincing Wausau organizations that there would be no difficulty in meeting all program requirements. Within two days after the publication in the Record-Herald, the Parent-Teachers' Associations of most of the Wassau Schools, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., ad the Boy Scouts of America had appointed a general committee, with G. C. Driesbach as chairman, empowered to decide in the matter of pictures to be shown and to contract with the Stuart Theatre Company for a series of Saturday afternoon performances.

"Conceit" Ready

Having given "A Man's Home" an impetus that is carrying it into one of the greatest successes a Selznick photoplay has ever made, the Select sales organization is now turning its attention to "Conceit," the second of this season's Selznick specials. Prints have been delivered to all Select exchanges and the sales forces are getting behind the new attraction with the same vigor that started "A Man's Home" upon its successful career.

Big Cast in Next Picture By DeMille

In order to embody in Paramount Pictures every possible feature that will prove attractive to the public, Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announces that in William de Mille's Paramount production of "Nice People," which follows "Bought and Paid For," a number of noted stars and players will be featured. Among these are Wallace Reid, Bebe Daniels, Wanda Hawley, all of whom are stars in their own right, and Conrad Nagel, the popular young leading man.

This is, of course, in line with the policy that is used in many Paramount productions of grouping together famous figures of the screen and the present cast is regarded as being in a superlative class.

"Nice People" is from the play by Rachel Crothers and has been one of the real successes of the stage. Further announcement concerning the cast and features will be made public shortly.

Another "Torchy"

Johnny Hines, whose work in "Battling Torchy" has won the approval of every critic who viewed it has finished work on the next "Torchy" Comedy for Educational release. It is called "Torchy and Orange Blossoms."

Leonard Talks at Home Office of Universal

L. O. Leonard, author of "The First Fifty Years of the Union Pacific," and chief historian of the U. P. R. R., who came to New York from Omaha at the request of Frederick J. McConnell, Universal's serial exploitation manager, was the guest of honor at an informal dinner last Tuesday night at Giolito's. Following the dinner, the entire party, consisting of the advertising, exploitation and publicity departments of Universal convened in the projection room at the "U" home office to listen to an illuminative discourse by Mr. Leonard.

Rocketts Look for Film to Be a Big Success

The demand for "Handle With Care" by exhibitors who have seen its great exploitation possibilities is cited by officials of Associated Exhibitors in support of their contention that this Al. and Ray Rockett production will be a notably successful offering during the coming months. It was released January 22, after having recorded a fine pre-release array of first run bookings, it is said.

William Farnum To Stay in East

According to announcement from Fox Film Corporation, it has been definitely decided that William Farnum will continue work at the New York studios instead of going to the West Coast for his future work.

Attractive Lobby Display Put On by H. P. Nelson for "Lavender and Old Lace"

Since "Lavender and Old Lace" was released by Hodkinson last June, many attractive lobby displays on the subject have been reported from various theatres throughout the country, but one of the most attractive displays to date on the production is one at the Capitol Theatre in Elizabeth, N. J., which was put over by Manager Henry P. Nelson.

"Lavender and Old Lace" played the Capitol the entire week of January 29. Ten days in advance of the opening date Mr. Nelson had his display in the lobby. It consisted of over a hundred yards of lavender ribbon and an equal number of yards of exquisite white lace. The lavender ribbon and lace was draped on the walls of the lobby and festooned from the ceiling, while lavender and lace curtains were hung at the entrance and exit doors.

The Elizabeth papers devoted nearly a half column each to a description of the lobby and praise of Mr. Nelson's ability as a showman. The latter has been in the show business for more than fifteen years. He has a speaking acquaintance with more than half of his patrons and much of the credit for the success of the Capitol is attributed to this fact.

Whenever Mr. Nelson has an unusual feature booked for his theatre he ballyhoos it from the stage at every performance during the week previous to the showing. In this way he works up interest in the picture and paves the way for the display advertising in the papers during the week that the picture is showing.

Tie-ups with several women's clubs and the Y. W. C. A. were put over for the "Lavender and Old Lace" showing. Thursday night was Y. W. C. A. night. The house split the receipts with the Y. W. C. A. for its building fund and the theatre was packed. Thursday night is usually an off night for the Capitol, but Manager Nelson generally finds some way of forcing the attendance.

The Capitol is a 900 seat house and is one of a chain operated by Gold & Hennessey, including houses in Newark, Passaic, Kearney and Rutherford. A new house in Newark and another in Rutherford are now in the course of construction.

R. B. McIntyre in New York Selects New Actors for Goldwyn

Robert B. McIntyre, casting director for Goldwyn Pictures' Corporation at the studios in Culver City, California, is in New York for two or three weeks to renew acquaintance with stage and screen players whom he has seen in the past and to meet and appraise those who have come into prominence in the two years that he has been on the Pacific Coast.

Mr. McIntyre was formerly production manager of Goldwyn's Eastern studio. When that was closed he became business manager for Maurice Tourneur, last fall returning to Goldwyn as casting director.

Mr. McIntyre expects to put in some very busy days before returning to Culver City, attending plays and picture screenings in the evenings and interviewing players during the daytime. He will be glad to see screen players and those desirous of entering motion pictures at the Goldwyn offices, 469 Fifth avenue, between the hours of 9 a. m. and 5 p. m.

"Goldwyn wants new faces in its pictures," said Mr. McIntyre. "Not only faces of established screen personalities for the biggest roles in its productions, but faces that are entirely new to the screen."

Kinograms and Educational Begin Second Year Together

Kinograms news service is entering its second year with Educational. On January 3, 1921, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., released its first issue of this news reel.

During the twelve months in which Kinograms has been distributed through Educational the producers have set up a high standard of news service and have consistently striven to attain that standard. The regular staff of photographers has been greatly enlarged, and in case of unusual events, no expense has been spared to provide for Kinograms users the best and quickest possible service in pictures "covering" such events thoroughly and attractively, it is said.

Associated Exhibitors Release a New J. P. McGowan Production

A J. P. McGowan feature released by Playgoers Pictures on January 26, is entitled "Hills of Missing Men." This is the fourth of a series made by Herald Productions; the others are "Discontented Wives," "The Ruse of the Rattler" and "Reckless Chances." Playgoers say that exhibitors are using these five reelers to splendid advantage and that J. P. McGowan, who both directs and stars in them, is working up an exceptional following.

"Hills of Missing Men" is declared to excel its predecessors in the variety of costliness of its settings.

"Peacock Alley" Extensively Booked

"Peacock Alley," Mae Murray's picture of the white ways of New York and Paris, has been booked in the first-run houses of practically every large city of the country, according to an announcement this week, from Mitro Pictures Corporation, its distributors.

In addition to the first-run houses, contracts have been closed with a number of companies for the picture to be shown over their entire circuits. Most of the exhibitors in contracting for "Peacock Alley," notified the various exchanges that they wished to have the privilege of booking it for extended runs.

Among the first of the circuits to wire in for dates for its entire number of houses were the Southern Enterprise, Wilmer & Vincent, and Finkelstein & Ruben circuits. These three big amusement companies operating in the South, East and Middle West, have all contracted for early showings.

First-run houses where "Peacock Alley" will be shown are the Blackstone, in Pittsburgh; Coliseum, Seattle; Rialto, San Antonio; Walnut, Cincinnati; Columbia, Washington; Valentine, Toledo; Dome, Youngstown; Randolph, Chicago; Dome, Akron; Rialto, Denver; Strand, New Orleans; Park, Boston; State, Los Angeles, and Loew's, Cleveland. In other key cities throughout the country the bookings have been just as heavy, it is said.

Three Important Announcements Issued from the Fox Offices

Three important announcements were issued this week from the offices of Fox Film Corporation. According to the first, J. Gordon Edwards, the Fox director who recently completed the filming of the super-production, "Nero," at the Rome studio of William Fox, has started work on "The Shepherd King," another super-special. Several exterior scenes of the new picture have already been made in Egypt, where the Edwards' Company has been for the past three weeks.

Violet Mersereau, the Fox actress, who as the feminine lead in "Nero" had the role of the Christian martyr, and recently returned from Europe, will sail for Italy on February 15 to rejoin the Edwards' group when it returns to Rome. She will be assigned the leading feminine part in "The Shepherd King." The full cast for the picture has not yet been selected, but with the exception of Miss Mersereau and one other it will be composed of foreign actors.

The second Fox announcement is the signing of Harry Beaumont, the well-known director. Beaumont, who recently severed connection with Metro after the completion of a long series of successful productions, will assume direction of Shirley Mason in her next feature, the working title of which is "Down the Back Stairs." In the cast are John Herron, the popular male lead, who also recently joined the Fox forces; Edwin Stevens, Cecil Van Auker, Claire MacDowell and Aggie Herring.

That Fox will produce two pictures from stories by George Owen Baxter, the noted author of Western tales, is the third announcement. The Baxter novel, "Free Range Lanning," will be made with Tom Mix as the star, and in "When Iron Turns to Gold"—to be known on the screen as "Iron to Gold"—Dustin Farnum will play the star role. In the cast with Farnum will be Margaret Marsh, as female lead, and William Conklin. Mix will have Patsy Ruth Miller as his leading lady.

Williams Working on New Picture

Although the nature of the story has not been announced it is known in coast circles that as soon as he finishes production on "The Man from Downing Street," upon which he is now working, Earle Williams will immediately begin production of a new story.

The year of 1922 promises to be a busy one for the Vitagraph star. His schedule includes several big pictures, and a goodly portion of Vitagraph's scenario department will be devoted to selecting and preparing the best available material.

Semon Completes Biggest Comedy

Larry Semon's newest comedy, "The Show Shop," arrived in the East and prints will soon be shipped to Vitagraph Exchanges. The actual camera work on this new comedy was finished a number of days ago, but Larry spent considerable time editing this comedy, and, for once, was not working out the plans for another comedy.

Semon gave his full time to this new one, for he believes it of very special calibre. Its sets, its company, in fact everything about it, make it the most expensive comedy ever put out by this successful comedian. Its production taxed the capacity of Vitagraph's Hollywood studio, so that ground was broken a short time ago for a special and seperate studio to house the Semon production unit.

Kineto Pictures Highly Praised

The popularity of the "Great Authors" pictures produced as Urban Popular Classics for the Kineto Company of America, is being evidenced, it is said, by letters which keep coming to Charles Urban.

Under date of January 26, Mrs. Albert Gallatin Childe, founder and president of the Edgar Allan Poe Society, wrote: "The dramatization of Annabel Lee was far beyond my expectations, the scenic effects being especially worthy of praise. You have brought out in this picture the qualities our society is working to make America see."

Exhibitors will be interested particularly in the estimate of the entire series as given by Joseph Plunkett, managing-director of the Mark-Strand Theatre in New York.

Mr. Plunkett wrote: "One of the most satisfactory contracts that it has been my privilege to sign was the contract with your company to show at the Strand Theatre a series of Charles Urban's 'Great Authors' pictures, three of which have already been presented. They are exceptional single-reel films and are creating unusual comments from the various Strand audiences."

The "Great Authors" series is being released nationally beginning this week by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Completing Plans for Vignola Film

Preliminary plans for the big special production of "When Knighthood Was In Flower," which Robert G. Vignola is to make for Cosmopolitan, are nearing completion, and actual shooting is expected to begin within a week or ten days.

"When Knighthood Was In Flower" will probably be released in ten reels or more. It will be the biggest production Director Vignola has made and also the biggest sponsored by Cosmopolitan.

Goldwyn Expects Big Film Success

Goldwyn has, it states, what promises to be one of Rupert Hughes' most popular photoplays in "Darlin'," the screen original which was tentatively called "Sent for, Out," and which Mr. Hughes directed, cut, titled and assembled in addition to writing, adapting to the screen and casting.

Exhibitors Praise Lee Moran Films

The series of little two-reel take offs on every day life which Lee Moran is producing under his new contract with Century are going strong according to exhibitors who write praise of them to Julius Stern.

To Star Horse

Century executives have selected a horse owned by Pete Morrison to be starred in a comedy to be directed by Jesse Robbins.

A better picture has not been turned out by the Vitagraph studios in a long time. Not only is the action fast and interesting and is interspered with wholesome comedy touches, but also the emotions are strongly appealed to. Moreover, its logic impresses one as being sound, the smooth continuity aiding in the attainment. The outdoor shots, on the other hand, showing beautiful scenery, help no little in exerting a pleasurable effect upon the artistic senses.

It is a story of the gallant South, unfolding in the Pre-Civil War days, the attempt of a villain to abduct a young boy, with whose mother, now dead, he had years before run away, so that he might rob the child of his estate, being the theme. In its development, the villain's plot is foiled by the hero and the heroine, two young folk who met and learned to love each other, and who eventually marry.

Mr. Maclyn Arbuckle should be highly commended; he helps put over the comedy touches in a natural way, getting all there is out of them. Charles Eaton, the boy, with his naturalness wins the spectator's love. Miss Paige is charming in the role of Betty Malroy, the Southern Belle; she is ideal for the part, acting with grace. Ernest Torrence, as the friend of the old Judge, also deserves praise. The whole cast, in fact, has been chosen successfully.

"The Prodigal Judge" should give universal satisfaction.—Vitagraph, Feb. 19; 7,803 ft. (it is to be cut shorter); 90 to 111 min.

"Two Kinds of Women"—

"Young Painter" Is Next Triart

"The Young Painter," third in the series of Triart Great Masterpieces, was released by Hodkinson this week, when prints were sent forward to the Hodkinson branches. "The Young Painter," with Mary Astor in the principal role, was made under the direction of Herbert Blaché, as dramatic director, and Lejaren á Hiller as art director.

Despite the reception and praise accorded "The Beggar Maid" and "The Bashful Suitor," the first two productions of this series, officials of the Hodkinson and Triart organizations, and even Directors Blaché and Hiller, feel that "The Young Painter" surpasses its predecessors in story, continuity and photographic effects.

"The Beggar Maid" and "The Bashful Suitor" were based on the paintings by Sir E. Burne-Jones and Josef Israele, respectively, while "The Young Painter" is adapted from the masterpiece of the same title by Rembrandt. "Hope," the fourth production of the series, upon which work will be started in the near future, is adapted from the painting by Watts.

"White Hands" at Moss Theatre

"White Hands," the Max Graf Production, featuring Hobart Bosworth, and distributed by Wid Gunning, Inc., opened to a crowded house at B. S. Moss's Broadway Theatre, New York City, January 30. The management reported that the audience liked the picture immensely, particularly its thrills, of which there are said to be a number, and its Sahara desert scenes. Many big bookings have been signed up so far for "White Hands," it is reported.

M. M. Minter Film for Early Release

Paramount promises novelties in the way of thrills for "The Heart Specialist," a Mary Miles Minter Realart picture for Famous Players-Lasky which is announced for early release.

"The Heart Specialist" is said to divorce Miss Minter completely from the "sweet sixteen," ingenue type of stories in which she has been seen in the past.

Irene Dalton Back

Irene Dalton, who made a short visit to her old home in Chicago, is back in Hollywood to play opposite Lloyd Hamilton in his latest Mermaid Comedy for Educational. The picture is not yet titled.

4,000 Exhibitors Enrolled for Initial First National Week

An early check-up of theatres that have enlisted for the celebration of First National Anniversary Week, February 18-25, reveals an enthusiastic response from exhibitors in every section of the country, more than 4,000 of whom have already pledged themselves to run First National pictures during that period. The number based on early reports is all the more significant in that it includes not only franchise holders and sub-franchise holders but also a large percentage of picture theatre owners who have never before been consistent users of First National productions.

It is the first national wide anniversary week that First National Pictures has staged. Although a First National Week was celebrated in many localities last year, the movement was not simultaneous throughout the country, being left, by virtue of local conditions, to the discretion of exchanges or franchise holders in the different territories.

Among the productions that will be released during the intervening time are Marshall Neilan's "Penrod," Norma Talmadge in "Smilin' Through," R. A. Walsh's "Kindred of the Dust," Anita Stewart in "A Question of Honor," Katherine MacDonald in "The Woman's Side" and the Emerson-Loos production "Red Hot Romance."

Some of the more recent releases that will be featured during First National Week include Charlie Chaplin revivals of "A Dog's Life" and "Sunnyside," Charles Ray in "R. S. V. P." and "The Barnstormer," Jackie Coogan in "My Boy," John M. Stahl's "The Song of Life," Constance Talmadge in "Polly of the Follies," Richard Barthelmess in "Tol'able David" and "The Seventh Day," Norma Talmadge in "The Wonderful Thing" and "Love's Redemption," the Selig-Rork production of "The Rosary," J. L. Frothingham's "Shattered Idols" and the Buster Keaton and Mack Sennett short comedies.

Vitagraph Begins Production on "Magnificent Ambersons"

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, announced this week that production on "The Magnificent Ambersons" will be commenced in the very near future with Jean Paige heading the all-star cast. Edward Jose, who will direct it, is already selecting the supporting cast. Mr. Smith only recently returned from the West Coast and just before he left he conferred with Mr. Jose concerning this production, which will be one of Vitagraph's biggest specials.

It will be recalled that this book, written by Booth Tarkington, was generally hailed by reviewers at the time of its publication as the long looked for great American novel. Certainly it is one of the strongest pieces of characterizations that ever came from the pen of the famous Indiana novelist, and is American to the core. Life in the Middle West is delineated as only Tarkington can do it. Many scenes in the picture will be filmed in that section of the country.

Jean Paige will portray the role of Lucy Morgan. Lucy and George Minafer Amberson are the chief figures in the love story, although the older love story between Isabelle Minafer and Eugene also gives the book a distinct quality of mellowness.

It is understood that "The Magnificent Ambersons" will be a March release of Vitagraph. This will be the third big special to be released by Vitagraph, "Flower of the North" and "The Prodigal Judge" already having enjoyed successful New York runs on Broadway.

American Pictures Said to Be Favorites With the Chinese

American pictures have the call in China—so much so that their competition is trifling—according to a party of prominent Chinese officials who visited the New York studio of William Fox on their way back to their native country. The party included Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Chow Tsuchi, Miss Amy Chow, Miss Susie Chow, Mr. H. H. Bowling and Mr. W. C. Kwong.

Mr Tschui is Minister of Finance and one of the ablest of Chinese statesmen. He has been in Washington acting in an advisory capacity with the Chinese delegation at the Armament Conference.

"Chinese are as ardent picture fans as Americans," said Y. C. Kwong, who acted as spokesman for the party. "The family goes to see your players whenever it can, just as you do here. The American pictures are so much the favorite that the others are hardly worth mentioning."

Asked if there had been any attempt to produce by Chinese companies, Mr. Kwong said there had been such an undertaking. "But I do not know much about it," he added. "Personally I never have seen a motion picture made by a Chinese company. I have heard of two or three companies who attempted it, and understand the results were very crude."

Selecting Cast for Fox Picture

William Fox is building a strong cast, it is said, for the new super-special production Harry Millarde is ready to start at the Fox New York studios. Two leads were engaged in the persons of Charles Richman and Barbara Castleton.

Marshall Neilan Is Filming "Fools First"

Marshall Neilan has gone to San Francisco, where he is filming several sequences of Hugh MacNair Kahler's Saturday Evening Post story, "Fools First." Marion Fairfax has just finished the continuity for the Neilan production.

Mr. Neilan was accompanied to the Bay City by Claire Windsor, Richard Dix and Claude Gillingwater, who will play the principal roles in the production. Frank O'Connor, who directed "Penrod," and three cameramen, David Kesson, Karl Struss, and Ray June—also were in the Neilan party. Scenes are being filmed in the San Quentin prison and in the Hotel St. Francis.

Gives Praise to First National Films

"'By Heck' is fine. These new First National comedies can't be beaten."

This tribute to the laugh-makers released by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., comes from W. E. Drumbar, manager of the Riviera Theatre of Knoxville, Tenn. He has discovered that his patrons are particularly fond of these productions and that bill containing a First National feature and a First National comedy is a potent drawing card. "By Heck" was shown in connection with "R. S. V. P.," Charles Ray's latest at the Riviera, on Jan. 12 to 14.

Makes Unusual Tie-up for Film

An unusual tie-up, resulting in fine newspaper publicity was put over by Forrest C. Templin, directing manager of the Lincoln Theatre, of Belleville, Ill., coincident with the engagement of the Gunning picturization of Charles Dicken's novel, "Our Mutual Friend," at that theatre recently. The tie-up was made in connection with the installation of a Dickens' memorial tablet in the theatre.

Universal Announces Opening of "Foolish Wives" in Big Cities

Following the opening of "Foolish Wives" at the Central Theatre in New York, the picture has been booked in eight of the largest cities of the United States. The placing of these opening showings has been a matter of deep concern to Carl Laemmle, president of Universal, ever since the picture opened. The minute he let it be known that he would accept bids on this picture, his desk and that of Mr. Berman, the exchange manager, were flooded with all kinds of applications for showing the picture.

It has been Mr. Laemmle's desire, however, to have this picture set in cities which were strategically important for distributing purposes and where the greatest number of exhibitors could see the picture itself and its drawing power.

Contrary to the usual procedure, "Foolish Wives" is being sold in Mr. Laemmle's own office rather than in the office of the exhibitor who buys it. Frank Rembusch, owner of the Ohio Theatre of Indianapolis, after the successful negotiations which resulted in his booking the picture, made this public statement: "The price I have agreed to pay for "Foolish Wives" is higher than any price I ever dreamed of paying for any picture on earth; and at that I think it is the biggest bargain I ever got in my life."

Nathan Ascher, president of the Ascher Theatres Corporation, who will show "Foolish Wives" at the Roosevelt Theatre in Chicago, directly after he had secured the production, stated: "Foolish Wives" is the greatest picture I ever saw. I came here to pick flaws in it, but could not find even one. It is perfect. The production is scheduled to open in the Roosevelt on February 12.

The first theatre which will show the "Foolish Wives" picture outside of New York will be the Criterion Theatre of Buffalo. This house is owned by Max Spiegel of the Mark Strand Theatres. Mr. Spiegel is preparing for an indefinite run, as all of the present bookings of the picture contemplate.

On February 13, Monday, Felt Brothers will present "Foolish Wives" at the Aldine Theatre in Philadelphia.

On the 15th the picture will enjoy its premier performance in California, staged at Mack Sennett's Mission Theatre in Los Angeles.

On February 19 "Foolish Wives" will open in Freuler's Butterfly Theatre in Milwaukee, managed by Harry Hart, and also at the Criterion Theatre of Oklahoma City, owned by James Cooper.

The next opening is at the Park Theatre in Boston, where Jake Laurie has reserved a lot of time following March 6.

Almost everyone of the managers who have already booked the picture have seen it at the Central Theatre and it is extremely significant to them that the picture in its third week is playing to bigger business than the opening week. Its fourth week is starting better than either the second or third.

New York Teachers Are Given Chance to See "School Days"

More than 3,500 New York school teachers were given a private showing of the Warner Brothers production, Gus Edwards' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, at the Lexington Opera House on January 27. The showing was made possible through an arrangement sanctioned and made by Ernest L. Crandall, director of the Bureau of Lectures, with Harry M. Warner.

Mr. Crandall in addressing the school teachers said: "The motion picture industry is moving upward and forward in accordance with public taste for the more beautiful, wholesome and instructive things of life. Motion pictures have character and personality just like people. They move or impress us, or perhaps they leave us cold or indifferent. Like folks, they make us laugh or cry, they make us glad or sad.

"The motion picture is the economic salvation of the masses. Its appeal is directed at both the child and the parent. When a motion picture contains an ethical appeal, an appeal, on the ground of character building, on the ground of spiritual influence, then that motion picture is destined to live in the hearts of all those who see it. Those pictures that are free from salaciousness, free from indecency, will make the motion picture industry one of the greatest constructive forces in America."

H. M. Warner also spoke, and told the teachers of the trials experienced on the making and the distributing of a motion picture that would meet with world-wide approval. The teachers were given Wes' Barry lollypops, duncecaps and heralds. Harry Rapf, the producer of "School Days," Will Nigh, the director, and Abe Warner were among those present.

Comedy Coming

"Schoolday Love" will be the next Campbell Comedy released by Educational. It follows "Assorted Heroes" and presents the same two children in the leading roles, Doreen Turner and Coy Watson, Jr.

Paramount Starts Three New Pictures

Monday, February 6, is the starting date for two new Paramount productions, Wallace Reid in "The Dictator," and Jack Holt and Bebe Daniels in "Val of Paradise."

James Cruze will direct Reid in "The Dictator," which Walter Woods adapted from the stage comedy made famous by Willie Collier. Lila Lee will have the feminine lead.

The Jack Holt - Bebe Daniels starring picture is by Vingle E. Roe, who also wrote the story, "Tharon of Lost Valley," which has just been filmed tentatively under that title with Dorothy Dalton in the stellar role. The scenario is by Will M. Ritchey and Joseph Henabery will direct.

On or about the same date Thomas Meighan will start work in 'Our Leading Citizen," by George Ade, adapted by Waldemar Young, a story written especially for the Paramount star by the noted Hoosier humorist. Lois Wilson will be Mr. Meighan's leading woman and Alfred Green will direct.

Criterion Holds Film Two Weeks

"Pageantry of India," an Urban Popular Classic, is now in its second week at the Criterion Theatre in New York. The gigantic work that goes into the preparation of a festival-promenade in India is excellently shown, it is said.

Appears Personally

Baby Peggy, the three-year-old star of Century Comedies, at the request of Sid Grauman, made several personal appearances at his million dollar theatre in Los Angeles in conjunction with "Chums," which was playing there to packed houses, it is said.

Maurice Tourneur has completed most of the interior scenes from "Lorna Doone," which he is filming for Associated First National release.

Keeping in Personal Touch

By FRITZ TIDDEN

FILM producers have shown lack of respect for age in going to plays and novels for inspiration and now they have turned to old songs for photoplay topics. No need now for mother to wail: "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" She'll find him at the movies.

Other film-song-titles may be "Father, Dear Father, Come Home With Me Now," while yeggmen are making raids "On the Banks of the Wabash."

The long expected debate between William A. Brady and John Roach Straton will finally take place. They will meet in the Calvary Baptist Church, February 12, at 3 o'clock. The subject of the debate will be "Sensational Preachers vs. the Stage" under governing rules of "use no hooks and bury your own dead."

For his choice of referees Mr. Brady proposed Mayor Hylan, William Muldoon and Commissioner Enright to meet three chosen by Dr. Straton, the six to select the seventh. If the decision of the referees be against Dr. Straton the clergyman is to apologize to the theatrical profession and cease attacking it, is Mr. Brady's stipulation.

Marie Mosquini, assisted by her mother, was hostess last week at her home on Victoria Drive, Culver City, Cal., at a surprise party arranged in honor of Bebe Daniels, whose birthday anniversary it was. Miss Daniels, who had been vacationing at Ventura with her mother, was lured back to town on some pretext or other and was duly surprised. The evening was spent in games, dancing, for which a three piece orchestra furnished the music and informal contributions by the guests who were called on to perform impromptu some speciality. Miss Daniels herself sang some Spanish songs. Elaborate refreshments were served and then was featured the ceremonial of cutting the birthday cake adorned by twenty-one candles. The rite of blowing out the candles was not omitted and again the guest of honor rose to the occasion and with long breath left only three candles burning which means, interpreted for the unitiated that Miss Daniels is only alloted three years of single blessedness before she goes to the altar! The decorative scheme throughout was in orchid.

Those present were for the most part old friends who were associated with Miss Daniels when she was appearing in one-reelers at the Hal E. "'Tis better to have been engaged and never married, than never to have been engaged at all—fablegrams the wise spirit of old Aesop. Of course a fiance becomes a financial liability to a man. And even though his promise to the girl is not negotiable like a promisory note, she is often glad to give her acceptance. The engagement is a mutual promise—a regular 50-50 affair—with mutual benefits resulting in most cases in one hundred per cent. happiness for life. So it appears to be one of the fairest propositions in the world. Some of the press jokesmiths seem to regard an engagement between a young couple as one of the funniest things than can happen. In the Independent Field

The Passing Week in Review

THE week just closed has been an unusually busy one for independents. On the pages that follow appear many interesting and important announcements. To begin with the fight of independents against imposition of the five per cent. rental sales tax has reached the point where a request has been made for a hearing on the much-discussed question. There is every reason for believing that the Internal Revenue Commission will grant this request, but what is puzzling independents at present is the indifferent attitude of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Despite the fact that news came from Washington last week that the interpretation placed on the issue by the Commission included not only State Rights exchanges, but exchanges owned by national distributing corporations as well, the N. O. M. P. I. has remained silent, assuming the attitude that its members were not involved and consequently there was nothing for it to do.

DESPITE the indifference of the Naitonal Association, the independents are determinedly going ahead with their plans. Harry G. Kosch, general counsel, for the I. P. D. A., has gone to Washington to personally interview authoritative officials. But the chief purpose of the trip was to obtain a date on which the independents can be heard, for it is not believed that the Commission will insist on its original interpretation when that body is made to understand that such action will virtually bankrupt the independent market.

BOOKING of "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" in the Criterion Theatre is another interesting piece of news demonstrative of the progress of State Rights productions. Hugo Reisenfeld, managing director of the Criterion, Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, has assumed a Missourian attitude for a long time. A State Rights production was not sought by this genial showman. But times have changed and, like scores of others in his class, he has come to realize that the independent market offers productions with unquestionably great box office value and that there is a public demand for independently made productions.

STATE Rights men in general will watch with great interest the showing of the picture at this premier Broadway picture palace. The picture itself should hold its own at any house, for it has a box office title, a human story and is well acted and produced. Equity is to be congratulated on the acquisition of the production and also on its success in convincing Mr. Reisenfeld that the independent market has productions that warrant exhibition at the best and biggest theatres in this country.

THIS past week we reviewed a State Rights picture with a melodramatic title that had absolutely nothing to do with the theme of the feature. This fact was generally commented on by spectators. They were satisfied with the entertainment the picture furnished them, but they left the theatre disappointed. In the scramble for box office titles that can be exploited, the producer or distributor should not lose sight of the fact that if the title is a misrepresentation the public will soon discover the fact and ridicule the effort.

BUSINESS is improving, but that does not mean that we must cease pulling together. Important changes are being made. "Fly-by-nights" are being made to realize the fact that respectable State Rights men no longer will tolerate their presence in the field and that no stone will be left unturned in the effort to drive them out. One of these disreputable exchangemen, learning that he was about to be prosecuted for having given worthless checks and failure to live up to contracts, wired his creditors and Counsel Kosch of the I. P. D. A. that he would be in New York for the purpose of making some sort of settlement. Five "fly-by-nights" have closed their doors within the past two weeks.

WHILE the I. P. D. A. is straining every effort to make exchanges live up to their contracts, it must not lose sight of the fact that there have been and still are companies in the field whose contracts with the local distributors have been violated. Three such complaints this week came to the attention of this department. They involved national companies that deliberately violated contracts with exchanges after the latter had booked the pictures with exhibitors in their territory. At present these exchanges are helpless and can obtain no redress. But it is a question that the I. P. D. A. should contend with at the same time it is trying to run down wilful violators of contracts with its members.

A CERTAIN Northwestern exchangeman came to New York and, after viewing a picture, told the owner that he had to catch a train back home and consequently had no time to wait for promulgation of the contract. He suggested that the distributor ship him the contract and a print C. O. D. On receipt of the contract he would sign and return it with a draft in payment for rights to the picture. The distributor sent both contract and print to Minneapolis. The exchangeman wired back that he wanted another week in which to lift the C. O. D. and O. K. the contract. This was agreeable to the distributor, who a few days later received a wire from the exchangeman from Milwaukee, giving instructions that a print be at once rushed to Milwaukee to fill dates his salesmen had secured. He added in his letter that he would lift the Minneapolis print three days later.

THE distributor shipped the print to Milwaukee. It was picked up there and the picture shown at theatres in and around that city. But no further word came from the exchangeman. Finally, the distributor decided to personally investigate. He went to Minneapolis and there learned that the exchangeman had made no effort to lift the C. O. D. on the print sent immediately after his departure from New York. He extended his investigation to Milwaukee where he ascertained that the picture had been extensively shown in that district. An explanation was demanded, but the only satisfaction the distributor received was the contention of the exchangeman that he was financially embarrassed and that he would pay for the picture rights as soon as "I get on my feet." Meantime, the first print is still resting comfortably in some dingy corner of the freight office at the Great Northern Railway Station.

SUCH practice as this should stop immediately. It is not only unfair, but a reflection on the industry. The guilty exchangeman is well-known in the industry and until this case came to our attention, we have known him to utilize none but legitimate and progressive methods in operating his exchange. It may have been that he was despondent. Yet, the action is unforgivable. Despondency can not be accepted as a pardonable excuse.

I. P. D. A. Hearing on Five Per Cent. Tax

Harry Kosch Goes to Washington to Seek Permission to Intervene in Christie Case—Coast Investigation Is Off

With Harry G. Kosch, general counsel for the Independent Producers' and Distributors' Association, in Washington, State-Rights men in general this week were expecting word from him that his request for a hearing on the five per cent. rental tax proposition had been granted. Incidentally, Mr. Kosch had appointments with Federal officials who are investigating "fly-by-night" and disreputable operators whose tactics have constituted a violation of Federal statutes.

Prior to his departure, Mr. Kosch, in an interview with a representative of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, made it known that the I. P. D. A. would continue its fight against imposition of this unfair tax without the co-operation of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, which, he had said, had assumed an indifferent attitude on the matter.

Mr. Kosch said: "I have given the matter very careful study and from my examination of section 906 I am convinced that it has been construed by the Internal Revenue Commission to mean that any method of letting or acquiring or use of the film for exhibition comes within the terms of the act. If this tax is levied it will effect any person letting film for use of profit. . . . My opinion is that where a producer hands over the film to a national distributor on an advance or percentage basis, he is liable for five per cent. on the amount he receives from the distributing organization. Anyway, that is the interpretation placed on the section by the Commission."

HARRY G. KOSCH
General Counsel for I. P. D. A.

On Monday, January 30, a special meeting of the I. P. D. A. was held in the office of Mr. Kosch. The independents were unanimous in the contention that the tax was not only unfair, some claiming it to be unconstitutional, but that if it were imposed it would bankrupt the business. Present at the meeting were W. E. Shallenberger, of Arrow; Joe Schnitzer, of Equity; Louis Weiss, of Artclass; Nathan Hirsh, of Aywon, and Jack Cohn, of C. B. C.

Arrow's "Ten Nights" Sets New Records in Four Cities

Arrow's "Ten Nights in a Barroom" continued its remarkable career this week. The first run at Ascher's Halsey was so successful that the picture was held over for a second week. At Utica, N. Y., on Sunday, Jan. 29, the demand for seats at the Gayety, where the picture was booked for three days was so great that it was necessary to rush another print there for a simultaneous showing at the Colonial in that city. Both are Wilmer & Vincent houses. The picture played to 4,679 people at both houses that day, setting a new record. The remaining three days at the Gayety were equally big in attendance and financial profit. Robert Downing appeared in Utica.

John Lowell, star of the picture, appeared in person at the Orpheum in Altoona, Pa., where the feature had established two new records for that house up to press time. The Toronto engagement, which opened Monday also attracted unusual crowds. There is every indication that owing to the demand for seats the picture will be held over in the Ontario province for another week. The Boston engagement continued at the Globe Theatre with indications that the picture is good for at least three more weeks there.

"Ten Nights in a Barroom" opens in San Francisco on Monday, succeeding "Foolish Wives." Other openings are scheduled for Fox's Liberty Theatre in St. Louis on Saturday, Feb. 4; Fox's Washington in Detroit, Feb. 18, and Fox's Rivoli in Denver, Feb. 19.

Federated Gets New Product; Holds Its Annual Convention

The annual convention of Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., was held in New York, at Hotel Astor, this week. The first session was held Thursday forenoon. The convention will continue through until Sunday and possibly Monday, according to what information was available before the first meeting.

Most of the franchise-holders arrived early. Joe Friedman, of Celebrated Players of Chicago, was the first to arrive. Many important matters were on the business docket. The policy for the ensuing year also was discussed. Officials promised interesting and important news of the acquisition of new product by Federated. This information, however, will not be available until after the convention.

Booking of "My Wandering Boy" at Criterion Proof That Showmen Want Big State Right Films

Convincing proof that independent productions have at last come into their own and are in demand by the foremost showmen in the country was again furnished this week in the booking of Equity's "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" by Rugo Reisenfeld into the Criterion Theatre, New York, for an indefinite run, beginning Sunday, February 5. This week at the Strand Theatre Joe Plunkett successfully showed Warner Brothers' "School Days," while negotiations are underway for the exhibition of Arrow's "Ten Nights in a Barroom" at one of the big Broadway houses.

This recognition of the box office attraction value of State rights productions is not confined exclusively to Broadway theatres, for scores of shrewd showmen who two years ago ignored them are today demanding independent pictures for their houses. The Criterion booking proves convincingly the contention of this department that independent producers are today closer to the pulse of the trade with their ears closer to the ground and are furnishing exhibitors with money-making features.

Elaborate plans are underway for the premier of "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" Mr. Reisenfeld is preparing a magnificent prologue and an unusual musical accompaniment. A huge billboard campaign now in effect on 24-sheet stands in New York, started as a teaser, has been changed into direct advertising value by the simple addition of a 6-sheet across the top, announcing the date of the premier, and readable for blocks away. A special newspaper campaign also has been started.

As the Criterion is one of Broadway's best known theatres and with the extensive advertising and exploitation campaign that will be conducted incident to its showing, the run should prove of splendid proportion.

"Jungle Goddess" Last Selig Serial; Export-Import Selling Territories

From the Coast comes a report that following completion of "The Jungle Goddess," which Export & Import Film Company is State righting, Col. W. N. Selig will confine all his production activities to features. No verification of this report could be obtained in New York. Officials at Export & Import were too busy answering inquiries from buyers who seek further details on their new animal serial to devote any time to the report.

"The Jungle Goddess" has aroused considerable interest in the trade, for it has been enthusiastically endorsed by the trade critics. John Spargo of Exhibitors Herald said that the serial "is a thriller of thrillers in the way of a wild animal serial" and that "probably few of even the wildest flights of fancy by writers of thrillers ever conceived as many or more intricate near-death situations as did Agnes Johnston and Frank Dazey."

Roger Ferri of Moving Picture World was of the opinion that "if this serial doesn't make your patrons boost your house nothing else will, for it is one of those episode productions that has a logical plot, human interest and literally choked with hair-raising stunts in which wild animals play an important role." Dannenburg in Film Daily said the "story is unusually good and there are enough thrills from wild animal sequences to make the hardest boiled fan admit it is 'there'." Laurence Reid of Motion Picture News agrees that "'The Jungle Goddess' surpasses them all when it comes to measuring out thrills by releasing a bunch of wild animal stunts."

Exhibitors who have experienced a big financial harvest by booking previous Selig serials are clamoring for dates on this picture which has three distinct villains, a new departure in the production of serials.

Work Starts on Arrow-Ben Wilson Film

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, this week received word from Ben Wilson that work has been started on the production of the second of the Peter B. Kyne series, "Back to Yellow Jacoket." Much is expected of this production, the story of which was written by the author of "Kindred of the Dust." The first picture of the series, "A Motion to Adjourn," according to Dr. Shallenberger, is proving popular with exhibitors, for whom it is showing splendid returns.

Clinton W. White Now General Manager of Lee-Bradford

Clinton W. White has resigned from the Arrow Film Corporation where, for more than a year, he was one of their special representatives, to become sales manager for the Lee-Bradford Corporation.

Mr. White's experience in the motion picture industry dates back to the days when the General Film Company was the leading distributor, he being branch manager at their Montreal, Canada office, which place he left to become associated with the Gaumont Company as assistant to F. G. Bradford, then general manager. After six years with Gaumont, he joined the Arrow organization.

Mr. White will shortly start on a trip to the key cities to put on special first-run presentations of the super - feature, "Determination," which will then be offered to the independent buyers for the various territories.

Although less than a year old, Lee-Bradford have made considerable progress in the independent field and in addition to "Determination," they are offering "The Unconquered Woman," a Northwest feature starring Rubye de Remer; "Cloudburst," a racetrack story; "Flesh and Spirit," and a series of three dramas, each different in theme, starring Josephine Earle.

"School Days" Gets Big Opening; Busy Week of State Right Premiers

January has gone down in State rights history as the banner first-run month for independent pictures. With the termination of the final week of that month records show that independent productions have shattered numerous box office marks with a daily increasing demand for State rights pictures from exhibitors, who realize that there is an abundance of pictures in this market with which they can make a substantial prof-it.

Warner Brothers' Gus Edwards "School Days" feature, produced by Harry Rapf and William Nigh, opened at the Strand Theatre in New York and enjoyed one of the best weeks that house has experienced in many months. The picture was enthusiastically commended by such fastidious New York critics as Alan Dale, Martin Quinn, Heywood Broun, Harriette Underwood, Burns Mantle, S. J. Kaufman, Alex Woolcott, and others who were unanimous in their opinion that the picture was one of the most entertaining witnessed in a Broadway theatre this season.

While "School Days" was playing to capacity audiences despite the cold weather, "Ten Nights in a Barroom," Arrow's Blazed Trail Productions, Inc., feature, was shattering records in Utica, N. Y.; Boston, Waltham, Mass.; Altoona, Pa.; Newark, N. J., and Toronto, Ont. Equally enthusiastic reports were received on other good State rights features.

Much credit for the splendid showing of "School Days" at the Strand in New York this week should go to Joe Plunkett and the alert Warner Brothers publicity department, including Eddie Bonns and Louis Marangella. An innovation in the presentation was the miniature school revue, staged by Jack Loeb, with a number of talented youngsters. The Strand Quartette assisted in the presentation, which created much favorable comment along the world's greatest theatrical thoroughfare. The Warner publicity hounds grabbed spots that not even the nerviest publicist dared ask for. Virtually every popular store along Broadway co-operated. The exploitation campaign was a credit to Warner Brothers and furnished a good tip for other firms contemplating Broadway showings.

Another Warner feature, "Why Girls Leave Home," produced by Harry Rapf and directed by William Nigh, did such a wonderful business at the Garrick in Los Angeles, where it was hooked for a week's run, that the engagement was extended to three weeks. This picture established several new records at the Olympia in Portsmouth, Va. The S. A. Lynch theatres in Texas have booked the feature as has also Saenger Enterprises, Inc. Rubin & Finkelstein of the Northwest, the Allens in Canada and Stanley in Philadelphia also have been successfully showing the feature to big business, according to the house reports.

"Micky" Coen, the Minneapolis State rights exchangeman, has purchased the exhibition rights to D. W. Griffith's "Way Down East" super feature for 21 cities and towns in Minnesota.

The premiere Canadian presentation of Warner Brothers' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, was held on Monday, January 23, at the King Edward Hotel in Toronto. Representative Canadian government officials were in attendance. Stephenson Attractions, Ltd., is in control of the Canadian rights to the picture, which is expected to establish a new gross record for State rights pictures in Canada. At the request of the Ontario Government cabinet ministers a special showing of the picture will be held this week in Ontario.

"Ten Nights In a Barroom" opened its second week at Sid Ascher's Halsey Theatre in Newark, N. J., and at the Globe in Boston. Two Utica, N. Y., theatres showed the picture simultaneously on Sunday, January 29, to turn away crowds, in spite of inclement weather. The Altoona opening also was a notable affair with the star, John Lowell, appearing in person. The first day showing resulted in the shattering of the day gross receipts record.

"Ashamed of Parents," another Warner feature, is being heavily booked in New York, according to Abe Warner. Fox booked the picture over his metropolitan circuit. Other important bookings have been made at the Washington, Detroit; Liberty, St. Louis; Rivoli, Denver; Terminal, Newark, N. J.; American, Paterson, N. J., and Elizabeth, Elizabeth, N. J.

The Princess Theatre of Toledo, O., a Paramount house, is featuring C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation's "Screen Snapshots," which the manager says are "sure-fire" with his patrons. This popular screen magazine is now one of the most talked-of and most sought features in the market, judging from reports pouring into this office.

C. C. Burr of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., this week closed a deal with William Mahoney of the Rialto Theatre, Providence, R. I., whereby his Johnny "Torchy" Hines feature, "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," will be given its New England premier at that house late this month. Johnny Hines will appear in person. An extensive advertising campaign is planned.

"Judgment," based on Victor Hugo's story of "Mary Tudor," and a foreign production, State righted by World Film Corporation, opens for a run at the Ziegfeld theatre in Chicago, February 5. Johnny Hines, in "Burn 'Em Barnes," gave a good account of itself during the week just closed.

Elmo Lincoln, star of Weiss Brothers' "Adventures of Tarzan" serial, is appearing in person at Cleveland theatres this week. He will go from there to Cincinnati and then to Detroit.

"The Vendetta," with Pola Negri, was given its first run showing in the eastern Pennsylvania territory at the Capitol in Philadelphia this week to acceptable business. "Intrigue," the other State right film, opened at the Coliseum also in Philadelphia, playing two days.

True A. Thompson of the True Exchange, which owns the Southwest rights to "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," is road showing the picture and reports big business.

Louise Lovely, co-star with Roy Stewart in "Life's Greatest Question," is personally appearing at Loew houses on the Coast showing that picture.

Arthur G. Whyte, motion picture booker for the Keith enterprises, is dickering for circuit dates on "Ten Nights in a Barroom."

Warner Forces Working Day and Night on Big Animal Serial

Six episodes of the Warner Brothers' fifteen episodes animal serial, "Shadows of the Jungle," starring Grace Darmond, have been completed at the West Coast studios by Sam Warner, under whose supervision the serial is being made.

These six episodes are said to contain the most thrilling scenes ever filmed for a serial production. Two shifts are working day and night under Mr. Warner. Cliff Saum is handling one group, and Louis Chaudet is handling the other. It is expected that the remaining nine episodes of the serial will be completed within a short space of time, regardless of the expenditure involved.

Grace Darmond, who has appeared in a number of current screen plays in addition to scores of other cinema attractions, is the featured player. Prominent members of the supporting cast include Philo McCullough, Robert Agnew, Jack Richardson and Drelys Perdue. The story and continuity was written by Frances Guihan.

Books Brandt Film

"The Heart of the North," the G. H. Davis-Joe Brandt feature of the Canadian Northwest, featuring Roy Stewart with Louise Lovely, has been booked for a run in the James Theatre, Columbus, according to word from Phil Selznick who holds territorial rights to the feature in the Ohio territory.

Clark's First Wilson Ready

Russell Clark of the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., announced this week that the first Margery Wilson production, "The Offenders," is ready. Three more remain to be made. Fenwicke L. Holmes is the producer.

"Little Johnny Jones"

"Little Johnny Jones," starring Johnny (Torchy) Hines, will in all probability be produced by C. C. Burr of Affiliated Distributors as a special feature.

Buys Picture

Walter A. Baier, manager of Kay-Kee Distributing Corporation of Milwaukee, this week closed for the rights to eight Neal Hart pictures, State righted by William Steiner.

Jans Acquires Climax 'Change

Herman F. Jans, president and sole owner of the Jans Productions, Jans Pictures, Inc., Jans Film Service and Jans Enterprises, Inc., this week closed a deal whereby Climax Exchange retires from the northern New Jersey field, turning over its pictures to Mr. Jans, who says he is in the market for big productions.

Peacock Pictures Corporation's Dallas exchange was damaged by fire in the Commerce Street Film Exchange Building of that city on Dec. 17, according to word received in New York this week. Heroic work by the Dallas firemen saved the Fox, Metro, True Film Company, Southwestern Pictures Corporation, R. D. Lewis and Parker Supply Company establishments in the same building. The total loss was estimated at $1,000,000.

Marty Williams, of Kansas City Superior Pictures Exchange, negotiated an important deal last week whereby his firm took over the Pioneer franchise. Now Marty is enjoying a well-earned rest in Florida.

"Bill" Witman, of Rex Film Cleaning Company, of Detroit, and Charles A. Meade, formerly in Detroit with Pathe and Vitagraph, have joined hands in the organization of the new States Rights Exchange in the Michigan metropolis. They have established offices at 304 Film Building.

Homer Howard, formerly with Nu-Art in Buffalo is now selling stock for a new Syracuse hotel, but it is rumored that he may soon join another film company in Buffalo.

Bob Murphy is all set for a business landslide at the Buffalo Pioneer Exchange, in preparation for which he has made arrangements with several big Buffalo banks to safeguard the money. Bob has a great list of attractions for 1922 and looks forward to the biggest season in the history of the local office.

N. I. Filkins points with pride to the excellent notices given "The Bible" when the first of the series of stories, "Creation," was shown at the Strand, Buffalo.

From the Showman's Angle

IS the serial coming back? Fred M. Zimmerman of the Nu-Art Pictures Corporation of Buffalo thinks so, for he is getting so many bookings on "The Adventures of Tarzan" that he says he has added several contract files to his office equipment. Buffalo showmen are signing the feature as an added attraction at Saturday matinees, while showmen in the smaller towns report the serial an excellent box office magnet. Arthur L. Skinner of the Victoria, Buffalo, got out a large number of dodgers, which were cut into small pieces, stirred them up and threw them into a huge box. At the Saturday matinees he gives each child a piece and to those who are able to get enough pieces to complete a dodger, he gives a free ticket to the theatre. The result is that the kiddies are trading everything to get pieces to match the ones they have. The stunt, Skinner says, is a box office winner.

Showmen who make it a practice to keep in touch with patrons of their theatres are at a loss for an explanation for the prevalent popularity of melodramatic productions. The demand for melodramatic pictures is equally persistent in all parts of the country and, according to well-posted officials, is confined to no one particular section. In the Southwest there is an exhibitor who runs a house in a town with a population of about 30,000 folks. He offered all sorts of productions excepting the melodramatic, the gentleman being of the opinion that that class of amusement was only a topic of history. But when he failed with these offerings, he turned to melodrama and to his surprise for the first time in seven months he played to capacity. This showman had a daily change policy, but the jam was so great that he had to prolong the engagement of the melodrama for four days.

About a year ago Sidney Ascher offered the buyers a melodramatic picture, "Below the Deadline." The writer in reviewing the picture at the time objected to the melodramatic nature of the picture, commenting that that the day of melodrama had passed. Now we have to admit that while the 10-20-and-30 may have passed, Ascher's picture heralded the now popular revival of melodrama.

"Bill" Mahoney, who manages the Rialto in Providence, R. I., is one exhibitor who believes that the independents are only beginning to realize their importance in the field. "Bill" has booked a number of independent pictures during the past seven weeks and their showings have prompted him to grab all the big State Rights pictures released in his territory.

State Rights men in general were shocked by news of the disaster that befell the Knickerbocker in Washington, D. C., last Saturday. Harry Crandall, one of the staunchest boosters of independents in the East, owned the house, which has to its credit the successful exhibition of many State Rights pictures.

The curtailment of production activities of several big national corporations seems to have served as an opening wedge for State Rights productions. Anyway, our records show that there were more first runs in representative first run theatres in the key cities of State Rights pictures during January than had been recorded for any previous four-month period. Which is a remarkable omen for 1922 for independents.

Alice Lake, Rosemary Theby and Others Signed by Carewe; State Rights News from Coast

Los Angeles (Special)

Bernie F. Fineman, who is in charge of production for the newly incorporated Edwin Carewe Pictures' Corporation, whose pictures will be State righted by Affiliated Distributors, of which C. C. Burr is president, announced here this week that he had completed the cast for the series of Edwin Carewe productions. The cast is an all-star one and will no doubt be received as an agreeable surprise in the independent market.

Among those whom Mr. Fineman says he has signed are Kenneth Harlan, Alice Lake, Gaston Glass, Rosemary Theby, Noah and Wallace Berry. Harlan has been leading man for Constance Talmadge, while Alice Lake has recently been starred in Metro pictures. Gaston Glass's masterpiece role was that of the young violinist in "Humoresque." He has also been leading man for Shirley Mason and Viola Dana. Rosemary Theby is one of the most popular leading women on the screen, having appeared in "A Connecticut Yankee," "Kismet" and other successes. The Berry Brothers also are popular.

Bob Curley, who has been associated with Edwin Carewe for many years, will turn the crank. Carewe, who has a long string of successes to his credit, will direct.

Arrow Serial Is Going Big

Arrow Film Corporation this week reported a heavy demand for bookings on its Ben Wilson serial, "Nan of the North," starring Ann Little. The serial is being elaborately exploited in the various territories by exchanges.

Ohio Censors O. K. "Tarzan"

The fastidious Ohio censorship commissioners last week passed Weiss Brothers' "Adventures of Tarzan" serial staring Elmo Lincoln without a single cut. This popular 15-episode picture has now been passed by every censor board.

"Splendid Lie" Davison's Next

"The Splendid Lie" has been chosen as the title for the new Grace Davison production which Arrow Film Corporation will State Right. Charles T. Horan directed. It will be released February 1.

Week a Boost

"Go to Theatre Week" in Milwaukee during the week of January 15 was a success insofar as State rights pictures were concerned, according to statements from Exchanges in that territory.

Garson Here

Harry Garson, producer of the Clara Kimball Young productions, is in New York for conferences with Equity officials.

Morris Schlank, the independent producer, arrived here this week preparatory to getting his many producing units into action turning out productions for his new State rights enterprise, the Anchor Films, Inc. Mr. Schlank is also busy producing the Broadway comedies for Arrow Film Corporation. Mr. Schlank is particularly optimistic concerning the future and brought encouraging news for independents, who are working overtime here. The bulk of production going on here, as stated last week, is under the supervision of independent producers.

R. V. Quick heads a new producing company recently formed here for the production of twelve two-reel comedies for the State rights market, according to local reports. Dick Johnson is vice-president.

Victor Fisher of Associated Photoplays, Inc., of New York, is here negotiating with independent producers for the distribution rights to their pictures. Associated Photoplays, according to local reports, will distribute through the new American Releasing Corporation of New York.

Harry Revier, according to word from San Francisco, has started production on his next State rights feature, "Mothers of Men." In the cast are Harry Van Meter, Jack Connolly, Lydia Knott, Jean Burr and others. Work is going on at the Montague studios in Frisco.

Larry Weingarten of Sacred Films, Inc., expects to leave this week for New York with prints of the latest episodes of the Bible serial.

Louise Lovely, co-star with Roy Stewart, in George-Davis-Joe Brandt's Harry Revier production, "Life's Greatest Question," opened a personal appearance tour in Fresno, Cal., on Feb. 1. She will play all the Loew houses, which have booked the feature.

Dorothy Hagan Thayer will play in "Carry on the Race," the initial Mission Film Corporation production. Clarence Geldbert will direct.

The newly incorporated National Motion Picture Finance Corporation has perfected its organization plans and is now prepared to consider propositions calling for the financing of independent stars and producers who are planning making pictures in or around Los Angeles. The firm will not confine its activity to Los Angeles alone, although Hollywood and Culver City studios will receive the bulk of financial support. Financial aid, according to the firm's officials, will be extended to producers who propose production in San Diego and at the Balboa studios, Long Beach, which are soon to be reopened.

The old Griffith studios, where D. W. made his first big productions, has been sold by Triangle Film Corporation of New York to the Fine Arts Studios, Inc., of California, which was recently incorporated for $100,000. This firm will operate and lease the studios to independent producers. Nat Deverich is head of the new firm.

Second National Picture Lineup Includes Many Famous Successes

Second National Pictures' Corporation is rapidly lining up its franchise-holders, with many bidders from each territory. During the past week several applicants came to New York. Meanwhile, the organization is acquiring productions for release during the next year. It is the plan of Second National to release twelve features annually at at the rate of one a month; four super-features, one every three months, and a number of short subjects.

Negotiations are underway for the acquistion of the product of four well-known coast producers. The first picture, "David and Jonathan," based on E. Temple Thurston's novel, is now ready for release. Following are the other pictures that already have been acquired for distribution to franchise-holders:

"Her Story," starring Madge Titheradge and directed by Dion Titheradge; "The Night Riders" with Albert Ray, Maudie Dunhan and Aundre Beaulieu, a Northwestern feature; "Mr. Pim Passes By" with Peggy Hyland; "The Skin Game," based on the famous stage success, and "Brenda's Heritage" with Marjorie Villis. In addition to these there will be three other features starring Peggy Hyland.

New State Righter

Miss M. J. Winkler, who is representing local exchanges in New York, serving as their purchasing agents, is interested in a series of novelty subjects, entitled "Felix," which she is State Righting. The initial release, "Felix Saves the Day," opened at the New York Rivoli this week.

"His Nibs" Dates

L. L. Hiller, President of "His Nibs" Syndicate, Inc., this week announced many first run bookings on the Chic Sales feature, "His Nibs." The picture has been booked in that city, playing dif- Cleveland; Denver, Kansas City and Toledo, O.

Between You and Me

GEORGE FECKE, of Boston, and Gene Marcus, of Philadelphia, are hot under the collar these days over a certain transaction. Some time ago a certain company sold franchises. They called for a series of productions starring Pete Morrison and Mary Anderson. George and Gene claim they paid the price fixed by the distributor. They sent salesmen out selling the pictures and many dates were obtained. A few weeks ago, the general manager of the concern, according to Mr. Fecke, notified him that he and Mr. Marcus were the only ones who had paid cash and that inasmuch as the Western producer would not deliver any more pictures to the firm, the franchises were automatically cancelled. This, Mr. Fecke says, left him in an embarrassing position, but last week he said he heard that "Daring Danger," starring Pete Morrison, and "Bluebeard, Jr.," starring Mary Anderson, are to be released through a newly-formed company and that this distribution deal was arranged by the head of the firm that sold him the franchise.

Several weeks ago a middlewestern exchangeman whose business methods were anything but what they should have been, being tipped off to the investigation of the Federal Trade Commission of questionable enterprises, came to the conclusion that the time had finally come when it was advisable for him to step out. He did and when he did he left behind something like $32,000 in bad checks and a batch of violated contracts. He had carefully figured that his stepping out of the enterprise relieved him of all obligations. This week, however, he received notice to either make good or face criminal charges. He has two weeks in which to maké restitution.

One of the leading State Rights distributing companies has in its possession $55,000 in bad checks. These have been turned over to the post office inspectors, for the checks were sent through the mails.

A Coast independent producer came to New York this week with a good picture and plenty of money with which to buy the picture rights to the popular song title, "Sidewalks of New York." On his arrival, however, he learned that Hugo Ballin had purchased the title for a forthcoming picture.

A specific instance of the ability of the public of the present day to distinguish between the genuine article and so-called revivals was given this past week. Arrow despatched Tom Cullin to Boston to herald the coming of "Ten Nights In A Barroom" at the old melodramatic house, the Globe Theatre. Three weeks of advance publicity was carried out. Meanwhile, the local distributor of the old "Ten Nights" booked his picture in suburban towns, billing his film "the picture all New England is talking about." However, the showings did not prompt any showman in that vicinity to lose any sleep. On Monday, January 23, the new version of "Ten Nights" opened and played to the biggest business recorded since the melodramatic days of A. H. Woods, Stair & Havlin and Charles Blaney. And the picture, according to Manager Meagher of the Globe, is good for a five-week run. Another thing that must be borne in mind in analyzing this feature is the fact that the Globe, until this picture came along, had been almost forgotten by Boston theatregoers, for the house is located in the old deserted theatre district.

There is one exchangeman-showman in the State Rights market who looms up big, but has seldom been heard. Sam Zierler, president and general manager of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation of New York City, has accomplished wonders with State Rights pictures. His exchange has never held back on an entertaining box office picture. And what is more Sam has obtained more Broadway first runs than any other State Rights exchangeman in New York. We are referring to State Rights features—not short subjects. Sam is interested in and played a leading part in the booking of Equity's "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" at the Criterion Theatre in New York, where the production opens shortly for an indefinite run.

Morris Schlank, the producer, made every effort to secure the signature of Hobart Bosworth to a contract calling for a series of eight sea pictures. The deal fell through at the last moment as Mr. Schlank, who is one of the most popular independent producers on the Coast, owning his own studio, considered Bosworth's terms exorbitant.

There is a rumor that Sam Grand of the New England Federated Exchange is about to estab'ish several new exchanges. The report, however, is not confirmed, although it is a most persistent one.

Schlank Forms New Company; John A. Kent to Represent Him

Morris Schlank, the Coast State Rights producer, while in New York, announced the incorporation of the Anchor Films, Inc., of which he is the head. Following the appointment of John A. Kent, formerly with Aywon Pictures Corporation, as his New York representative, Mr. Schlank established New York headquarters. Through this new firm, Mr. Schlank plans to State Rights productions he is soon to begin turning out. Mr. Schlank will continue turning out pictures released by Arrow Film Corporation the Anchor Film Corporation being an independent enterprise.

According to the announcement, he will make four sea pictures of five reels each starring Jack Perrin; four horse race features with Peggy O'Day, and a series of 26 single reel comedies starring Alice Howell. Mr. Kent, who will shortly start on a tour of exchange centres, is a pioneer in the State Rights business, having been with Great Northern until that firm disorganized because of the war, when he joined B. S. Moss. He also was with the foreign department of Artcraft Pictures until the consolidation of that firm with Paramount; special representative for General Films, branch manager for Exhibitors Mutual, sales representative for Robertson-Cole and sales manager for Aywon.

Hallrooms Go Big in West

Word comes from the Federated Film Exchange, of Pittsburgh, that two of the recent Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Comedies released there have been extraordinarily successful of all pictures released by that company. "Put and Take," a burlesque on the popularity of the little gambling tops, and "Start Something," the comedy in which a real prize fight is burlesqued on the screen, have been in tremendous demand throughout the territory.

Steiner Attends Cowboy Contest

Neal Hart, star of the William Steiner productions, now operating in Texas, while on location in San Antonio, attended the annual championship cowboys' sports contest there, where he met many of his pals, including Ben Corbett, Lloyd Saunders, Wild Cat Bill, Oklahoma Curley, Johnny Mullins, Brok and Whit Beaty, Eddy McCarty, and Mable Strickland and Rose Smith, the famous cowgirls.

Max Weiss Sails

Max Weiss, President of Adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation, sailed from France for New York this week, following an extensive tour of continental and the British Isles. He made a careful survey of conditions in Europe.

Newsy Gossip of the Trade

WARNER BROTHERS' "School Days" was to have had two day and date premiers in Washington, D. C., at Harry Crandall's Metropolitan and Knickerbocker on Sunday afternoon. The picture had been booked into the Metropolitan for a week, while the Knickerbocker was to have shown it on Sunday and Monday. On Saturday night, however, the roof of the Knickerbocker collapsed, killing more than 100 patrons. The theatre will be rebuilt. The opening at the Metropolitan theatre, however, was staged as scheduled and attracted s. r. o. crowds all day, in spite of the gloom that hung over the capital as a consequence of the Knickerbocker disaster.

George Fecke, of the Motion Picture Distributing Corporation of Boston was in New York this week and contracted for several pictures.

Harry Revier, producer of "Hearts of the North" and "The Greatest Question," both State righted by Joe Brandt, has leased the Montague studios in San Francisco where he intends doing all his producing in the future. His next feature is "Mothers of Men," which Messrs. Brandt and Davis will release.

Film thieves have been very active on the Coast during the past few weeks. Owners of theatres there have been warned concerning the handling of films. It is estimated that a loss aggregating more than $100,000 has been incurred during the past three weeks because of the activity of these thieves.

The Selig-Rork feature, "The Rosary," was given a world premier showing at the Imperial theatre in San Francisco on January 22.

J. S. Jossey, special representative of the Arrow Film Corporation of New York, is visiting the Kansas City Phoenix office for a short time.

H. M. Chubaroff has resigned as general manager of Niagara Pictures corporation, Buffalo, which recently started business on the third floor of the Warner building. Dave Levy is now in charge of the office. David Ruslander is supplying the financial backing for the Buffalo state right exchange.

Charles P. Saunders has opened a state right exchange in Rochester under the name of Screen Attractions Distributing Co. It is located at 28 Nash street. Mr. Saunders formerly operated the same company at 145 Franklin street, Buffalo.

Elmo Lincoln did not go to Pittsburgh as had been planned, Manager Wieland, of the Standard Film Exchange there having postponed the personal appearances of the star of Weiss Brothers' "Adventures of Tarzan" until later in the year.

M. R. Fink, president and general manager of Peacock Productions, Inc., is back at his desk in his Kansas City office after a tour of continental Europe. While abroad he sold the foreign rights to "Body and Sold" to the Deutch-Amerikanish Film Unione.

Al Kahn, manager of the Crescent-Federated exchange in Kansas City and Federated Exchange in Omaha, made it known this week that he expects to spend two or three days of each week at his Kansas City office.

Al Thompson is no longer connected with the Warner New York exchange, having resigned two weeks ago. C. Kraft, formerly with Equity, is now at that exchange.

Lou Berman, of the Independent Film Corp., Philadelphia, of "Why Girls Leave Home" fame, announces the acquisition of "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, for a large territory. Branch offices will shortly be opened in the Mather Building, Washington, D. C. F. Hamerman has recently joined the forces of the Independent and will cover New Jersey, Maryland and Delaware.

David L. Segal and Jay Kenter, of the Royal Pictures, Inc., Philadelphia, are setting the independents a lively pace. Introducing Tom Bible, who just returned from a three weeks' tour from up state, where he met with great success in booking up "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," featuring a week's run at the State theatre, Scranton, and Capitol, Wilkesbarre, there comes the announcement that Rudolph Valentino, in "Frivolous Wives," and "Determination," the latter a big Lee Bradford production originally a thirty-reel feature which was cut down to ten reels, have been bought for this territory. In addition several right smart negotiations have resulted in closing deals on new "Sherlock Holmes" series, Kineto review, released one a week, and the "Locust Blossom."

T. B. Wildman has succeeded R. D. Burdge as manager of the Kansas City Enterprise office. Mr. Wildman is from New Orleans where he was manager of the Realart office until its consolidation with Paramount. Before becoming connected with Realart Mr. Wildman was with Fox and Goldwyn.

E. H. Silcocks, general sales manager for the Pacific Film Company, with executive offices at Culver City, Cal., has just finished visiting the various independent exchanges in the West. Mr. Silcoks was in Kansas City and St. Louis to dispose of the State rights to three productions.

Colonel Howard F. Brink is now in the midst of an offensive on "School Days," which Grand and Warner is distributing the Western New York. The colonel looks like a schoolmaster himself so that he should find it an easy matter to sell this Wesley Barry production.

Homer Howard of the Buffalo Merit exchange is now chaperoning Grace Davison on a tour of personal appearances throughout the state. The star has been signed for over two dozen houses to date.

N. I. Filkins, manager of the Merit office in Buffalo, has signed up the big Victoria Theatre on the west side of the city for second run on "The Bible" series. Manager Arthur L. Skinner is planning a big exploitation campaign on the subject.

When Dave Walsh, manager of the little Hippodrome in Buffalo put on "The County Fair," one of the Niagara Pictures corporation reatures, the past week, he turned the front of the house into a circus tent entrance and used a lot of special hand-painted frames which Niagara Pictures have prepared for the exploitation of the attraction. Dave put the picture on for two days and cleaned up with it.

Sydney Samson, manager of the Buffalo Grand & Warner office has booked all the Monty Bank comedies at the big Loew State. Mr. Samson reports unusually heavy bookings on the fun films put out by this comedian.

Ben Amsterdam and L. Korson of the Masterpiece Attractions, Philadelphia, have at present the largest independent film exchange in this city. Following Elmo Lincoln's successful personal appearances here during the past two weeks at all of the theatres showing "Adventures of Tarzen" announcement is made that the latest Eddie Polo serial has been bought for this territory. This exchange is releasing a weekly program on features and has the largest assortment of short subjects on hand.

Weiss Seeking Managers for Bible Shows

Louis Weiss, secretary of Artclass Pictures Corporation, started this week to recruit managerial talent for the various road shows which will present the screen version of the Old Testament, now rapidly nearing the final staging of cutting and titling. Managers with extensive exploitation experience only are being signed.

These road shows, which are xpected to get under way late in March, will carry a complete crew, consisting of advance men, manager, treasurer and stage hands to work the effects. These crews will be turned over to State Rights buyers who will purchase the Old Testament following presentations in various key cities. The tentative title for the feature is "After Six Days."

Weiss Brothers Acquire Many Productions; To Make Features

Artclass Pictures Corporation, which the enterprising Weiss brothers own, is planning a busy future, judging from announcements and other reports that have emanated from that firm's office this week. In addition to planning to send out a dozen shows of its film version of the Old Testament under the tentative title, "After Six Days," the Weiss Brothers have numerous other important enterprises under way.

Max Weiss, who sailed for New York this week, is bringing back with him, according to reports, a batch of contracts. One of these contracts as was exclusively stated in his department two weeks ago, concerns an internationally famed star who will make a series of four features that Weiss will handle.

Mr. Weiss, too, has purchased the American distribution rights to an Italian novelty production which will be State righted and released within two months. In addition to this Weiss Brothers also have under contemplation the production of several features on the Coast as well as a serial with a famous and established American feminine star. This deal is expected to be closed within the next ten days.

In addition to road showing, "After Six Days," portions of the lengthy film which is now being edited and cut, will be released to non-theatrical exchanges,

Bob Savini and P. Oletsky Buy Amalgamated Picture Franchises

Closely following the recent decision of Warner's New York Exchange, which holds the franchise for Amalgamated Pictures for that territory, to release the first two of the series of co-star productions, "Ashes" and "Any Night," at the same time, comes the announcement of Franklyn E. Backer that two more franchises have been granted firmly established independent exchanges east of the Mississippi.

The South goes to Robert Savini, of Savini Films, Inc., of Atlanta, will handle the distribution of the Amalgamated Company's product in Georgia, Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Alabama and Florida.

The Federated Film Exchange, of Baltimore, is the franchise-holder for Amalgamated productions in Delaware, Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

Russell-Clark Film Aids Are Now Finished

In spite of the intervention of the holidays, of the engraver's strike, and attendant delays, Russell Clark, of the Russell Clark Syndicate, Inc., announces the completion of all supplies for the first, "The Offenders," of four Margery Wilson pictures.

"Ride on a Runaway Train" Is on Broadway for Fourth Engagement

"Lyman H. Howe's Famous Ride on a Runaway Train," one of the most popular novelty pictures ever released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., is on Broadway for the fourth time, playing a two weeks' engagement at the Criterion Theatre.

The "Ride on a Runaway Train" began its remarkable history at the Capitol Theatre, where it attracted unusual interest when, after a week's run, it was brought back for a return showing. It was the first time that the Capitol has ever given a short subject a return run, and Sam Rothafel, managing director of the Capitol, declared at that time that he considered it the best short subject he had ever seen. Under these conditions, the picture created a mild sensation when the Capitol, a short time ago, recalled it for a third engagement.

On Monday, January 23, Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld put the "Tide on a Runaway Train" on the program at the Criterion, where it ran for two weeks in connection with the feature picture "Red Hot Romance," making five weeks for this single-reel thriller on Broadway, in four separate engagements.

This is the only single-reel novelty picture that has ever made such a record for Broadway showings. The picture's record throughout the rest of the country is a similar story. Many big first run houses in key cities have brought the "Ride on a Runaway Train" back for second and third runs. In Great Britain this subject has made just as big a hit, and it was recently shown to the King and Queen and the Royal Family in a private screening at Buckingham Palace. Several months previously it had been screened in a special "movie show" given for Premier Lloyd George at his vacation home in Scotland.

Educational Pictures were well represented in other first run New York houses in the week of January 29. "A Rural Cinderella," a Punch Comedy, was run at the Rivoli Theatre, and the Brooklyn Strand played "The White Mouse," a Selig-Rork Photoplay.

NEW STYLE OF TITLES USED IN SELZNICK NEWS REEL

Warm Ovation for "Rosary" at San Francisco World Premiere

One of the warmest receptions ever accorded by audiences and critics was given the Selig-Rork Production, "The Rosary," distributed by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., for its world premiere at the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco, on January 22. First reports contain unqualified approbation for the simple, human appeal of the plot, the artistry of production and the tense portrayal of parts, with especial reference to the work of Lewis Stone and Dore Davidson.

Immediately after the first afternoon, Leon Levy, manager of the theatre, wired John McCormick, First National's West Coast representative, as follows: "Selig and Rork are to be congratulated on their production 'The Rosary.' The pictured opened to capacity business. Judging from consensus of audience opinion 'The Rosary' is a splendid picture that should beyond doubt prove a great box office attraction."

At the same time Eugene Roth, Mr. Levy's managing director, dispatched the following telegram to the Selig-Rork interests: "The premiere showing of your 'Rosary' at our Imperial Theatre opened today with packed houses. Lewis Stone as priest splendid and Dore Davidson, the sublime Jewish character of the 'Humoresque,' scores big hit as Jewish merchant. 'The Rosary' is an ideal feature entertainment for all class of theatres. Mr. Partington joins in heartiest congratulations."

Equally enthusiastic were the notices given by the San Francisco papers of this new entry for honors among the year's productions.

Staples Writes in Praise of Film

Exhibitors everywhere, big and small, continue to write in to the Paramount offices about their success in showing George Melford's production, "The Sheik," Paramount states. One of the latest to be heard from is Charles G. Staples, manager of the Bijou Theatre, St. Stephen, New Brunswick. Mr. Staples writes: "Thank you for sending me such a wonderful production as 'The Sheik' for the holiday season."

Special Showings of Kineto Picture in Many Big Cities

"The Four Seasons," the four-reel nature classic produced by Raymond L Ditmars for the Kineto Company of America, and which is being distributed nationally, starting this week, by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, had a private showing last Saturday in Chicago.

The screening was at the new Apollo Theatre and was attended by a score of prominent civic, educational and society leaders as well as by Chicago exhibitors.

Branch sales managers of the Hodkinson Corporation, working in conjunction with Kineto, are holding a series of special presentations in all the big cities in the country. A showing similar to the extremely fine on held in the Apollo Theatre was held last week in the University of Cincinnati in Cincinnati, O. The Cincinnati Times-Star said:

"A large company at the University of Cincinnati will see this afternoon a program made to order for critics who deplore the superficiality and unrealness of motion picture entertainment." The motion picture critics of the newspaper then goes on to describe "The Four Seasons" which was the basis of the program, saying that he had seen it in a private projection room and regretted that at that time it was not a packed theatre instead of the small picked audience, so beautiful and impressive did he consider it.

All the prominent theatres in the country are contracting to play this Urban Popular Classic, according to reports from the Hodkinson branches.

Reproduces the Old Eden Museum

The old Eden Museum, for many years a center of attraction in New York, and known all over the world for its reproductions in wax of historical events, has been carefully reproduced on a stage at the United Studios in Hollywood for scenes in the newest Jack White production in the series of Mermaid Comedies being made for Educational.

"Wide-open Town" Is Tearle's Next

The fourth in Selznick's Conway Tearle star series, distributed by Select exchanges, brings "A Wide-Open Town" to the screen on February 10. Faire Binney is his leading woman.

Northwest Story O'Briens Newest

"Channing of the Northwest," third of the Eugene O'Brien star series under the "Forty from Selznick" promise for this season, is passing final inspection preparatory to its release on February 28. John Willard wrote this story of life in the Canadian Northwest and Ralph Ince directed.

Norma Shearer will appear for the first time as O'Brien's leading woman and principals in the support will be Gladden James and Pat Hartigan.

"Battling Torchy" Soon for Release

Work has been rushed by Educational on the latest of the Torchy Comedy series, "Battling Torchy," which was recently delivered to Educational by Mastodon Films after a long period of work on production. This picture, in which C. C. Burr, the producer, and Johnny Hines, the star, have striven to surpass their best previous effort, is now ready for release.

The national convention of Goldwyn exchange managers held in Chicago last week was an enthusiastic get-together meeting, with lots of pep for the next year's sales work. Samuel Goldwyn, who came out from New York for the convention, complimented his exchange managers on the past year's work and told of the splendid pictures planned for the coming year. He also promised the managers a trip to California in May. Among the Goldwyn officials who were present were:

Francis Gudger, Alfred F. Weiss and A. A. Aronson, of New York, and Abraham Lehr, of Los Angeles. The convention ended Wednesday night, but Arthur Lucas, of the Atlanta exchange, and Major George Hickey, known as the "Fighting Irishman," remained over until Thursday night. L. D. Remy, of the Dallas exchange, stayed until Friday to attend to some personal matters.

After the Dempsey-Carpentier pictures have been showing in Chicago for several months, it has been found that Corporation Counsel Ettleson and his assistants overreached themselves in their desire to issue a permit for the pictures. On the theory that the ordinance was broader than the state law in prohibiting certain pictures, Mr. Ettleson and two of his assistants signed an opinion last November declaring invalid that portion of the motion picture censorship ordinance, thus allowing the showing of the Dempsey-Carpentier pictures. Last week an alderman proved there is an amendment to the state law which makes it identical with the city ordinance. This amendment, as well as the city ordinance, forbids pictures which "hold up to scorn or ridicule any nation or the people thereof, or portrays rioutous, disorderly or unlawful scenes or has a tendency to disturb the public peace." Ignorance of the existence of this amendment led Chief Fitzmorris to give the permit for the championship fight films.

Short Subject Programs for Long-Headed Exhibitors

IT is pretty generally admitted that a lot of exhibitors are finding it difficult to get profitable programs:

Ever play Poker? How many times have you sat in a game where the hands were all running rotten and by common consent everyone yells for another deck of cards? And when the deck was changed haven't you noticed that usually the hands change for the better also?

It's time to change your deck!

If costly features have for the time lost their pull, try short subject programs!

Put in a Pathe Playlet, 3 reels, Pathe News, 1 reel, Hal Roach Comedy or Harold Lloyd reissue, 1 reel, and a Pathe serial episode, 2 reels, or some other snappy, attractive combination that your Pathe salesman can tell you about.

You'll get that program at a Let Live Price; and there isn't a person in your patronage that won't be highly pleased.

Book Pathe Playlets, big stars in big stories, 3 reels of goodness, for that sick box office.

THE POWER WITHIN

Story by Robert Norwood

Do you know the secret of happiness?

Does it lie in Wealth? Fame? Love? Home? Children?
Can anyone, everyone, be happy?
Can a person conquer any condition?

Is there a hidden force that must be known and used, before a person can be truly successful, truly happy?

A drama of a new kind, with punch and motive.
It contains the most startling shipwreck ever filmed.

Washington State

Seattle police and private detectives tracing the theft of eleven reels of "The Four Horsemen" and seven reels of "The Conquering Power" from the local Metro vaults two weeks ago believe that the thieves are members of the band of international film robbers recently exposed through the arrest of a Japanese in this city last November.

When found, T. Shima, a San Francisco Japanese, was in hiding in a small hotel in the lower downtown section. Police of the California city wired his description when they began to uncover proof of the existence of a band of Orientals organized for the purpose of stealing American films. Shima was returned to San Francisco and there, according to the police, confessed that the organization of such a band had been planned with the idea of shipping the stolen films to San Francisco as electrical supplies, smuggling them from there to Shanghai and taking them from Shanghai to Japan, where many copies were to be made and distributed throughout the Orient.

Shima was freed under heavy bond. At the time of his arrest the San Francisco police cabled to Honolulu to have another member of the band apprehended as he landed with a stolen picture.

Mayo to Begin "Altar Stairs"

Tying up with the title of his recently completed Special Attraction, "The Way Back," Frank Mayo managed to persuade Universal officials to grant him a short vacation and returned to New York City after an absence of more than five years.

Upon his return to the coast, Mayo will commence production on "The Altar Stairs," a South Seas romance by G. B. Lancaster, British novelist. Following that, he will film a narrative of the timber country, "Out of the Silent North," by Harry Drago and Joseph Noel. The latter novel is soon to be published in book form.

"Peterman" to Be Universal Film

"Peterman," the first screen story from the pen of the prisoner-author, Louis Victor Eytinge, is on its way to the public as a Universal special attraction. It has just been completed at Universal City, with Herbert Rawlinson as the star of the story under the direction of Tod Browning.

"Peterman" means safe-blower in the patois of the underworld. The writer,. Eytinge, has passed about fifteen years of his life in penitentiaries on various charges. He is the leading honor prisoner of the Arizona State institution, going about freely and running a prosperous advertising business, which has given him a standing with every ad. club in the world, it is said.

Breaks Records With Repeat Pictures Through His Intensive Exploitation

MANAGERS seem to feel that something happens to a picture about two months after its release which spoils its quality an makes it unplayable. They fail to agree with the slogan that a picture is new until it has been played.

John W. Creamer, of the Port Theatre,

THE TAYLOR DISPLAY

Gillespie, Ill., holds to the contrary and he feels that he knows because he proved the point to his own satisfaction in two instances recently.

For his New Year attraction he decided upon "Humoresque." By all existing standards "Humoresque" was through in Gillespie. It was not only an old release, but the opposition house had played it some time previously.

That seemed to be the advantage, to Mr. Creamer. He felt that it would help results to work with something known to be good, so he started in with his exploitation.

Two weeks in advance he began with teaser slides and ran four of these, following with the production slide. At the same time he put out posters for the attraction. When the slides were shown the orchestra played the musical composition.

All over the lobby he placed neat cards, lettered with the title and so disposed that no patron could avoid seeing one or more—generally more.

Followed Taylor

A week before the opening he placed in the lobby a display based on O. T. Taylor's design for "Midsummer Madness," which was shown in this department.

The Lobby Design

This were alternate rings of white and black, with a one sheet pasted in the opening. The one sheet was lighted by white flasher lamps. The other circles were lighted by fixed colored lights.

At the same time he lettered the mirrors on his entrance and exit doors so that no one could possibly overlook the title.

And this old picture, which had been played by the opposition house, broke all records, doubling the usual Sunday receipts and smashing even the record of the opening night of the house.

That was pretty good for a repeat, but that is not all.

Pleased with his success, Mr. Creamer booked back "The Old Oaken Bucket." It had played to standing room through the engagement, and Mr. Creamer figured that he had not played to all the money he could get on it. He figured he could bring it back, exploit it and make more money.

He made his own posters to get a different appeal, made cutouts from the backs of old 11x14s, painting them to suggest buckets, and used these for lobby and window cards.

He also used a set of six teaser slides and the production slide, the orchestra again played the music from which the film took its title.

And with a high school play in opposition, he played to more standing room than he did the first time.

Then he went ahead and broke even the "Humoresque" record with "What Do Men Want?" And he did it with exploitation.

Don't tell about hard times. Read this department and act, and you won't know that times are hard.

Don't tell your ushers to be polite and suppose that by merely telling them you will assure your patrons courteous treatment. See to it that the ushers carry out your instructions. Some of the very men who talk most about courtesy are the most careless about the conduct of their employes.

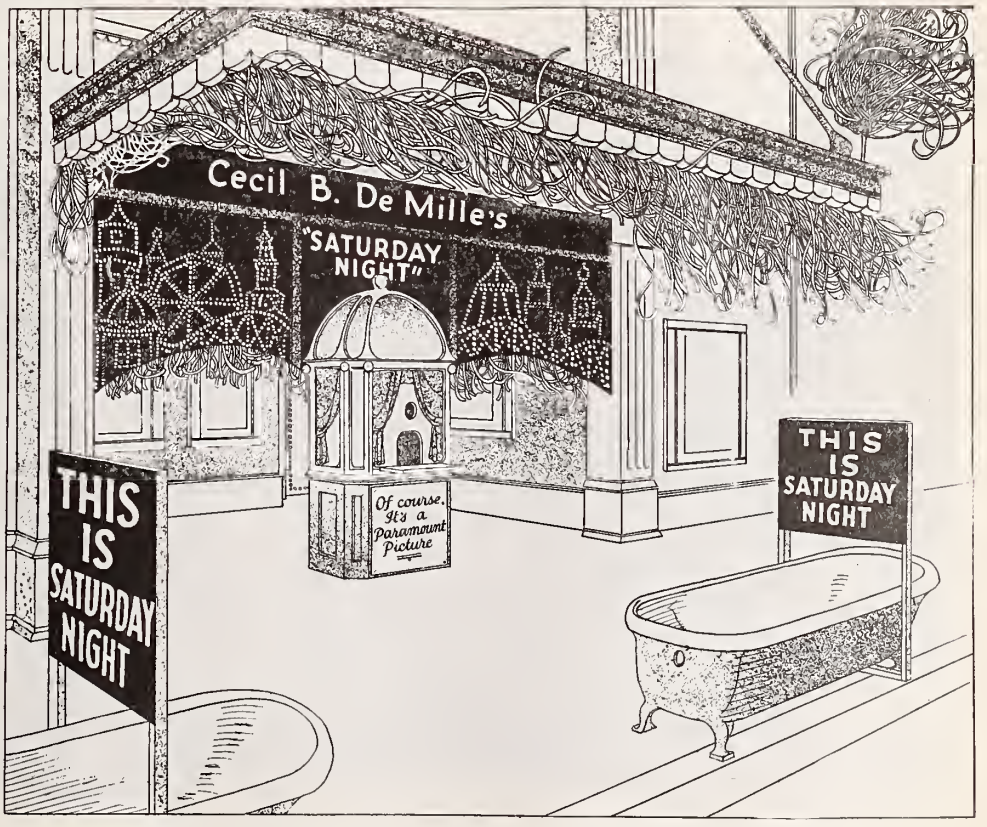
Lindlar's New Lobby Gives Cheap Display

Walter Lindlar's idea for the "Saturday night" lobby is to reproduce, by tracing, the top of the 24-sheet on this De Mille production, making the outline on stout paper and perforating to let the light through. Then outline in white, keep most of the light in the lobby, and the illuminated outline will show to advantage at night. The 24-sheet can then be postered elsewhere and will help to hook-up to the lobby design.

If desired, the 24-sheet can be put in place, where it will fit. If the arch is too wide, the design can be duplicated to fill the space. Colored gelatine back of the holes will help to make a display. A small drive punch can be used to make the holes, making a clean-cut opening with a single blow of the hammer. These punches may be had at any hardware store in a variety of sizes from $\frac{3}{16}$ to one inch.

It might help to mask in the box office with shower bath curtains and put towels and a soap rack on the guard rail, if you have one, pinning the towels so that they will not be pushed off by the crowds.

The bath tubs in front are optional, but can probably be borrowed from a plumber, particularly if you let him paint his sign on the sides. It will be better to put them on casters, so they can be taken inside at night in these days when they are even stealing red hot stoves in Chicago.



WANT TO TAKE A BATH RIGHT OUT ON THE SIDEWALK?

We don't believe many will, even on Saturday night, but Walter Lindlar thinks it may help the Paramount-De Mille Production. The big idea is the tracing from the 24-sheets, perforated and illuminated from behind. It's simple and effective

Selling the Picture to the Public

"Connecticut Yankee" Must "Roll His Own"

After plastering the front of the house with stills and posters for "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," the Washington Theatre, Detroit, put out a street advertiser for the Fox production.

THE FOX PERAMBULATOR

He was dressed and made up to look as much as possible like Harry Myers in the play with high-water knickers and low-tide socks and on his back he wore a banner for the house and production. Practically everyone turned to see what he was advertising. The few who did not knew who he was anyway. For a change he did as well as the motorcycle knights, and that is saying a lot, for they form a capital ballyhoo.

Hyman's Novelties at the Mark Strand

For the week of February 5 at the Mark Strand, Brooklyn, Edward L. Hyman will tie up with the opera season at the Academy of Music. Galli Curci and Ruffo will sing in "The Barber of Seville" one evening, in the limited Brooklyn season, and this overture will be used to open the Strand performance. A tie-up to grand opera is something new, even for Hyman.

EDW. L. HYMAN

The first specialty is a dancing number for two, "Scene Dansant," by Boccherini and Gossec. This has been used by Pavloa. The dancers will be dressed Pierot and Pierette. The Pierette is discovered at her dressing table and at the approach of Pierot she rises to meet him and they fall into an interpretive dance. The setting will be a blue sateen drop, lighted white, the orchestra in light blue and the windows of the orchestra setting in amber.

The Topical Review will be followed by Bishop's "Lo, Hear the Gentle Lark," sung by a clorature as a concert number and from this they pass to the prologue to the feature, "The Bride's Play."

This setting will be an Irish drop with a characteristic hut at one side, the two singers will be dressed as in the picture, and the lighting will be mixed light blue and green, for the twilight, the orchestra being in a stronger green. The numbers are "Eileen Alannie" and "Thine Alone," both from Victor Herbert's "Eileen." The first is a soprano solo and the latter for soprano and tenor.

This will be followed by a condensed version of the Farrar-Reid "Carmen" cut down to three reels and provided with a musical interpretation from the Bizet score worked out by Dr. Hugo Reisenfield.

The organ postlude will be Federlein's Legend.

Cutout Old Litho to Sell a New Production

Spending $10 to get $250 would be regarded as profitable by most managers, and W. E. Drumbar, of the Riviera Theatre, Chattanooga, has no kick coming. He got a wonderful display, but as he had much of the material on hand, the cost was cut down. It would cost more than $10 to duplicate the stunt unless you happen to have some old house draperies on hand. The suggestion is more useful applied to store windows where the store will supply the uncut fabric it wishes to advertise and be glad to get something to attract attention to its wares.

Mr. Drumbar had some old velvet on hand, and he had an old lithograph. He cut out the figure, set it against the velvet, lighted it with a spot which shows just above the sidewalk sign, and then sold tickets hard.

He split the lobby frames with Buster Keaton in "The Play House" and added one for Ray in "R. S. V. P., which was the underline, but most of the selling was done on the lobby display.

As Mr. Drumbar worked the scheme, the figure was draped with real fabric and displayed against a backing of purple velvet. The lower edge was cut into points and these were splashed with bronze paint, which greatly added to the richness of the effect.

THIS DISPLAY BROUGHT TWENTY-FIVE TIMES ITS COST

It set W. E. Drumbar, of the Riviera, Chattanooga, back only $10 and it brought in $250 to see Anita Stewart in "Her Mad Bargain." It was made up from an old lithograph set against a velvet backing and it put over the First National

Money Bag Idea Works for Wallingford Play

Ray Beall, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., worked the money bag idea for "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford," but he used painted bags instead of borrowing from the bank. He made one large bag from beaverboard which he placed in the centre of the lobby and surrounded this with innumerable smaller bags, cut from odd scraps of beaverboard lying around the workshop. He did the work himself in odd moments and his card writer painted and lettered them.

The display was supported by a wooded structure and was in effect a built-in lobby with a double entrance.

The painted bags were effective, but where they can be borrowed, the regular coin bags used by the banks are more convincing and will attract more attention.

Sold the City

Most managers feel that they have done something real when they can persuade the telephone or the electric light company to send out their envelope stuffers, but T. W. Young, Jr., of the Frances Theatre, Dyersburg, Tenn., aimed higher and made a bullseye.

The City Recorder sent out a stuffer for "Little Lord Fauntleroy" with every water bill mailed for December. You can't do much better than that. Mr. Young also worked ahead to persuade the public school teachers to read the book in class, and practically every child in town saw the picture.

THE SEARCHLIGHT ON THE ROOF PLAYED BOTH SIDES

The beams attracted attention to the theatre, and it was also useful in that it illuminated a 24-sheet stand for "The Sheik" mounted upon a roof across the street. People looked to the source of light and then looked to see what it was lighting

Made Searchlight Serve Both Sides of a Street

Something akin to eating your cake and having it, too, was accomplished by L. E. Barger, manager of the Avondale Theatre, North Tonawanda, N. Y., when he used a searchlight to illuminate a 24-sheet stand for "The Sheik" on the roof of a building across the way.

Coming down the street, the beam of light first attracted attention from the pedestrians. They wanted to see where the light was coming from. Naturally they traced it to the theatre. Then the second impulse was to see where it was pointing, and that naturally attracted attention to the spirited Sheik poster. They were right at the theatre. They went in.

It did not cost much to rent the light and supply the current, and it brought in a lot of extra tickets, and the more people they got in, the more advertising they sent out, for "The Sheik" is one of the plays drawing better the second day than it does the first."

Made a Novel Herald from Press Book Mat

Emory Rylander, of the Rylander Theatre, Americus, Ga., made a clean-up on "My Boy" with a special herald designed with a First National press book mat for its foundation. He selected the one in which Jackie Coogan is seen leaning against the ash can, printing this with "It Took New York by Storm," and adding the prices.

The reverse was headed "$5,000 Reward for My Boy," and added that his name was Jackie Coogan, ten years old, blue eyes and dark hair and was last seen with Charlie Chaplin. There was a gap of white space and below in much smaller type was "For further description and full particulars, call at the Rylander Theatre, Monday or Tuesday."

In brown ink on white paper, the poster made a striking appeal, and was cheap enough to be broadcasted. This sort of thing not only takes hold, but often a home-made throwaway can be worked where the accessories heralds will not pull for some reason. All that is needed is a three or four column cut or mat and a little good text.

Lionized "Theodora" on New Orleans Run

W. R. Ferguson, the Goldwyn exploitation man, went down to New Orleans to help put over "Theodora" at the Tulane, and he worked hard and fast. He borrowed a lion from the Rhoda Royal circus and sent it through the streets in a cage with the suggestion that people "see this wild beast in 'Theodora.'" He borrowed a den and a changing box and used the latter for a production. Just before the lions entered the arena the film was stopped and the light thrown upon the lion doing a shimmy in his cage. As no one could see he was trying to get at a piece of meat, the effect was terrific. Then the picture ran on with the lions entering the colliseum, and the lion got his sandwich and shut up until next time.

Plenty of Paper

In addition to the lion Mr. Ferguson circused the town with paper, using every variety Goldwyn had, used special throwaways in Italian to reach that numerous population, got window displays and hook-ups and backed it all with a strong newspaper campaign.

To borrow a lion reads like the old-fashioned press books, but remember S. A. Arnold's stunt. Make your own den of rods from the planing mill, put in a cutout from some jungle serial, and hide a small boy with a lion roar. You can make almost as much excitement as you can with a real beast.

A lion roar is a piece of catgut knotted and slipped through a hole punched in the bottom of a tin pail. The boy puts the handle of the pail beneath his foot and pulls on the catgut with a rosined glove.

This stunt is almost ten years old, but it has never failed to work, and you'll be surprised to find what a presentable den you can make with some turned rods and a little black paint.

YOU CAN'T GET A LION, BUT YOU CAN GET A CAN

If you can get the can you can make a lion roar, and with a cutout beast you can advertise this Goldwyn almost as well as was done by the Tulane Theatre, New Orleans, with a real lion borrowed from the Rhoda Royal circus

Paramount Interview Was Good Press Work

Small town newspapers like interviews with distinguished visitors, and the supply of D. V.'s is limited. Sheirly and Neagley, of the Opera House, Columbia, Pa., took advantage of the presence of Eli M. Orowitz, the Philadelphia Paramounteer, to make copy of him.

They led him over to the local paper office and suggested that he could give the editor some good sidelights on the pictures, so Growitz crossed his legs, lighted a cigar and began to talk.

What he said was that the day of just going to see a picture as a picture was over. He contended that the public was growing more careful in its amusements and demanded value received.

They no longer went to the picture house to see "a" picture, but they read the papers and decided to see "The Shiek," or "The Affairs of Anatol," or whatever the big attraction might be.

As both of these pictures were booked for an early appearance at the Opera House, the reading public is waiting to see these releases in particular, just to prove that Orowitz had them right when he said they knew good pictures when they read the titles. It pleased local pride to be called critical, and local pride responded.

Evidently a good Paramounteer has to be able to double in brass, play small parts and take tickets.

Borrowed a Nursery

Before the showing of "The Child Thou Gavest Me," F. J. Miller, manager of theatres for Southern Enterprises in Augusta, Ga., borrowed a complete nursery outfit from a local store and set it up in the inner lobby with cards for the attraction and a credit card for the store. During the showing he took the display into the outer lobby. It attracted great attention from the women and this helped business at the store as well as the theatre. The cost was limited to the material for the cards, for the store was glad to loan the material in return for the advertisement.

Gets Double Duty from Howard Lobby Displays

Recently we showed one of the inner lobby displays from the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, enough of the surroundings being given to show that this was a sort of friese to the foyer. This faces the departing patron as he comes down the auditorium and on big pictures an elaborate display is made.

This for "The Queen of Sheba" is on several planes, though in the picture it all seems flat. The steps of the dais, for instance, are built up and not merely painted, and there are three planes back of the throne upon which the cut-out queen is seated, the pillars, the silhouette of the town, beyond, and the back cloth on which sunset effects are worked with automatic dimmers. All of the figures are cut from the paper and stills, the queen being taken from the large colored cards.

This display was used the week before the showing, and on Sunday was taken down and transferred to the exterior lobby, where a similar space was provided. There the display was built up with spears and shields on the pillars, five foot hanging lamps and elaborate stiil backgrounds for the sides to supplement the usual frames.

It was an intensive display and helped to build business for the big show house of the Southern Enterprises, and to start it over the circuit properly.

Changed Circuits

A thoroughbred ridden through the streets by a jockey was the ballyho for "Thunderclap" at Fox's Terminal Theatre, Newark. It did not seem to make any difference in the effect that the horse was a trotter and not a runner. Over in Newark they don't seem to know much about the races. According to the press agent "the stunt drew large throngs wherever it was shown and helped swell the coffers of the theatre." Isn't that elegant language? It means the gag caught on.

TWO SHOTS OF THE HOWARD THEATRE DISPLAY FOR "THE QUEEN OF SHEBA" IN ATLANTA

The long picture shows the display in use a week before the showing, set in the foyer of the house, facing the crowd as it leaves the auditorium. In the upper picture you can barely discern the same display, set in the rear of the outer lobby, with further decorations. The latter picture lacks depth of definition, but you can see how the same display was made to work for the Fox picture for two weeks

THIS BUILT-UP LOBBY HAS A WONDERFUL DEPTH EFFECT
Designed by A. B. Hill, of the Arcade Theatre, this shallow lobby suggests miles of corridors; yet the effect is simply gained through the use of angles and lights. The box office is just under the sign and the entrance on the right

Gets a Depth Effect for Babylon Picture

One of the best effects in built-up lobbies comes up from the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, where A. B. Hill is now the manager of the house.

For Griffith's "The Fall of Babylon" Mr. Hill used a built-in lobby, but instead of merely placing the structure across the front, he worked for an effect.

Back of the front line there is a bay on either side, and on the left this is supplemented by a jog, which gives the effect of a winding corridor in a very few feet.

The back plane is the box office, which directly faces the entrance, but the opening is so small that it hardly shows in the cut, and showed but little more in actuality. Most of the illusion comes from the lightning, which all falls from the right, giving a perspective we have never seen equaled in a lobby display. Just to the right of the corridor is the entrance door and the exit is just off to the left. Both passages are kept open, yet the effect of the set-up is mysterious and intriguing.

Real Service

Really helping the exhibitor, the Ray-San Film Company, handlers of the Tarzan serial, "The Adventures of Tarzan," in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, supplies real exhibitor helps on this release. A two-man elephant and a one-man lion outfit are loaned the exhibitor, together with a collapsible cage which can be mounted on any local float. These supply the elements of a street ballyho and the cage can also be used for lobby display. With a number of leopard and lion skins and prop spears and shields, a very striking display can be made for the launching of the first episode.

This Sheik Was Small But He Got the Girl

William Benton, of the Congress Theatre, Saratoga, N. Y., used the desert window for "The Sheik." It is similar to another recently shown, but the photographer was more successful in cutting through the glass, and it gives a better idea of how the stunt is worked, so it is good for a repeat.

The window was filled with fine sand to the depth of about an inch, save whese it was built into a dune to conceal the base of the flower pot containing the only palm in the oasis.

At the rear was a tent made of colored tissue paper and small sticks, and in the foreground a cut-out from the stills showed Valentino taking his daily exercises with Agnes Ayres. In the background a bunch of horsemen, also cut from the stills, watched their chief at his simple love-making.

A one-sheet and several copies of the book supplied the background.

The idea is capable of indefinite elaboration, and can be worked up to a decidedly pretentious display with a little more cutting. Even in the simple form it has proven to be a big money maker, and a scene can be built which will bring half the town to see. If you have some old paper on hand for jungle plays you can get all sorts of foliage and animals can be obtained from those stills. Mount the pictures on fairly stiff card with an extension long enough to be turned at right angles. Then you can put these in the window first and pile sand in to hold the cut-outs in place.

Prizma Press Books

Most press books are just the same thing over again, but the Prizma book on Bali the Unknown offers a suite of stories the average paper will be glad to have for their informative value and literary style. The theme, of course, lends itself to this material, but the press department should be credited with having realized the oportunity and worked it to the full. The work has been put into the idea and not into the printing, and the result is a really valuable aid to the exhibitor who plays the picture. It will help him to make money with it if he uses the ideas.

HERE IS ANOTHER DESERT WINDOW FOR "THE SHEIK"
We have shown a similar one, but this is a much better photograph, and will convey more clearly the idea of how to use cutout stills to give life to the desert setting. It is the best window stunt for "The Sheik" yet to be reported

Painted City Pavements for Automobile Patrons

Manager Roy S. Smart, of the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., had permission to paint the sidewalks and pavements for "The Three Musketeers," and Mr. Smart worked a wrinkle on this others should note.

He figured that the automobile going at the usual rate of speed was going too fast to permit the riders to absorb "All for one and one for all," so he spaced the words thirty feet apart, painting in six foot letters, with this layout:

All
for
One
One
for
All

with the result that the driver received "All for one one for all" while running 186 feet. On the next stretch the letters were reversed so as to reach the cars coming from an opposite direction. The sidewalks were also painted at the street intersections, "One for all" being on one corner and "All for one" on the next.

Through Title Postcards

Out-of-town postcards were used to a large mailing list with a later form letter carrying this United Artists and two other titles, and castle fronts were built for two houses, the Noble and the Savoy. At the former the castle extended to the curb line, the pedestrian traffic passing through the structure.

One other point was special advertising to hook-up to a prior presentation in the nearest larger city to show that it was coming to Anniston.

HERE IS THE LATEST ADDITION TO THE TENT FOR "THE SHEIK"

It comes from the Alamo Theatre, Griffin, Ga., and shows orange and purple strips draped from the inside of the arch to the back wall of the lobby, the color scheme being carried inside. The work was done by A. H. Cobb, Jr.

Offered Three Prizes for "Molly O" Displays

Because of the large number of merchandise hook-ups made by the Mack Sennett publicity department for Mable Normand in "Molly O," Herbert Johnson, of the Luna Theatre, Lafayette, Ind., offered three prizes to the local stores making the best exhibits of "Molly O" products in connection with the showing of the picture, the only condition being that the display must be in place the Saturday before the opening and must hook to the showing.

Numerous displays were made and the resultant publicity was well worth the cost of the prizes.

In addition the merchants handling the "Molly O" products were hooked to a special page display, the page being restricted to those who carried these lines. It all made for exceptional business at a small cost.

ONE OF THE WINDOW DISPLAYS A PRIZE OFFER WON

Capitalizing the "Molly O" products was one of the ways Herbert Johnson put over the Mack Sennett-First National production. He offered three prizes for the best window dressings for "Molly O" products in a local store

St. Louis Theatre Gets Help from New Yorker

Fred V. Greene, Jr., the New York Paramounteeer, gave the last finishing touches to the out-of-town postcard stunt the other day.

The Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, wanted something new to put over "The Lane That Had No Turning," and asked Greene to suggest something. Greene went to several of the hotels and asked for a supply of the postcards such as all large hotels supply their guests. They all hugged the idea and the McAlpin even had a special set printed up. All told, he got 12,000 cards from six hotels, all of them under allied management. These were shipped to St. Louis, where a staff of girls wrote on them:

"Staying at this hotel and strongly recommend it to you when you come to New York. Saw 'The Lane That Had No Turning' last night. It's a Paramount picture, which means it's the best show in town. Don't miss it when it comes to St. Louis."

These were signed and addressed from the mailing list, then expressed back to New York, where Greene caused them to be mailed to reach St. Louis just ahead of the playing date of the attraction.

Until the idea becomes too common it's a fine scheme to get your cards free, and it can be worked by any theatre from the nearest city. Most hotels are only too glad to get their cards distributed Start it early enough to permit the shipping to be done, and do it before the other fellow beats you to it. It's a whizzer of an idea.

Makes Them Repeat

George Rea, of the Forum Theatre, Hillsboro, Ohio, bought a set of Clive pictures for "The Affairs of Anatol," and now he uses them as cut-outs whenever he has one of those stars. He has used the Swanson picture three times now, with Reid and Dexter each showing twice. After a while he will feel that he has gotten his money back on his investment, and meanwhile they help to dress the lobby.

SEMI-CUTOUT POSTERS PLEASED OMAHA PATRONS

The Moon Theatre had a dozen Fox posters for "A Virgin Paradise" scattered about the lobby, and all of them were trimmed up to suggest that they were not posters but parts of a decorative scheme, with the result that they attracted more attention

Press Book Made Good

Goldwyn press books contain a lot of real suggestions. Harry J. Gould, of the Hippodrome, Forth Worth, Texas, took one and made good with it.

He had booked the Lon Chaney play, "The Night Rose," and a local florist made a special window, the centre of which was a miniature stage five feet high and six feet wide, with a depth of two feet. This was supplied with a black plush cyclorama and against the black was a single perfect rose, presumably the night rose of the play. A strong spotlight played upon this, the only heavy illumination in the window. For the rest the stage was banked in with a mass of ferns and flowers, the latter being kept well away from the proscenium opening.

It made a striking display and sank the title in. The house got the benefit of the title and the florits drew credit for the display, so both got something for their pains.

Semi-Cutout Posters Made Lobby Display

Cutout posters are far from being new and it has been pointed out before that trimming a poster will permit it to be employed for lobby display without making the house suggest a dime museum, but the Moon Theatre, Omaha, carried the idea to its ultimate extension when it filled the lobby with posters for Fox's "A Virgin Paradise."

There was a large variety of paper supplied with this attraction and it was possible to fill the space with twelve posters without undue repetition. All of them were trimmed up to present at least a ragged edge, as in the case of the lion head, shown in the cut, and this slight ornamentation lifted the curse from the crude appearance of the straight paper.

The idea is not new as applied to cutout figures, but both of the posters seen in the cut suggest a style of trimming which permit a portion of the background to be retained. It will be noted that each poster is supplied with a new card in place of the straight announcement.

Australian Exploitation Sure Going to the Dogs

When the Lyceum Theatre, Sydney, played Paramount's "White and Unmarried," the management hooked in with Paul Cheyne for an exploitation idea. Cheyne built a doll bedroom in an old packing box, painted a label "Paramount's Pommeranian Pup is White and Unmarried" and established the display in the Lyceum lobby.

It scored such a hit that the Lyceum was not content with a lobby display and obtained permission to pitch the display in the square in front of the General Post Office, where it attracted so much attention that it was not possible to get a shot at the display. A gaily striped marquee was raised over the display to keep his dogship comfortable, for it is summer down there now, and this added to the attractiveness of the outfit.

This comes too late for first run houses here, but even the small towns have white dogs and sign writers.

Cheyne also hung the idea on a window display of white kid shoes with several signs and a portrait. White kid shoes are just the thing in New South Wales in Decemher, however unseasonable they may be up here, but we never heard of unmarried shoes. Generally they are mated—what!

A Real Novelty

Exceptional Pictures has issued a de luxe edition of the pressbooks for Chic Sale and the Martin Johnson pictures. The edition is merely the regular press books supplied with an ornamental cover and with the recipient's name printed under the title. It is safe to say that the idea has attracted more attention in trade circles than any other press book scheme sprung for a long time, and it calls attention to the books themselves, which are a decided advance over the average in information and real exhibitor help.

Made a Donation

When "A Connecticut Yankee" was booked for the Mozart Theatre, Elmira, Manager Gibson donated a set of Mark Twain's works to the new free library which is to be completed in April. It was the first donation of books to the library and as such it won more free reading space in the papers than Mr. Gibson could have bought with several times the money, and the effect was better. Reading the papers with care is often the best form of exploitation.

NOT CALLING ANY ONE NAMES. THE BACHELOR WAS A PUP

This is an Australian ballyhoo. A doll house bedroom was rigged up for a pommerian puppy, which lived up to the title of the Paramount production, "White and Unmarried." It made such a hit they took it to the public square

Home Made Cutouts Brought the Records

Everything is relative. In some houses the simple pair of home-made cutouts for "Ashamed of Parents" might not have attracted more than a glance, but they were used to feature the Warner Brothers' production in the Stadium Theatre, Brooklyn, where little exploitation is done, and it brought them in for a record.

The drawing is rather crude, but the contrast between the flashy young people and their sedate elders gives in a nutshell the suggestion of this Warner production. Between them stands an ornamental sign which gains considerable display value from the inverted triangle in which the sign is lettered, and which attracts more attention than the conventional square signs. Quite apart from the fact that this sign occupies the central position in the display, you will find it the most conspicuous piece of advertising in the lobby because of its shape. Compare it with the display frames in the rear and you may be able to get the idea—and adapt it.

THESE SIMPLE CUTOUTS MADE FOR BIG BUSINESS

They were used in the Stadium lobby, Brooklyn; and because few lobby displays are made at the New York houses the simple stunt got over the idea of a big production just as strongly as a complete display would have done in some houses

Nickum Believes in Telling All About It

Nick Nickum, of the Gem Theatre, Olean, N. Y., nestles right in the lap of his opposition, as you can see from the picture, and he has to hustle to keep the thing going. But hustling is one of the best things he does. He has an "A" board float large enough to take a 24-sheet with some extra talk, and whenever he gets a specially good show he hires a team or two and goes around town telling that part of the world living in Olean. For Betty Compson in "The Little Minister" he took a team, and then blanketed a pony to help up the hills, but for "The Sheik" he figured that nothing less than four horses would give the proper effect, so he played black and white instead of red and black. That offset the fact that he had a man dressed as a minister leading the pony for the Compson production while it was too cold to send out a Sheik.

The two men standing beside "The Sheik" display are Nickum and S. G. Sladdin, the Paramounteer. Sladdin is the one with the fur collar to his coat.

Exploiting "Theodora" Broke Every Record

"Theodora" broke all records and two glass doors down in Wilmington, Del., when it played the Majestic Theatre. The doors were the inner doors to the lobby and were pushed in before police protection could be obtained. All frames and other displays had to be pulled out of the lobby and four policemen had to stand inside the manager the standout while others worked on the sidewalk.

And it was chiefly due to an intensive campaign planned by Alvin R. Plough, of the Goldwyn Philadelphia office, and worked in conjunction with Manager Ginns and Exploitation Man Elias Wetstein.

Most of the drive was in the newspapers, though strips of film were displayed in some store windows and others carried "samples" of the original scenario.

The advertising campaign started two weeks ahead with one inch single and the day before the show they were run up to ten inches, with thirty for the opening day. The labor paper and the Italian language publication were included in the list and the large Italian population turned out to the smallest bambino. The newspaper work was done so thoroughly that three girls were required to reply to telephone inquiries, and they used wastebaskets in the box office instead of the cash drawer. It was an unusual result for a campaign largely held to the newspapers, but it goes to show that it still can be done, and without a great investment in space, at that, if the copy is right.

HOW NICKUM NICKS NICKELS FROM THE PLAYGOERS OF OLEAN, N. Y., WITH HIS "A" PERAMBULATOR

Ned Nickum is right alongside his opposition in the up-state town, and he has to talk wide and far to get them to decide that he has a better show than the opposition, even if he does show Paramounts. He makes frequent use of an "A" perambulator, and when he thinks it will help he puts on two teams. He had two horses and a pony for Betty Compson in "The Little Minister," and four horses for "The Sheik." He has no one-horse shows—not Nickum!

WALLINGFORD MADE THIS MONEY FROM CARPET TACKS

The Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., borrowed a lot of money bags from the bank, stuffed them and used them to decorate a large beaver bard cutout of a bank vault with open doors. "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" was lettered on the front

Made Two Displays from One Structure

Managers who keep their eyes open can save a lot of money by using up old material. The two pictures on this page give an excellent idea as to how it can be done.

The Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., ran "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," and for this Paramount production used a beaverboard moneybag painted to represent the open doors of a bank vault. Fairly bulging from the doors were money bags borrowed from the First National Bank and printed up with the bank name and "$500". Smaller bags were hung from each of the light sockets which decorated the outer rim and in the pucker of the bag was pasted a picture of Wallingford himself, surveying his wealth.

This made a very effective display and the real coin bags helped a lot to carry out the suggestion of untold wealth.

As soon as the Paramount picture had gone on to the next town, C. M. Watson, of the Grand, borrowed the design, cut off the top, repainted it to show the arch of a tunnel, put in a locomotive just emerging, and used it to sell "The Iron Trail" to equal advantage.

For a headlight he used the bottom of a fruit jar, inside of which was a 75 watt lamp, and smaller sidelights in green and red fitted out the engine as a seagoing craft with proper port lights. The border lights were retained. It gave a very good effect and the cost of changing over was only $3.50.

You can do a lot of things if only you use the good old thinker.

Half the Town Saw "The Sheik" in Ohio

Some years ago we commented on the fact that most of the persons in a small town had seen a certain picture, and the reports came in until the winner offered an attendance of several hundred in excess of the town's actual population.

Now the Paramount exploitation is trying the stunt. The first entry was the Pinney Theatre, Boise, where one-third of the town saw "The Affairs of Anatol," and now G. A. Rea of the Form Theatre, Hillsboro, O., claims the championship for having played "The Sheik" to 1,200 out of a possible 4,300. We think that this record can be beaten, for there are some places where the neighboring towns contribute to the attendance. The winner in the old contest was located in a small town down south and got more than half his patrons from the outlying territory. Surely half the town is not the record now'

Mr. Rea got them in with exploitation. His cashier, doorman and a lobby ballyhoo were all in Arabian dress and his lobby dressing included the tent idea, four one-sheets, two cut-out quarter cards and banners. He also tied up the music and book stores.

Used the Title

"For Just Around the Corner," Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter A. S. C., hid the box office behind a flat painted to suggest a blank wall on which posters were pasted.

Fists mounted on imitation lamp posts pointed to the fact that the box office was "just around the corner," and a lot of people took the hint. Some of them did not catch the allusion, but it made a good advertising display, even if you did not see the point of the joke.

Chartered Newsboys

Working from a new angle, the Plaza Theatre, Sious City, Ia., made a deal with one of the local papers to banner its newsboys for Fox's "Over the Hill." Each boy was given fifty cents and a pair of seats for the show, but the stunt was worked through the circulation manager, and not with the boys direct.

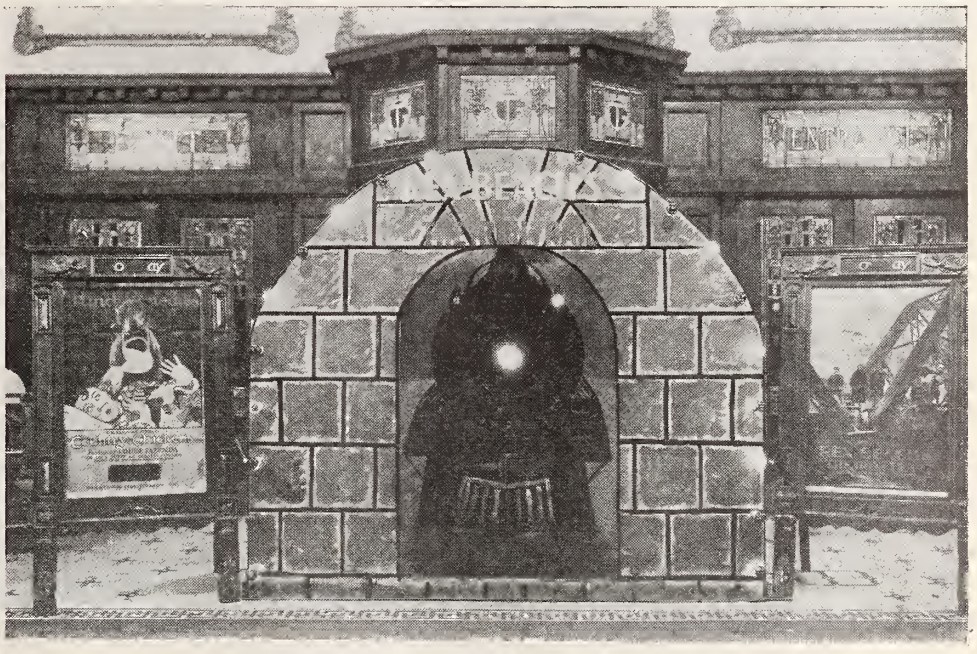
The big clean-up was the special advance showing to an audience of two thousand.

Make Wesley Barry Original Candy Kid

Warner Brothers, in their exploitation for "School Days" have found something to replace the ice cream cone idea in the exploitation of a juvenile picture.

They have contracted for a supply of Wesley Barry lollypops which can be furnished exhibitors at a cost which will make them available for souvenirs for special matinees and even for distributive advertising if the distrbution method is carefully handled.

The lollypops are of the standard small size, each is encased in a glassine envelope and printed up in two colors with a picture of the star and some text for the production.



DOES THIS DISPLAY LOOK FAMILIAR TO YOU?

Probably it does not, but look at the cut above and see how the Grand Theatre, Columbus, cut down the Wallingford display, enlarged the opening and used the structure to advertise United Artists' "The Iron Trail" at a cost of only $3.50

Selling the Picture to the Public

Made Speedy Moon Part of a Scenie Prologue

H. B. Clark, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Macon, made the pumpkin the trade mark of "Way Down East" when it played that house, three large examples carrying the three word title on the marquise while the box office was masked in with a New England cottage.

But one of his best selling stunts was a scenic prologue in which a New England village was shown through the varying phases of the night with illuminated cottages, an electric train with lighted coaches and a real whistle and a snow storm, not to mention a moon which went from the first quarter to the full moon while you looked on. It was not exact astronomy, but it helped the lighting effects, and no one called Mr. Clark a nature fakir. To the contrary, it seemed to help the sale of tickets, for the house played to good business for a full week.

Other aids were 275 inches of advertising, one hundred one-sheets, fifteen each threes and twenty-fours and ten sixes. He did everything he could do and had little trouble getting a 99 cent top.

Hooked the Shamrock to "Molly O" Business

Down in Waco, Texas, Abe Levy, of the Strand, made the shamrock the emblem of "Molly O" and wherever he advertised this Mack Sennett First National he used the design. The result was that in the minds of the Waco amusement seekers the shamrock stood for "Molly O" and when the trefoil went up above the lobby of the Strand they all had their money ready and Levy writes that it cleaned up above two of the largest money-makers of the year.

It Cost No More

It cost no more than the average advertising done by the Strand, but it worked better because it held everything to the one idea. The chief advertising factor was the automobile shown in the illustration. This was sent all over town and out into the country, and Levy even had the underside painted so the chaffeur could see it when he crawled under to fix the engine. The only thing he did not do was to have the front tires made into rubber stamps to print the sidewalk.

Apart from this he used the plugger song and tied up all the "Molly O" products. It was a consistently good campaign with invention taking the place of money expenditure.

Copied a Still

Bettering the stunt of putting any old dress in a window and labeling it as a gown worn in some production, Charles R. Mitchell, of the Queen Theatre, Dallas, persuaded a prominent store to make an actual copy of a dress worn by Marion Davies in "Enchantment."

Then the gown and the still from which it was copied were placed in a window with a suitable card, and the comparison between the photograph and the actual dress resulted in a longer scrutiny of the display and therefore greatly increased the force of the message.

The gown was sold very shortly after it was put into the window, to be delivered after the showing at the Queen was over, so it brought the house a profit and tickled one girl half to death to have a gown "just like Marion Davies wears." If you are careful to pick a gown or hat not too daring, this stunt will work for both store and house.

Add Two More

Add two more papers to the list of those who realize that photoplay news is demanded by readers.

The Troy Times writes Paramount that it uses two full pages every Saturday in response to popular demand, and Capital-News, Boise, Idaho, writes Paramounteer Rick Ricketson that "the motion picture has become news, and the Capital-News handles it from that standpoint." The latter letter is also a hearty endorsement of the theatre-newspaper contest and reports the success of a "Shiek" tie-up.

It is pleasant to find the newspapers awakening at last, and we believe that the Paramount exploitation department has contributed more importantly to this result than any other two factors.

Got a Big Display on Six Dollar Investment

B. B. Garner, of the Casino Theatre, Lakeland, Fla., never used a log cabin lobby until he had "The Mysterious Rider," so he figured that was a good time to break into line, and he built this display between 11 and 4 one evening. He had only to go to a mill just outside the town for the bark covered slabs, and the moss was everywhere.

To give life to the set, he used the figures from the 24-sheet, cutting them apart and setting them in a grove of small pine trees, using other trees at the sides to carry out the idea.

A war-time musket was hung over the box office window and a couple of old saddles were hung upon the walls, though they do not show up in the rather poor photograph. The display was new and it jazzed business about thirty percent above normal.

Trick Ad Worked for Room and Board Run

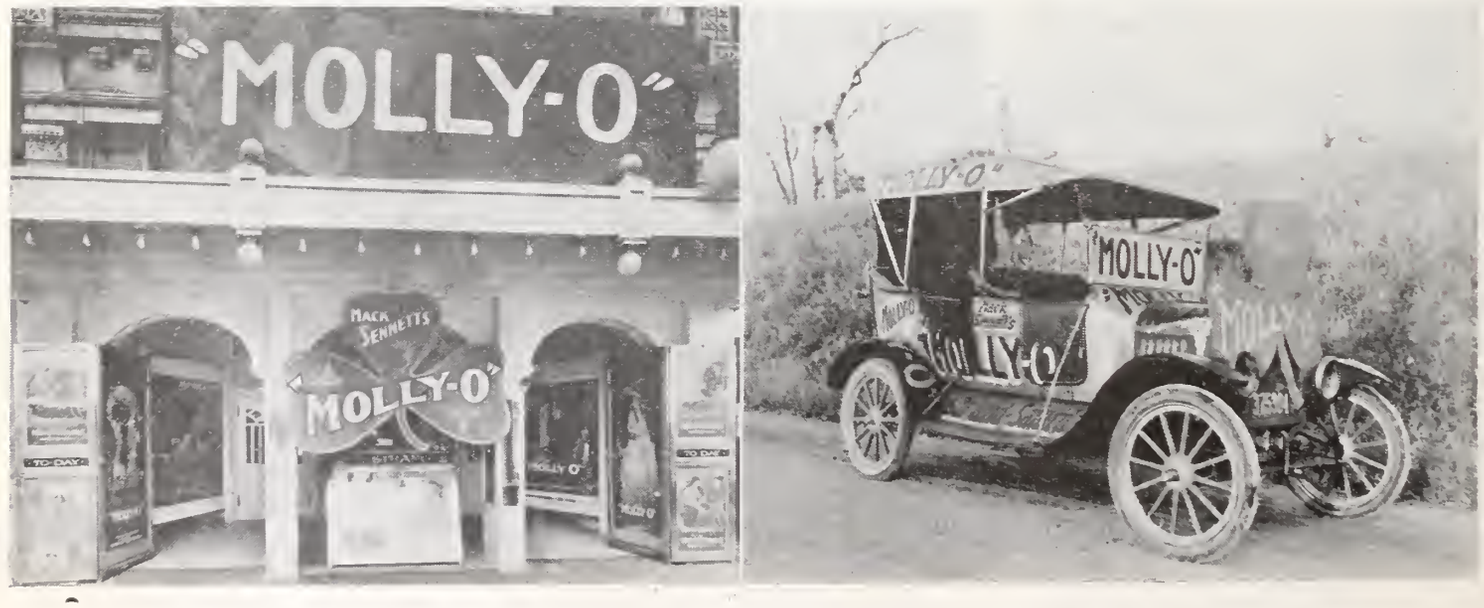
Every little while someone uses the classified columns of the daily paper and gets away with it. The latest is Thomas G. Coleman, of the Strand Theatre, Memphis. He inserted an advertisement reading:

Wanted: "Room and Board." Light eater, heavy sleeper. Call Main 538.

Took It in Earnest

The number was that of the theatre and for two days the telephone girl was kept busy explaining that Constance Binney had inserted the advertisement and that she had found "Room and Board" at the Strand for the playing dates. Most of the inquirers went out and told their friends, and it created a lot of verbal advertisement.

One peculiar feature was the fact that many regular patrons, who knew the house phone number, called up supposing that Mr. Coleman was advertising accommodations for himself. Probably they figured that it would be handy to have a pass writer in the house, for many of them did not rent rooms, but were willing to take him in.



HOW COL. LEVY HOOKED HIS "MOLLY O" ADVERTISING TO THE SHAMROCK FOR LUCK

Using the same design on the front and the perambulator for the Strand Theatre, Waco, Texas, drew better than separate ideas. It set the shamrock idea as the emblem of the story, and when they saw it over the theatre the connection with the perambulator was instantaneous and intimate. It is just another exemplification of the trade-mark idea, but it worked to make a record on this Mack Sennett-First National

A STRIKING LOBBY DISPLAY FOR INTENSIVE SELLING

The Rivoli Theatre, Portland, has to pull them in and does it with a lobby display that would be too pronounced for many theatres, but here it reaches out and gets the crowd. The cumulative effect more than any one poster puts it over

The Eggs for Tom Mix Were Guaranteed Fresh

Bad eggs for bad actors are no novelty, but fresh eggs for—well, good eggs for good actors is more of a novelty.

H. R. Kistler, of the Strand Theatre, Gaffney, S. C., worked the egg matinee, announcing that any child under twelve would be admitted to see Tom Mix in "Prairie Trails" without other charge. He added the slogan "Come and bring the children," and the entire family came, as a rule.

Got All the Kids

He played to more juvenile business than is usual on a Thursday and he sold the eggs at forty cents a dozen, disposing of sixteen dozen. He writes that the next time he will probably double the receipts, for many of the children seemed to fear some catch. He is going to take a repeat, probably for a serial launching, for it made more talk in the small town than anything he has ever done.

Lollypop Matinees Boom "School Days"

Stressing the educational value of the Warner Brothers feature, "School Days," resulted in a very successful morning matinee at the Third Street Theatre, Easton, Pa.

The management persuaded the Board of Education that the lesson young Barry learns in this farcial play carries all the more moral becuse the latter is so skilfully hidden. Working on this angle permission was obtained to circulize the school pupils on a lollypop matinee on Saturday morning.

Each teacher was sent a packet of heralds with the request that she have a monitor distribute them to the class. It was added that the letter was good for seats for the teacher and one friend when presented at the box office. This ensured practically a one hundred per cent. distribution.

The house was packed to the fire limit shortly after the doors were opened, and the kids howled their delight at the show and then streamed out munching the lollypops given them as they left the theatre, and the string of candy-consuming kiddies was not the least of the advertisements for the show.

It might be added that the lollypops are the real goods. The entire M. P. W. staff has sampled them and approved.

A Torchlight Parade

Herb Johnson, of the Luna Theatre, Lafayette, Ind., who spends a lot of his time thinking up things to do, decided he would hold a torchlight parade for Constance Talmadge in "Woman's Place." He had in mind the good old days when the patriot voter would don an oilcloth cape, put a torch over his shoulder and march miles through the mud to convince the other party that his candidate was the best. And the last parade of the campaign all the kids used to hang around and try and get a torch—them was the happy days!

The oilcloth cape and the torch have become lost in the march of progress, but they still have brass bands and red fire, and Johnson startled the town the opening night with a thirty-man parade and a band, with small boys to distribute "sample ballots" for Connie to all who were not already inside the Luna. It didn't cost as much as it looked, and it made it unanimous for First National during the run.

This is a good stunt to hook to the unemployment stunt for any political play.

Now They're Certified

Checks for small sums were not altogether new when the picture business really was in its infancy, but just the other day John Bockius, of the Valentine Theatre, Canton, Ohio, found a new crease to put in the old wrinkle. He sent out checks for one cent signed "Valentine Theatre, Home of Paramount Pictures." And every last check was certified. It had more than a penny's worth of rubber stamp alone, but the bank figured out that it was an advertisement and went to the trouble of endorsing 1,500 checks.

Many of the checks were turned in for part payment on admissions, more to see if they were good than for any other reason. These will be returned to the bank and destroyed. The others will be covered by the remainder of a special deposit of $15. There is nothing new under the sun, but there is a new sunrise every morning.

Bell's "Tol'able David" an Artistic Layout

One of the best displays to come up from Washington since they first started to talk about disarmament was planned by Nelson B. Bell for the First National production of "Tol'able David." It is rather deep for its width for good proportion, but this permits the use of three selling banks, any one of which should drag in the dimes. It is 200 lines on three, a rather large space, but it is so well set that it will probably all be read, though this is not necessary to a sale. The bank to the left of the portrait sells the star, telling of his rise to stardom and some of the accomplishments. The second paragraph in this space sells the author and his story. Just below the title is an italic bank with the cast discussed, and below that are eight lines of strong, convincing selling talk. There is only one; "magnificent," one "Splendid" and no "greatest" and yet somehow the sobriety of adjective helps to give you the impression of a really great play far better than a hailstorm of superlatives. It will pay you to get your magnifying glass and read the lines, for they are a fine example of restraint in praise that is more convincing than the wildest flights of rhetoric. The panel below covers the other features and is simply titled "embroidery," which is a new line for the small features. This panel carries the only all capitals used in the reading lines, and this helps not a little to support the effect of the text. It is all readable. As much cannot be said of some not very remote Bell samples.

Used Neighborhood Sheet

F. A. Petrich, of Loew's Warwick Theatre, Broklyn, sends in a three elevens, evidently taken from some locality sheet for "The Sheik" and adds that this and a liberal use of paper brought wonderful results. The average locality paper gives small variety in composition. Most of these neighborhood sheets turn out a page or two of theatrical and picture advertising that is without contrast because the lot are set in the same general display so that there really is no display, but Mr. Petrich fooled them. He used a cut, and it had to be different. There is always a way if you go about it right.

Reverse Panel Defeats Copy Writer's Efforts

What might have been a good advertisement for the California Theatre, Los Angeles, was spoiled by a reverse panel for Goldwyn's The

ANOTHER REVERSE CATASTROPHE

Poverty of Riches, for the best selling line is lost in a weak reverse. It looks a lot better in this space, even in the reduction, than it did in the paper, where the black went too grey to bring up the lettering, and the effect of the top line "Husbands! Wives! Do you want babies or success?" is lost. That line is the entire lot of the picture and could put the story over to those most likely to buy it, but poor ink spoils both the question and the four cuts at the corners of the panel. It's the same old story, probably. The design looked fine in the original, so it was sent to the engraver. Only the manager, the artist and the engraver saw the fine original. The buying public saw only the poor reproduction. In spite of the thousands of failures recorded against the reverse plate with small lettering, the managers continue to use it because the original looks good, and they waste money each time they do. It does not require the services of a clairvoyant to tell that the reverse will fail about 999 times out of every thousand, but they keep on doing it because they look at the original instead of looking ahead and thinking what the paper will give up. The artist did have the forethought to label the portraits so that you could tell who they were without being able to see them, but he might have said something about using a 60 screen for the cuts in the hope that they would come out. The general layout of this display is good, but using about as much black inside the white border line as is found outside it and then mortising the rest for type who would have given a much better display and a more striking one. With so many examples of good panel work reproduced, it seems odd that artists should cling so tenaciously to their antiquated ideas abouf display work. To turn out an advertisement such as this is equivalent to pasting a full set of paper and then going around and pasting white paper over the lithos to keep people from seeing what it is. One would be no more foolish than the other. When Will Hays starts in to land this industry, we hope that one of his first requirements will be that no film can be rented to any manager who will not promise to stop using reverse cuts.

Gets Artistic Front From the Stock Paper

Most of the factors in this display by Charles F. McManus, of the Colonial Theatre, Tacoma, for Pola Negri in One Arabian Night are from the First National posters. The general design is also based upon the suggestions in the press book, though the painting of the oriental city (which is only vaguely suggested in the cut), was from a plan book suggestion.

A STRIKING FRONT FOR POLA NEGRI IN ONE ARABIAN NIGHT

Selling the Picture to the Public

The portrait in the centre and all of the heads on the panel cards in the doors are cut out from the posters and harmonize nicely with the general character of the handsome front. It was comparatively simple to make a big flash on this picture at a small expense and Mr. McManus has made an unusually intelligent use of his opportunities. It is to be regretted that the photograph does not give the details more sharply, but a general idea is conveyed by the illustration. Each of the twelve door panels carries one or two colored cutouts worked into a hand written art card with somewhat similar insert cards in the four poster frames. There are three easel frames of similar treatment, and above the marquise the entire width is given over to the skyline of an Arabian town, while large cutouts adorn preparing these First National accessories to fit them for such uses, for it was realized that lavish decoration would be one of the largest selling ideas on this picture, which is sold chiefly upon its sumptuous production, plus the star.

Gives Too Much Space to the Cut Attractor

Loew's Palace Theatre, Washington, turns out a lot of very sightly advertisements, and this is an excellent example except for the fact that we think a little too much of the space has been given to a cut attractor of no particular selling value. The same space given to a selling cut would have been worth while, but there is no ticket buying urge in the spectacle of a man with his arm about the waist of a girl, even though they be Wallace Reid and Lila Lee. It is to formal a pose to attract attention. Probably it was the best still the management could obtain, for they have a nice taste in selection, as a rule, but it is given too much prominence for its real value. At the same time it is a good study in how to set a cut into a space. The rule line at the right gives the cut a finish that it probably did not possess in the original, and it works nicely into the black space. Give this a good look, for it is something worth remembering when you have a somewhat similar cut and you feel that it looks a bit unfinished. To have framed the cut in one point, or a hair line all the way around would have been stiff and formal. It would have reduced the value of the cut as an attractor to about ten percent of the present value, but placed as it has been, the rule gives the cut a distinction because it gives a finished appearance to the pose. The type is a combination of gothic faces and a six point italic which looks well and which the Post uses very largely. It is a formal arrangement, but it is sightly and readable, and the display stood out well on the page, which is always the first essential of any good advertisement.

A LOEW WASHINGTON DISPLAY

Sayre's Just Once Idea Shows Up Fairly Well

J. W. Sayre, of the Jensen and Von Herberg houses in Seattle, does the publicity work for the string when he is not editing the smartest house magazine now being published. He sends in a recent attempt in which he seeks to get away from the conventional. He knows what it is for he writes "this is all right to use once and then never again." Once it will work, but not more often, and it is partly because it is so inane that it gets over. It is all as stupid as a pointless joke, and that is what makes it good. Had the conversation been smarter the point would have not sunk in as well. It would have been laughed at and passed over without more thought. Had it been much worse it would have been impossible. But it hits the happy medium. It is dull and flat, but so dull and flat that it makes an impression on you. The advertisement may even be irritating, but still it sinks in the fact that the management thinks this is a pretty good offering. Between the time it came in and was pasted up for comment and reproduction, we have thought more about it than any advertisement in this batch. It sticks in the mind like a fish hook in a boy's thumb and it will not be dislodged. Use it once, when you can think of nothing to say about a picture, and then put it in the discard, but it will pay you to use it once. It belongs in the same class as the girl who is so ugly that she is fascinating, but you have known, and remember, just that sort of girl. The typographical layout, on the other hand, gives a good suggestion for something that will be as prominent as a 48-point

We think that Nelson B. Mell, of the Crandall Theatres, retains the black fists in his displays for the Knickerbocker and Crandall's just to show how little he is moved by criticisms. We didn't like them and said so, and Bell keeps them in to show who's boss around the Crandall press department. We think that mut be it, for we can see no other reason for retaining these archaic devices which were invented by Guttenberg himself, but which passed out of use except in country offices and on the Washington Post the year of the Philadelphia Centennial. Mr. Bell has lightened the display for the Knickerbocker, making it more sightly, but you could not blast out those hands with dynamite. Lighter rule work; (we can remember when he used almost a two point), and lighter boldface gives more the suggestion of the house where Mrs. Harding looks at the pictures, but the fists are fixtures, though they certainly do not help the appearance of the display nor do they give emphasis to the days. They are playing up the music here and the second of the two light lines gives the chief musical number and sometimes both lines are given the musical selections. This is a good move for good music helps good pictures and makes poor ones better.

Getting Peeved

Evidently Charles H. Ryan is getting tired of his talkative patrons at the Garfield Theatre, Chicago, and he takes space on a recent program to remark that "this class of pests will not be tolerated at the Garfield." That presumably means that some people are going to lose a chance to see the show if they do not keep silent. This is a last resort, but often the only effective one. It is better to lose a few noisy patrons than the large business of those who wish to see the pictures in peace as well as comfort, and more than one neighborhood house has lost out through not enforcing a silence rule. But before you start the bouncer on the job, print up your tickets with the statement that the ticket is a personal license to the holder, revocable at will, or you are liable to get into legal trouble. It would be well to have some good lawyer draw up a form in accordance with the statutes of your state, for in some states it is held that a sale of a ticket is a contract, and a contract is not revocable.

A Better Than Usual Newark Advertisement

They do some funny things over in Newark and label them advertisements, but their only resemblance to real advertisements is that they have a space bill attached. But now and then someone gets a good one, and this from William Fox's Terminal Theatre is the best of recent efforts. The money bag idea is good, and it gets attention. Moreover it belong to the idea of the story. The centre cut carries out the idea of the money sticking out of the bags and the title is put just below where it can capitalize the interest the sketch and cut have served to create. The four small cuts above would have shown up better had they been routed, for they are faded into the background, but perhaps it is expecting too much to get everything all at once. Not only is the title put where it will do the most good, but the fact that this is by the Chesters, who wrote the Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford stories, comes so close to the title that you have to read the three lines as one. In general practice it would be better to hold the secondary lines back a little to give the main title the advantage which comes from white space, but here the idea is to hold the three together, and it is better practice to run them as they are. It's an exception to the rule, but there are exceptions to all rules, and the best man is he who knows best when to ignore and when to follow the regular prcatice. The smaller lines are smartly done, and the secondary feature is not permitted to come up and kill the sale of the money getter, as is too often the case. Even with a double bill of practicaly equal merit it is better practice to sell one well than to sell two and yet sell neither fully. Newark can do well at times, but it does not seem to be a habit.

—P. T. A.—

Twisting It Again

Thomas P. Ronan, of the Fischer Theatre, Danville, Ill., adapted the missing word idea to a hook-up page contest. There were eleven advertisements, including that of the theatre. In each one word had been omitted, and these eleven words had to be spotted and assembled into a slogan for "Don't Tell Everything." The contest was so simple that the neatness of the list was made one of the determining factors to simplify the judging. There were 35 prizes ranging from $10 in cash to tickets. A two em space was used where the missing word should have shown, but even at that it ensured a close reading of each advertisement. A novel feature was the announcement that awards would be made by telephone if the contestant's telephone number was given. "Don't Tell Everything" is not a title to work well on a hook-up, but the contest put it over.

—P. T. A.—

Detroit Double Ads Are Kept Well Apart

It is some time since we have shown a Howard O. Pierce ad for the Kunsky houses, but he keeps to the even tenor of his way and produces results which are generally above the average. He made a poor selection of cuts in the present example, for both of them have black backgrounds, and the Nazimova should have been cut down to the actual outline. That for Arliss can stand more black for the pose comes out well enough, but both of them are in too fine a screen for the best results. The Nazimova would have given a strkiing attractor had the background been cut away, and would have been even better in a coarser screen. Mr. Pierce depends more largely upon his copy to make his sales, but he should use both factors when he has them at hand. The chief point in the Pierce ads is the skill with which he keeps two titles from becoming confused in his spaces. This is a 110 lines across six which gives each house the advantage of double the space for which it has to pay.

—P. T. A.—

Snappy Scatters

This one inch, single column is reproduced in its exact size to show one of the cleverest scatter ads to turn up recently. It is from the Shea theatres, Buffalo, and was used just before Christmas to sell Over the Hill. It does not look quite as well in the paper as it does here in the solid black, but there was enough left of the cut to make it conspicuous and a sufficient number was used to get the idea over. There are only two ways to use a scatter, and that is to fill the dramatic page with them or to put them all through the paper. It is better to stuff one page than to have just one on every page, but the best seller is to have three or four on every page which carries advertising. If this cannot be afforded, stick to the single page and fill that.

—P. T. A.—

Erratic Doorknobs

What is really a form of the doorknob was worked by the Rialto Theatre, Chicasha, Okla.

Walter Morrell, the manager, got out a hundred 11x14 cards printed up "To Let" in very large black type. In a smaller letter was the addition, "You know The Sheik is in town."

These were tacked to thin lath and in the early morning hours one was stuck into the earth of every third residence on the three principal streets of the town.

The prevalence of the cards led every one to inspect them closely with the result that the stunt had several times the value of the old "Closed to go to——" It's the same idea, but it worked in a new and better way.

A DISPLAY FROM HOWARD O. PIERCE, OF DETROIT

News of the West Coast

By A.H.GIEBLER

The old Griffith studios on Sunset boulevard, Hollywood, birthplace of many film masterpieces, and famous because of the number of present stars who appeared in their first film productions there, has been sold by the Triangle Film Corporation, of New York, to the Fine Arts Studios, Inc., of California. The new company is incorporated for $100,000, and according to the officials, will operate as a leasing concern.

The officers are: Nat Deverich, president; Andrew D. W. Reid, vice president, and John Rikkleman, secretary and treasurer. Work has been started on improvements under the direction of Ralph De Lacy, technical and art director. The studio includes a large and complete wardrobe, which has been renovated under the direction of Margaret Whistler.

Another studio that has changed hands this week is the J. D. Hampton plant, which has just been purchased by Douglas Fairbanks and Mary Pickford. The Hampton studio, on Santa Monica boulevard, will be occupied by Mr. Fairbanks and Miss Pickford as soon as their properties and personal belongings can be removed from the United studios, formerly Brunton's.

While the Hampton studio will be owned by the two film stars, the title may be placed in the hands of a holding company in which Fairbanks and Miss Pickford will be the principal stockholders. This arrangement would be made in order that other companies may come in on a rental basis. The studio occupies ten acres of ground, with buildings and facilities for the operation of ten large companies, and includes the second largest motion picture stage in the world.

Fairbanks is making preparations to film "The Spirit of Chivalry," a story dealing with the Crusade period, at the new studio quarters, and Jack Pickford will probably make "The Tailor-Made Man" there. Miss Pickford will not start on a production until she returns from New York, where she will go to attend the re-trial of the Wilkenning case.

Two new theatres are being planned for the down town district of Los Angeles, according to announcements this week. One of these theatres will be located at Seventh and Hope streets, and will cost approximately $1,000,000. This house will belong to the Oliver Morosco enterprises.

The other house is to be built by Joe Howard and Mose Cohen on Hill street between Seventh and Eighth, at a cost of $275,000. According to Howard, who is an actor now appearing at the Orpheum, the deal went through last Wednesday for the new amusement house, which will be known as "The Music Box," and ground will be broken for the building within the next thirty days. Moving pictures will form the major part of the entertainment at both these proposed new theatres.

Frank E. Garbutt, former manager of the Realart studios, has been appointed special technical adviser of the production department of Famous Players-Lasky, and will be in charge of the laboratory work in both Los Angeles and New York.

Edward K. Tanaka, one of the best known film producers of Japan, who recently arrived from the Orient, is making a tour of the Los Angeles studios. Tanaka left the United States two years ago for Japan, after having studied motion picture production here for several years, having been identified with the Fairbanks and other studios. In Tokio he built a film studio costing $250,000 for the Shochiku Kinema Corporation, with plans furnished by John Jasper, who designed the Chaplin studio, and later the Hollywood studios.

Tanaka, since the Japanese studio has been completed, has produced twelve pictures. After a brief visit to New York, he will return to Los Angeles, and will then sail for Japan, where he will start on a series of independent productions of his own.

Victor Shertzinger, L. A. director, has obtained $125,000 financial backing in Santa Barbara to re-open the American Film Company's studio in that city to film four productions, for which he has the stories already in scenario form. Work will start within two weeks.

Vivian Rich, former American star, and later with Fox and other Los Angeles companies, has formed a company of her own, and is producing at the American studios. The plant has been closed for nearly two years.

The Western Feature Productions' Company has brought suit to recover $30,000, against William Fairbanks, actor, for alleged breach of contract.

Willard Mack, well-known playwright and actor, was married in Los Angeles last week to Mrs. Beatrice B. Stone, an actress of Salt Lake City. Mack was at one time the husband of Pauline Frederick, Marjorie Rambeau and Maude Leone.

Oliver Morosco arrived in town last Monday, on business connected with both stage and film productions soon to be launched under his auspices. Mr. Morosco's visit will be very short because of the demands on his time by his interests in the East.

Victor L. Clarke, formerly manager of the Long Island Famous Players-Lasky studio, arrived this week to take charge of the Wilshire-Paramount studio on Occidental boulevard, recently known as the Realart.

A regular circus dinner, under the "Big Top" of the Barnes Circus winter headquarters, near Culver City, was given by Warner Brothers, who are using the circus animals in a serial thriller, to press representatives and personal friends of the producers last Sunday at noon.

Mary O'Connor, one of the leading scenarists of the West Coast film colony, is recovering from an attack of bronchitis.

Mrs. Maria Hampton, wife of Benjamin B. Hampton, motion picture producer and formerly editor of Hampton's Magazine in New York City, died at her home in Los Angeles on January 25. Mrs. Hampton's death came as a shock and surprise to the family and to her friends, because she was apparently recovering from an operation performed two weeks ago. Besides her husband, she is survived by five children, all of Los Angeles.

Rumors are circulating around the colony that Pauline Starke is soon to become the bride of Jack White, producer of the Hamilton-White Comedies.

Myron Selznick Completes Cast

At the Selznick New York studios work on Elaine Hammerstein's presentation of a Cosmo Hamilton story began January 30 under the direction of Ralph Ince. Myron Selznick, vice president in charge of production, completed the cast by selecting Constance Bennett for a supporting role.

Niles Welch will again appear as leading man. The others are Huntley Gordon, Frank Currier, Louise Preussing and Myrtle Steadman.

Books First National

Negotiations have been completed by the Philadelphia exchange of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., and Felt Bros., owners and operators of the Aldine Theatre in that city, whereby that house will have the first run option on all Sennett and Turpin comedies. The deal puts these comedies into the finest theatre in Philadelphia, catering to the highest class devotees of the cinima art.

Loew Books C. B. C. Film

"The Heart of the North," the George H. Davis-Joe Brandt feature, distributed in the New York territory by Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, has been booked over the entire Loew circuit of theatres.

"Heavy Doings"

The "heavy doings" connected with the forthcoming Selznick picture starring Owen Moore continue actively at the Selznick studios in East Forty-eighth street. A tentative release date is announced as April 10.

Consensus of Published Reviews

Here are extracts from news available at press hour from publications of the industry boiled down to a sentence. They present the views of Moving Picture World (M.P.W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E.H.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitors' Trade Review (T.R.); Film Daily (F.D.).

Saturday Night

(Featured Cast—Paramount—8,443 Feet)

M. P. W.—Many strong points of box-office advantage should make any night a banner night for exhibitors.

N.—Mismated marriages theme given original treatment.

T. R.—It isn't a partcularly strong story, but affords good entertainment.

F. D.—"Saturday Night" will probably satisfy those who have been pleased with former Cecil DeMille's productions.

E. H.—Exquisitely staged, and a smooth unfolding of story culminating in a dramatic climax.

The Grim Comedian

(Featured Cast—Goldwyn—5 Reels)

M. P. W.—Lloyd has seen to it that all the possible elements of drama and some of melodrama are used.

T. R.—In "The Grim Comedian" an extremely delicate subject has been handled with the utmost delicacy and admirable stagecraft, resulting in a picture of compelling human interest.

E. H.—Effective direction and a fine performance by Mr. Holt make this an acceptable offering.

F. D.—A good heart interest smudged by unpleasant theatrical twist.

N.—Theatrical story is fair entertainment even with faulty situations.

Morals

(May McAvoy—Paramount—5 Reels)

M. P. W.—"Morals" is an especially fine picture from any angle that interests you most.

E. H.—Ranks as the best work of May McAvoy, whose performances in "Sentimental Tommy," "A Private Scandal" and "Everything for Sale" bred the high expectations satisfied in the new production.

N.—Appealing picture—well adapted, staged and acted.

T. R.—Heart interest predominates in this picture, which is beautifully photographed, well directed and ably presented by an excellent cast of players.

Clay Dollars

(Eugene O'Brien—Selznick—5,000 Feet)

M. P. W.—Fine entertainment embodied in O'Brien's latest.

T. R.—There is good entertainment in this cheerful comedy drama.

N.—Star has interesting rural comedy-drama here.

E. H.—A picture that will please all classes.

W.—Star and good production put it over in interesting fashion.

A Virginia Courtship

(May McAvoy—Realart—5 Reels)

M. P. W.—Certainly it has an appealing, though not highly dramatic story, an excellent supporting cast and beautiful settings.

E. H.—Pleasing but not very substantial entertainment.

N.—Heart interest drama, fairly entertaining.

F. D.—Old Southern romance poor selection for May McAvoy.

The Flower of the North

(Featured Cast—Vitagraph—7,130 Feet)

M. P. W.—Good results with old material is the effect created by "The Flower of the North."

N.—Replete with thrills.

F. D.—Old fashioned melodrama probably still popular in some places.

E. H.—Is a special feature telling an interesting story of the land north of 53.

T. R.—Plenty of thrills, beautiful scenic effects and fast action are the distinguishing characteristics of this melodrama.

Man From Lost River

(Featured Cast—Goldwyn—5,694 Feet)

M. P. W.—Highly entertaining.

N.—Fine backgrounds, atmosphere and clever acting make this an agreeable offering.

F. D.—Not the virile out door picture that you would expect.

T. R.—"The Man from Lost River" should give intense satisfaction to all admirers of pictures dealing with virile life in the open.

E. H.—Here is a strong photodrama.

Shadows of the Sea

(Conway Tearle—Selznick—4,675 Feet)

M. P. W.—Adventuresome story of the sea has many thrills.

W.—Sea story offers pleasing entertainment. Adventure and star will please the average audience.

E. H.—It abounds in action. The story, although inclined to be weak in parts, is entertaining and the surroundings in which it is set adds to its attractiveness.

N.—Adventure story replete with action.

The Love Charm

(Wanda Hawley—Realart—4,540 Feet)

M. P. W.—Wanda Hawley perfectly suited to her role in lively comedy-drama.

W.—Weak story material in Wanda Hawley's latest.

N.—"Peg O' My Heart" story carries interesting qualities.

E. H.—It should serve program purposes in the majority of theatres.

Little Miss Smiles

(Shirley Mason—Fox—4,884 Feet)

M. P. W.—Shirley Mason, a captivating heroine in Fox picture of family life in the Ghetto district.

F. D.—Shirley Mason a safe bet in consistently good entertainment.

N.—Human interest drama is Shirley Mason's best bet.

E. H.—Another story of the Ghetto, with the mother love theme stressed for appeal.

First Love

(Constance Binney—Realart—4,862 Feet)

M. P. W.—Youthful love affair treated with a laugh and a tear in feature starring Constance Binney.

W.—Weak story makes for mild entertainment. Realistic touches fail to make "First Love" a convincing production.

N.—Entertaining love story—novel angle.

E. H.—Is easily Constance Binney's best picture.

The Sea Lion

(Hobart Bosworth—First National—4,367 Feet)

M. P. W.—Admirers of the Jack London style of characters will be enthusiastic over "The Sea Lion."

F. D.—Well done sea production makes fine entertainment.

E. H.—Is a virile, convincing and thoroughly enjoyable story of the sea.

N.—Interesting story of heart-hardened seamen—artistically picturized.

The Last Payment

(Pola Negri—Paramount—5 Reels)

M. P. W.—A morbid tragedy which is crudely acted and directed.

T. R.—On the strength of the star's name this picture will probably draw well throughout the country.

F. D.—Pola Negri does good work, but production values are ordinary.

N.—Pola Negri not so successful in modern story.

Making the Grade

(David Butler—Western Exploitation—5 Reels)

M. P. W.—The sort of entertainment that seems to secure a lasting grip on American theatregoers.

E. H.—The story is an odd mixture of comedy and drama, with Siberia and its atrocities playing a big part. Story, direction and playing, below the average.

N.—Fairly entertaining.

F. D.—An average entertainment.

At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern

(Featured Cast—Hodkinson—5,193 Feet)

M. P. W.—An entertaining production.

N.—Very good entertainment.

F. D.—Types and situations make amusing comedy. Should satisfy because it is novel and entertaining.

E. H.—There are many amusing moments in "Jack O'Lantern."

French Heels

(Irene Castle—Hodkinson—6,700 Feet)

M. P. W.—Both the serious and the frivolous will find entertainment in this picture.

T. R.—We believe it will appeal to most audiences.

N.—Dancing scenes best asset of Irene Castle picture.

F. D.—Dancer-star given appropriate surroundings.

Headin' West

(Hoot Gibson—Universal—4,548 Feet)

M. P. W.—Two or three good fist fights, plenty of fine horsemanship and hard riding, help to make "Headin' West" a satisfactory offering, particularly for audiences that like Western pictures.

N.—Much physical action in this Western.

F. D.—Regulation Western full of action.

T. R.—Hoot Gibson has put over a few good ones lately, but this one is the best yet.

First National

BITS OF LIFE. Poor picture for me; poor business. Can't understand why Mr. Neilan will turn out such a picture as this; pleases no one. Advertising; billboards, heralds. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. L. O. Davis, Perry Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER. This went over 100 per cent. and everbody liked it. Westerns go big in the West. I could book anything of Neilan's and not figure I was gambling much Advertising; special slides, trailer, lobby and handbill. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. W. H. Pike, Majestic Theatre, Las Vegas, Nevada.

CUP OF LIFE. Excellent feature; underwater photography very good. Patrons pleased. Advertising; extra newspaper display. Patronage; general. Attendance; light. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minn.

GIRL IN THE TAXI. Splendid for me; in fact, far better than "Twin Beds." Advertising; usual posters. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Miss.

INVISIBLE FEAR. Program picture. Not as good as other Anita Stewart pictures. Plot not pleasant. Advertising; newspaper and lobby. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. Smith & Correll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, North Dakota.

MOLLY O.' A very pleasing picture and one for the whole family. Story not impossible but improbable. A clean comedy-drama. Advertising; billboards, mailing list. Patronage; better class. Attendance; good. L. O. Davis, Perry Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

PASSION FLOWER. It was a very good picture and good acting, but it was not the kind of a picture our patrons like. Advertising; 12x14 and three sheet. Patronage; usual. Attendance; good. D. D. Purcell, Amuse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

PECK'S BAD BOY. Ran this Christmas Eve, and of course I had a big business. This picture pleased everybody. Jackie Coogan is a wonder. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

PLAYTHINGS OF DESTINY. Good story, good cast, good direction; the result, a most pleasing and popular picture with big percentage of patrons. Play it and advertise. Advertising; newspapers and lobby. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. C. A. Pratt, Fox Theatre, Washington, Iowa.

R. S. V. P. Good Ray picture; our patrons liked it. Many favorable comments. Advertising; newspaper, heralds, lobby. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair (poor weather). Smith & Correll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, North Dakota.

SCRAMBLED WIVES. Extra good comedy-drama. Miss Clark filled part to perfection. Many good comments. Advertising; thorough. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

SIGN ON THE DOOR. Have played all of Norma Talmadge's releases up to this and all flopped for me. This is first one to go over here. Last two reels draggy, otherwise picture held interest; great story. Hoeffler-McConnell Co., Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

SOWING THE WIND. Don't pass this one up. Absolutely wonderful in every respect. Anita Stewart's best. Advertising; six, three, four ones, 1,500 heralds. Patronage; first class. Attendance; satisfactory. H. Odom, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss.

TRUTH ABOUT HUSBANDS. A fine picture; my patrons praised this one. Poor business, due to depression. Advertising; lobby and program. Patronage; family. Attendance; poor. Jas. J. Christie, Third Avenue Theatre, Watervliet, New York.

WEDDING BELLS. Constance Talmadge is good in this one. It will draw, on account of name and star. Advertising; heralds, one sheet, three sheet, poster. Patronage; very best. Attendance; fair, account of another attraction at school house. H. Odom, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss.

WOMAN IN HIS HOUSE. I cannot say enough for this great picture. Pleased a greater number of my patrons than "Miracle Man." Advertising; one sheet, heralds, newspaper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. E. E. Corr, Princess Theatre, Thompson, Iowa.

Fox

CHILDREN OF THE NIGHT. Have never been able to make them like Russell, but this picture was fair. Advertising; Saturday, strong. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Geo. B. Hendrickson, Liberty Theatre, Darlington, South Carolina.

CINDERELLA OF THE HILLS. A good program picture; nothing to rave over but drew good business. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. James J. Christie, Third Avenue Theatre, Watervliet, New York.

QUEEN OF SHEBA. Although this is a picture with good acting, the story didn't seem to take well, but everyone satisfied. Advertising; heavy in newspaper. Patronage; general. Attendance; great. Harold S. Clouse, Hollywood Theatre, Highwood, Minnesota.

RIDING WITH DEATH. A good average Western, but not on a par with some of Buck's (excuse me, Charles') former releases. If they want to make another whip for the organization they will have to give him better material than this. Advertising; newspaper and lobby. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. C. A. Pratt, Fox Theatre, Washington, Iowa.

ROUGH DIAMOND. One of the best Tom Mix pictures ever made. Pleased my patrons 100 per cent. and we hope he will make more pictures with the circus show again. Advertising; three, one sheet, posters. Patronage; first class. Attendance; poor (account bad weather). H. Odom, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss.

THUNDERCLAP. An exceptionally pleasing picture. Inconsistent and improbable, but audience enthused over it. Advertising; rather heavy, all avenues. Patronage; very poor. E. W. Collins, Empire Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Goldwyn

DANGEROUS CURVE AHEAD. Picture not really big but it will get the business. Played this right after "Old Nest" and think it suffered from comparison. Advertising; heavy; advertised in conjunction with "Old Nest." Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

NIGHT ROSE. We did very well on this. More than expected. Played it big and it proved good picture; everyone satisfied. Advertising; ran extra big ad. in newspaper. Patronage; small city. Attendance; good. Harold S. Clouse, Hollywood Theatre, Highwood, Minnesota.

NIGHT ROSE. Good. Advertising; very good. Patronage; general. Attendance; fine. Charles O. Paul, Dreamland Theatre, Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan.

OLD NEST. One of the best pictures of the year. Played it Christmas Day, and although it was a little sad it developed itself by patrons sending others to see it. Advertising; four 24 sheets, heralds, full page newspaper window display and throwaways. Patronage; mixed. Attendance, exceptional. C. D. McGregor, Princess Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Canada.

OLD NEST. Very good; in fact, some patrons said it was better than "Over the Hill." Business very satisfactory with last day twice as big as the first. Advertising; splash. Patronage; small town. Attendance; very good. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

OLD NEST. Helped my house's reputation by showing this. A wonderful picture for any class of patronage. Doubled my prices and showed in the rain. Advertising; intended to use every possible method for a small town, but rain ruined most of my plans. Patronage; small manufacturing town. Attendance; fair, but could have broken all records if it had not been for weather. W. V. Cousins, Peoples' Theatre, Pineland, Texas.

Wid Gunning, Inc.

OLD OAKEN BUCKET. (Return date). Smashed first dates' engagement record all to pieces. People are raving over the picture. Don't fail to book the picture. Advertising; slide, posters, newspaper. Patronage; high class. Attendance; S. R. O. J. W. Creamer, Pert Theatre, Gillespie, Illinois.

WHAT DO MEN WANT? Picture satisfied. Best Sunday attendance. Equally as good a production as "The Blot." Nothing spectacular, but true to life, everyday picture. A cleanup! Advertising; set of eight teaser slides two weeks in advance; lobby display one week in advance. Newspapers, posters. window cards, painted mirrors on lobby doors. Patronage; high class. Attendance; packed houses. J. W. Creamer, Pert Theatre, Gillespie, Illinois.

Hodkinson

CERTAIN RICH MAN. This is a splendid production in every way. Pleased nearly all of them. Robert McKim does the best work of his entire career in this; did not think it was in him. You can't go wrong on this one; boost it. It will make good. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

EAST LYNNE. Very disconnected story, titles missing, and badly botched by Canadian censors. Film itself practically first run. Canadian exhibitors, especially in Ontario, lay off this. (A press comment sent in indicates that the censors' scissors alone are responsible for this criticism. Ed.) C. D. McGregor, Princess Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Canada.

JOURNEY'S END. A picture without subtitles. Nothing more marvellous than its oddity. Did not take at all. Advertising; posters. Patronage; best rural. Attendance; good. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

LONE WOLF'S DAUGHTER. Personally liked it for a change; I wouldn't like many of this kind, and I don't think many were pleased. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Illinois.

MAN OF THE FOREST. Splendid Western type. A fine thriller. Advertising; posters. Patronage; rural. Attendance; good. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewiston, Ohio.

RIP VAN WINKLE. Well made picture from old classic. Drew well in schools. Ran two days with falling off on second day. Advertising; newspaper and in schools. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. N. R. Carskaden, Music Hall Theatre, Keyser, West Virginia.

Metro

FOURTEENTH LOVER. Made to order for Viola (Dana) and a mighty pleasing job. If you don't like her in this one there is something wrong and it isn't Viola or the picture. Lots of pleasing comment from our patrons. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. W. H. Pike, Majestic Theatre, Las Vegas, Nevada.

THE LAST CARD. A good program picture. A clever child saves it, although the work of May Allison is, as always, good. Advertising; usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

UNCHARTED SEAS. This is a very good program picture and should satisfy the majority of people. Advertising; two one-sheets and throwaways. Patronage; working class. Attendance; poor. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

Paramount

AFTER THE SHOW. A great picture; pleased 100 per cent. Bad weather kept people home. Advertising; billboard, newspaper, lobby. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. G. E. Shilkeet, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Okla.

BRONZE BELL. Personally I did not see this one, but comments ran rotten. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; very poor. J. A. Emery, Star Theatre, Bar Harbor, Maine.

BURIED TREASURE. Fine picture but won't get much money. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. T. M. Hervey, Unique Theatre, El Paso, Texas.

CALL OF THE NORTH. Very good picture. More pictures of this kind would strengthen the F. P. program. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

CALL OF THE NORTH. Played this on our worst three days—December 22 to 24. Advertised "Strictly Canadian" and packed them in and sent them away well pleased. Advertising; nothing but ten-inch display in papers. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; very good. C. D. McGregor, Princess Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Canada.

CAPPY RICKS. Star not popular here but this was truly a fine production. Meighan is sure to come. Advertising; weekly programs, etc. Patronage; best residential. Attendance; poor. George Hendrickson, Liberty Theatre, Darlington, South Carolina.

DANGEROUS LIES. Fair picture. Advertising; big. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. E. H. McCarthy, Orpheum Theatre, Fargo, North Dakota.

DON'T TELL EVERYTHING. One of the very best comedy-dramas we have ever shown in this theatre. If this fails to please, put out the For Rent sign and quit trying. Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson, Elliot Dexter, certainly did themselves credit in this extraordinary picture. Play it. Boost it. Your fans will eat it up. Attendance; big. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Okla.

END OF THE WORLD. Excellent picture. Advertising; big. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. E. H. McCarthy, Orpheum Theatre, Fargo, North Dakota.

GREAT MOMENT. The settings are great, and Swanson handles it well. It will stand a small advance in prices in small towns. Advertising; good. Patronage; best. Attendance; good. George Hendrickson, Liberty Theatre, Darlington, S. C.

HUMORESQUE. Booked in alone, other house has Paramount. Broke all records, double any previous Sunday receipts. Even broke opening night of theatre record. Pleased everyone. Advertising; special set teaser slides, lobby display framed posters two weeks in advance; display mats, newspapers. Patronage; family. Attendance; great. J. W. Creamer, Pert Theatre, Gillespie, Illinois.

IDOL OF THE NORTH. Rotten—terrible. Why the h—— they didn't leave this one on the shelf and give it a chance to improve with age is more than I can understand. Exhibitors will do well to pay for it, if they have to, and put it on the shelf. I'd like to see the "guy" that originated that slogan, "If it's a Paramount Picture, etc" and force him to the torture of having to pay to see this one. Advertising; newspaper and lobby. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; Good—that's what makes it hurt. C. A. Pratt, Fox Theatre, Washington, Iowa.

LIFE. Title a little bit misleading, but it's a great picture; will please the majority of any audience. Advertising; newspapers, sixteen one-sheets. Patronage the best. Attendance; fair. H. B. Barr, Rialto Theatre, Enid Oklahoma.

LOST ROMANCE. A fine little picture, well put over, nothing elaborate but it pleased most of patrons. Advertising; regular billing, programs, etc. Patronage; best residential. Attendance; but fair. George Hendrickson, Liberty Theatre, Darlington, South Carolina.

THE LOVE SPECIAL. Wallace Reid never made a bad picture, but "The Love Special" is a winner sure enough. Lots of action. Advertising; poster and lobby. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. W. F. Harding, Princess Theatre, Mount Doro, Florida.

PASSING THRU. We have seen better MacLean pictures. The end of the picture bordered too much on slapstick. Pleases some patrons. Advertising; usual. Patronage; better class. Attendance; fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

PROXIES. A mighty good picture. Well acted and of a pleasing theme. Not big but sure to please. Norman Kerry, also Raye Dean splendid. Advertising; usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SACRED AND PROFANE LOVE. Elsie Ferguson's best. Advertising; newspaper. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; good. N. R. Carskadan, Music Hall Theatre, Keyser, West Virginia.

THE SHEIK. One of the best Paramount has produced. Both stars are good, wonderful photography. If you can buy right my advice is play it. A big improvement on the book, absolutely clean. Advertising; newspaper, litho, lobby display, trailer, slide and heralds. Patronage; very best. Attendance; good. F. M. Holeman, Garrick Theatre, Madisonville, Kentucky.

THE SHEIK. Very good picture, pleased well, good business, company wants too much for feature however. Advertising; billboards. Patronage; better class. Attendance; fair. L. O. Davis, New Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

THE RIGHT TO LOVE. Not a good story for a small town, my patrons did not like it. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; fair. L. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Cal.

THREE WORD BRAND. A novel Western story, a business builder. Everyone here likes Wm. S. Hart and this one pleased them more than former pictures. Advertising; one-half sheet, cards and newspaper 5 inch daily display. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. C. D. MacGregor, Princess Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, Canada.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

Pathe

THE KILLER. Best western yet. Drew fine on Monday which is usually worst night. Advertising; hand bills. Patronage; small-town. Attendance; good. N. R. Carskadan, Music Hall Theatre, Keyser, West Virginia.

Realart

FIRST LOVE. Just an ordinary program picture. Star only can bring the patrons in. Lower admission on this one. Advertising; two newspapers, lobby. Patronage; the best. Attendance; fair. H. B. Barr, Rialto Theatre, Enid, Oklahoma.

R. C.

FIVE DAYS TO LIVE. This picture is good and took very well. Made money on this one. We want more like this from Sessue Hayakawa. Advertising; general, newspaper cuts. Patronage; general. Attendance; great. Harold E. Clouse, Hollywood Theatre, Highwood, Minnesota.

STING OF THE LASH. Good picture. Pauline Frederick gaining in popularity. Pleased almost 100%. Advertising; usual. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

United Artists

DISRAELI. Good picture but the film was so dry, due to little use, that it could not hold focus. Advertising; mail, posters, etc. Patronage; best. Attendance; fair. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

THRU THE BACK DOOR. While Mary always draws, this picture has nothing remarkable about it but the cost price. Advertising; posters, mail, newspapers. Patronage; best rural. Attendance good. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

Universal

ACTION. A good drawing feature, lots of action and pleased everybody. Hoot Gibson is coming up O.K. Advertising; regular newspaper and lobby. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. J. A. McNear, Jr. Mystic Theatre, Petaluma, California.

ALL DOLLED UP. This one ought to go over good in most small towns. About all the scrapping is done by Gladys and she is not slow. A good little picture. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. E. E. Carr, Princess Theatre, Thompson, Iowa.

DANGER AHEAD. A nice human picture, no special but a good program. Gave satisfaction to my audience. Advertising; regular lobby, etc. Attendance; fair. J. C. Cramer, Majestic Theatre, Willits, California.

DESPERATE TRAILS. This one is fine. Carey is well liked here. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. L. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, California.

THE FOX. Best Western ever played, bar none; big outdoor scenes are great, photography fine, pleased 100%. Advertising; billboards, lobby displays, heralds. Patronage; all classes. Attendance very good. P. H. Adams, Lyric Theatre, Greenwood, South Carolina.

THE MILLIONAIRE. Haven't played Universal for several years, but am glad I took a shot as the only difference I can see in them and some costing twice as much is that Universals are the better product. Take a shot like I did and play this one, it will please a big percentage of your patrons. Advertising; newspapers and lobby. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. C. A. Pratt, Fox Theatre, Washington, Iowa.

MOONLIGHT FOLLIES. Several remarked "nice little picture," which just fits. Advertising; regular. Patronage; family. Attendance; fair. A. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

SHORT SKIRTS. Gladys Walton improves with each picture. Subject was above the average, and everyone raved about for Gladys. She is the best card I have, and I predict a great future for her. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Ala.

Vitagraph

COUSIN KATE. Our people here are very tired of love making pictures. A few more like this and it will be goodby Alice Joyce. Advertising; in the regular way. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; fair. Ernest Cawles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

THE SILVER CAR. Very good program picture. Pleased patrons. Patronage; usual. Attendance; newspaper, lobby. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. H. R. Walker, Classic Theatre, Dartmouth, Canada.

Comedies

THE BELL HOP (Vitagraph). Not as good as Semon usually produces, although a good comedy. Advertising; usual. Patronage; better class. Attendance; fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

THE BOAT (First National). Great comedy, funnier than "The Playhouse," and that was very good. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

THE CHAUFFEUR (Fox). I have used complete series (8) of Cook comedies and not one of them disappointed the people. Advertising; extra, billboards. Patronage; general. Attendance; light. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

IDLE CLASS (First National). Clever, but not enough hokum to please average theatre goer. Not as good as "Shoulder Arms," also cost too much. Advertising; billboards and mailing list. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; good. L. O. Davis, Perry Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

SMALL TOWN STUFF (Fox). A two reel comedy with Al St. John, that can't be beat for action. It kept them in an uproar. Advertising; ones and threes. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance, good. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Miss.

TOONERVILLE TANGLE (First National). Last of this series and I wish there was more of them. The entire dozen are good and clean as a hound's tooth. Advertising; regular. Patronage. small town. Attendance; fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

Serials

WHITE HORSEMAN (Universal). Started good. Everybody likes action and Universal short stuff has more of it to the foot than any other service I know of. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

Short Subjects

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS KISS (Phoenix). Good, fine all of these Nick Carter two reel series all good. Haven't had a bad one yet. They are good fillers, and in good shape. Everybody likes them, they talk about them. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

AESOP'S FABLES (Pathe). The best one reel subject ever played in my theatre. Will please 100%. Hope they don't run out. Advertising; just a mention in two newspapers. Patronage; the best. H. B. Carr, Rialto Theatre, Enid, Oklahoma.

Special Subjects

DEMPSEY-CARPENTIER FIGHT (Tex Rickard). The pictures are wonderful, and please 100%, but they do not draw as you would expect them to, so if you buy them do not pay a big price or you will come out loser as I did. Women will not come to see them and not as many men as you would expect. Play the pictures but do not pay the high rental asked for them, for they do not draw. Advertising; special, every way down. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; very poor. Steve Farrar, Orpheum Theatre, Harrisburg, Illinois.

"The Night Rose"

Vitally Interesting Picture, with the Underworld as Background. Released by Goldwyn

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden

Several months ago the writer, along with everyone else, heard that the New York State Motion Picture Commission,—less dignifiedly known as the censors—had forbidden Goldwyn the release in New York State of a picture. Later it was learned that the picture was "The Night Rose." The absurd reasons for throwing it out are now history and do not have to be recounted here.

Recently "The Night Rose" has been shown in theaters outside New York State, and for the purpose of supplying exhibitors who are not forbidden to present it with a review of the picture and also an insatiable curiosity to see what sort of stuff was being forbidden exhibition in New York the writer took a considerable journey into far parts and saw the picture. His first reaction was the high entertainment value of "The Night Rose" and its vitally interesting content, which undeniably will affect general audiences the same way. Then came a sensation of utter surprise. For what reason, in heaven's name, had the unwanted arbitors of New York State's morals forbidden exhibition of "The Night Rose." That was a week ago and the answer cannot be thought of yet, even with being fair enough to give the censors the breaks in the argument.

A prominent educator witnessed the picture with the reviewer. This man's surprise was even greater than the writer's

The picture has the underworld as a vivid background and complementary with it is a view of politics, showing the latter in no pleasant light. Whether this part is true or not is left to each individual to decide for himself. It has often been described as much worse in some sections.

But the political appointees will not let the people of New York see politics as some say it has frequently been performed. The censors evidently assume all responsibility if unkind conclusions are drawn. A careful reading of the law, especially the clauses denoting the reasons for banning a picture, does not make it any clearer to the writer for what "The Night Rose" was shelved in New York State. Nor will it to anyone else, except a "censor board" Certainly there is nothing whatsoever objectionable in the underworld stuff.

Any exhibitor that is allowed to present "The Night Rose" may rest assured that his clientele will see nothing offensive. Quite the contrary. The picture is vividly interesting and tells a gripping story in the best moving picture manner, from all angles. It is especially well directed and the actors give excellent performances, notably Lou Chaney, as might be expected. It is a fine entertainment, with a distinct socialogical angle. It is the kind of picture everyone likes. And the most rabid reformer will have to do some digging to exhume any reasons for calling "The Night Rose" in any way objectionable. But if the politicians in your city do not dare let the public witness a story founded, in a small measure, on dirty politics they will be the only ones to object to the film.

Mr. Leroy Scott, the author, states that all the incidents in the story are founded on facts that actually happened.

Sidelights

A GREAT to do is made by Universal over its cutting "Foolish Wives" from fourteen to ten reels. In effect the firm says that, now, here is a lily, gilded—a great picture has been improved. Second sight of "Foolish Wives" convinces us that such is not the case, except that it is just four reels less tiresome. The only way in which the picture could be improved by surgery would be to cut out all the evidences of extremely bad taste, which would leave about three thousand feet of natural scenery and practically no scenes in which von Stroheim appears.

The month of January was marked by a number of outstanding pictures, preeminent among them being, of course, "Orphans of the Storm." Others included "The Ruling Passion" and "The Silent Call," with a distinct novelty presented in "One Glorious Day."

And one of the finest pictures ever made for general release was shown for review, "The Sin Flood," made for Goldwyn by Frank Lloyd from the play "The Deluge," now running at the Plymouth Theatre, New York.

Also during the month there was introduced to picturegoers a new star that promises to become one of the most popular in the film firmament. The newcomer is Strongheart, a police dog. F. T.

"Two Kinds of Women"

Pauline Frederick Featured in a Role of Sportsmanship and Daring by Robertson-Cole

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

"The kind of a woman who can," contrasted to the kind who can't, is rather sternly characterized by Pauline Frederick in this picture of California ranch life which shows woman in a comparatively new office, that of ranch owner and manager. There may be a divided opinion as to the popularity of this type of heroine depending upon whether the clinging vine or the woman of initiative is the preference of your patrons, for Miss Frederick's "Judith Sanford" is far removed from the languid lady who has enjoyed so long a reign in fiction and drama. While this will probably result in the criticism of her being unwomanly, it is more likely that her performance will bring admiration.

Splendid directing and the star's remarkably vital personality have an effect like a tonic on scenes and circumstances that would otherwise be like many of our heroic Westerns. The horse taming scenes, her descent along the rocks and the fight—particularly the "grandstand" effects during this—are especially effective. There is one shot, that for scenic and lighting splendor is one of the most strikingly beautiful even seen on the screen and that is the scene on the slope a minute before dawn, at the time of the abduction. The cast is especially competent, one of the best selections being Tom Santschi for the leading role.

The Cast

Judith Sanford.....Pauline Frederick
Bud Lee.....Tom Santschi
Bayne Trevor.....Charles Clary
Pollock Hampton.....Dave Winter
Old Carson.....Eugene Pallette
Mrs. Grimley.....Clarissa Selwynne
Major Langworthy.....Otis Harlan
Marcia Langworthy.....Jean Calhoun
Jose ..... Tom Bates
Mrs. Simpson.....Lydia Yeamans Titus
Dr. Tripp.....Frank Clark
Farris ..... Stanhope Wheatcroft

Adapted from the Story, "Judith of Blue Lake Ranch," by Jackson Gregory.
Scenario by Winifred Dunn.
Direction by Colin Campbell.
Length, 6,000 Feet.

The Story

Judith Sanford, the heroine, conquers an outlaw horse, a drunken scoundrel, who holds her for days a prisoner in a log cabin, a bunch of bandits in a rifle battle, an arch villain in a revolver duel, a disease epidemic among her stock, an evil brute who attempts to attack her barehanded, a wealthy band of scoundrels who seek to rob her of her birthright—a million dollar cattle ranch—and the prejudice of her lover, who thinks her too competent to make a good life-mate for a real man.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

There Are Just Two Kinds He Told Her, Meaning the Clinging Vine and the Mannish Woman—He Worshipped the Former or Thought He Did—So She Showed Him an Example of the Woman Who Can Accomplish Things—And He Changed His Mind.

Exploitation Angles: After making all the use you can of the star, sell on the title idea of two kinds of women, the clinging vine and the too-competent. Work such headlines as "What kind of a woman are you?" and other pertinent inquiries. Give a knickerbocker matinee for all girls who wear sport knickers. Let them in free and you'll get a lot of men to pay for their tickets.

"Kindred of the Dust"

R. A. Walsh Makes Great Audience Picture From Peter B. Kyne Story.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

Through the medium of a story that has unquestionable general appeal, R. A. Walsh has provided First National with a release that will without doubt prove to be an unusually strong "audience picture." He has taken the time honored and always popular plot ingredients of the young woman who returns to her sanctimonious home town with a baby born out of the accepted theory of wedlock, the rich youth who marries a poor girl and the stern father who is softened into love for his son's wife by the influence of a newly arrived grandson and has stirred them up into a concoction that will surely entertain the masses, in a manner of speaking.

In injecting what might be called little, artistic touches with well placed frequency, the introduction of several well staged "punches" and with the aid of a highly expert cameraman, Walsh has greatly relieved what might be the only objection raised against the picture, that of the familiarity of the theme, of which it should be stated again, constant use has not denuded it of its popularity. To interpret the widely divergent characters, Walsh has selected an excellent cast, headed by Miriam Cooper, who is starred, although Ralph Graves shares honors with her because of the importance of his role.

Miss Cooper is at all times appealing and gives an emotional performance that exactly fits the requirements of the role. Graves, who is best remembered for his fine work in "Dream Street," will meet with tremendous favor. The others act well and the careful selection as to types contribute greatly to the general excellence of the atmosphere which the director has at all times made exceptionally strong. At times the sentiment is laid on thickly, but there are many who like their pictures that way. J. T. O'Donohoe has made a workmanlike scenario from Peter B. Kyne's story. The original met with wide success when published in a popular magazine and the picture has the advertising advantage of Mr. Kyne's name.

The Cast

Nan of the Sawdust Pile.....Miriam Cooper
Donald McKaye.....Ralph Graves
The Laird.....Lionel Belmore
Mr. Daney.....W. J. Ferguson
Mrs. Daney.....Carolyn Rankin
Mrs. McKaye.....Eugenie Besserer
Jane ..... Maryland Morne
Elizabeth ..... Elizabeth Waters
Donald.....Master Bruce Guerin

Adapted from Peter B. Kyne's Story.
Scenario by J. T. O'Donohoe.
Directed by R. A. Walsh.
Length, 8,500 Feet.

The Story

Following a marriage that proved illegal, Nan returns to her home city, which is built up around a gigantic lumber mill, with her baby and immediately becomes the butt of the town gossips and is treated as an outcast by sanctimonious neighbors. Soon after her arrival she resumes a love affair with her childhood sweetheart, the son of the owner of the mill. The young man's family will have nothing to do with her and the father forbids his son's marriage with the girl. The young man goes into a delirious fever following a separation from Nan, and is dying when the latter saves his life with her constant presence at his bedside. But even this does not soften the heart of the boy's father, who is not won over until he meets the influence of a newly arrived grand son. The boy and the girl had been married after the former's illness irrespective of his family's wishes and the reconciliation came after a year in which the son worked his own way in a rival lumber camp.

Exploitation Angles: Play on the story angle first, because of the wide advertising this received through its magazine use, but don't overlook the value of the player names. The producer, too, should come in for some of the advertising for his name has a cash value to you.

"David and Jonathan"

A Second National Feature Based On Old Theme, With Good Acting.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri.

This is the first of a series of twelve productions the Second National will release annually to State rights franchise-holders. The story is based on an old theme—two men and a woman cast away on an island. It was produced by an English concern with English players, headed by the popular British star, Madge Titheradge.

It furnishes diversifying entertainment and a particularly spectacular ship fire and wreck, although the lighting in some instances mars the realism. The story is creditably worked out in a clean and wholesome manner with an African tree bear assuming a somewhat unimportant, though humorous role. There is romance and adventure aplenty and the picture will make its appeal most to women, although in one instance there is enacted an intensely interesting and realistic fight with a leopard.

Based on a popular novel, "David and Jonathan" can be described as a "villain-less romance," for both principal male characters are of the heroic, self sacrificing type, who will not permit even their unselfish love for a woman to step between them. Miss Titheradge as the girl is charming, while Godfrey Webb and Richard Ryan are satisfactory. The direction is good, but the lighting only fair.

The Cast

Joan ..... Madge Titheradge
David ..... Godfrey Webb
Jonathan ..... Richard Ryan
Adapted from E. Temple Thurston's Novel.
Directed by Dion Titheradge.
Length, 5 Reels.

The Story

David Mortlake and John Hawkesley, college chums, are dubbed David and Jonathan because they are inseperable companions. This friendship develops. Years later Jonathan hearing that David contemplates an African hunting trip, volunteers to accompany him. On shipboard they meet Joan Meredith. A fire ends the dawning romantic thoughts of the two for a time, but later to David falls the task of rescuing the girl. The three are swept onto the shores of a lonely West African island. There the three establish themselves, both loving the one girl. In a fight with a leopard, which attacked the camp, Jonathan is injured and nursed by Joan, who falls in love with him. The two men realize their position and it is decided that the girl shall decide for herself. David speaks to her first. Jonathan pleads his case and embraces the girl. Believing that she loves Jonathan, David accepts defeat. Despairing, miserable he turned to the beach and to his surprise, there in the offing, was a vessel. The rescuers arrive. Believing Jonathan and Joan will be happier alone, he informs the rescuers that he is the sole inhabitant of the island, but on shipboard he changes his view and discloses the truth to the mate. Back in civilization David learns the truth and is happily married to Joan.

A Thrilling Story of Adventure by Sea and Land—Civilized Beings Become as Wild as Beasts on a Burning Vessel at Sea—Three Castaways—Two Men and a Girl.

Exploitation Angles: Stress the novel origin of this or some may think it the biblical story. Cover this with such lines as "Like David and Jonathan of old." Then sell the situation of the trio on the desert island and seek to arouse interest in what probably happens.

"The Prodigal Judge"

Maclyn Arbuckle Gives An Unforgettable Performance of the Beloved Hero of Vaughn Kester's Novel—Vitagraph.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

Maclyn Arbuckle's characterization of the title role in "The Prodigal Judge," that beloved composite of vagabondage and geniality, is a feat that places this production among those destined to be remembered. Seldom, perhaps, has any screen hero gone the downward path with more charm and less disgrace than he has in this. Preserving a certain self-esteem even in his dilapidation and catching the spirit of true sportsmanship that dominates the judge of the fiction version, Mr. Arbuckle has put heart, soul and character not only into his part, but into the whole production.

The picture has the rare good fortune in fact of having any number of excellent characterizations. With an almost miraculous understanding of their tasks, those in the cast have responded to the mood of the scene in a way that only inspired directing could have accomplished. One of the best impersonations is given by Ernest Torrence as the cynical, but ever devoted Solomon Mahaffy. He has cleverly distinguished between the common, sentimental expression of friendship and the particular brand of grouchy loyalty which goes with his character. George Bancroft is another performer who rings true and the role of the boy Hannibal is played by Charles Eaton, who is winsome and possessed of a glowing imagination. Nominally, the star is Jean Paige, but neither her part nor her acting is especially significant when compared with that of Maclyn Arbuckle and some others.

The opportunities for drama are many and the last part of the picture, especially, excels in the way the big scenes are handled. The continuity during the first part is not smooth and the sub-titles throughout are a glaring fault of the production. Long, frequent and obtrusive, they are an obstacle instead of an aid to the dramatic action. At times when the action is entirely self-explanatory and these sub-titles are thrust upon the spectator, they cannot fail to be a bore.

Picturesque settings and costumes typical of the South are a pleasing feature.

The Cast

Betty Malroy.....Jean Paige
Judge Slocum Price.....Maclyn Arbuckle
Solomon Mahaffy.....Ernest Torrence
Bruce Carrington.....Earl Fox
Colonel Fentress.....Arthur Carew
Charles Norton.....Horace Braham
General Quintard.....Charles Kent
Hannibal ..... Charles Eaton
Bob Yancy.....Robert Millasch
Cavendish ..... George Bancroft
Bess Hicks.....Peggy Shanor
Mrs. Cavendish.....Lillian Van Arsdale
Mrs. Hicks.....Mrs. Mary Curren
Cavendish Children.....Curren Children

Adapted from Novel by Vaughn Kester.
Scenario by John Lynch.
Direction by Edward Jose.
Length, 7,803 Feet.

The Story

The decline of Judge Slocum Price, following the news of his wife's faithlessness, his wanderings over a period of ten years until he meets his small son, his fight for the child, who is the subject of much unscrupulous plotting because of his inheritance, and the love story of Betty Malroy serve as the dramatic basis for the action.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

Vaughn Kester's Beloved Character a Picturesque Vagabond in a Drama of Much Humor and Action.

Exploitation Angles: Play up Miss Paige in connection with Black Beauty and stress Arbuckle, giving point to the "Maclyn" and alluding to his fine stage record, then sell the idea of the story of the lovable old scamp for all you can put into it.

"Smiles Are Trump"

Fox Stars Maurice Flynn in Sensational Railroad Romance

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

The popular method of titling a picture has been observed to a striking degree in this feature which is a drama of quick wits and action, without much time for smiles and consequently carrying out the significance of a title such as "Fists Are Trump," far better than the one it bears. Coming under the class of railroad thrillers, the picture has the exciting trend that gave the earlier features such a fascinating appeal, and wherever this type of subject is appreciated, it should be a success.

To Maurice Flynn, the star, much of the credit is due for making the action convincing. He is natural and earnest and moves with less regard for the camera than many of the big-hero types do. The heavy roles are not so well done, as the villainy is too obvious and the types so exaggerated in their evil make-up that they are almost funny. Herschel Mayall is a welcome contrast in these scenes because of his never-failing poise. The most sensational event is the race of the two engines and Flynn's leap from one to the other—a scene which should prove thrilling anywhere.

The Cast

Jimmy Carson.....Maurice Flynn
Marjorie Manning.....Ora Carew
John Selvin.....Myles McCarthy
James Manning.....Herschel Mayall
Enrico ..... Kirke Lucas
Martino.....C. Norman Hammond

Story by Frank L. Packard.
Scenario by Delbert Davenport.
Directed by George E. Marshall.
Length, 4,049 Feet.

The Story

Jimmy Carson is assitant paymaster on a railroad. Sleven, his superior, is jealous and tries to frame him. Carson defends a poor orphan boy against the dishonesties of Martino, the section engineer, and incurs his enmity, also. In fighting with Slevin, Carson gives him a deadly blow and believes that he has killed him. He leaves to offer up himself to the sheriff, is met on the train by the superintendent and his daughter and gets involved in a series of exciting events, including a mad race of locomotives and a thrilling rescue of the girl who had been captured by the Slevin gang.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

You've Never Seen a Race, You'll Say, After Watching One Locomotive Chase Another in One of the Busiest Railroad Romances Ever Screened—See Maurice Flynn in One of His Most Compelling Roles.

Exploitation Angles: Make the title do your selling. Go over your old paper and cut out all the smiles you can find, pasting just the mouths on a big board for a lobby display, lettered simply with the title and "today." Back this with the stills, and meanwhile hammer on smiles in your newspaper work or with throwaways.

Official Urban Chats No. 2

A picture of the Eiffel Tower, and a commanding view of Paris from its heights, is one of the interesting views of this number. There is also a long list of other subjects so varied that it is bound to catch the fancy of any audience. Among them are pictures of ice-harvesting, the "crop" to be conserved for summer use. How the ice of rivers and creeks is poled along and cut up by an electric saw into convenient blocks is one of the features of this picture.

These are also illustrated ways for raising children in a healthful manner, and for the edification of the housewife there is given in detail the way whole wheat bread is made by a noted baker.—T. S. daP.

"And Women Must Weep"

Robert C. Bruce's First "Wilderness Tale" a Thing of Beauty

Reviewed by Sumner Smith.

In filming Charles Kingsley's noted poem, "Three Fishers," which also is famous as a song, Robert C. Bruce has given evidence that he is done with short subjects of a strictly scenic sort and hereafter will base his views of nature upon a slight narrative. In accordance with this new plan, Bruce has selected the name of the "Robert C. Bruce Wilderness Tales." The film also is based on the Arthur Symon's poem "The Fisher's Widow."

This initial offering of his, a one-reel subject titled "And Women Must Weep," from a line in the poem, is without qualification a wonder. Bruce has caught the spirit of the poem and carried it out in every scene. The views of the sea and the shore, "shot" from many angles, are marvellously beautiful. Delicate tinting is used often and expertly. Though the locale is the northwestern coast of the United States, it fits the locale of the poem. The chaps who cry "See America First" will find in this picture ample proof of their claims that God has endowed nature as it exists in this country with charms equalled by no other place on earth.

The players are perfectly cast and, directed by Bruce, demonstrate the effectiveness of restrained acting. There are no broad gestures here, no suggestion of hysterical melodrama when the fishermen put out to sea and when their bodies are discovered after the storm, but the poignancy of Kingsley's poem is intensely conveyed. Special mention must be made of the work of the girl.

The impression must not be gained that "And Women Must Weep" departs too far from the style of a scenic to be run as one. Its story serves to enhance the charms of nature at her best, and to bring to the beholder a keener appreciation of them. That the story is slightly subordinated to the scenery may be disputed by Bruce or by Educational, the releasing agent, but that is the conviction of the reviewer. It will be interesting to see how Bruce balances these two elements in coming pictures.

This short subject will embellish any high-class program. With proper music—and that would be the song, "Three Fishers"—it will touch hearts attuned to the finer emotions of life. It is a tragedy, as all who have read the poem know. The sole exception taken to it is the scene in the graveyard at the close. This scene is not necessary from an emotional point of view, it does not measure up to the artistry of those preceding it and it can easily be eliminated without injuring the picture.

"Please Be Careful"

Fox has utilized some well-known material to fair advantage in this comedy which features Charles Doherty. There is a burlesque on the mystery drama in which the hero is terrorized by the sight of deep-stained footprints which follow him, these proving to be his own the result of dipping his shoes in a pail of varnish. The rest is made up of more ordinary happenings of the "knock him down and crown him variety."—M. K.

"With Stanley in Africa"

Instructive Serial with High Entertainment Value. Released by Universal

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

Universal has commenced the distribution of an eighteen two reel episode serial that should prove popular from several different angles. The first is, of course, that judging from the first three episodes its power of entertainment is sufficient to make it a success and promote interest from one chapter to another. One of the other reasons is that it is based on an historical episode of the last generation that became so romantically interesting to the people of the United States that its interest is still alive—Stanley's hunt for the lost Livingston in the depths of darkest Africa in 1871.

In making the serial the producers have adhered to historical facts and have injected plenty of fiction to give the serial the necessary story to keep it from being merely a picturized chronicle. And what has been imaginatively written in the way of plot seems to be perfectly plausible, notwithstanding that it is typical serial stuff. An odd condition exists in that you can take the progress of the thing in two ways; either as fiction with a correct historical background or as a history lesson with enough trimmings to make the instruction interesting. Also it may be said most emphatically that "With Stanley in Africa" will be liked equally by either your adult or your juvenile patrons, which is a rare achievement.

The direction is capable and the titling and editing, which is of great importance in a thing of this sort, leaves nothing to be desired. The cast, which is headed by George Walsh, with principal support furnished by Louise Lorraine, are eminently proficient. The serial starts starts off with a wallop in the first episode and of the other two that were shown for review it was seen the punches and excitement would probably keep up throughout. It should be mentioned that views of Africa, jungle or habited spots, are interestingly larded in.

"Monkey Shines"

Nothing much good can be said for this sixth in W. S. Campbell's series of thirteen two-reel comedies for Educational. It presents the same children and animals seen in preceding releases with one exception, and no fault can be found with them, but the story is not there. Such of a plot as there is, proves almost inane. A bootblack cannot earn enough money for his ill mother's breakfast until his two comrades, a dog and a monkey, originate a trap for muddying men's shoes. A cop who takes exception to this method of garnering the shekels, brings the mother a breakfast, and later, when she mysteriously recovers, evinces a fondness for hugging her. The "gags" are as old as Methusaleh and the film drags. It will be suitable entertainment for children in the eyes of some parents after its scenes of whiskey drinking are deleted.—S. S.

"White Hands"

Hobart Bosworth Proves His Success in a More Human Role Than Usual—Released by Wid Gunning.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

Hobart Bosworth has a vehicle here that should offer a more advantageous selling angle than many of his previous ones. As the sea captain, sojourning for a few days on the desert, out of reach of law and order, he has the opportunity for another of the brutal portrayals which have been his peculiar forte, but the scenarist, director and the star, himself, have co-operated in an endeavor to moderate the characterization this time. The experiment instead of weakening the general effect, acts in quite the opposite manner and enables Mr. Bosworth to give a more rounded, more controlled and altogether more human performance than usual.

If this difference is sufficiently emphasized and exploited, "White Hands" can offer more of an inducement to women than have many Bosworth features. The keynote of the change is sounded by the introduction of the child and the captain's amenability to her influence at the crucial moment—here the significance of the title comes in. Whether such a reformation as this is overdrawn and over-sentimental may be a question that will bring criticism, but due to expert continuity and good directing, it appears as the only acceptible solution of the complications, and is by all means, an event that should be capitalized in selling the picture.

The beauty of the opening desert scenes gives the picture a favorable start, and the entire production has an atmosphere of romance that one has come to expect in Bosworth features. In addition to the star's compelling performance, Freeman Wood's interpretation of the boy who is fighting his own weakness is one that stands out. Robert McKim is also a skillful performer.

The Cast

"Hurricane" Hardy.....Hobart Bosworth
Leon Roche.....Robert McKim
Ralph Alden.....Freeman Wood
"Grouch" Murphy.....Al Kaufman
Peroxide.....Muriel Frances Dana
Helen Maitland.....Elinor Fair

Scenario by C. Gardner Sullivan.
Direction by Lambert Hillyer.
Length, 5,654 Feet.

The Story

Helen Maitland finds herself trapped in the desert at the mercy of a brutal sea captain and an unprincipled half-breed, proprietor of the only inn accessible. She makes her first friend in the person of a little waif and it is the influence of the child at the timely moment that saves Helen. Then she finds not only protection, but romance.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

Hobart Bosworth Gives Everyone a Surprise This Time and Proves That a Strong Man Can Have Moments of Human Kindness Without Really Weakening—the "White Hands" of a Child Work the Miracle.

Exploitation Angles: Take the suggestion of the reviewer and play on the fact that this story is stronger because it is less revolting than some of the recent plays by this star. Try to resell him to those who have objected to the somewhat overdrawn characterizations. Tell them they will see this fine actor in a new light.

"The Show Shop"

Larry Semon has a good vehicle here in the role of property man in a vaudeville house. The cast is rather elaborate and the contributors to the comedy value are many, as the performers on the stage, different ones among the audience and the star take turns in bringing laughs. More because it is constantly vivacious than because it is original, this subject wins, as the familiar thrills of the railroad track and the stunt of making almost everyone in the cast occupy much of the two reels. There is a large chorus of attractive girls that should count for a good selling angle. The comedy is a Vitagraph.—M. K.

"Billy Jim"

Fred Stone Star of Mediocre Western Production Distributed by R. C. Pictures.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

Neither the presence of Fred Stone, the celebrated stage star, nor the direction of Frank Borzage have succeeded in making "Billy Jim," an R-C picture, more than a mediocre offering. For one thing, Mr. Stone plays a typical Western role, which aside from a little fancy rope work, does not afford him the same opportunities as his stage vehicles.

The story of the production is not convincing and is a variation of the oft-used theme of the uncouth Westerner who, through persistence and fortuitous circumstances which give him the opportunity for heroic work, finally wins the girl. The reason for certain of the action is not always clearly brought out, and in one scene, after being left at the hotel, the girl suddenly appears in the midst of the action at the mining claim apparently some distance away as the remainder of the party have journeyed by auto.

There is, however, a certain breeziness about Fred Stone's work and a rapidity of movement, which has been aided by some beautiful scenic shots of the mountain and lake country. Considerable of the sympathy necessary for the hero is alienated by his getting joyfully intoxicated early in the picture and immediately after, apparently thoroughly sober, holding up a poker game to obtain money to follow the girl, and this is not entirely atoned for after you have been led to believe that he is throwing a big bluff of wealth in a swell hotel, to find that despite his uncouth manners and dress, he is a rich ranch owner.

The Story

Billy Jim, posing as a happy-go-lucky cow-puncher, gets into a dispute and ropes a man over the top of a railroad train. A girl aboard the train berates him for such actions, and he immediately loses his heart. That night he gets drunk and wanders into a cabin where he finds her bound to a chair. Releasing her, he learns she is going on to a swell resort with her father. As he is broke, he holds up a card game and with the money hires a car and beats her there. He begins to press his suit, but she does not care for his uncouth ways or manner and believes him guilty of the robbery as he is spending so much money. Trouble develops at her father's mining camp nearby and Billy Jim succeeds in routing the claim-jumpers and saving the property, thus downing the villain's plans. The arrival of the sheriff to arrest him for the robbery is instrumental in revealing the fact that Billy Jim is one of the richest men in the West. After this, he leaves, but the girl soon follows and all ends happily.

"Via Wireless"

Below the standard of the first two of the three-reel Pathe Playlets is this one. Not only is the story not as interesting, but the style of the gowns worn by Gail Kane show plainly that this picture, which has been cut down from a five-reel production, was made several years ago. This is also borne out by the presence of an auto with a 1915 license plate, and in addition, the technique of the picture is not up to modern standards. The plot is obvious and devoid of suspense, and one of the most interesting points in the picture are the scenes in a steel mill during the casting of a large cannon. Bruce McRae and Gail Kane appear in the leading roles, while Paul McAllister is cast as an eccentric inventor. Mr. McRae gives the best performance of the three and the other two are inclined to overact.—C. S. S.

"School Days"

A delightful travesty on the days when we were kids is released by Fox Film under the title of "School Days." To people with a suggestion of humor in their make-up, its absurdities will appeal wonderfully, thanks to Al St. John, Snooky, the chimpanzee, and the unnamed chap who plays the school teacher. The fun is of the slapstick variety but manages to reflect the viewpoints and high-lights of youth, so that it is very human stuff. The schoolroom scene is the principal one, though the comedy starts off with a bang by showing St. John's labor-obviating devices in the home. —S.S.

The Story

The power of a leader of the underworld is seen to reach into the very halls of justice. Political heroes are the pawns of the mighty character who controls them through fear and through a secret organization of cut-throats and robbers. However, the leader of this gang is undone by a woman.

The climax of the picture takes place in a magnificent ballroom, where the underworld Czar is about to dance with his new "girl." But in order to get her fiance out of the way, he has had him shot. Though this turns out not to be fatal, it nerves the girl to the point of appearing at the ball with the intention of taking the gangster's life. How her aim is thwarted but her intention carried out by another, forms one of the most exciting moments in a picture replete with thrills.

Exploitation Angles: Play up Chaney and make it clear just what the picture is, since the title is so deceptive. Always link "underworld" with the title announcement. Don't figure that Leroy Scott's name stands for that type of story. Tell them. You might get some interest by referring to the New York ban and ask your patrons what they think.

"Crossing Trails"

A Western "Thriller" Directed by Cliff Smith For Associated Photoplayers.

Reviewed by T. S. daPonte.

Though a word of explanation by the muchly villain-pursued heroine of "Crossing Trails" in the beginning of the picture would have made it unnecessary to go on with the rest of the story, she, however, kept her secret to herself and thereby gave endless opportunity for the villains to continue to pursue her, and the hero a no less number of chances to save her from their clutches.

Villains of the extreme melodramatic type beleagured her on every side throughout the length of the film. Every bush or boulder—it is a Western film—seemed to give them chances to hide themselves, only to spring out upon the unsespecting heroine. But you could rest assured that no sooner was she in their clutches, than the hero, in the person of Jim Warren, would appear upon the scene and with his trusty gun or no less trusty right fist regain the damsel from their nefarious clutches. Oh, yes, it is just that sort of play in which the villains can best be described as "nefarious," and the female lead as a "damsel."

However, though, the chief female actor kept her own counsel, said no word of explanation to anyone, for the purpose, it appeared of allowing the film to run its gamut of heroics, the picture will, probably, be a fair box-office attraction, especially appealing to the fans who like to see their heroes step in at the opportune moment to the entire discomfiture of the bad-man. The photography is excellent and the cast does its level best to put the story across.

The Cast

Story by L. V. Jefferson.
Directed by Cliff Smith.
Photographed by John Thompson.
Length, 4,800 Feet.

The Story

The villain tries to force the heroine to marry him, and shoots the parson when he refuses to perform the ceremony. Thinking she'll be blamed for the murder the heroine flees and takes refuge on the ranch of Jim Warren. Here she is captured by the villain, and recaptured by Jim, this see-saw proceeding being enacted several times. There is a happy ending when the villain is finally thrown from a cliff, the heroine finds herself heiress to a fortune, and Jim after several declarations of love is finally accepted.

Exploitation Angles: Sell the melodrama in this and you'll please your patrons. Lay it on thick to get in those who like their dramas to be intense.

"Stage Struck"

This single-reel Pathe comedy, starring Snub Pollard, assisted by Marie Mosquini and Noah Young, is a travesty on small town melodrama, in which the laughs are obtained by the use of true and tried broad comedy material. In entertainment value it ranks just a little above the average of this series of comedies. Snub is a stage door Johnnie who gets a chance as an actor when the leading man quits in a huff. He has various amusing experiences until the ex-leading man breaks up the show by starting to set off fireworks in the gallery.—C. S. S.

"The Villain in Disguise"

Paul Terry, in this single-reel cartoon comedy, distributed by Pathe, has again cleverly modernized, with humorous touches, one of Aesop's fables teaching that "a villain may disguise himself, but he will never fool the wise." In this instance, the cartoonist has pointed the moral by means of a cat which after eluding a dog cop, adopts various disguises and seeks to overcome a family of mice at dinner. The father of the mouse family, however, is not fooled, and going to the roof pushes over a chimney, thereby stunning the cat who is then captured by the officer dog. —C. S. S.

"Man to Man"

Good Entertainment Provided in Breezy Universal-Jewel Starring Harry Carey.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

Opening on one of the islands of the South Seas, the action of "Man to Man," a Universal-Jewel, starring Harry Carey, soon shifts to a Western ranch. Not only is this one of the most entertaining of this star's pictures, but it also gives him opportunities for some of the best acting of his career. The story is interesting, with considerable pathos supplied by an ex-foreman who has been blinded through the treachery of the inevitable rascally foreman who also seeks to get the best of the hero.

Another striking feature of this production is the excellent photography, there are some fine lighting effects, many good shots of large herds of cattle and good views of a cattle stampede which is checked by a brush fire.

The action of the picture is rapid, the work of the cast satisfactory and altogether it is a production which should please any audience that likes Western pictures.

Lillian Rich is excellently cast in the role opposite the star, while Charles LeMoyne is a typical Western villain. Willis Robard commands sympathy as the blind man and Harold Goodwin is well-suited to the role of Slim Barbee. While following the general lines of "Westerns," this production differs in several respects from the average productions of this type, which adds to its entertainment value.

The Cast

Story by Jackson Gregory.
Scenario by George C. Hull.
Directed by Stuart Paton.
Photographed by William Thornley.
Length, 5,629 Feet.

The Story

Steve Packard, a derelict in the South Seas, who has served time for a crime he did not commit, rescues a woman from unwelcome attentions; she dies leaving her young daughter in his care. Soon after he receives a letter announcing that his father has died, leaving him a ranch and $10,000. Gradually recovering his self-respect he finally works his way back home, only to find that his possession of the property is beset with difficulties due to the enmity of his grandfather aided by the work of a rascally foreman. Steve, nothing daunted starts to overcome the difficulties and also to win the hand of a girl on the next ranch, who, however, does not seem to take kindly to his suit. The villain seeks to stampede Steve's cattle and being caught in the danger zone the girl declares her love. Steve succeeds in exposing the foreman's villainy and wins his grouchy grandfather over to his side, he of course wins the girl, and in a hand-to-hand encounter the villain is accidentally killed by a fall from a cliff.

"The Beautiful Liar"

Katherine MacDonald Assisted by An Excellent Cast in Entertaining Subject Offered by First National.

Reviewed by Clarence L. Linz.

"The Beautiful Liar," a First National production, offers sixty-two minutes of clean and amusing entertainment, and it gives to Katherine MacDonald an opportunity to show her ability to double in widely differing parts in the same photoplay. There is nothing particularly remarkable about this production, yet it made a good impression upon the audience which viewed its premiere appearance.

This feautre makes capital of the fact that it is a play without a villain to muss things up. Instead there are used two youthful characters representing villiany and happiness which appear among the titles. These seem to detract from, rather than add to the value of the picture for they break the thread of the story.

The story deals with the substitution of a young stenographer for a famous stage star to participate in private theatricals at a fashionable summer hotel. Both parts are played by Miss MacDonald. In return for her services she is given a vacation, free of expense, at the hotel. She is led into doing this by a fellow-employee—MacGregor—a canny Scotchman, who makes possible also a vacation for himself under the same conditions. This part is well played by Joseph J. Dowling. He shared in the favorable comment of the audience with Miss MacDonald. Wilfred Lucas, as Gaston Allegretti, the excitable hotel manager, was very funny and got into many laughable difficulties. Bobby Bates, as a young millionaire, who becomes infatuated with "The Beautiful Liar," and Kate Lester, as Mrs. Van Courtlandt-Van Allstyn, a society leader, help complete an excellent cast.

The Cast

Adapted from George Marion's Story, "Peachie."
Scenario by Ruth Wightman.
Directed by Wallace Worsely.
Length, 5,236 Feet.

The Story

The story deals with an office girl, who, in order to save a summer resort hotel manager from losing his job and to give herself a vacation among the Four Hundred at the same time, consents to pose as the musical comedy queen while the latter is absent in Honoloulu. While masquerading as the footlight favorite at a society benefit she attracts the attention of a young Gotham millionaire who immediately falls in love with her. The romance starts at rehearsals and continues at a lightning-like pace to a satisfactory conclusion despite numerous complications en route.

Exploitation Angles: Divide between Miss MacDonald and the story. The latter is not exactly new, but it always argues a good development, and will draw. Make all you can of the fact that this is a story without a villain.

"Should a Wife Work"

J. W. Film Corporation Presents Long Drawn-Out Photoplay Based On This Modern Problem.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

Though the title is argumentative and has good exploitation possibilities, "Should a Wife Work?" distributed on the State right market by J. W. Film Corporation does not present any new angle or aid in the solution of this modern social problem, for in one instance in the story it means happiness and in the other just the reverse. Certainly in the case of the couple selected for the most prominent roles, the answer must be in the affirmative if the wife desires to keep the domestic establishment running.

The story is not uninteresting and considerable sympathy is established for the wife, but one of its most serious defects is that it is entirely too long drawn out, there is an anti-climax some distance from the end which gives the spectator the impression that the story is about over, and then the thread is taken up again at considerable length. There are also certain angles to the story, dealing with the other couple, which are not made sufficiently clear, and considerable theatric matter dealing with the young husband's unwarranted jealousy, which does not further the main theme and only serves to show him up as somewhat of a cad.

Edith Stockton is attractive as Betty, the wife who by working finds happiness, and brings to this role a charm of manner and ability which elicits your sympathy. Alice Lowe is somewhat negative in the subordinate role of the other wife while Stuart Robson is satisfactory as her husband, but has little to do. As Betty's husband, Louis Kimball is well cast, and has a pleasing personality.

Judicious cutting of several hundred feet, and re-editing, would materially strengthen the dramatic values of this production and increase its hold upon the average audience.

The Cast

David Locke.....Louis Kimball
Madame Theodora.....Elinor Curtis
Jim Paget.....Walter McEwen

Directed by Horace G. Plymptom.
Length, 6,850 Feet.

The Story

Two girls, classmates as school, pursue different pathways, Betty teaches music in a modest way, while Nina marries a young lawyer, but tiring of "humdrum" life seeks a career on the stage. Chance later brings the two girls together and Paget, wealthy but unscrupulous, seeks to compromise Betty. Later she meets David and marries him only to find out that his income depends on royalties from an invention that Paget controls. Paget again seeks to force his attentions on Betty, cuts David's royalty, and Betty gets a position as a singer without letting David know she is paid for it. Circumstances get worse and end in a fight between Paget and David, in which the latter's new invention is destroyed. Starting again in an out-of-town job he is successful through the use of money supplied in a round-about way by his wife and everything ends happily, but only after David has, because of jealousy, nearly wrecked the home his wife has tried so hard to maintain. Nina, through Betty's efforts, is also reconciled to her husband.

"Nancy from Nowhere"

Reviewed by Sumner Smith.

Rapid transitions mark Bebe Daniels' latest Realart picture, "Nancy from Nowhere," distributed by Paramount. First, the star is seen in rags and tatters, a wretched, mistreated little girl; then in the clothes of the rich; then once again in rags. The beginning is sheer melodrama, the middle is partly farce comedy and at the end there is more melodrama. Giving the chic actress the role of a wistful little drudge is apparently an experiment, to see if she is successful in roles other than the farce comedy sort, and yet they couldn't refuse her the chance to bring the laughs. Therefore, while essentially melodramatic, the picture has a curious sprinkling of light funmaking.

Miss Daniels proves she is versatile. As the butt of her stepmother's anger and the object of her stepfather's evil intentions she is a pathetic little person. As the girl who ran away wearing her stepmother's black bombazine dress she is uproariously funny. But because of the picture's peculiar make-up, as a whole it does not register realism. It is powerfully true when the star and James Gordon and Vera Lewis are together in a scene. The latter two, as the step-parents, are realistic to the ninth degree—seldom have more thoroughly despicable people been depicted on the screen.

Nevertheless it seems true that "Nancy from Nowhere" will appeal, especially to the women. The comedy is of the sort that will go straight to the feminine heart, and the different crises are of particular interest to women. The picture would have been greatly strengthened by a more virile delineation of the boy hero—Edward Sutherland has made him a petulant kid. No such weak boy could have knocked the villain unconscious, for Gordon is a very husky individual.

"One Glorious Day"

Paramount Picture With Will Rogers As Star a Well Presented Novelty Full of Imagination.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

Exhibitors who supply entertainment to a clientele that has been heard to grumble mildly about the sameness of the fare it might have been getting will do well to counteract the criticism with "One Glorious Day." The film is a distinct novelty, written with imagination, which no one will contradict is an all too rare quality. It is staged with distinction and has the box-office advantage of equal program prominence of two stars and are popular in the extreme—Will Rogers and Lila Lee.

Because of its peculiar novelty and incorporated imagination, "One Glorious Day" resolves itself into an entertainment of high order. It has a hint of the psychological, presented in a simple fashion, which is greatly in its favor in interesting and spectator. The psychological significance is just strong enough to promote talk about the film, which will help in promotion, but it is not so prominent as to be classed as the dreaded so-called "high-brow." It has genuine love interest, pathos and enough thrills to satisfy those who demand excitement. And the whole thing is presented in a whimsically humorous vein.

Not only is the picture a novelty in itself, but it furnishes Will Rogers with a role that is decidedly different from anything he has ever attempted. With it he is eminently successful. Lila Lee has nothing out of the ordinary to do, but for what she is called upon she performs charmingly. John Fox as "Ek" does well. The rest of the cast is adequate. "One Glorious Day" is expertly directed, and the mechanics of handling the spirit stuff is especially well done. The spirit world scenes in the initial stages of the picture are unusually interesting and picturesquely queer.

If you want to give them something different, here it is.

The Cast

Ezra Botts.....Will Rogers
Molly McIntyre.....Lila Lee
Ben Wadley.....Alan Hale
"Ek" ..... John Fox
Pat Curran.....George Nichols
Mrs. McIntyre.....Emily Rait
Bert Snead.....Clarence Burton

Story by Walter Woods and A. B. Baringer.
Scenario by Walter Woods.
Directed by James Cruze.
Length, 5,100 Feet.

The Story

Professor Botts is a meek, shy man who loves Molly McIntyre but is too backward to tell her so. The professor tells the spiritualist society of which he is the chairman, that he will go into a trance, leave his body and appear in their midst in spirit form. When his spirit leaves his body, "Ek," a spirit with fighing propensities, enters the body of the professor. The changed professor then arises, shocks the entire town by his changed self, whips several scheming politicians who are trying to threaten him, gets slightly intoxicated, saves Molly by thrashing Ben Wadley, a scoundrel who had designs upon Molly, and then returns to the study, where the overtaxed body faints. The spirit "Ek" leaves the body and the distracted spirit of the professor in great delight, again enters its fleshly form. Ezra finds that Molly loves him and doesn't remember anything that has happened while "Ek" inhabited his body, not knowing of that change. He is nominated for mayor, finds perfect bliss in his romance and all ends happily when he takes Molly to his heart.

Exploitation Angles: If Rogers is new to your Paramount audiences, sell the general idea of the comedian along with the play. Otherwise just tell them that this is one of the best vehicles the comedian has ever had and that the line forms on the right.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

Condenser Breakage

E. J. Wolfe, manager Wolfe theatres, Lowville, Kentucky, has trouble, as follows:

For a few months past we have been experiencing an almost unlimited amount of trouble with condenser breakage. My projectionist is unable to locate the cause. I write in the hope that you will be able to offer some suggestion or suggestions which will result in eliminating the breakage.

We have two Power's Six A projectors, and have the same trouble with them both. Sometimes the lenses break while in use, and sometimes during the night.

It is the more mysterious because of the fact that for months we did not know what it was to break a condenser, and our equipment is now exactly the same as it was then. We are connected on 110 volt, 60 cycle A. C., and pull sixty amperes at the arc. Lenses are 6.5 and 7.5. Distance of projection is eighty feet; picture fourteen feet two inches.

Am awaiting the coming edition of your Handbook. In the meantime any suggestions you may offer in this matter will certainly be appreciated very highly.

Although I have been a regular reader of the projection department for years, and of the Moving Picture World since 1907, this is the first time I have found it necessary to bother you with questions. This continual breakage has got my goat, however, so here I am at last.

No Bother

Don't imagine you are "bothering" me when you ask questions. That is the one most important function of this department—answering questions and giving help to those who need it.

You say your equipment is exactly the same as it was when no lenses broke. I must question that statement, Friend Wolfe. Certainly something has changed and our problem is to find out what it is; therefore let us examine into those various things most likely to induce condenser breakage, and in about the order they seem most probable in your case.

First: What you have said about lenses sometimes breaking while running, and sometimes "in the night," makes the most likely cause a super-heating of the lamphouse, condenser mount, et cetera.

What would cause this? (a) Lamphouse ventilation clogged by ash from the carbon. Clean both the top and bottom vent screens thoroughly and make sure they ARE clean. You have a Six A, and may have a lamphouse, the only air inlet or outlet of which is through a perforated screen. Unless cleaned periodically these screens will clog up solid, stopping practically all lamphouse ventilation, with result that the whole lamphouse, lenses and holder will get very much hotter than they should, which sets up liability to breakage.

Red Hot Carbons

(b) Carbons get red hot most or all of their length. Cause, overloaded carbons, poor carbons or poor electrical contact between carbons and jaws or a little of all three causes. This should not very greatly affect temperature of lamphouse interior if there is free ventilation, but it is nevertheless a very bad condition, and will make matters much worse if ventilation is either partially or wholly clogged.

(c) Badly flaming carbons. Cause may be in the carbon itself, or in overload. In itself it should not increase lamphouse temperature seriously if ventilation be open and free, but taken in connection with other conditions named it might amount to considerable. Some clogging, some flaming and some excess in carbon heating might set up a very bad condition.

(d) This is minor, insofar as has to do with increase in lamphouse temperature. Taken by itself it would not affect temperature of lamphouse interior much, but if in connection with one or more of the other causes it helps. It is heating of wires and metal of carbon jaws caused by excessive resistance.

Decreased Distance

If you find all these to be all right, the next probably cause is decreased distance between crater and lens. This distance is excessive, as you now have it, provided the lenses are what you suppose they are, and they are spaced not to exceed 1/16 of an inch apart.

What you need for a 60 ampere A C arc are two 6.5 inch focal length plano convex lenses, with the apexes of their curved surfaces not to exceed 1/16 of an inch apart. If you space them further apart you automatically decrease the E F of the condenser combination and bring your crater closer to the face of the lens, which will set up increased tendency to breakage.

The third probable cause is lenses only touching metal of holding ring in spots—though you probably have an old type holder, in which the lens is held by flat springs. Try placing a ring of thin sheet asbestos between lens and metal at all points.

The fourth and last cause is excessive flame striking edge of lens. This may be remedied by means of a properly placed asbestos shield, or by changing the carbon combination to one which will not flame so excessively.

Of course there are drafts of cold air to be reckoned with, but I don't believe that is a likely cause in your case. I should be very glad if you will advise me as to it if you benefit from these suggestions.

As to Tools for Projectionists

Jack Peyton, repair department, Southern Theatre Equipment Company, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, writes:

Dear Rich: A few weeks ago I noticed that you were desirous of securing a copy of your first Handbook, which was a twelve page affair put out by the old Viascope Projector Company, of Chicago. I have but to recall to memory the days of 1908 to realize how that little booklet was worth its weight in gold to me. I have one somewhere among my plunder. Will search for it and if it is found it is yours.

Am glad to see you are advocating the matter of the projectionist being possessed of a decent outfit of tools. Have about $200 worth myself, but have been years getting exactly the tools I wanted, and getting them of an acceptable quality.

If you want reamers, high-grade punches, high-grade tool makers' V blocks, sprocket pullers, taper pin removers, taper pin reamers, et cetera, I will supply you with the addresses where I got mine. I secured a bunch of fine tools from N. Power. They cost considerable, but are worth it. I make a lot of my own tools, having available a well equipped shop to work with, but not many are thus fixed, so they have to purchase or go without.

Attached find photo of a precision test indicator whichI am almost ready to place on the market. It is used for determining the accuracy of Power's and Simplex intermittent sprocket shafts; also to tell if the rim of an intermittent sprocket is concentric with the hole in the hub, and you may take it from me that many are not.

I would be very glad to have those addresses. The tester looks good, and should, I think, be in the kit of every projectionist capable of using it intelligently. I suppose its readings are in thousandths of an inch. Send on the addresses pronto, indicating just what it is each maker supplies.

As to the booklet you call the first Handbook, why there must be a mistake somewhere. I have several of them. Probably I said I could not lay my hands on one just at the time I wrote, and you misunderstood.

Thank you for the offer, just the same. It was a thirty page booklet. It was sold in thousand lots to various projector manufacturers and film exchanges, with their advertisement on the cover. I do not consider it as being the first Handbook, though in a way it, of course, really was. The book I call the first Handbook was a 185-page cloth bound book. I have two or three copies of it left.

Lens Diameter

John L. McCuddy, Drakeville, Iowa, asks:

Dear Mr. Richardson: Will you tell me how I can tell if my projection lens is of the right diameter.

Please tell me some simple method. as I am a bit new in projection, having worked at it for not quite a year.

I would also like to know what the effect would be were I to connect the 110 volt alternating current lines to my projector table switch terminals, through a rheostat of course.

Please know that I already have the lamp using 45 amperes direct current from a motor generator set.

The question I am asking is, could the two currents be sent through the same arc at the same time, and if so what would be the effect. I say it could and another projectionist and an electrician intimate that I am crazy for claiming it could be done.

As to Lens Diameter

As to the lens diameter, why if you have a third edition Handbook, turn to table No. 1. page 141.

Find the distance from center of condenser combination—point between the two lenses of the condenser—to the film, which we will suppose to be eighteen inches. Next measure the working distance of the projection lens—distance aperature to first surface of lens, which we will assume to be four inches.

Looking at table 1 we select the column headed by 18, the distance aperture to center of condenser combination and run our finger down it until we reach the figure 4, the working distance of the lens, and in the left hand column opposite this figure we will find one 15/16, which is the necessary diameter of the projection lens to receive the light beam if no slide carrier is used.

If you have no Handbook, then lay a sheet of paper about two feet long on a flat table and fasten it down. Using a perfectly straight ruler, such as the edge of a carpenter's steel square, draw a straight line across the paper. Near one end make a dot on either side of the line, each dot 2⅛ inches from the line. Distant from these the distance from center of condenser combination to aperture make two dots 15/16ths of an inch apart, each dot equal distant from the line. These represent the aperture. Their spacing is not exact, but it will be pretty close.

Dot Above Line

Next, from the condenser dot above the line draw a straight line which passes exactly through the aperature dot under the line, and from the condenser dot under the line draw a line through the aperature dot above the line.

Extend these lines beyond the aperature dots as much as the working distance of the lens amounts to and at the working distance position measure between the lines. If the distance is greater than the diameter of your lens, then the lens is too small.

As to the electrical matter, yes, you could send 40 amperes of D C through your arc from the motor generator set, and at the same time send A C through from the supply lines, but you would probably have to carry the arc altogether too short for the best D C arc; also you would have to either have both the D C and A C current "on" when you struck the arc, or else you would have to strike the arc with one current in the usual way, and then freeze the carbons again to start the second arc, though this might not be necessary if the A C arc were placed into operation first.

Just what the effect might be insofar as projection light be concerned I could not undertake to say. It would be an interesting experiment for some of you chaps to make who have both currents available, but remember that you will want big carbons, because you will most likely have a pretty heavy combined amperage.

Corrects Indian Diagram

Samuel F. Jobe, Eastland, Texas, calls our attention to an error in diagram of wiring of Indian projection room, published, page 816, October 15 issue.

I did not trace out the wiring then, I guess, hence did not detect what apparently is an error in marking the wires. If you notice the positive plus mark at top of diagram and trace the wire through you will find the wire thus marked is connected, through the rheostat, to the lower, or negative carbon.

As the thing is the arc would be burning upside down. The error is evidently in the placing of the positive and negative markings. Apologies. I should have myself discovered the mistake.

Notice to All

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

THE LENS CHART

Are You Working by "Guess" or Do You Employ Up-to-Date Methods?

You demand that your employer keep his equipment in good order and up to date. He owes it both to himself and to you to do so, but you owe it to him to keep abreast with the times in knowledge and in your methods.

The lens chart (two in one, 11x17 inches, on heavy paper for framing) is in successful use by hundreds of progressive projectionists.

"Don't guess." Do your work RIGHT. Price, fifty cents, stamps.

A Touching Story

Ellis A. Karns, Fort Wayne, Indiana, whose letter head describes him as "Projectionist, Orpheum Theatre," and "Member Local 466, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O.," tells a really touching story, as follows:

Dear Mr. Richardson: I am not much of a correspondent, but am inclosing clipping from one of our daily papers, which same contains touching news. Might add that all this happened the day following our annual get-together meeting and Christmas banquet, which was served in the rest rooms of the theatre. It was for the employees and tendered with the good wishes and the compliments of the Consolidated Realty and Theatre Corporation. Mr. John W. Daily, our local manager, presided, and the affair was, as usual, a success in every way.

Had the touching incident occured twenty-four hours sooner it might have spoiled our appetites, but thanks be that was not so, and we did full and complete jus ice to the wonderful feed set before us.

Our General Manager, Mr. A. F. Brentlinger, and Assistant General Manager, Mr. C. W. Mason, were unable to be present. Both sent telegrams of regret.

The Consolidated Realty and Theatre Corporation have theatres in Evansville, Terre Haute, Clinton and Richmond, Indiana. Each of the theatres had their little party at Christmas time.

Touched for $2,000

The touching incident referred to was the holding up of the cashier of the Orpheum Theatre, who was relieved of a mere $2,000.

Now here is what I call good business judgment. I can imagine nothing of equal cost to such dinners that would return higher dividends in good will and capable service. Such things beget loyalty. They make for good service and efficiency in many ways.

This department has several times suggested to exhibitors the advisability of just such a thing as this. It is something to be commended from any and every viewpoint.

Projectionist Holds Important Office

Morris J. Rotker, who was at one time Secretary of New York Projectionists' Local Union, No. 306, International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada, who still projects motion pictures in one of the Loew Theatres in the Bronx, has for two years past been Recording and Corresponding Secretary for the Bronx Electrical Contractors' Association.

So well did Brother Rotker, who is in the electrical contracting business in the Bronx, fulfill the duties of the office of secretary that at a recent meeting the body elected him its official head.

Friend Rotker is now president of the Bronx Electrical Contractors' Association, Inc., which proves that the 'umble (?) projectionist can win honors, glory and lots of work, if he tries.

Congratulations, and may success attend you.

Amendment to License Bill Introduced

A bill to amend the general city law in relation to licenses to operate moving picture apparatus has been introduced in the New York State Legislature by Assemblyman Joseph D. McKee of New York City.

Among other things, the bill provides that a licensing authority can issue a permit to any person over eighteen years of age desiring to act as an apprentice to a licensed operator, but that such apprentice shall not be permitted to operate any apparatus except under the personal supervision of a licensed operator.

The bill also provides that no license shall be granted to an applicant unless he shall have served as an apprentice to a licensed operator for at least six months, or shall have had at least six months' experience as an operator of projection machines in a theatre or place of public assemblage.

Better Equipment will bring Increased Attendance. Read the Ads. in Our Better Equipment Section.

DON'T RISK POOR PROJECTION

PLAN THE NEW HOUSE RIGHT

It won't cost you an additional cent to make sure that the projection room is properly located before the house is built.

It WILL cost you many dollars to make changes after the builder gets on the job.

Don't take chances on what architect or building contractor tells you being correct.

Only a projection engineer can tell you authoritatively how and where the projection room should be located and arranged.

Just write us, describing your theatre, sending blue prints of plans, if possible, and you will receive, without charge, the best advice that skill and experience can give. Address Engineering Department.

Woodlawn's New Harvey Theatre Cost $225,000 and Seats 1450 Patrons

THE new Harvey Theatre, which opened its doors to the public December 20, at Woodlawn, Pa., is one of the largest picture houses in Western Pennsylvania.

The building, which is seventy-five feet wide by one hundred and fifty feet long, is in the Italian style of architecture. It consists of three stories in front which accommodates two stores and an entrance lobby on the ground floor, offices on the second and apartments on the third.

The complete theatre and the building in which it is housed cost $225,000. It is of brick, terra cotta trimmed and the rear of the structure, which is but two stories in height, accommodates the picture theatre proper.

Seating on Two Floors

The house has a seating capacity of fourteen hundred and fifty-nine hundred on the main floor and five hundred and fifty on the balcony.

The house is equipped with exits as recommended and approved by the Department of Labor and Industry, and complies strictly with the law.

The theatre can be emptied in three minutes. Patrons have access to the balcony through the main lobby entrance.

The interior is elaborate in its decorations and hangings. The woodwork and walls are enameled in tones of French gray, with the hangings in tones of tan and dark green velour. The interior decorating was done by Bert Dinsmore, of Woodlawn.

The lighting system consists of both direct and indirect fixtures. The heating for the theatre proper is by means of the hot air system, with a fan ventilating system in use at all times.

The seats throughout the auditorium are walnut finish. The balcony is equipped with a reserved seat section, the seats of which are upholstered and covered.

Quiet Aisles

The aisles throughout the theatre are laid with a composition, which deadens the sound. The projection room is installed in a recess of the balcony, which provides a short throw, and an unusually clear picture results.

Ed. Harvey, owner of the house, is one of the picture theatre pioneers in this section, having opened the Grand Theatre at New Brighton, Pa., in 1906. He also is conducting at present the Grand Theatre at Woodlawn.

Earl E. Shaffer, of Woodlawn and New Brighton, was the general contractor and the heating system was installed by Lyle G. Emery, of New Castle. The electric wiring and lighting system was the work of the Klein Electric Company, of Woodlawn.

The projection room is equipped with Simplex projectors and a Hertner transverter, purchased from the Hollis, Smith, Morton Company, Pittsburgh.

Paramount Films Will Be Screened in Tahiti

Paramount has just forwarded from its San Francisco Exchange its first shipment of film to the Island of Tahiti, in the French Society group in the South Pacific.

The pictures are for exhibition in the Bambous Theatre in Papeete, the principal town in the Society Islands. The owner of the theatre is A. Leboucher, a Frenchman, engaged in the importing and exporting business. Note the ventilating system, which Leboucher believes has our more elaborate and more costly systems backed off the boards.

Seven New New York Companies Incorporate

The past week witnessed the incorporation of seven companies that will enter some branch of the motion picture business in New York State. The total capitalization represented by these totals $508,000, the largest company incorporating being the Superior Projector, Inc., capitalized at $270,000, and having as directors: John Doherty, Arnold Tyroler and S. C. Koff, all residing in New York City.

The other companies include: Police Picture Films, Inc., $80,000, J. J. Hickey, P. A. Whitney, James H. Kelley, New York City; Recreation Ticket Corporation, $100,000, James V. Martin, Garden City; Edward A. Kelley, C. W. Brewster, New York City; Miller Enterprises, Inc., Kingston, $3,000, Isaac Miller, Abraham Miller, Michael Stein, Brooklyn; Paladin Pictures' Corporation, $20,000, A. C. Novotny, New York; Norman J. Sennett, Weehawken, N. J.; William T. Wilson, Rutherford, N. J.; Pacific Film Exchange, $10,000, Henry Huber, Morris Perlman, Max Levinthal, New York; The Caravan, Inc., $25,000, L. M. Hart, P. H. Diamond, Eman Diamond, New York.

"Lighting for Temperament" Is the Newest Wrinkle in Cinematography

LIGHTING for motion picture photography has just entered the third and greatest era of its history—an era destined to produce motion pictures of superlative artistry, both dramatically and photographically."

So says Alvin Wyckoff, director of photography at the Lasky studio, and special cinematographer for Cecil B. DeMille productions.

"In the early days of the motion picture industry, sunlight was the sole means of lighting," Mr. Wyckoff points out. "We call that era the commercial period in the history of lighting. Lighting effects as we know them today were unthought of. Straight, flat photography unrelieved by highlight or shadow was the invariable rule.

"Contrary to popular opinion the coming of artificial light did not mark the beginning of the second era of screen illumination. We had made successful experiments with sunlight before the spot lights and other artificial lights became general. In one instance we cut a hole in the overhead diffuser—a canvas covering—and then waited until the sun reached a spot directly overhead in order to get the effect of light pouring down from a suspended lamp.

Continuity Era

"But it required a full equipment of artificial lighting apparatus to make possible the experiments of the second era. This period is known in cinematographic circles as the 'continuity lighting era.' During this period the photographer established a source of light in each stage setting and photographed all subsequent scenes in relation to that light source. To illustrate: A window was selected as the light source. Most of the light in that particular room was thrown into it through that window or from that direction. In this way light and shadow effects that were highly realistic were achieved.

"'Continuity lighting' is still in favor with many cameramen. But it has been superseded by what I believe is destined to be an infinitely more artistic system of lighting.

"For lack of a better term we call this system 'lighting for temperament.' Instead of following the old continuity of lighting, we now light each scene for its emotional tempo rather than for any mechanical reason.

"Thus, if there are two scenes being played simultaneously in one room, we light each scene for itself. One may be a love scene; the other a close-up of jealous lover. Far greater dramatic effect can be achieved if each is given the kind of lighting that emphasizes the dramatic atmosphere of the scene.

"Cinematography's first mission is to convey to the spectator the ideas and emotions which the scenario writer and the director are striving to project. This can best be accomplished by lighting each scene for its own particular dramatic tempo.

"We first attempted this style of lighting in photographing 'The Affairs of Anatol.' However, that was largely experimental. In the subsequent production of 'Fool's Paradise' and still more recently 'Saturday Night'—both Cecil B. DeMille-Paramount pictures—we gave the new system full rein. And the results amply justify our faith.

"Motion picture photography has entered upon a new era, thanks to this revolution in lighting. But it is a revolution that will add tremendously to the dramatic quality of future motion pictures."

The 800-Seat Liberty Uses Two Simplexes

THE accompanying illustrations show the Liberty Theatre, of Lewistown, Idaho, one of the finest houses in the northern part of that state.

The theatre has a seating capacity of eight hundred, distributed over the main floor and in the gallery.

As will be noted, the projection arrangements are particularly good, the projection room being located at the rear of the main floor and immediately under the front of the gallery. This position greatly reduces the angle of projection and also permits easy passage of the projectionist to and from his quarters.

The projection room equipment consists of two Simplex projectors, a transverter and a special stereopticon, which, together with the screen, chairs and lighting fixtures, were furnished by the Western Theatre Supply Company, of Seattle, whose projection engineer superintended the house construction, working in conjunction with the architect.

As shown by the exterior view, the house front is simple and artistic. The marquee is so arranged as to afford real shelter to those waiting to purchase tickets, and the poster frames are so placed as to attract the maximum of attention to passers-by, without detracting from the artistic appearance of the house front.

Paramount Plans New Laboratory with a Weekly Capacity of 1,500,000 Feet

PLANS for the largest film laboratory of any single producing corporation are taking preliminary form in the hands of Frank E. Garbutt, newly appointed special technical advisor to the production department, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The laboratory will be built at the Lasky studio and will have a forty-eight hour week capacity of 1,500,000 feet of film.

The present Lasky laboratory produces but 600,000 feet which with 350,000 feet from the Wilshire-Paramount studio laboratory gives a total of 600,000 feet less than the potentialities of the immense new plant.

Mr. Garbutt leaves in a few days for New York. While there he will confer with Frank Neyer, head of the Long Island Famous Players-Lasky laboratory, and other technical executives. Further valuable information will be gained from a special trip to the great Eastman film-making plant at Rochester, N. Y.

Upon his return to Hollywood Mr. Garbutt will formulate his final plans for the laboratory which will be built under his supervision.

Every New Device

"Every possible new device for the production of perfect positive prints will be installed," states Mr. Garbutt. "There will be special air filters, a special machine shop for the quick repair of the fine printing instruments and the fabrication of several new inventions with which we expect to produce some new effects which will be exclusive to Paramount pictures."

Mr. Garbutt has not yet decided what portion of the old Lasky laboratory will be retained in the new plans. Construction of the new plant is expected to start early in spring.

The new special technical advisor assumes his duties following an experience of eight years in the motion picture business. Most recently he was studio manager of the Realart, now Wilshire-Paramount studio. He rose to this position following long training in every branch of film production. He was for months actually in the laboratory, doing the work of various sub-divisions, following which he studied motion photography, becoming an expert cameraman. Among the productions he has to his credit as a cinematographer is "Huckleberry Finn," Paramount's great classic of boy life, which William D. Taylor directed.

Practical Motion Picture Projection

Really Began With the Carbon Arc

Notice

Packages of Columbia Projector Carbons are now dressed with new attractive labels, as shown on this page. Until the market is cleared of all the former label packages, however, you may not receive the new label package. The same high grade carbons are found in both packages

End View

This shows the ease and simplicity of stocking the new label packages

Every advance in motion picture projection has been largely dependent on Columbia Projector Carbons.

Moreover, science and the practical experience of moving picture men have proved conclusively that no other light source can take the place of Columbia Projector Carbons and produce a screen illumination so brilliant, so devoid of eye fatigue, so flexible, so safe, and so satisfactory to both audience and projectionist.

In the wake of every leading commodity there are substitutes to be found. Invariably, substitutions are costly. Especially is this true in the projector field. Remember that with Columbia Projector Carbons you get a known product of uniform quality—more light for your money—sharper and steadier pictures—a standard article for standard equipment.

The test of time tells. Comparison—visual proof—substantiates Columbia leadership.

OF THE WORLD"

FOUR tremendous, spectacular features representing the summit of motion picture achievement.

In thrill, in surprise, in the stupendousness of the sets, in number of people appearing, in amount of time and money spent, these pictures make all past achievements sink into insignificance.

Fifty thousand in the cast! Eighteen months in the making! And a story of adventure that makes the Arabian Nights tame in comparison.

"The MISTRESS OF THE WORLD"

with MIA MAY

From the novel
by Curt Figdor
Directed by Joe May

FROM every angle, the four pictures making up "The Mistress of the World" have an appeal to every class of people in the United States.

There never has been and there probably never will be again anything as gigantic in conception and execution, as thrilling, as interesting, as spectacular, as these four mighty masterpieces.

Nor was there ever a picture which so lends itself to publicity and exploitation as these do.

There never was a picture which meant so much to the exhibitors of America. "The Mistress of the World" will make box-office records which never can be broken.

The Story

She was a spirited, spoiled girl. She married and was soon dissatisfied because she missed the attentions of a crowd of suitors. She asked for a divorce. Hubby sat tight and said, "Sure, if you can get one of your old sweethearts to run away with you." She tried, and the fun began. But when Hubby took a hand she changed her mind and stuck. Why? Because Hubby knew that the only way to treat women is to "Handle With Care."

The Production

A powerful theme treated as a light drama; directed with consummate skill and produced with lavish settings. A wonderful box office title and a perfect audience picture.

473 Wild Animals but No Bull!

Truth pays. In advertisin'. An' elsewhere. When Selig started makin'. His new serial. "The Jungle Goddess." We announced. An' truthfully. Over 470 wild animals. Available. For use. In this thriller. Everybody knows. That the Selig Zoo. Holds more jungle wild stock. Than any other collecshun. Of wild animals. In this country. Which means. And there's no gettin' away frum it. Because Selig's. IS the largest collecshun. That "The Jungle Goddess." Has more animals in it. Than any other. Wild animal serial. Made. Or to be. Made.

WHICH MEANS

That Col. Selig. Who made. "Miracles of the Jungle." An' "The Lost City." Is puttin' four times as many. Wild animals. In "The Jungle Goddess." As he did. In the other two.

An' which means. That when we say 473. It's wild animals. We're speakin' of. Lions. An' tigers. Jaguars. Leopards. Apes. Th' whole gamut. Of jungle. Hellraisers. An' when. You read. Of someone. Usin'. 2500 wild animals. You're readin' it. All right. But it's not. Wild animals. It's

Bull

An' bull runs wild. But doesn't 'tract. People. Into photoplay theatres. Neither do. Wild animal serials. Made. By people. Who know enough. About wild animal serials. To realize. That Col. Selig. Who made. "Miracles of the Jungle." An' "The Lost City." Is the only man. Who has made. SUCCESSFUL. Wild Animal. Serials.

AN' WHEN

You consider. That the 2500 wild animals. Claimed by these other people. Were only 1500. The week before. You gotta admit. That sum. Animals. Breed fast. But. The only kind. That breed that fast. Are not the kind. We include in our figger. Of 473. They're circus. Flees. An' so.

WE WARN YOU

That when you're thinkin'. Of Wild Animal serials. Take the stuff. Yu hear about. SOME of them. With a grain of salt. An' don't forget. That the wild animal serial. Which will be. The outstanding Chapter-picshur. Of all time. An' which has. Thrills in it. Galore. An' spectacular. Wild animal. Stuff. An' big. Settin's. An' everythin' which Selig knows how. Tu put in. A big. Serial. An' which all critics. Rave about. Is

"The Jungle Goddess"

An' we're tellin' yu. That if. Yu handle. In 1922. Any other. Serial. Than "The Jungle Goddess." Yu've got. A helluva. Chance. Of breakin'. Even. Yu gotta. Realize. "The Jungle Goddess". Will cost yu. Twice as much. As other so-called. Wild animal. Serials. But in this market. As it is. Today. The only stuff. Worth while. At any price. Is the good stuff. An' the good stuff. Is worth while. At any price. An'

YOU CAN BANK ON IT

"The Jungle Goddess" is good stuff. Darn good. An' if. Yu don't believe it. Then read. The reviews. Or come. An' drop in. On us. An' we'll "show" yu. On the screen. Today!

THE PYRAMID PLAN

PYRAMID PICTURES, INC., was organized for the purpose of producing sixteen or more real box office attractions each year to be sold to the exhibitor at fair and honest prices that will enable him to make money. The Company is headed by Walter E. Greene, formerly Vice-President of Famous Players-Lasky, President of Artcraft and one of the organizers of Paramount.

PYRAMID PICTURES is absolutely independent and has no alliances whatever with other producing companies or political groupes. Its sole aim is to make good pictures at lowest possible costs and to distribute them as efficiently and economically as possible.

"MY OLD KENTUCKY HOME," Pyramid's first production, is completed. A story from the pen of Anthony Paul Kelly, it was directed by Ray C. Smallwood with an all-star cast including Monte Blue, Sigrid Holmquist, Julia Swayne Gordon, Lucy Fox, Arthur Carewe and Frank Currier.

PYRAMID'S second and third pictures, "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge," with Monte Blue, directed by Ray C. Smallwood, and "The Mayor's Wife," an Anna Katherine Greene story with Betty Blythe as the star and Kenneth Webb as director, are both in production now.

THESE Pictures are financed and made under the Pyramid Plan under which all Pyramid Productions of the future will be made.

THE Pyramid Plan is the most equitable arrangement ever devised for the financing of motion picture production. It eliminates the high cost of producer financing from which the industry has suffered in the past and offers a sane solution to exhibitors and others who want to share in picture production profits.

PYRAMID PICTURES INC.

PYRAMID PICTURES INC.

THE Pyramid Plan finances each production through the sale of Pyramid profit sharing Syndicate Units. One thousand units, each of $100 par value are issued to make a $100,000 production. Every dollar received by Pyramid Pictures, Inc., from the sale of these units is used for actual production expenses and for the making of positive prints. Not one cent of this money is used for office overhead or officers' salaries.

THE Pyramid Plan provides that the first money received from rentals after distributing charges shall be returned to the unit holders until they have been repaid thru total investment before Pyramid Pictures, Inc., receives a cent. After the investors have received the return of their money, the plan provides that Pyramid Pictures, Inc., shall receive 50% of the profits for management, and that the investors receive the other 50% of the profit for the use of their money.

THE Pyramid Plan also provides that the unit holders have a first lien on the negative and positive prints under a trusteeship until they have received the return of their total investment, dollar for dollar.

THE Pyramid Plan insures the producer against banker control of his business. It opens the way to exhibitors who want to foster a greater independent output of good pictures. It provides exhibitors with the means of sharing in the legitimate production profits assured by experienced honest management, employing good directors, selecting good stories, casting recognized picture players and making good pictures on a safe and sane basis.

PYRAMID'S management is tried and proven. The Pyramid Plan is a demonstrated success. Pyramid Productions of the future will be largely exhibitor financed.

PYRAMID'S Distribution will be handled by the American Releasing Corporation at a straight thirty per cent. cost, affording what we believe to be not only the cheapest but also the best distribution of good pictures in America today.

FURTHER information regarding The Pyramid Plan and forthcoming productions will be sent upon request to Smallwood & Co., Inc., sole fiscal agents, 150 West 34th St., New York City.

NIGHT LIFE on the Great White Way has entered into a new phase of all-night revelries. The débutante flapper and the famous hostess are with us. In one of the "clubs" on a recent evening a woman leader of Fifth Avenue's social life sat at one table; at a neighboring table sat a noted stage beauty whose name was figuring in the divorce courts. That is the keynote of the Broadway season.

PHENOMENAL BUSINESS

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 24, 1922.

J. D. Williams, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., 6 West 48th Street, New York.

"Stardust" just finished phenomenal week's business at the Rivoli, turning them away at every night performance. Last night of week's engagement box offices stopped selling tickets at seven-forty-five and hundreds were turned away. Compelled to call for extra police to turn away those waiting in line for a block and a half at both box offices, and who couldn't get in. Unanimously declared a great picture by the press and public. In my opinion it is a box office attraction that every franchise holder should lose no time in booking to stimulate his business.

WENT OVER BIG

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 11, 1921.

Associated First National Pictures, Inc., 6 West 48th St., New York City, N. Y.

"Stardust" was received most favorably by press and public. Any number of our patrons liked the picture better than story. I personally believe that changes made from original story helped the picture. Our business improved last week, which indicates that picture pleased.

W. C. PATTERSON,
New Metropolitan Theatre.

Boston, Mass., Feb. 6, 1922.

J. D. Williams, Associated First National Pictures, Inc., 6 West 48th Street, New York, N. Y.

Hope Hampton and her picture, "Stardust," went over big. Turned them away at all performances at Fordon Washington Street Theatre. Is a wonderful picture, and Miss Hampton's magnetic personality has won the city. "Stardust" has proved great box office attraction. Franchise holders can look forward to turn away business when it plays in their theatres.

The Lessons of Adversity

A MAN of many misfortunes said to his friend, "It must be that I am intended to fill a great place in the world, because I am being given an extra training in the school of adversity. When my day comes I shall view all things calmly and with neither resentment nor distress."

If this philosopher were to look upon the moving picture business of today with its misfortunes of censorship, of undeserved scandal, of unmerited notoriety for the many, through the tragedies that have stalked into the lives of the few, of the calamities like the sad misfortune in the theatre in Washington, he would be forced to believe that the screen is intended for great things in the world, greater things than have been dreamed of by the ablest brains who now have to do with it; greater opportunities, greater responsibilities, nobler, finer achievement in behalf of the human family.

Our troubles have grown to proportions that none save a great vitality could withstand. The Arbuckle case was laid, not at the doors of individuals but at the door of the industry, and the public, with its thoughtlessness turned to account by a sensational press, pictured our business as a ceaseless series of orgies and private riots, in which we swam in vats of bootleg liquor at every sundown and contrived new debaucheries to greet each dawn.

The Taylor tragedy was not the murder of an individual but, if the newspapers are to be credited, an out-cropping of the wild, hectic, dissolute, drug crazed seething that is the secret but usual life we all of us live day by day and night by night in the dishevelled, disordered phantasmagoria that beggars fiction and challenges the abysses of human imagination.

We of the pictures know how wrong this is, how unfair, how utterly, almost insanely untruthful it is, and there have been evidences of a feeling of despair akin to the sensations of helplessness which come to a man crowded toward the precipice in an ugly dream, powerless to stay himself, catching at grasses to give him respite, and striving to cry out "Stop! Stop!" yet inarticulate and heading hopelessly toward the plunge into nothingness.

Sensations die out in a fortnight, but new sensations give them life.

Our way back into the sunshine of clean public opinion must be a slower but still a surer progress. We have the truth, we have decency, we have an overwhelming preponderance of right living upon our side. We are associated with the noblest creation of man, despite all our adversities.

With fortitude we endure and our gain will be the philosophy with which we will confound our traducers and in the determination to go on until we are recognized not merely as a great business and a great and developing art, but as the world's most useful influence for the service of mankind.

The new watchword of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners is almost our inspiration and it comes at a time when it is of the greatest usefulness—"For the Good of All"! "For the Good of All"! Let it be repeated until it has burned its way into the consciousness not only of the industry but of the world. A rallying cry, a message, a proclamation, a principle—an answer, a star, a signal in an Egypt of adversity.

High Spots in the Week's News

THE Famous Players Canadian Corporation takes over Allen Theatres, Ltd., thus acquiring about fifty picture houses in Canada. The action has been approved by the directors of both corporations and now only requires the ratification of the respective shareholders. The amount involved is said to be less than $5,000,000. The Allens will continue to conduct their exchange business.

Why projection photographs are the last pictures that come in. This will be explained to you by E. T. Keyser in the equipment department in this issue of Moving Picture World. Read it and think about it.

Buz-z-z! A bite here and a nip there. Reminds you of Jersey mosquitoes, doesn't it? Just imagine the film industry as a perspiring person intent on his own business, his head encircled by ravenous mosquitoes. One of the insects would be an indigo gent determined on a consumptive Sunday, another would be a captious censor, another a self-styled reformer.

But what's this new cloud of mosquitoes on the horizon? Oh, bright minds at Washington. Some of the Solons want to compel exhibitors and exchanges, and, in fact, all business men, to insure their employes with a proposed "United States Employes' Compensation Commission." Another move by the Government to engage in private enterprise! Buz-z-z!

'Member Sam? He was a colored boy who let many golden opportunities pass. Whenever he realized that another chance for fame, fortune or fun had slipped by, Sam used to say: "Lawsy, if I ain't gone and done it again!"

How many "Sams" are there among New York State exhibitors who, reading next week about what a gr-r-rand and glorious convention it was, will say: "If I ain't gone and done it again."

Last call! It opens Tuesday afternoon, February 14, and ends Thursday with a banquet. The ball is on Wednesday night. Will you be there?

And while we're on the subject, listen to this: The Birmingham, Ala., amusement inspector suppressed a poster of a famous painting because an ordinance prohibits nude figures on theatre advertising. Loving hands then "clothed" the figures with paint, but the poster was again ruled "out" because a second ordinance prohibits the showing of scenes not in a picture and the clothed dancers were no longer typical of the picture. Can you beat it?

Harry M. Warner told a good story last week when he addressed a high school gathering in New York, recalling the days when one of his four brothers and he ran their first picture house in Newcastle, Pa. It seems that chairs were at a premium, so they hit upon the plan of borrowing from the local undertaker, promising to return the chairs whenever needed. The undertaker called for them one evening during a performance, as he had a funeral scheduled, and the theatregoers had to stand during the remainder of the show. Mr. Warner spoke against censorship.

Bulletin

Pathe Exchange, Inc., through its special counsel, Frederick Coudert, with Lewis Innerarity, general counsel for Pathe, brought suit in the New York courts Thursday, February 9, against the New York Motion Picture Censorship Commission for interfering with their news reel.

The act complained of occurred some months ago and the censors had come to the conclusion that they were going to get away with it. Their first surprise came with the filing of this suit.

Censorship Is Debated Before Republicans

Rupert Hughes, Charles Urban, H. J. Shepard and Others Attack Menace Before Large Gathering

CENSORSHIP of moving pictures was discussed before some hundreds of men and women at the National Republican Club on Saturday, February 4, at the meeting presided over by Henry W. Taft, distinguished brother of the former president, and censorship had its own hard time. Rupert Hughes flayed it to ribbons, after Rufus Cole had spoken briefly and Mrs. Clinton B. Smith of the moving picture committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs had described the "Censorship in thirty-four states" (it exists in six) and the 17,000 picture theatres in New York State (there are not 1,700). Joseph Levenson insulted the intelligence of his auditors and the patrons of picture theatres in a long job protecting harangue and H. J. Shepard closed the session with an excellent speech of which more later.

Mr. Hughes followed Mrs. Smith, who laid great stress on the well-worn political wheeze of the female spellbinder's about her being a mother. Those present all having had mothers were willing to concede the point and leave their sacred memories out of the clap-trap of political speaking, but Mrs. Smith needed all her equipment for a background. She sat down vastly pleased with herself, safe in her petticoats.

Hughes Scores

Mr. Hughes confessed frankly that he had never been a mother but admitted that he had been a father, scoring completely when he said: "I am just as concerned about the youth of our country as any father or mother that lives, and if it were in my power would keep them all in purity and in sweetness from the cradle to the grave."

He pointed out that no one in the world did more harm than the man or woman who sought to keep another pure by coercion and force.

In demonstrating that censorship was not a cure he cited the turtle serum man who claimed he could cure cancer. Those who took it died of cancer just the same.

Old Bigotries

He recited the bigotries and the blindnesses which had retarded mankind; how in earlier days of New York, a Roman Catholic priest who sought to pray with prisoners had to go through the city disguised, how they whipped Baptists in Boston for teaching immersion as the right form of baptism, and how workmen in an upstate town were arrested for picking whortleberries on Sunday. Eloquently and with the charming frankness which adds so greatly to his powers as a speaker, he touched on a score of similar examples of the efforts of men to force others into thinking as they do and doing as they do. He asked if any one present felt himself purer or better for the censorship in New York and pointed out that censorship had brought no moral reformation in Pennsylvania.

Mr. Hughes was repeatedly applauded. A college professor who followed him had prepared a set speech which was given to the reporters present, but when Mr. Hughes had done, the professor made a new speech which omitted his typewritten suggestions of pictures for the young.

Mr. Charles Urban's speech on "The Regulation of Moving Pictures" was as follows:

Urban's Speech

"There has been a great deal of talk on this subject, much of which was not to the point. I have never subscribed to that very prevalent view which would have folks believe that the public demands smutty or vulgar pictures. I have been a producer of pictures for more than twenty-five years and I tell you that this is not true. The general public the world over does not demand smutty pictures; on the contrary, it wants the best there is. There is no such thing as a picture being too good for the public. The average taste is clean and it is good and it is wholesome; it is a grave error to say that the public does not appreciate what is artistically fine.

"If the contrary impression holds good, the fault is not the public's; the fault rests within the motion picture industry. It is being gradually corrected but it has not been eliminated. I mean this: many theatre managers in years gone by have underestimated the intelligence of their public. They have projected in their theatres the sort of pictures their own standards dictated, 'playing down' to the level of their understanding of the public taste. The public in consequence has been 'fed-up' on these dubious 'exhibits,' preferring the good to the vulgar. It has been a mighty difficult task to make the exhibitor understand this and only within

And Hammons Said to Us

WE'RE on the way back to prosperity; that is to say some of us are and all of us ought to be. There have been showmen ever since pictures began who didn't make money. Two theatres side by side or across the street from each other; one draws the crowds the other doesn't. Even at the flood tide of war prosperity in the theatres there were houses that starved to death. Pointing out the reasons for these things is part of a trade publication's business if in pointing them out the situation can be helped.

We encountered Earl Hammons, of Educational, the other evening. He just had been to a picture show. We talked.

"How's business?" asked we.

"Good," said Hammons, "and getting better. But what I saw tonight didn't cheer me. I saw another fellow losing money."

"On Broadway?"

"On Broadway. And it was because he was putting on a miserable show. I saw the spectators get up in twos and threes and fives and walk out on him. They were grumbling. I wanted to go also, but I thought I'd see it through. I did. It set me to thinking. With plenty of at least fair pictures in the market he was running an imported picture with a star who was good in one or two big ones, but absolutely awful in the cheap ones that followed. His business hadn't been so good so the manager thought he'd economize and put on a picture that was cheap as dirt (and about as valuable) and save money. What happened? Business still worse and it will take his house a good two weeks with good bills to come back."

"What's your idea?" said we, by way of having him tell some more.

"Just this," Hammons went on. "The only cure for bad business is a better show. If the economies are needed it would be better to fire the ushers and save there, save anywhere but not cut down the entertainment. That's as fatal as rat poison to cure a headache. Double features won't do it. More often they tire an audience. Still oftener they are two weak ones and two wrong ones won't make a right entertainment. It's the bright, quick moving really interesting things that bring 'em in. Rothafel knows. Other men know, but still others of them still don't seem to. It's largely due to short-sighted economy."

"This is worth printing," said we to Hammons.

"Well, if you think so, go ahead," said Hammons to us. A. J.

the last few years has the going been easier.

"You may believe that the condition is still regrettable, and maybe it is, but it is wonderfully better than it used to be. This is true because the managerial personnel of theatres has been greatly changed for the better and because the old time managers who remain have learned to know their public better. The most appreciated portion of the latter-day screen entertainment by the public consists of pictures of the world's happenings, travels and popular subjects. The progressive exhibitor responds to this demand by increasing the proportion of his program with this class of instructive picture.

"The finest example I can point to of the improvement is the recent step taken by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to publish an official reel to be shown in their theatres every week. You will have an opportunity following this luncheon to judge of its character. It is the beginning of a movement to make every theatre an agency of education by this fascinating method. In my long association with the motion picture I know of no more constructive step.

"As to the regulation of motion pictures, I will not say that I am in favor of censorship. In the abstract I believe public patronage is the best form of censorship. But I do believe that as long as a certain type of producer makes and sells some of the films the theatre and the public is today plagued with, that some sort of supervision is necessary.

"To my mind, the most satisfactory form of supervision would be for the federal government to license the distributor; not licence each picture but license the distributor to do business. If a distributor sought to release an objectionable film, the government would then step in and revoke his license. With such a scheme in operation, objectionable films would very quickly disappear from the market because, with only limited distribution which the producer of salacious pictures might attempt by personal effort, it would never pay him to continue his nefarious practice.

"If the theatre persists in showing the obscene picture, apply the police laws which exist, as against indecent photographs, literature or stage plays.

"The question has been asked: 'How about the big producer who has his own distributing organization?' The rule today is that he does not produce the objectionable picture. If he does transgress, however, he should receive the same discouragement.

"Licensing the distributor offers the best solution of this vexing problem. No distributor would take a chance of losing his entire business for the possible profits of an objectionable picture. The result would be that the field would be wide-open for the really worth while pictures. And it would be a far more profitable field than any the industry has known to date."

H. J. Shepard, who read Mr. Urban's sentiments, was called upon by Mr. Taft and he spoke as follows:

"It is a privilege to be here today to participate in the dedication through the medium of motion pictures for the benefit of everybody, the most glorious principle ever conceived—'For the Good of All'—the golden rule.

"Reconstruction depends upon understanding. People must be guided, if not led, into better living, and to a better knowledge of right living, through an understanding of the principle that guides the destiny of the world—the principle of brotherly love, the golden rule.

"Much has been accomplished through the spoken and printed word to drive home the great truth and beauty of life's most earnest message, but print or speech have not proven sufficient.

"An added gift, a divine gift to the world, has been the motion picture. It speaks the universal language and provides the key to the better things of life, for the motion picture was created for the good of all.

"Beauties of nature, of art, wonders of science, the art of literature, communion with the philosophers, with writers, with thinkers—all things for the good of all which are the inheritance of all, stand revealed to all in the motion picture. And the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have taken the first step in the creation of a better understanding in dedicating the screens of the motion picture theatres of the country to the following principles which are issued under the adopted seal 'For the good of all':

" 'The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, commencing on this twenty-ninth day of October, in the year nineteen hundred and twenty-one, realizing the tremendous influence of motion pictures at this time for the re-establishment of the principle of right thinking among our people, dedicate ourselves to the following constructive plan:

" 'First: To encourage in every way possible the production of clean, wholesome and optimistic films.

" 'Second: To take an active interest in the public welfare and co-operate with our community civic and social forces, in helping to maintain a high moral standard.

" 'Third: To utilize our theatres and screens for the purpose of helping our boys and girls to become good citizens.

" 'And last: Appreciating that the very economic foundation of our existence is threatened and humbly desiring to do our part to the full measure in helping to re-establish a healthy condition throughout our country, we will recommend on our screens a possible solution of our present problems—the revivifying of the spirit of 'brotherly love' and the application in our everyday life of the principle of 'the golden rule.'

"Many producers are making a serious and sincere effort to produce only clean and wholesome pictures. I might mention 'The Miracle Man,' 'Over the Hill,' 'Humoresque,' 'Light in the Clearing,' 'Bible Stories,' 'Turn to the Right,' 'The Four Seasons,' 'The Old Nest,' 'The Foolish Age,' 'School Days,' 'Great Statesmen' and 'Great Authors,' 'Penrod' and others which indicate a tendency to lead in production work to better things along the pathway for the good of all.

"The cementing of friendship among all peoples can only be accomplished by bringing home to each individual in the universal way—the motion picture—a clear vision of the better things of life, and this way which is the only way by the motion picture will really lead us all toward the rainbow end of contentment, realizing as we progress along the pathway of successful endeavor, that we are really accomplishing the worth-while things for the good of all."

Mr. Shepard was warmly applauded and "closed the show" in a most satisfactory manner.

Internal Revenue Bureau Decrees Christie Must Pay $11,000 Taxes

(By wire to Moving Picture World)

Washington, D. C., Feb, 9,

THE Internal Revenue Bureau has decided that the Christie Comedies Company shall be required to pay the rental taxes totalling approximately $11,000 which were assessed against it for rental of films on state rights agreements during the period from the enactment of the law to January 1.

Attorneys for the company have announced they will immediately file a claim for refund and are now making arrangements for a conference with the bureau officials which will probably be held next week. The bureau is anxious that the case be settled as it will be used as a precedent for the assessing of similar taxes against a number of other companies. Further prompt action will be sought because under the present law the government will have to pay interest at 6 per cent. per annum on all cases where the government loses.

Attorneys for company believe that the law did not contemplate a tax on producers whose films were not directly exhibited by the producers of the state rights films, and will carry the matter to Commissioner Blair if necessary, in order to secure a decision to that effect.

New Bill Would Force Exhibitors and Exchanges to Insure Employes Through the National Government

THEATRE owners will be compelled to insure their musicians, projectionists, ushers, ticket sellers and collectors and all other employes, and the exchanges their office employes, inspectors, salesmen, shippers and all their other employes, if the bill favorably reported by the House Committee on the District of Columbia is enacted into a law.

This measure establishes a fund of $50,000 to pay initial losses, to be handled by the United States Employes' Compensation Commission. This commission would be empowered to promulgate rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of the proposed law, including the fixing of premium rates. It will be compulsory upon all employers of labor, even of domestic servants, to insure their workers through the government. The securing of such protection through commercial companies would not be deemed to be compliance with the proposed law.

This legislation is being fought by the commercial companies and by the various civic and commercial organizations of Washington as another move on the part of the government to engage in private enterprise. The employers will be compelled to pay the premiums, and the workers will be entitled to compensation only when incapacitated while performing the duties of their employment. In other words, under the proposed legislation this government insurance would not be paid to any of the persons who were injured or killed in the recent theatre disaster in Washington.

A fight on the bill in the House of Representatives is promised by Representative Underhill of Massachusetts, who declares the measure to be socialistic as well as ineffective. He has prepared a substitute measure which he proposes to offer at the proper time. He sought to have his bill adopted by the committee, but failed by a vote of 8 to 4. He also failed in his attempt to have the working capital of the proposed government insurance agency increased from $50,000 to $200,000.

Representative Focht of Pennsylvania and Representative Millspaugh of Missouri are also opposed to the bill, and Representative Zihlman of Maryland attacked several of its provisions. They joined with Mr. Underhill in the endeavor to have his bill, instead of the Fitzgerald bill, recommended for passage by the House.

Pathe Distribution in Australia Taken Over by Alec B. Hellmrich; To Market on Co-operative Basis

ALEC B. HELLMRICH, of Sydney, Australia, has taken over the distribution of the entire product of Pathe in Australasia for a period of three years under an exclusive contract just arranged by Arthur Rousseau, export manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

The terms of the deal make it one of the biggest ever recorded in the foreign film field, and insures the Pathe product greater exploitation than it has ever before received in the Antipodes. The product will be marketed on a co-operative basis through an organization modeled along the lines of the Associated Exhibitors in this country.

Mr. Hellmrich is associated with some of Australia's most prominent film leaders, and already his organization has opened offices in Sydney, Melbourne and Brisbane. A branch exchange will be opened in Auckland, New Zealand, and others will follow soon after Mr. Hellmrich's return to Australia. He is leaving this week for Vancouver on his return journey. He has issued instructions that he is to receive as soon as possible prints of the new Pathe serial, "Hurricane Hutch," starring Charles Hutchison; "The Devil," "Without Benefit of Clergy," "The Riddle: Woman," "What Women Will Do," "The Killer," "The Sage Hen," "The Power Within" and other Pathe features.

Includes Short Subjects

The Hellmrich contract includes the entire Pathe short subject output, and according to Mr. Hellmrich, the short subject cannot help but become established in Australia as firmly as it is in this country, because of the exceptionally high entertainment value he found in these subjects.

Joseph, He Made It a Speech

JOSEPH LEVENSON, the now New York censor feller, made it a speech Saturday, and it was no doubt about it in his mind, now, these here, now, trade papers, y'understand, are a lotta low lifes. Instead of making it a suggestion how this here censor law should be made better and all without throwing the censors out of them there $7,500 jobs, they atchally wanna have the, now, law stopped altogether!

Can yah imagine?

And Joseph Levenson also made it a mean crack at his feller Republicaner, Mr. Will Hayes, for bein' chose fer head of the new industry, wich was like shaking a red rag at a bully.

And Joseph Levenson which was gonna drive that there bum Socialism outta bizness with the movink pitchers (which made outcries of "try and do it") now said it that Germany under Socialism was fer censorship of movink pitchers as well as free love and free speech and free press and all them other ridicalous things wich makes the now Socialism better as it was before he discovered all that.

Maybe.

And Joseph Levenson maybe he'll be fer Hiram Ford for President, when Hiram says it he likes censorship, wich we don't like anymore than we like Hiram Ford.

And Joseph Levenson said it also a lot about votes and proving what the low-life trade papers said it before that Joseph Levenson was a political feller in the day and night time always—yes a ward leader.

And every time Joseph Levenson he's the best friend movink pitchers got now, when he says it a speech for censorship the listeners know its a bum thing for the liberty.

Stanley Employes Form Beneficial Association

A big entertainment consisting of orchestral and vocal selections and high class vaudeville acts were featured during the inauguration of the Stanley Company of America Employees' Beneficial Association, at the Stanley Theatre, Tuesday January 31.

J. Mastbaum, president of the Stanley Company, took occasion to congratulate the employees of the company for the forethought in forming such an organization and said he was proud of the fact that he had been accorded the honor of being the first member.

Benefits will be bestowed in case of sickness, death or accidents.

Future of Motion Pictures Depends on Public's Attitude, Says Harry Warner

BEFORE a large audience of motion picture enthusiasts at the Washington Irving High School, New York, on February 2, Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, expounded on the future of the industry. The lecture was given under the auspices of the Board of Education. Dr. Ernest L. Crandall, director of the Bureau of Visual Instruction, presided, and in introducing Mr. Warner he extolled the beauty and instructive power of motion pictures, citing the Warner production of Gus Edwards' "School Days," featuring Wesley Barry, as an example.

"In order to explain the future of motion pictures," said Mr. Warner, "it is necessary to know the past. At the outset I want to state that the motion picture is one of America's greatest constructive forces. No one can deny the increasing benefits derived from the screen. Today schools and colleges have taken up motion pictures seriously, and are teaching their scholars by the aid of the picture machine.

Undertaker Interrupted

"The rapid advance of motion pictures can be attributed to the fact that they serve as an encyclopedia to the illiterate and to those who have had very little schooling, like myself. I remember the days when my brother and I ran our first picture theatre in Newcastle, Pa. At that time we were confronted by the grave problem of seating our patrons. So my brother hit upon the idea of borrowing the chairs from the local undertaker, with the promise that in the event the undertaker needed the chairs he could have them at any time. The undertaker came one evening during the performance and demanded the chairs for a funeral, and the patrons had to stand up until the show was over.

"In those days we were also up against the problem of getting new pictures regularly. We received a comedy we had already played and sent it back for a new one, but the same comedy came back. We again ran that comedy, and the people came to see it.

"While I am not in favor of censorship the laws must be obeyed. And in carrying out the law I strongly recommend constructive censorship. By that I mean that no person or persons delegated to pass upon a motion picture for public consumption can deliberately cut out that part of the story essential to the whole. For instance, if a murder is committed there is a reason for that murder. In other words, to show the good side of life it is necessary to show the bad. And good always triumphs on the screen.

Public the Judge

"If the future of motion pictures can with reason be predicted, I venture the conviction that the masses and not the chosen few will make it the world's world's greatest medium of communication. The future of motion pictures depends entirely on mass approval. You who sit here tonight must be the judges. Cheap clap-trap melodrama, the sex-appealing story and the rough western subjects must be relegated to the scrap heap. If a picture is indecent the public conscience will rise up in protest and cause the police authorities to stop its exhibition. It is this fact that convinces me that you and others interested in motion pictures should be the judges, and not a few chosen political satellites."

Following Mr. Warner's address the audience was shown "School Days," produced by Harry Rapf and directed by William Nigh.

Boy Scouts to Meet Convention Throng; Chamber of Commerce Lends Helping Hand

AT a joint meeting Monday afternoon of the special committee of the Albany Chamber of Commerce and the members of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association, many important matters were decided in connection with next week's New York State convention of exhibitors in Albany. Under the direction of George D. Elwell, president of the Boy Scout Council, the Boy Scouts of Albany will assist arriving exhibitors at the railroad station as well as at the Hotel Ten Eyck. A delegation of Boy Scouts will also be present at the State Armory on the night of the ball to assist in every possible way.

It was decided Monday afternoon that each star would be introduced by some member of the special committee from the Chamber of Commerce. For instance, Mae Murray, who has personally promised to attend the ball, will be announced from the balcony of the armory by Mr. Elwell, armed with a megaphone, and then escorted across the ballroom floor to a platform, where she will be introduced to the crowds by Charles M. Winchester, former president of the Chamber of Commerce and one of Albany's leading business citizens. The same procedure will be followed with every star, each member of the committee escorting some one star to the platform and introducing her or him to the crowd. This special committee from the Chamber of Commerce will also have the entertainment of all male stars as a part of its duty.

While there will be no seats reserved at the State Armory, about twenty boxes will be constructed along each side for the stars, the various committees, and certain individuals. The Albany club will also throw open its doors in entertaining and housing exhibitors. Automobiles will be provided by the Albany Chamber of Commerce for a sightseeing trip for all women attending the convention. The Albany Chamber of Commerce will also throw open its headquarters to exhibitors and others attending the convention.

O. H. Stacy has been named floor manager for the ball. A crowd of at least 5,000 persons is expected.

The General Electric Company, of Schenectady, will bring to the armory on the night of the ball electrical paraphernalia weighing close to five tons, and which will develop the 500,000,000 candlepower lights, capable of throwing a shaft of light twenty-five miles, and by which a picture can be taken at a distance of three miles. Under the personal direction of C. F. Bateholtz, of the General Electric Company, 400 feet of film will be taken of those attending the ball.

The special committee from the Chamber of Commerce will meet at the Hotel Ten Eyck next Tuesday noon, and will also be present in a body when the convention officially opens at 3 o'clock.

Mr. Winchester announced Monday afternoon that he would furnish the song books for the banquet on Thursday night, February 16. A song leader has been engaged for the occasion, as well as a jazz band of twenty pieces.

P. A. Powers Joins R-C

ARRANGEMENTS have been completed by the R-C Pictures Corporation by which Patrick A. Powers has become financially interested in the organization and its subsidiaries and will occupy the position of managing director, according to an announcement by R. S. Cole, president.

It is the intention of the corporation to immediately enlarge its sphere of operations and to arrange for a still larger plan of production and distribution than has already been announced.

Officials of the corporation declined to comment further upon the acquisition of Mr. Powers and what are his plans of development.

Mr. Powers said that he was busily engaged in mapping out his campaign and had nothing to say at the present time. He may make a statement next week.

Paramount Buys Out Allens in Canada, Paying $5,000,000 for Fifty Theatres

ON February 6 it was publicly stated at Montreal, Canada, that Allen Theatres, Ltd., owning and controlling about fifty picture houses throughout the Dominion, was being taken over by the Famous Players' Canadian Corporation. It was announced that the plan had been approved by the directors of both corporations and the absorption now requires only the ratification of the respective shareholders. This is the greatest theatrical merger in the history of Canada. The deal gives to Famous Players Canadian Corporation, including houses already operated by this corporation, a chain of about eighty modern and high class picture theatres in the Dominion.

The amount involved in the purchase, however, is said to be less than $5,000,000, and funds to cover a cheque for $1,250,000, to constitute the first payment on account, have been deposited in the bank. Only the Canadian theatre interests of the Allens are involved in the merger and a result of the absorption will be to eliminate the keen competition between Allen and Capitol Theatres, the latter having been erected by the Famous Players Canadian Corporation.

Started Fourteen Years Ago

The Allens who, with their father, Ben Allen, started in the picture business about fourteen years ago at Brantford, Ontario, when they opened the first of an extensive chain of store shows, will continue to conduct their exchange business, which includes the distribution of Goldwyn, Educational and other releases through the six offices of the Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., in Canada. They have also held sub-franchises for their respective Allen theatres in Eastern Canada, with the exception of Ottawa, for First National features, but it is understood that these franchises will pass with the theatres to Famous Players Canadian Corporation. The Allens, with W. P. Dewees of Vancouver, also control First National distribution in Western Canada, but this is not affected.

Famous Players Canadian Corporation was organized in Montreal about three years ago with Adolph Zukor of New York as president; George P. Bickel of Toronto, capitalist and mine owner, as vice-president; N. L. Nathanson of Toronto, directing Regal Films and other allied companies, as managing director; J. B. Tudhope, financier and manufacturer of Orillia, Ontario, a Mr. Sheppard of New York, banker, and others as directors.

Jule and J. J. Allen built and opened an Allen Theatre in Cleveland, Ohio, some months ago, and this house was to have been the first of a chain of several Allen theatres in leading cities of the Eastern United States. They also secured an option on theatre property in Leicester Square, London, England, where a large new picture theatre was to have been built, but this option was allowed to lapse, it was reported.

After building a chain of store shows in Ontario years ago, the Allens moved to Calgary, in Western Canada, where they erected what was then considered a magnificent theatre for the presentation of moving pictures exclusively. This was followed by Allen theatres in other cities of the Canadian West. In 1915 the Allens returned to Eastern Canada and established their Canadian headquarters at Toronto, after which they built many large suburban theatres in Toronto and also constructed large houses in many other cities of the East.

Controlled Fifty-five

They acquired existing houses in some cities until, finally, they had fifty-five picture theatres under their control. This total was somewhat reduced during the past year, however, as they disposed of several of the older and apparently less profitable theatres. A theatre-building war developed between the Allens and th Famous Players Canadian Corporation, with the two interests using entirely different methods of financing. The Famous Players company announced several times that the corporation did its own financing, while the Allens floated individual companies for practically all of their theatres and the general public was invited to invest, common stock being offered as a bonus with purchase of preferred shares.

Rotsky Confirms

The news of the absorption was officially confirmed by George Rotsky, managing director for the Allens in Montreal. He said that the deal had been definitely approved by directors of both companies and that the indorsement of the transaction by shareholders of both corporations was assured. No statement has yet been made regarding how the Allen shareholders will be cared for.

Funnier Still

R. B. Wilby, Supervisor of Theatres for Southern Enterprises in the district including Birmingham, writes that in the supression of the famous painting, The Fall of Babylon, used as a 22x28 for the Griffith production of the same name, was not the funniest part of the proceedings.

It will be recalled that the Inspector of Amusements ordered its suppression on the ground that a local ordinance prohibited the showing of nude figures on theatre advertising. In an effort to comply with the law the nudity was painted over. Now go on with the story.

Then the Inspector ordered the picture out of the lobby because a second ordinance prohibits the showing of scenes not in a picture, and the clothed dancers no longer typical of the picture.

As one of the local newspapers put it, the picture could not be shown because it depicted nudity. Can you beat it?

When you have stopped laughing, read further that Wilby adds that the Inspector is not a reformer crank but merely acted in the performance of her duty, and was apparently not in sympathy with the action herself.

Censorship Bill Being Considered in Kentucky

Senator Hiram Brock, of Harlan, on January 30 introduced a bill before the Kentucky Senate for censorship of moving pictures. The Republican leader of the Senate claims there is an urgent need for a Kentucky board of censorship. However, he will have a hard time convincing the rest of the Senate and the House that censors are needed, and the moving picture industry will not be idle. Every legislature has seen such bills introduced and killed.

The board would consist of three members to be appointed by the governor. One of these would be recommended by the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs. Another would be recomended by the Kentucky Educational Association. The third would be a personal choice of the governor. The measure would give a salary of $3,600 a year to each member.

Alhambra Wins Suit

The Alhambra Amusement Company, Inc., of Utica, N. Y., has been awarded a verdict of $17,500 against Associated First National Pictures, Inc., by a jury in the Supreme Court before Justice Louis M. Martin. In bringing a breach of promise action of $40,000, the Utica company alleged that First National repudiated a contract or franchise to deliver exclusive features, and sold the franchise to a competitor. It is expected that an appeal will be taken.

Exhibitors May Demand Lower Rentals When They Gather Next Week in Albany

THE largest convention of its kind in the history of New York State will open in Albany Tuesday afternoon, February 14, when at least 1,600 exhibitors, exchange managers, producers and others associated with the industry, will assemble at the Hotel Ten Eyck and be welcomed by Mayor William S. Hackett. Martin G. Smith of Toledo, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of that state; President Woodhull of the New Jersey exhibitors and the heads from Massachusetts and Vermont will be present.

First Session 2:30 P. M.

The executive committee will hold a meeting at the Hotel Ten Eyck next Monday evening. Tuesday morning will be devoted to the registration of exhibitors, the session being scheduled to open at 2:30 o'clock. Business sessions will be held on Wednesday and Thursday from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m., with an hour's intermission for lunch.

The ball at the State Armory on Wednesday night will be the biggest affair of its kind in Albany's history. Requests for seats have come from as far off as Utica, Poughkeepsie and Binghamton. The ball will start at 8:30 o'clock and will be informal in character.

While the ball is in progress, a motion picture will be taken of the dancers and "close-ups" of persons of prominence. Through the co-operation of the General Electric Company of Schenectady, the film will be rushed there, developed, printed and shown on the following day.

The banquet on Thursday night at the Hotel Ten Eyck will mark the conclusion of the convention. The speakers will include Marcus Loew of New York, Former Governor Martin H. Glynn, Judge Almet F. Jenks, Mayor George R. Lunn, of Schenectady; former Senator J. Henry Walters, of New York; Thaddeus C. Sweet, former speaker of the Assembly; Sydney S. Cohen, former Senator George F. Thompson, of Niagara County, and others.

Many matters of importance will come up for discussion and action. Exhibitors believe that they are paying too much these days for pictures and on many sides assert that they will be obliged to reduce admission prices if they are to break even, and that such is impossible now, through what is termed as the exorbitant price being demanded by the producers and exchanges.

Theatre Attendance Continues to Decline Official Reports Show

That theatrical attendance throughout the country still continues to decline is shown by figures just made public by the Commission of Internal Revenue, comparing the tax receipts for the month of December with those for previous months.

Admission taxes collected in December were three hundred thousand dollars below those of November and more than one and one-half million below those of December, 1920, the figures being: $6,689,702 as compared with $6,995,338 for November, and $8,387,386 for the previous December.

The rental tax collections also show a considerable reduction, being $429,504 in December, against $567,055 in November and $451,374 in the same month of the previous year. The seating tax paid $34,444, as compared with $30,000 in December, 1920.

Lay Theatre Collapse to Work of Inferior Grade

A committee of experts appointed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, composed of Major John C. Gotwals, Corps of Engineers, United States Army; Edward Donn, jr., architect; Charles H. Tompkins, builder; Lester G. Wilson, engineer, and Arthur L. Smith, contractor, will make a thorough inspection of all of the theatres in Washington as a precaution against a repetition of the Knickerbocker disaster.

The committee has completed its investigation of the legitimate houses and is devoting its attention to picture theatres. The building inspector's office is redrafting the entire building code to bring the regulations up to date, eliminating obsolete provisions and inserting new ones to meet new conditions.

The findings of the army and navy engineers presented to the coroner's jury are that "there are evidences of work of an inferior grade for such an important structure." The summary then gives instances, such as the "use of tile walls to carry heavy concentrated loads" and the "inadequate bearings of beams on tile wall, with small bearing plates." It concludes: "The disaster was evidently a direct result of the failure to sufficiently provide for the unusual conditions existing at the juncture of curved Columbia road wall to the stage wall. Had, however, the remaining part of the construction been of a high grade and well braced, failure at point of origin would probably have been localized."

Principal Owner of Knickerbocker Dies

R. W. Bulkley, 57 years old, principal owner of the Knickerbocker Theatre which collapsed in Washington, D. C., died on February 6 at Palm Beach. He was a sufferer from heart disease and physicians say it was worry over the theatre disaster that brought on the attack. He was taken ill after receiving a message the morning following the disaster, telegraphed Washington that he was horrified beyond words and took to his bed. He had a winter home, the Palmetto Plantation, near Palm Beach.

Knight Succeeds Shepard

Charles Urban this week announces H. J. Knight as the manager of the film sales department of Kineto Company of America, Inc. Mr. Knight takes the place of H. J. Shepard who resigned on January 31.

During the past year Mr. Knight has been executive assistant to Mr. Urban.

As manager of the film sales department of Kineto, Mr. Knight will have entire charge of all matters relating to the sales and distribution of the Urban Popular Classics. This includes all subjects published by Kineto. He will also maintain contact with the Motion Pictrue Theatre Owners of America, in the production and release of the Official Urban Movie Chats of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

Don't Be Angry, but—

Don't be angry at the little Levensons. They only nestle in the hair on the flanks of the Beast of censorship, because it is warm and comfortable there and the nourishment is regular.

Naturally they like the Beast and regard him as necessary just as the fleas regard the wild dog, on which they dwell, as essential to the world. You can't expect an unbiased opinion from a flea about his meal ticket.

Therefore don't expect the truth about censorship from the little Levensons, and don't be distressed at the cries of a man in favor of his own $7,500 job.

But the Beast must be chained because he is a menace to liberty and the fleas must jump to another travelling restaurant.

Crowds Storm Church at Taylor Funeral; Police Seek Sands, Butler and Secretary

THE effect of newspaper notoriety in connection with the murder of William Desmond Taylor, which Moving Picture World was the only trade paper to announce last week, was shown at the funeral on February 7. Great crowds stormed the doors of St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral in Los Angeles and nearly forced an entrance despite a battle with the police. Women were overcome in the crush and their cries resounded in the church above the voice of Dean William MacCormack, who was officiating.

Scores of the director's friends attended the services. Many wept. Mabel Normand, who has suffered as much as any from the unfortunate newspaper notoriety, fainted, and Henry Peavey, Taylor's colored valet, became hysterical. Handkerchiefs pressed to eyes were the rule rather than the exception.

According to Detective Sergeant King, who says that the case is solved, Edward F. Sands is charged with the murder. Sands was Taylor's secretary and butler and is missing. He was erroneously reported as found in Carlin, Nev., during the week.

Floral Offerings

The coffin was draped with a British flag, the flag under which Taylor fought during the World War. In the aisle were an old table and a chair which the director had used at the studio. Half of the church was roped off for film people and close friends. The other half was was open to the public.

Floral offerings were sent by Miss Normand, Mary Miles Minter, Gloria Swanson, Rodolph Valentino, Wallace Reid, Thomas Meighan, Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt, Bebe Daniels, Wanda Hawley, Dorothy Dalton, Betty Compson, Douglas MacLean and others. The pallbearers, all personal friends of the director, were William deMille, Frank Beal, George Melford, Arthur Hoyt, James Young, Frank Lloyd, David Hartford and Charles Eyton. There was an honorary guard of pallbearers from the Overseas Club.

Miss Normand Exonerated

E. M. Asher has received the following telegram from the Mack Sennett Comedies Corporation:

"You have no doubt heard of the unfortunate death of W. D. Taylor and the equally unfortunate manner in which Mabel Normand's name was first connected with it in the papers. Fact of case is Mr. Taylor had promised Miss Normand that he would secure for her a certain book. He 'phoned her at the studio that the novel had arrived and was awaiting her pleasure. Immediately after her day's work at the studio, and just before dinner, she drove to Mr. Taylor's residence and picked up the book. Mr. Taylor bade her goodbye at the machine and Miss Normand was driven home immediately by her chauffeur. They were the last ones known to have seen him alive. That is the way her name became connected with the case. Miss Normand has the sympathy of the entire country through the accidental connection of her name with this regrettable tragedy, for she has been completely exonerated of any connection with it. If your local papers have not published facts of case as set forth above, please do your utmost to correct any false impressions."

William Desmond Taylor was born in Mallows, County Cork, Ireland, in 1877. He prepared at Clifton College, England, for the profession of army engineer, but later joined Charles Hawtrey's company in Manchester as an actor. Then he played juvenile roles in the United States with Fanny Davenport and stock leads in Boston, Chicago and Seattle.

Taylor made several trips to the Klondike, participating in the big gold rush over the long trail to Nome. On his return he managed a large farm near Harper, Kansas. He then went back to engineering work and built the terminal of the Grand Trunk Railway at Prince Rupert, B. C., and a large paper mill at Swanson Bay, B. C.

Nine years ago he entered the film business with Kay-Bee and later directed Balboa's first picture, "The High Hand." He was afterwards associated with various producing companies, including Reliance, Vitagraph, Morosco, Fox and Bosworth, Inc. In 1914 he joined the Lasky forces and has since directed some of the most famous Paramount stars.

In 1918 he joined the Royal Flying Corps in Canada, being commissioned a captain. At the end of the war he returned to Hollywood and produced "Huckleberry Finn," one of his greatest works. At the time of his death he had just completed "The Green Temptation," starring Betty Compson, and was preparing for a new Paramount, "The Ordeal," with Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt.

Short Sleeper Dies

John Berger, doorman at the Strand in Muncie for many years, fell dead Sunday afternoon while taking tickets.

Berger, known to every man, woman and child in Muncie, was noted for the fact that for many years he had slept only four hours a night.

Like Edison, he believed that four hours of sound sleep is all the normal individual requires.

He was 68 years old.

Would Destroy Fight Films

An amendment to the law governing the showing of prize fight motion pictures was proposed on February 6 in Congress by Representative Hoch of Kansas. It provides for the destruction of films of this character sent through the mails or found in interstate commerce. Dr. Wilbur S. Crafts, director of the International Reform Bureau, is backing the bill.

Industry Threatened with $90,000,000 Tax

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 9.—Advices at the capital today are to the effect that the chances are good for the doubling of the present theatre admission taxes in an effort to pay the soldier bonus. Representative Frear of Wisconsin is advocating and fighting for such a tax, while several other members of the Ways and Means Committee are opposing this move on the ground that amusements are already taxed enough.

Confidential advices to Moving Picture World's Washington office are to the effect that the industry will have to get busy at once or find itself saddled with this additional tax amounting to $90,000,000. Consideration of the tax began Thursday morning, February 9.

FIGURES have been said not to lie. They also have been said not to do anything else. Frequently they are our only guide. Take for instance the government figures and contrast them with the claims that the distributors as well as the exhibitors have been losing money. The official sums show that distributors grossed in 1921 a total of $118,054,635 as against $107,450,252.20 in 1920, or a gross gain of $1,604,382.80.

The figures show on the other hand the exhibitors totaled $82,633,093.85 in their admission taxes as against $86,994,031 in the previous year, a falling off of $4,360,919.15.

The distributor figures show a great total return but the number of pictures is not given and the story is incomplete. The admission tax story is absolutely complete. It shows that no matter how many pictures were run or what was paid for them, they didn't yield as much as they did the year before.

There is so far as is known no record of amounts paid available and in fact the industry itself never knew where it stood until the government reports were made as a result of taxation. One thing it is certain, we have been called out of turn in being described as the fifth industry in the United States. If these government figures are correct we stand somewhere about fourteenth. The statisticians will now have the chance of enjoying themselves.

Censorship, the ugly son of ignorance and bigotry, is at war against human liberty, seeking to re-enslave the minds of men and we of the picture business are only the first to feel the slipping back into the abyss from which humanity through the centuries has slowly fought its way.

Later all the world will know it for what it is and then the battles and the shedding of blood will begin all over again in the new wars for human freedom. If the awakening comes sooner and censorship is destroyed before it becomes all powerful so much the better for the progress of the world.

Watterson Rothacker dropped in from California during the week and this gives us a good excuse for saying something we have had in mind for a long time. This something is that Watterson Rothacker is the living, breathing example of human confidence, confidence in his work, confidence in his industry and confidence, tempered with modesty, in himself. He stands as a delightful anti-gloom. He sets a standard. We would that men in all lines of our business were moved to study him and to emulate his fine example. There are many other things we might say of Watterson Rothacker, but we have no desire to embarrass a modest man. He breathes the spirit of cheer without effervescing. It's a wonderful thing. Watch him, study him. It will help you.

Real Entertainment

HAVING read another stupid review by the industry's champion in that class we concluded that "Boomerang Bill" must be a good picture and that Lionel Barrymore must be splendid in it. Sporting gentlemen have a phrase about "coppering" bets, and we have found that every time Bonehead says a picture is over-acted or wrong in some particular, it turns out to be both intelligent and interesting. The Cosmopolitan production, directed by Tom Terriss and distributed by Famous-Players-Lasky, proved to be the sort of entertainment that will satisfy audiences. At the Rivoli Theatre the spectators applauded. Mr. Barrymore, always the splendid artist, gave an inspired performance. In the excellent cast Marguerite Marsh was especially satisfactory.

The story is rich in pathos and its moral reaction is inevitable. Its titles are not so good as its acting, and its art titles are as beautiful as they are far removed from the subject. The first title tells of urchins stealing apples and the art figure that goes with it looks like a handsome blacksmith. If he was an urchin it was a long time ago. Others were equally jarring, but the story is there, and the great dramatic power of Barrymore is there. The story and the star are above all things human and appealing.

Few pictures of the seamy side of life have had a greater sustained interest and "Boomerang Bill" takes its place with the season's real dramas.

Selig's Third Big Jungle Production Packs a Punch Every Few Hundred Feet

By Epes Winthrop Sargent

Long ago the old-fashioned serial with the big punch at the end of every instalment went into the discard. Even the punch to a reel is no longer the fashion. They must come faster than that if they are to be regarded as up to date, but the third Selig jungle serial takes no dust from any production. It beats a tattoo of punches and one starts where the other leaves off.

And the punches are not all lion and tiger episodes, though these are freely used for effect. There are other big smashes and the story, which has been done by Agnes Johnston and Frank Dazey, possesses more of the mental, or true punch than most of the serials, where the actions have to move so swiftly that there is little time for the intrusion of a plot. There is a real plot to this and the story is largely the unfolding of the plot action and not a series of disconnected incidents strung together. It is a worthy successor to "The Lost City" and "Miracles of the Jungle."

The trick in selling this will be to make them realize that this is a little better than the usual lion serial, without promising so much that they will have no room left for surprise. You need to tell that this is really better, but sell on the punches and let the story be a thing they find out.

As in most serials, the major portion of the fight is to get them in the first time. If you can arrange it, it would be a good plan to book the first episode to run a second time when the second instalment comes. This is not essential, but it will help not a little, for you will probably find that the word of mouth advertising will bring many to the second episode who did not attend the first.

The first episode will get the crowd, for it has plenty of vivid action and gives promise of becoming better. It starts off with a kidnapping, via balloon, which lands the heroine in the interior of Africa, where she narrowly escapes becoming a vicitim to the sacred lions and is elected a goddess instead. There is the counterplot on the part of the deposed witch doctor that winds up with the goddess in the clutches of Central African Moloch.

Show them that much and they will want more, so concentrate upon getting them in for the first reel. Use plenty of the stock 24-sheets, and make some of them into cutouts. With a little painting you can get two cutouts, a group of three figures, which need no painting, and the idol, which will have to have the lettering touched out. Have this done, by all means, for that idol will mean ticket sales. Put flasher sockets into the eyeholes and set in red or green lamps.

Use plenty of lion cutouts from the paper, but don't use them in such a way as to create the impression that the lions are the only feature. Call it a wild animal serial if you think that will get the money, but it will be better to call it a jungle story, and sell on the story of the tiny child who becomes the goddess to a savage Central African tribe.

And don't overlook "Mike" and "Mary" who are the dramatic actors of the simian family. Play them up strongly. Play them up almost as strongly as Elinor Field and Trueman Van Dyke. Ask your patrons if they ever saw a chimpanzee shoot a leopard. Tell them you do not want to spoil the surprise by telling all about it, but that these two apes can act; really act.

You can sell the smaller children on the wild animal stuff, but try to sell more than that, since you have more to sell. It might even pay to start off with a teaser campaign on Mike and Mary, to put them over before you start to advertise the serial by title.

Ask your readers if they ever saw Mike and Mary act, and try and create the impression that these are humans, without actually saying so. Then work in to the statement that they are a wonderfully clever pair of apes.

Go on to sell stars with the same enthusiasm, lest your patrons think you have only a couple of monkey actors. Sell them in the general idea of the story.

Even the city neighborhood houses can stage a jungle parade and get a lot out of it. If you have the serial for other than a Saturday showing have the parade the Saturday before the opening, giving tickets for the opening chapter to all participants.

Advertise for entries of dens of wild beasts, with special prizes for the best decorated cages. Tell them to look in the lobby if they do not get the idea.

In the lobby show a couple of cages with a pair of cats in one and a small dog in the other. Mount these on express wagons or home-made wheels. Label the cats: "Ferocious Numidian lions, 2 of the 470 wild animals used in the new Selig thriller, The Jungle Goddess."

Call the dog an African "beastorius, whose poisonous fangs are more deadly than the adder of the Nile" or any similar fantastic billing. You might offer a special prize for the best caption over any of the entered dens.

Give out the tickets at the end of the parade and have this end at the lobby. If you can arrange it with the police to park the entries, have the parade end about twenty minutes before the showing time and after the prizes are awarded tell the children they can go inside and see the current film bill, which will give you the use of the ballyhoo all the afternoon.

If you give the children sufficient notice—about ten days, they will produce a really good stunt for you at small cost, for the prizes need not be of great intrinsic value so long as they are things that children will desire.

But do not sell just the first episode. Sell the lot. You have no end of big punches, the crash over the cataract, the abandonment of a ship to its cargo of caged beasts, the fight in the airplane, and the like. Pick them all out of the press book and split your advertisement into two parts. Label these, "what you will see this week" and "Things you will see in the chapters to come" Sell it all, for the situations hold up well past the first episode and the ending of the fifth part is the best of the first five; which cannot always be said for a serial.

And hook to the previous Selig production and give as much emphasis to Selig as to the Export and Import Film Company, which handles the release. Tell something of the Selig zoo, the largest privately owned collection of wild animals in America and probably in the world.

THREE OF THE LEADING PLAYERS IN "THE JUNGLE GODDESS" AND A SPECTACULAR AERIAL THRILL

On the left are Mike and Mary with Elinor Field, the pretty star of the newest Selig wild-animal thriller. The Chimps play really important parts in this spectacle, and play as surely as the human actors in the large cast. The scene on the right is a fight in the air between the leads and a pair of leopards, and marks one of the many big punches, but by no means the most important. An Export and Import Film Company feature

BEGINNING A NEW SERVICE

WITH this issue Moving Picture World presents a new and regular service feature for exhibitor readers in its special Rotogravure Section, providing the news of the coming productions in the manner natural to our business—with pictures.

The success of this form of presentation in our Christmas number encouraged us to go a step farther and offer for the first time in trade publications a picture service that is really worthy.

We are already advised by exhibitors of their intention to utilize it for lobby display, and we cordially recommend it for this purpose.

It will continue as a regular weekly feature of Moving Picture World, and we indulge the hope that our readers will find in it a pleasant solution of many problems.

Seeing, you know, is believing, and the stills tell the story to the trained showman.

Wesley Barry Takes Chicago by Storm As "Penrod" Begins Indefinite Run

Several thousand freckles came from Los Angeles to Chicago last week, took the city by storm and won the hearts of all the residents. They were on the face of "Freckles" Barry, the youthful star of "Penrod," Marshall Neilan's picturization of Booth Tarkington's book. This First National attraction began an indefinite run at the new Balaban & Katz Chicago Theatre, and Barry appeared in an original sketch in connection with the showing.

"Freckles" upset some traditions in the Windy city. Seldom has a personage received such a reception or such honors as were bestowed on him. He marched at the head of a parade with a band 'n everything; his pictures were in the windows of all the important downtown stores; he was feted and dined, and he was received ceremoniously by the acting mayor of the city.

Chicagoans heard and saw "Penrod" everywhere. They jammed the Chicago Theatre to see the film and "Freckles," himself. And the newspaper reviewers fell over themselves to tell the world how good a picture "Penrod" is.

Chicago was the first stop in a trans-continental tour Barry is making. He will make personal appearances in many of the large cities where the picture is being shown. He is traveling in the uniform of a cadet of the United States Junior Naval Reserve, and that organization is co-operating in the triumphal tour.

Upon his arrival at the Sante Fe depot in Chicago, "Freckles" was officially welcomed by Capt. Edward E. Evers, in command of the Chicago Junior Naval Reserve; the Olivet Institute Boys' Band; some two hundred cadets in uniform, and a detachment of mounted police.

A battery of twenty cameramen, including the news weeklies, filmed "Freckles" as he alighted from the train. Amid the blare of the band "Freckles" marched off at the head of the parade. Thousands formed on the line of march to see the film youngster, and at the City Hall traffic was completely blocked until a husky policeman put "Freckles" upon his shoulders and carried him up to the mayor's office.

There arc lamps, provided by the Rothacker Laboratory, lighted the entire office for the benefit of the news weekly and still cameramen. Mayor Cryer's message from Los Angeles, together with the basket of oranges from the mother orange tree, were presented to Acting Mayor Samuel A. Ettelson in the mayor's private office, after "Freckles" was introduced by Col. William Nelson Pelouze, prominent Chicagoan and brother-in-law of the mayor.

A Busy Boy

Immediately after his arrival "Freckles" fond himself booked for dinners, department stores, newspaper offices, etc. During the presentation of "Penrod" at the Chicago Theatres, "Freckles" conducted departments in three different newspapers. For the Evening Journal he became editor of the Journal's children department; for the Daily News he became chief mogul of a children's scenario contest, and for the Chicago Herald-Examiner he conducted a California orange recipe contest in which the housewives, among the readers of this publication, took part. Thus three of Chicago's largest papers carried news and straight photographs of Wesley, hooking-up with "Penrod" every day for the first week he played the Balaban & Katz Chicago Theatre.

Stories of the reception and parade were carried on the front pages of all the afternoon papers with three and four column photo layouts. The fact that film star never before headed a parade in Chicago staged especially in his or her honor, made the story all the more desirable to the newspaper editors.

Twelve of the largest department stores carried window displays of the Grosset & Dunlap book of "Penrod" with a special Wesley Barry color jacket and illustrated with stills of the picture. Large cut outs and advertising matter were prepared by the publishers for this tie-up. Department stores carried advertising in the papers crediting the picture and "Freckles."

Exploitation Stunts

A tie-up was effected with the Ad-Photo-Scope Projecting Machine Company. This machine, a trifle larger than a phonograph and which ran off 200 feet of "Penrod" cut-outs, was placed in the lobby of the Hotel Sherman during the entire week, at which time the auto show conventionists were stopping here. This machine was kept running from 9 a. m. until midnight and advertised the theatre as well as the picture.

Among the other exploitation stunts employed were a tie-up with The Fair, a department store, which distributed 50,000 autographed photos of "Freckles," advertising the picture and the book; a tie-up with a "Penrod" song published by Frank Egan, of the Little Theatre, Los Angeles, which was exploited during the second week of the run; the sale of a Wesley Barry doll in the department stores, and the advertising of a line of "Penrod" boys' clothing in the large shops.

Barry likewise was the guest of honor at a luncheon tendered to him by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., at the Hotel Sherman, and on this occasion he made his first-after-dinner speech. The invited guests were representatives of the trade and local press.

An amusing incident occurred when, several minutes after the guests had been seated and "Freckles" had not as yet put in his appearance, Pete Smith entered with a freckle-faced youngster. They quietly took their seats at the head of the table, and when the guests discovered them they gave the youth a big reception. Several minutes later Harry Marx, managing-director of the Chicago Theatre, entered with another freckle-faced youngster. The two youths were seated together and the newspaper folks rubbed their eyes. Close investigation revealed the fact that the first youth who entered and who was applauded as Wesley was Elmer Balaban, young son of Barney Balaban, and the second freckle-faced boy to enter was really "Freckles" himself.

FIRST NATIONAL'S DINNER TO WESLEY BARRY, SHERMAN HOTEL, CHICAGO

C. Laemmle Tells of Crusoe Serial

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has issued a frank statement in regard to the forthcoming Universal serial, "The Adventures of Robinson Crusoe," as it affects his former serial star, Eddie Polo.

Since Universal and Polo have parted company Mr. Laemmle says that Polo has decided to make a picturization of Robinson Crusoe under another name and sell it on the State Right market.

Universal has selected Harry Myers to star in its Robinson Crusoe serial.

"I feel," said Mr. Laemmle, "that it is only just and proper that I notify the serial exhibitors of the United States that there probably will be two Crusoe serials on the market. I make this statement without any prejudice. Those who like Eddie Polo will be glad to know it, and those who have come to appreciate the modern requirements of serial stories such as Universal is now producing after months of research, the careful reconstruction of period properties, and the kind of exploitation for which Universal is noted, will also be glad to have this knowledge which I am imparting."

In Paramount Film

"Val of Paradise," in which Jack Holt and Bebe Daniels are to co-star for Paramount pictures, under the direction of Joseph Henabery, will have in the cast besides the two stars, Charles Ogle, Alec B. Francis, Jack Carlyle, Fred Huntly and one other in an important feminine role, yet to be named.

Arranges for a Nine Picture Run

A nine-picture run with playdates beginning February 16 was closed by the Hodkinson branch in Detroit last week with Charles Garfield, managing director of the Orpheum Theatre in Flint, Mich.

The productions include "The Light in the Clearing," "Fifty Candles," "Cameron of the Royal Mounted," "God's Crucible," "The Mysterious Rider,' "At the Sign of the Jack O'Lantern," "The Grey Dawn," "Heart's Haven" and "French Heels.' The list will be played out at the rate of one and two pictures a week.

Marion Davies, herself, might have walked upon the stage of the Brooklyn Mark-Strand so successful was Managing-Director Edward L. Hyman in the selection of an opera singer to impersonate her in a prologue number preceding the showing of "The Bride's Play," Cosmopolitan says.

Mr. Hyman so faithfully reproduced one of the stirring scenes from "The Bride's Play" in stage realism that the transition from stage prologue to film action was achieved without loss of coherence or interruption, it is stated.

Vitagraph Acquires American Rights to "The Sheik's Wife"

Vitagraph has acquired the American rights to one of the biggest French motion picture productions ever made, according to an announcement this week by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph. This is "The Sheik's Wife," the scenes of which were filmed in Algeria.

This is the first outside independent production which Vitagraph has contracted to distribute, although, it is said, its executives have looked at hundreds of film possibilities, domestic and foreign, with a view of marketing through Vitagraph Exchanges if, in the opinion of Vitagraph officials, they were good enough and big enough.

Paramount Leading Man to Sing Next Season at Metropolitan

Michael Bohnen, giant hero of the big UFA series of productions to be released by Paramount in March, has signed a contract with the Metropolitan Opera Company to sing leading baritone roles at the Metropolitan Opera House.

In the Paramount film, "The Mistress of the World," Bohnen's part, the male lead, is that of an adventurous young Danish consul who accompanies the heroine upon her quest for the lost treasure of the Queen of Sheba.

"Peacock Alley" Playing to Big Houses Everywhere, Metro Says

Metro says Mae Murray's newest picture, "Peacock Alley," is proving the box office salvation of exhibitors all over the country, according to reports sent by the showmen themselves to Metro Pictures' Corporation, which is releasing the production.

Among exhibitors who send commendatory reports are: Jack Kuhn, Cleveland, Stillman Theatre; Joseph W. Trunk, Youngstown, Ohio, Dome Theatre; C. E. Whiteherst, Century Theatre, Baltimore; Jack Greenbaum, Mansfield, Ohio; E. H. Gerstle, manager, Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio; Paul De Mordaunt, manager, Rialto Theatre, Blackfoot, Idaho.

"Island Wives," a March Release

"Island Wives," Vitagraph's production of life in the South Seas, in which Corinne Griffith has the star role, has assumed its final form. The release date is fixed for early in March.

Associated Exhibitors' Picture Is Slated for Release March 5

The announcement that Florence Vidor would appear in a series of feature productions for Associated Exhibitors has been supplemented by a statement from that company to the effect that her first feature, entitled "Woman Wake Up," has been scheduled for release March 5.

Charles Meredith and Louis Calborn support Florence Vidor, the star of the production.

"The Net" Finished

"Fair Lady," second of the Rex Beach film productions for United Artists' Corporation, and an adaptation of Mr. Beach's novel, "The Net," has been completed, and is now in the final stages of assembling and titling.

Records Show Larger Bookings

Century salesmen have compiled records, which, it is said, show that there have been more new Century comedy bookings during the last three months than ever before.

Business Takes Great Leap and Prints Are at Premium During Fox Anniversary Week

More than 20,000 exhibitors in twelve nations combined their resources and efforts in the celebration of the eighteenth anniversary of the entrance of William Fox into the motion picture industry and the ninth birthday of Fox Film Corporation, during the week of January 29 to February 4, inclusive.

At the New York offices of the company hundreds of letters, wires, cablegrams and radio messages have been received from every section of the globe reporting the excellence of business experienced by the great numbers of showmen presenting Fox features in their theatres. The unanimously favorable reports indicate the great extent of the prosperity which the anniversary week brought to the cinema houses in the United States, England, France, Canada, China, Siam, South America, Scandinavia, the Dutch East Indies the principalities of the Federated Malay States, Australia and the Straits Settlement.

Emptied Vaults

According to reports from various distributing exchanges throughout the world, Fox Anniversary Week celebration emptied the vaults of prints. The solid seven-day run of Fox features was as widespread in foreign countries as it was in America, including Canada. In China and Siam, where more than 100 theatres regularly show Fox productions, the exhibitors ran 100 per cent. during the birthday week. Similar reports arrive from Java and the Straits Settlement and the Dutch East Indies.

Unusual advertising and exploitation campaigns preceded the week of Fox presentations in all the theatres. In many instances exhibitors with small neighborhood houses who have indulged in very limited advertising appropriations in the past, gave unusual importance to their display space in newspapers and other advertising media during the week.

Big Increase

Mayors in several cities in the United States opened the week of Fox pictures with an address to the theatre audience. Boy Scout patrols in many cities gave parades in collaboration with the theatre proprietors and attracted the attention of entire populations. Newspapers throughout the world devoted front-page space to the story of Mr. Fox's rapid rise to the pre-eminence he now enjoys.

Business in the United States averaged about 250 per cent. above normal, according to early statistics compiled by the Fox contract department. That the figure will rise above even this great showing is indicated by a number of regional reports that have trailed in at the last moment and were not included in the original count.

Critics Praise "Silent Call"

Duplicating its success at the Capitol Theatre in New York City, where it won unanimous praise of all the newspaper critics, "The Silent Call," an H. O. Davis production, directed by Lawrence Trimble and released by First National, won similar acclaim from the reviewers of San Francisco during its presentation at the California Theatre, First National reports. The papers that praised it were The Call, The Daily News, The Bulletin, The Examiner and The Chronicle.

Issues Booklet

Among the special accessories for Paramount's Tenth Anniversary Month is a 24-page booklet, "The Story of 200,000 Miles of Entertainment," which is planned for free distribution to theatre patrons.

The press run of the booklet is five million copies, and they may be had by exhibitors free of charge in any quantity desired as long as they last. They will be available at all Paramount Exchanges within the next few days.

New Pope Shown in Pathe Film On Day Election Was Announced

The foresight of Pathe News gave screen patrons in the United States as far West as Chicago, motion pictures of the new Pope, Pius XI, on the same day that the cables announced his election.

Cardinal Ratti, by instructions from the editor of Pathe News, had been filmed, with other eligibles for the Papal throne, even though newspaper cables from Rome speculating on the outcome of balloting for Benedict's successor gave him scant attention. Cardinal Ratti had risen from the position of a parish priest in three years and had been admitted to the College of Cardinals only a few months previously. However, in Roman clerical circles his name was mentioned with significance from the moment that the late Pope was known to have breathed his last. Aware of this, the Pathe News staff at Rome, headed by Cameraman Alberini, was at special pains to secure pictures of Cardinal Ratti and speed them to America.

Hugo Ballin Presents "Luxury Tax"; Painter-Poet Combination Newest Film

By SIG SCHLAGER
(Special to Moving Picture World)

The exhibitors of America know about the men who have made the motion picture screen a medium for financial gain; but little of the few men who have put money considerations in the background and struggled to gain recognition on the basis of exhibitor co-operation and betterment of the industry.

Two such men—Hugo Ballin and George Sidney Hellman—well-known in art and literary circles of this and other countries, one a creator in the producing sphere, the other in the business aspect, of four progressive steps in the history of motion picture-making—deserve an appreciative hearing and co-operation from exhibitors of the United States and Canada.

They did not ask each other: "How much money can we make in producing pictures?" when they launched Hugo Ballin Productions, Inc. Their keynote was: "We are willing to take financial risks if they mean the betterment of the industry."

But we fellows in the field—advertising men, publicity promoters, salesmen—know you cannot afford "uplift" unless it also brings "upkeep." You cannot maintain your theatres except through revenue acquired through popular pictures.

Ballin and Hellman knew that, too, but determined not to compromise with their ideals excepting insofar as they felt called upon by considerations of benefits to the exhibitors. And so, with "Pagan Love," "East Lynne," "The Journey's End" and "Jane Eyre" they've given art with the commercial consideration secondary.

Nationally, exhibitors responded in sufficient volume to assure them they were on the right track. They confronted those who said the exhibitor was a "lowbrow," "unappreciative" and "cheap" with reports on their four pictures. The newspaper and magazine critics of the country backed them up with tremendous publicity and acclaim.

Now to the point: the painter-poet combination—Ballin and Hellman—has produced the latest of its series of five productions to date with the equation reversed. Instead of art first and revenue second, it reads: box office plus art. The title of that production is "The Luxury Tax."

No adjectives go with this picture to the exhibitors of America, no praise of "genius," no expressions of the "charm" of the feminine featured player or of the "gorgeous" photography or the "well-knit" story.

The exhibitor has been designated by Ballin and Hellman as the judge, and the newspaper critics will view after the exhibitor, not before.

Hugo Ballin has had a hand in the preparation for exhibition of more than eighty productions gotten out by a big distributing company; but long before he was a painter, he knew stage settings and dramatic effects, having begun his career at the age of fourteen as assistant in a theatre. His ability in rendering both commercial and beautiful certain features which in the original seemed to lack these elements, was recognized to the extent of a flattering offer for the renewal of his contract. But Ballin has come to the turning point. He wanted to go "on his own" and to create rather than re-create.

So Mr. Ballin came to New York, met the "literary" Hellman who had made a snug fortune in the art business, and was the possessor of a French government decoration received during the World War, and whose financial, social and professional connections in New York were of the best.

They discused ways and means and entered the industry with the motto "not millions, but reasonable profit." Their principles were based on the belief that the object of the photodrama is to give pleasure, and summarized in the following: (1) Wholesome, interesting stories. (2) Appreciative treatment without wasteful extravagance for which the exhibitor has to pay. (3) No playing up to the "highbrow" class but the presentation of interesting subjects in such novel and beautiful ways as to encourage people to finer appreciations. (4) A realization of the necessity of always seeking to keep the treasury in such condition as to make possible the continuation of their plans, and to use the surplus, even at financial risk, for the betterment of the industry.

When "Pagan Love" and "East Lynne" had proved their commercial value they made what has been acclaimed as one of the "ten best plays of the year," the subtitleless "The Journey's End." Is it worth while to encourage the sincerely progresive artist to take chances with the exhibitor, to work for his success at the same time he works out his mission to the people? Yes!

Ballin and Hellman preferred to start on the proverbial "shoestring," and during one of the "toughest" years in the history of motion pictures survived, and Hugo Ballin Productions stands today as one of the most successful as well as one of the most important motion picture units producing independently.

Now comes "The Luxury Tax"—the box office mission of the painter-poet business partnership—to reward exhibitors for their support in helping the Ballin-Hellman duo reach the public with their message.

Every exhibitor will want to see "The Luxury Tax" before the fellow across the street buys it and will be attracted as every man and woman will be attracted, by the effective national exploitation campaign already launched in support of this production."

Fox Has Booked Vitagraph Film

The William Fox circuit has booked the Vitagraph special, "Flower of the North," at the Academy of Music and the Crotona in New York City; the Albemarle in Brooklyn; the Jamaica in Jamaica and the Terminal in Newark.

Pyramid Describes Fina ncing Plan and Pictures Scheduled for Year

Pyramid Pictures, Inc., in announcing its plans for bigger and better pictures whereby the American exhibitor can be given a maximum product at the lowest possible rental, unfolded its plans for financing which differs from usual methods of securing money with which to build super dramas.

Walter E. Greene, president of Pyramid Pictures and a man noted for his executive ability, had in mind in forming this company a plan whereby Pyramid's super product might be jointly owned and the profit jointly and equitably divided.

Pyramid Pictures has given its promise to the trade world to release sixteen super attractions during the current year. "My Old Kentucky Home," written by Anthony Paul Kelly and directed by Ray C. Smallwood, and in which Monte Blue, Arthur Carew, Matthew Betz, Frank Currier, Billy Quirk, Sigrid Holmquist, Lucy Fox and Julia Swayne Gordon appeared, is now ready for distribution.

Production work has commenced on the second and third pictures. Paul M. Potter's international success, "The Queen of the Moulin Rouge," is the second offering and is being directed by Smallwood. Betty Blythe has been signed by Pyramid to star in this third super attraction which will be directed by Kenneth Webb. Anna Katherine Greene's best seller, "The Mayor's Wife," will be Miss Blythe's next starring vehicle. The Whitman Bennett Studios in Yonkers have been taken over by Pyramid for this production.

Under the Pyramid plan of finace, the American exhibitor is said to be asured of independent product because it eliminates control of any set or financial interests. Under the group of Pyramid plan "syndicate units" are sold to the general public at $100 each. Unit holders share in the distribution of profit after production costs and distributing charges have been deducted. There are no profits under the syndicate plan divided between Pyramid Pictures and the syndicate holders until at least 100 cents on the dollar have been repaid to the investor. Then the profits are divided 50 per cent. to the investor who made the picture possible by loaning his money on a short time contract, and 50 per cent. to Pyramid Pictures for its ability and organization.

Herz Acquires More Pictures

As substantiation of his statement that there are many worthwhile foreign pictures, Vladimir Herz, president of the Herz Film Corporation of New York, points to the acquisitions of his company, among them the entire output of the Sascha Film Company of Prague and Vienna. "Good and Evil," one of these, has been warmly received by the public, the distribution being handled by Wid Gunning, Inc.

Two others that have vindicated Mr. Herz's judgment are "Dorothy's Confession," a mystery drama scheduled for national distribution, and "The Love Slave," now being state-righted. Lucy Doraine stars in all three. The company now promises a sensation in a coming Sascha super-feature, "The Prince and the Pauper," and a spectacle, "Sodom and Gomorrah." The films will reach this country in a few weeks.

Makes Picture of Three Stories

Goldwyn has obtained a novelty for picture patrons in "Women Love Diamonds," by Carey Wilson and Harry C. Vance. It will be a photoplay made of three separate stories, but each bound together through their relation to a certain jewelry shop in the window of which is a pure white, two-karat diamond priced at $1,000.

The first two stories were written by Carey Wilson, author of "Captain Blackbird," which Goldwyn recently purchased, and the third by Harry C. Vance. All three stories revolve about the $1,000 diamond displayed in the window of the jewelry store.

At Criterion

"Torchy's Frameup," a "Torchy" Comedy released by Educational, was shown at the Criterion Theatre, New York, beginning February 5. It was booked for an indefinite run. This follows a two-week run of Educational's "Ride on a Runaway Train," which was shown at the Criterion for its fourth Broadway engagement.

Short Subject Program Draws Week's Only Big Crowd at Town Theatre

Exhibitors who think that only the biggest first-run theatres in the biggest cities dare to abandon the long feature for a short subject program should meet S. E. Baxley, manager of the Star Theatre in Accadia, Fla., a little town near Tampa.

"Today is a bad, cold day and it takes a real attraction to get the people out here in cold weather and I have a good house tonight for the first time this week."

This is Mr. Baxley's summary of the result of running a well selected short subject program. The letter written by Mr. Baxley to the manager of Educational's branch at Atlanta, Ga., in which he tells of the success of his venture, should be of great interest to all exhibitors who hesitate to run programs made up entirely of short subjects for fear that the lack of a long feature will injure their patronage.

"Today," writes Mr. Baxley, "I am playing a mixed short reel program consisting of your two-reel Selig-Rork 'The Northern Trail,' 'Kinograms' and a Larry Semon Comedy, 'The Bell Hop,' and it may interest you to know how well pleased my patrons are with 'The Northern Trail.'

"When the picture is over, they sigh because there is not more of the feature, and it certaintly has made a hit. People calling up over the phone wanting to know just what the feature is that we have on, because there is so much talk about it. It has created a lot of word-of-mouth advertising for itself.

"Some of the exhibitors say they only make money on big specials. I will take pictures like 'The Northern Trail' to make my money on. Today is a bad, cold day and it takes a real attraction to get the people out here in cold weather and I have a good house tonight, for the first time this week."

New York Papers All Praise Metro's "Turn to the Right"

Praise from every New York newspaper dramatic critic followed the presentation, January 23, at the Lyric Theatre, by John Golden and Marcus Loew, of Rex Ingram's "Turn to the Right," Metro's picturized version of Winchell Smith's and John E. Hazzard's big Broadway success of a few seasons ago.

"Go to see it," advised Frank Vreeland, of the New York Herald. The Evening Mail charges Rex Ingram with another success, when it says: "Ingram has done it again. . . . A new phase of this splendid director's ability." "One couldn't ask," remarks Don Allen in the Evening World, "for a better evening's entertainment than 'Turn to the Right.'"

R. W. Potter, of the Globe, says: "We . . . predict a prosperous future for this picture." Harriette Underhill, of the New York Tribune, said: "Abound in beauty." The Morning Telegraph's reviewer, Helen Rockwell, declares: "The film is everything that one would expect it to be, and even a trifle more." Alan Dale, in the New York American, found that "it is altogether impossible to resist the lure of this film."

The New York Journal pointed out: "Rex Ingram hurdled a baffling obstacle in converting a splendid legitimate play into an equally splendid movie." The Evening Telegram: "There was not one fault to find with it from beginning to end." "Turn to the Right" is, according to the Sun's critic, "The old magic in its new and unaccustomed dress." The World said: " . . . Bigger heart tugs and more wholesome fun in it than it was possible to supply in the limited space of our regular stage." "Excellent" is the Time's classification of the picture.

Pathe Announces Its Releases for the Week of February 19

Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that an exceptional list of subjects have been scheduled for release the week of February 19, headed by the next Pathe Playlet, "Hunting the Hawk," starring William Courtenay and Marguerite Snow. The offering is now in three reels, re-edited from its original five-reel feature length.

"The Island of Terror" is the eighth episode of "White Eagle," the new Pathe serial, starring Ruth Roland. "The Big Idea" is the current re-issued one-reel comedy, starring Harold Lloyd. "Rich Man, Poor Man" is the title of the latest Hal Roach comedy. "The Dog and the Thief" is the current animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables," produced by Fables Pictures, Inc., and created by Cartoonist Paul Terry.

Pathe Review, No. 143, presents a series of entertaining subjects. Pathe News Nos. 16 and 17 present the latest current events of the world, photographed by the staff of Pathe cameramen. Topics of the Day, No. 8, throws the wit and humor of the world on the screen.

Fairbanks to Do Another Picture

Douglas Fairbanks will not film the further adventures of Zorro for his next offering as had been previously announced. Instead he will do for United Artists' release, a costume feature dealing with the period of the Crusades and the early history of England, and called, temporarily, "The Spirit of Chivalry."

"Come on Over" Is Listed for St. Patrick's Day

Because of its Irish humor, Goldwyn has decided that the week within which falls St. Patrick's day was just the right time for playing Rupert Hughes' latest photoplay, "Come On Over." This is the picture tentatively known as "Sent for Out" and "Darlin'." The final title is "Come On Over."

Alfred Green directed. Colleen Moore and Ralph Graves have the featured roles of the Irish lad who comes to this country, leaving his sweetheart behind, and the girl who follows him over before he is able to send for her.

Optimism Is Graphic Film 1922 Keynote

Optimism for 1922 is reflected in the activity of Ivan Abramson, of Graphic Film Corporation, this week announced the release of "The Forbidden Love" late this month. An elaborate press book and exploitation campaign on this production is being planned by the enterprising Weshner-Davidson Agency, which has just completed the campaign book for "The Fountain of Youth" based on "Faust."

The Graphic releases for 1922 include "The Wrong Woman," "A Bride's Confession," "The Hypocrites," "The Fountain of Youth" and "Forbidden Love."

School Official Commends Films

After using a considerable number of single reel pictures released by Educational in the public schools of Detroit, Edwin H. Reeder, supervisor of visual instruction in the schools of that city, has pronounced them of distinct merit and great value, saying "I am glad to commend them."

The pictures shown to the school children included releases from the Hudson's Bay Travel Series, Robert C. Bruce Scenics Beautiful, Chester Screenics and pedagogical subjects.

Three Films for Paramount Release

Paramount announces the simultaneous release of three productions, the George Melford production, "Moran of the Lady Letty," with Dorothy Dalton; the Cosmopolitan production, "Boomerang Bill," with Lionel Barrymore, and May McAvoy in the Realart picture, "A Homespun Vamp," all scheduled for release through Famous Players-Lasky Exchanges on February 12.

Five Ray Films for Open Market

As the result of new arrangements between the officials of First National Pictures and the Charles Ray organization the five remaining Ray pictures to be delivered to First National, according to the star's contract, will be released upon an open market basis.

Third Goldwyn Group Release; Also "Theodora," But as Special

Goldwyn's third group of fifth year pictures is now ready for release. There are seven productions in the group—"The Glorious Fool," "The Man With Two Mothers," "His Back Against the Wall," "Watch Your Step," "Doubling for Romeo," "The Wall Flower" and "Grand Larceny.' Goldwyn's Italian spectacle, "Theodora" is released with the group but is not included in it, as it is a special.

The group includes three pictures of commanding importance in "Grand Larceny," "The Wall Flower" and "Doubling for Romeo." The first is a society drama written by Albert Payson Terhune and directed by Wallace Worsley, with Claire Windsor and Elliott Dexter.

"The Wall Flower" is another Rupert Hughes study of everyday American life with its mingling of tragedy and comedy. The author directed and Colleen Moore is featured.

"Doubling for Romeo," starring Will Rogers, is extravaganza. Starting out as a Western comedy, it soon travels to Hollywood and becomes a burlesque on the "movies" and those who make them; it then retrogrades several centuries to the Venice of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" and stages a humorous take-off on that great tragedy. Clarence G. Badger directed. In the cast are Sylvia Breamer and Sydney Ainsworth.

Three Christies in Production Under Alternating Star System

Three new Christie Comedies for early Educational release provide a good illustration of Christie's system of alternating stars and directors, thus bringing the work of the producer to the highest standard, it is said.

Two of these pictures have just been completed, while the third is nearing completion. Bobby Vernon, whose latest is "Hokus Pokus," is working in "'Tis the Bull." Under the direction of Harold Beaudine, this comedy is being produced in considerable magnitude, with a complete Mexican bull ring, Mexican streets, etc.

The two other pictures will be released before "'Tis the Bull." They are "'Twas Ever Thus," featuring Viora Daniel, and "Oh, Promise Me!" with Neal Burns

"'Twas Ever Thus," which Al Christie personally directed, marks the rise of Miss Daniel to regular comedy stardom. "Oh, Promise Me!" is a comedy of American Legion boys and contains a wealth of humor in the mixup into which Burns gets himself with a chic Parisienne and the American girl whom he wants most, both expecting to be married to him on the same day. Several surprises are offered in this film, such as "shots" of the real Marshall Foch and of several thousand American soldiers and sailors on parade.

Pathe Signs for Three Year Output of Hal Roach Studios

Pathe announces the signing of a new contract with Hal Roach covering the entire product of the Hal Roach studios, including weekly comedy releases for a period of three years. This arrangement, completed during the producer's recent visit to New York, Pathe regards as making their position in the screen comedy field impregnable. The new long term contract with Harold Lloyd, already announced, enables Pathe to continue to provide exhibitors with comedy features which have become established as fully the equal in drawing power to any other class of features obtainable, it is said. The superior program value of the Hal Roach comedies, featuring "Snub" Pollard and other of the Roach comedies put out by Pathe has long been conceded by exhibitors everywhere, it is stated. The new contract, it is explained, will still further encourage artistic and profitable evolution of this important line of attractions.

In addition to the list of Pollard releases called for by the terms of the new contract, there will be one-reelers featuring Paul Parrott—a type of laugh-making production.

Exhibitors Send in Praise of Lloyd's "Sailor Made Man"

Harold Lloyd's newest comedy production, "A Sailor-Made Man," seems to be arousing much comment among the exhibitors, who declare that it is the outstanding achievement of Lloyd's career, Associated Exhibitors says. Among exhibitors who praise it highly are Eddie Zorn, of the Temple Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, and Guy D. Hazelton, of the Rialto Theatre, Miscoula, Montana. The latter says:

"Personally, I think 'A Sailor-Made Man' the best comedy yet produced, and the box office receipts demonstrated that the patrons thought the same."

Picture Praised

That Abel Gance's production, "I Accuse," released by United Artists' Corporation, made a hit with his patrons, is the report of M. W. McFarland, manager of the Gem Theatre, Golden, Colo.

Prominent Players in Marion Davies New Production

John Dooley has been added to the cast of "When Knighthood Was In Flower" to be filmed by Cosmopolitan Productions, starring Marion Davies. Mr. Dooley will play the part of Will Somers, the jester of the court of Henry VIII.

Miss Davies' part is that of Princess Mary Tudor and the other characters will be interpreted as follows:

Charles Brandon, by Forrest Stanley; King Henry VIII, by Lyn Harding, who came over from England for that purpose; Queen Catherine, Theresa Maxwell Conover; Duke of Buckingham, Pedro de Cordoba; Lady Jane, Ruth Shepley; Caskoden, Ernest Glendinning; Wolsey, Arthur Forrest; Adam Judson, Charles Gerard; Louis XII, William Norris; Duke de Longueville, Macey Harlan, and Captain Bradhurst, George Nash.

The production will be directed by Robert G. Vignola.

Schade Praises Rockett Pictures

The Al. and Ray Rockett production, "Handle with Care," which was released by Associated Exhibitors on January 22, is declared by J. E. Storey, sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, to be meeting with the approval of exhibitors wherever it is shown. In support of his statement, Mr. Storey quotes a recent letter from George J. Schade, of the Schade Theatre of Sandusky, Ohio, which reads in part:

"'Handle With Care,' which I have just had the pleasure of screening, is, to my mind, one of the most pleasing screen productions it has ever been my good fortune to run across."

Griffith Film Drawing Crowds

D. W. Griffith's "Orphans of the Storm," is not only attracting big metropolitan and out-of-town crowds during its second month at the Apollo Theatre, New York City, but is also said to be daily drawing capacity audiences at the Forrest Theatre, Philadelphia; the Tremont, Boston; the Pitt, Pittsburgh; the Hanna, Cleveland; the Great Northern, Chicago, and the Shubert St. Charles, New Orleans.

Keeping in Personal Touch

By FRITZ TIDDEN

WE have been harping on the subject of daily paper moving picture reviews, particularly from the Remingtons of Quinn Martin, of the New York World; Alison Smith, of the Globe, and Harriet Underhill, of the Tribune. We have reiterated that we shared the same feeling most people have regarding the laughable struggles these persons go through in an attempt to be too killing for anything, at the expense of moving pictures and under the editors' false impression that they were creating something that the readers enjoy.

Ninety-nine per cent. of the reviews from these people are written with the appearance of always having in plain view the slogan: "Rather be funny than fair." Their employers and they do not seem to realize that such a thing is possible as being funny and fair, which is the real mark of cleverness. The result is cheapness. Most of the other papers have accomplished the not unusual feat of employing men and women who are the antithesis of cheap. They are clever, often brilliant and always fair.

No later than Monday the most recent exhibition of this evidence of unfairness took place. At the Rivoli Theatre this week is exhibited the most remarkable one-reel subject that the screen has ever reflected, a thing of such rare beauty, imaginativeness and sheer artistry in phantasy that it is the talk of the town.

The picture is "The Enchanted City," contributed to the screen by Warren A. Newcombe. Did two of this trio, Alison Smith and Quinn Martin, find anything about which to write on the film? They did not. Why? Simply because they have frequently displayed they are absolutely anesthetic to real beauty, and the picture does not furnish material for the customary wise cracks. Of what the third member of the choice trio, Miss Underhill, did regarding "The Enchanted City," we confess we know nothing. Since the peculiar ravings concerning the entertainment value and charm, "Foolish Wives" and von Stroheim had for the film reviewer we, in justifiable self defense, and in company with many other persons, have denied ourselves the pleasure of reading Tribune "criticisms." It was the last straw.

If these reviewers think certain pictures are bad there is no reason why they should not slam the daylights out of them. But the least they can do for their employers and small coterie of readers is to be fair about it and be fair concerning pictures that are good.

The alibi for neglecting "The Enchanted City," with which these reviewers will attempt to disarm their critics, is that they did not have time to pay attention to "short subjects." They had time, however, to return to their machines and go into the most awful labors in attempting to be the life of the party with their obviously struggled-for wise cracks.

The one compensation for the humorous exhibitions is that none of these reviewers has for one moment gained the respect of any of their readers, save perhaps a small group of sycophants, and that no one is influenced by their opinions of films. There might be some excuse for that even, if their stuff made interesting reading. Their one danger lies in the fact that a few out of town newspapers, under a false impression of their importance, have at scattered intervals made the error of quoting them.

A number of producers have been heard to grumble recently anent the bad business some feature films are doing at Broadway houses at high prices. When they kick they mention everything but the right reasons. We wonder if they have stopped to realize the great patience of the public, for instance. Have they ever stopped to think that the public knows that sooner or later it can see the same film, often surrounded with a better show, at one-fourth the price at a recognized moving picture theatre?

There are a number of persons who think they have to be among the first to see anything. But they are not enough to bolster up a long run at increased rates. The others have learned to wait. Patiently. And in waiting they are not denying themselves anything, as they can witness something nearly as good and sometimes better at the moving picture theatres.

Of course there are exceptions to the rule. There are some films that are worthy of Broadway runs at high prices. And this proves itself by the fact that in almost every instance these pictures do good business. But there have recently been too many films that are nothing but good program pictures placed for extended engagements with all the éclat of a "Four Horsemen." The result has been what might be called a "burning" of the public. It has been taught that it has paid too many good $2.20's for an $.85 picture. This fact has reacted on the pictures that really deserve the former price. The theatregoer hesitates in wondering if the much heralded film is just another case of a glorified but nevertheless good program picture. And the minute he hesitates he decides to go somewhere else.

The Passing Week in Review

DOES the public want melodrama? Box office statistics for the past seven weeks say they do. A consensus of opinion of critics of the country supports the contention that melodramatic offerings satisfy the prevalent appetite of the public for entertainment, be it a legitimate stage offering or cinematic production. Statistics compiled during the past five weeks show a heavy demand for this type of pictures by exhibitors, who, after all, furnish the connecting link between producer and public.

THIS sudden revival of the melodrama, dignified and attired in modern theatrical clothing, is not confined alone to the silver sheet. This fact was disclosed this week by George M. Cohan, one of the foremost American producers and the man whose productions seem to most appeal to the fickle public. The writer had heard that G. M., immediately after making up his mind to resume production here, had sought the co-operation of dramatic editors in this country. He did not confine this co-operative appeal to New York, for Cohan is too good a showman to deceive himself into believing that what Broadway enjoys the entire nation will patronize. Bitter experience has taught him otherwise.

BUT, to get back to the original topic, G. M. did not trust his own judgment. He left it to the readers of American newspapers to say what they wanted or did not want. And when the result was made known to Mr. Cohan some three weeks ago, it developed that eight out of every ten readers, who expressed themselves on the subject, favored productions with melodramatic leanings. With this fact in mind, George M. Cohan is planning the production of two melodramas.

THERE will be those who will say that what the public enjoys on the stage it will not enjoy when reflected on the screen. There is something in that. But the question involved is not one of public taste, but of adaptation. The public dictates in this business much as it dictates in anything in which it is an interested party. The producer who does not permit himself to lose track of this fact you will find is usually the fellow who is making the most money.

IT has been reported that the market will be flooded with melodramatic offerings and there are many film men who pessimistically refer to this report. They contend that it will "kill everything." We don't think so. We are confident that the public knows what it wants and can distinguish between good and bad entertainment. We have sufficient confidence in the showmanship of exhibitors in this country to believe that they will discourage the production of "junk" by not booking such stuff.

THE box office furnishes concrete facts. An exhibitor may do a good business on "junk" camouflaged by some popular and attractive box office title at his opening, but after that the picture stands on its merit. If it furnishes that which the public pays for—entertainment—it will survive, but if it is "junk" it will sooner or later flop. The public knows what it wants. Make no mistake of that. The "wishing" days are over. It is the business of the showmen to ascertain what these wants are. The next step is to fill them. Any other course is fatal.

FROM a financial standpoint, the current week will go down in State Rights history as one of superlative importance. New York housed more than a score of buyers, who emphasized their confidence in the future of the independent markt by acquiring big box office productions. Deals transacted during the past week represented an aggregate investment on the part of buyers of more than one million dollars. In these times such an investment is considered reckless, but, in this instance, it typifies the confidence the State Rights exchangeman has in the future of this field. He is gamely sticking by his guns, fighting industriously, determined to win—and there is no doubt that with the attitude displayed this week victory will soon be at hand.

THE Federated convention put aside many discouraging rumors. Contrary to reports circulated prior to the sessions at Hotel Astor, the organization seems to be stronger than ever. The convention solved many perplexing questions. The one big setback of the organization seemed to have been a financial one, but this, too, was corrected through an increase in the capitalization. Federated represents some of the keenest and livest State Rights exchangemen in the business. Its possibilities are great. If it will only conduct itself for 12 months each year as it did during its convention there is no doubt that it will loom forth into an organization that will be welcomed not only by the independents themselves, but by exhibitors as well. The future of Federated will depend entirely upon the organization. Utilization of the business tactics that so brilliantly marked the five-day New York convention in the daily operation of the organization will guarantee success. The third year of Federated promises much, but, we repeat, it remains for the organization itself to say just what part it will play in the independent market.

WE take this means of announcing a series of special articles on the State Rights market in general by Joe Lee, one of the shrewdest and best informed showmen in the business. The first article will be published next week. Mr. Lee has exploited and materially assisted in the successful distribution and exhibition of some of the biggest money-makers offered in the State Rights market. His observations are not only instructive, but entertaining as well and written in a showman's vein for showmen whether they are in the producing, distributing or exhibiting end of the business. We consider ourselves particularly fortunate in having acquired this series for publication in this department.

NOW is the opportune time for local exchangemen to encourage a more extensive exploitation of State Rights production. The real showman will need no coaxing. Your exploitation man can do much to encourage exploitation of your pictures. The average exhibitor will come into an exchange, book a picture, ask for a dozen one sheets, seek two or three pictures in a set of photos and, perhaps, a slide. Few ask for 24-sheets. Many ask for press books, but few make use of their contents. Consequently, it is up to you, Mr. Exchangeman, to convince your patrons of the importance of exploitation. And there is no better time in which to start this exploitation campaign than the present. Give your exhibitors service as well as film.

I. P. D. A. to Present Arguments in Tax Case—Special Get-Together on Feb. 15

BULLETIN!

The verdict of the Internal Revenue Commission in the Christie sales tax case that the latter firm will have to pay the 5 per cent. tax and then petition for a refund of the money will in no way interfere with the plans of procedure of the Independent Producers and Distributors Association, said Harry G. Kosch. In all probability the fight will be carried to the Federal courts.

Following a special meeting of the Independent Producers and Distributors Association in New York on Wednesday night, February 8, a committee of three, including Joe Brandt, President of the association; Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, President of Arrow Film Corporation, and Nathan Hirsh, President of Aywon Film Corporation, was elected for the purpose of solidly organizing all independents in the fight against the five per cent. film sales tax. This committee also will co-operate with Harry G. Kosch, the enterprising counsel of the I. P. D. A. Mr. Kosch will go to Washington on Monday for the purpose of presenting arguments in the case at a preliminary hearing before the Internal Revenue Commission.

Mr. Kosch was in Washington last week and obtained leave to intervene in the Internal Revenue Commission - Christie Comedies Corporation tax case. He has been extremely busy during the past week preparing statistics to support the contention of I. P. D. A. that imposition of such an unreasonable or any sort of sales tax, for that matter, is suicidal and would bankrupt the entire State rights market.

The important contention of the I. P. D. A., according to Mr. Kosch, is that imposition of such a tax is unconstitutional and not consistent with the provisions or motive that prompted passage of the bill by Congress. While there is a feeling of optimism prevailing in State rights circles, the I. P. D. A. is leaving no stone unturned, and Mr. Kosch and the committee elected this week will devote all their time during the next two weeks in an effort to show the Internal Revenue Commission the error of its way.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, while directly affected by the interpretation placed on the matter by the Internal Revenue Commission, is still noncommittal and no statement has been made from that organization. Why this attitude has been taken by this organization is more than the trade in general can understand, although it is a known fact thatt the N. A. M. P. I. representative in Washington, Jack Connolly, has kept well-posted with the situation and is rendering splendid service in Washington, having been instrumental in bringng about a number of important meetings.

Another meeting of the Independent Producers and Distributors Association will be held on Wednesday night, February 15, at Hotel Astor in New York. At this meeting all producers and distributors whether or not they are members of the I. P. D. A. are invited to be on hand for a general discussion of the situation. It is planned as a consequence of this meeting to take joint action on the tax question. Mr. Kosch will at this session submit a report.

"Innocent Cheat" Will Open in Los Angeles on March 12

Arrow Film Corporation's new six reel special, "The Innocent Cheat," will be given a premier presentation in the big 2,000 seat California Theatre, Los Angeles, of which Fred A. Miller is manager, on March 12. Among the notables from the Arrow organization who will attend the showing are Ben Wilson, Roy Stewart and Kathleen Kirkham. An unusual prologue will be arranged for the presentation and some of the more prominent Los Angeles city officials as well as representative players from the great film colonies will occupy boxes.

Arrow officials say the opening will be an event in the California city.

"The Innocent Cheat" is termed a moral drama. J. Grubb Alexander wrote the story and it was directed by Ben Wilson.

"Ten Nights" Sales Start Ball Rolling in a Record-Breaking Week of Big State Right Sales

The week just closed was the biggest State Rights sales week recorded for the past 15 months. More big sales were recorded this week than had been closed at any one time before in the history of the market. The deals represented an aggregate outlay by local buyers of approximately one million dollars. Those figures are conservative as the Enterprise Distributing Corporation of Atlanta, Ga., alone negotiated deals on pictures that represented an expenditure of $200,000.

Arrow Film Corporation and Equity Pictures Corporation reaped the greatest financial harvest this week from sales, for both reported important sales on their big specials. Dr. W. T. Shallenberger, president of Arrow, sold the Blazed Trail Productions, Inc., miracle picture, "Ten Nights In A Barroom" to Palmore & Homand of Baltimore, for Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia, to Standard Film Exchange, through A. Weiland, for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and to Progress Features of Los Angeles and San Francisco for California, Nevada, Arizona and Hawaiian Islands.

Equity sold its masterpiece, "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" to Ben Amsterdam of Masterpiece, Philadelphia; Sam Grand of Federated, Boston, and Sam Zierler of Commonwealth, New York. There are two other sales that were expected to be closed this week. The Arrow and Equity sales alone aggregated more than $350,000.

What it contends to be the biggest southern State Rights deal negotiated in this field was reported this week by the Enterprise Distributing Corporation of Atlanta, Ga., in announcing the acquisition of product amounting to $200,000 for distribution in the fifteen states in which that firm operates. The company maintains offices in Atlanta, Dallas, Oklahoma City, New Orleans, Kansas City, Omaha, and St. Louis. The deal involves more than 50 States Rights feature productions, divided into series, and starring many well-known western favorite productions, divided into series, and starring many well-known western favorites. Picture Situation in Europe Improves—American Exporters Enthuse Over Future Prospects

The foreign film situation is improving, according to those who are in a position to know. Particularly bright are the prospects for a happier and more lucrative future in England, where booking congestion has discouraged buying. However, with this phase of the situation there gradually clearing American exporters look forward to a busier spring. In Germany, with international problems gradually solving themselves, there is hope for a general boom, while cables from Italy agree that with an adjustment of the financial market there Italian film men are inclined to maximize their activities.

Foreign rights on "The Heart of the North," the George H. Davis-Joe Brandt feature of the Canadian Northwest, co-starring Roy Stewart and Louise Lovely, have been sold for Australia, New Zealand and Tasmania. The deal was closed by Select Pictures Corporation. John Carlson, representative of British distributing interests, has closed for the United iKngdom and continental European rights.

Stoll Film Company, Ltd., whose "Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," a series of 15 two-reel complete detective stories, is being State righted in this country by Alexander Film Corporation, this week announced the "Further Adventures of Sherlock Holmes," series of two-reelers. The titles follow: "Charles Augustus Milverton," "The Abbey Grange," "The Norwood Builder," "The Reigate Squires," "The Naval Treaty," "The Second Stain," "The Red Circle," "The Six Napoleons," "Black Peter," "The Bruce Parkington Plans," "The Boscombe Valley Mystery," "The Musgrave Ritual," "The Golden Ritual" and "The Greek Interpreter."

J. Stuart Blackton, now producing in England, at a recent get-together of trade pressmen of London, directed the attention of the writers to two slips in his production, "Passersby." Not only were the metropolitan police shown wearing brightly polished buttons on their waterproof coats, but the automobile used in the feature obviously bore the New York registration sign. "Passersby" has London for its locale.

"The Tony Sarg Almanac" has taken England by storm, judging from reports that have come to this country from abroad.

Max Weiss, of Artclass Pictures Corporation, who has been touring Europe for the past few months, returned to New York this week. He will shortly leave for Florida with his brother, Louis, who has just recovered from an illness that has confined him to his bed for the past few days.

"The Love of Lust," an Itallan production, has been acquired for distribution in this country by Regal Pictures Corporation of which David G. Fischer is President. This company has acquired four foreign pictures for American State rights distribution, two of which were made in Italy.

The Unione Cinematografica Italiana, acording to reliable reports, is angling with two big American producers for the distribution of two spectacles recently completed by It.

"Monte Cristo," the Fox feature produced in Italy, had its American premier at Fox's Theatre in Springfield, Mass., two weeks ago. The production received commendatory reviews in The Springfield Union, Springfield Republican and Springfield News.

A serial on "The Three Musketeers," made in England, will shortly be distributed in the independent market in this country. The serial is now being booked in England.

While Jury Is staging trade shows on the Elmo Lincoln serial produced by Welss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation, "Adventures of Tarzan," that episode play will not be released for public showings until the latter part of the summer, according to a despatch from England.

The motion picture industry is improving rapidly, according to reports that have come to New York from Rome. There seems to be a particularly encouraging increase in production in southern Italy.

Pearl Whlte, who salls for Europe late this week, won the motion picture star popularity contest in Switzerland. The contest was conducted by a string of Swiss papers. And, by the way, 'tis rumored that the clever Pearl will appear in a popular revue in Paris.

An Itallan version of "The Two Orphans" is now being produced In Rome.

Franklyn Farnum Completes Three for Goldstone; Will Make More—Coast News

Franklyn Farnum is now making productions under the supervision of Phil Goldstone, who is one of the most active independent producers on the coast right now. Farnum is working on a series of six features. Three of this series already have been completed. They are entitled, "Prince of the West," "Smiling Jim" and "When East Comes West." The remaining three will be produced at the Phil Goldstone studios.

Plans for independent production for this year are elaborate insofar as Mr. Goldstone is concerned, for in addition to the Franklyn Farnum series he is also working on a series starring Richard Talmadge. Jack Dillon, who directed Mary Pickford in "Suds," has directed Talmadge in "The Cub Reporter," the current release. It is understood that there will be six Talmadge pictures released annually.

Progress Features Exchange of this city and Los Angeles have acquired the California distribution rights to Arrow Film Corporation's "Ten Nights In A Barroom," starring John Lowell. The feature replaced Universal's "Foolish Wives" at the Rivoli in San Francisco and arrangements are now pending here for a showing of the Arrow picture at Grauman's Theatre in this city. Much interest is prevalent here over the picture. Reports reaching here and touching on the showing of the picture in Eastern cities have been particularly enthusiastic.

Edwin Carewe is one of the busiest independents in this section. With his all-star cast lined up for future productions, which Affiliated Distributors will handle, Mr. Carewe is busily completing production plans. The first picture of the Edwin Carewe series will be known as "Hell's Highway," according to reliable reports circulated here.

The murder of William D. Taylor here last week caused quite a stir among independent producers, who have from time to time found it necessary to cal l upon him for the loan of players.

Inasmuch as many local film folks are interested In "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" having financed the production, much enthusiasm followed receipt of reports here that the picture had received a good reception at the Criterion in New York. Local folks are particularly enthusiastic over this picture and if ever a picture carried the good wishes of the film colony, "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" most assuredly has them.

Director Milburn Morante of the Morante Producing Company, using the old Balboa studio at Long Beach, is back on location here following a trip to Hot Springs, where he took his company to get exteriors for his next picture. George Chesboro is being featured in these pictures.

Curran-Herbst Productions, Inc., has completed its first "Big Boy" Williams feature, entitled, "Blaze Away," by Bruce Boteler and directed by W. Hughes Curran. Molly Malone is leading woman.

The annual rush to be the first to complete a snow picture finds Irving Cummings the winner. On Wednesday afternoon at Keene's Camp he "shot" the last scene of "The Man From Hell's River," the James Oliver Curwood story he has been making. The cast includes Eva Novak, Wallace Beery, Robert Klein, Lillian West and Frank Whitson.

Sideburns, which will make him a very old-fashioned young man, will be worn by Lester Cuneo in the early sequences of his next story in which he enacts the role of a physician. Henry McCarty and Leo Meehan are at work on the continuity. Charles W. Mack will supervise the production.

After five unsuccessful starts, each one of which had the weather to blame, Dick Hatton of Prairie Productions left for Tenecula this week with his company to begin work on "Four Hearts." The cast includes Dick Hatton, Carmon Arsolle, Lucille du Bois, Mrs. Nell Spaugh, Ed Fitzharris, Jack Waltermeyer, Virginla Fair, Barney Furey and Bud Geary.

Albert Rogell of the Cactus Features has been working at Burbank all week on scenes for "Fingers of Fate," co-starring Maryon Aye and "Bob" Reeves. The cast includes Lew Meehan, George Lasley and W. G. Whitehorse. Victor Hugo Halperin wrote the story.

Louis Burston, producer of the David Butler pictures, is arranging to send a cameraman, and possibly several players to New York to take slum scenes to be used In the next David Butler picture.

Federated Exchanges Increase Capital; Negotiate for Features and a Serial

The third annual convention of the franchise-holders of Federated Film Exchanges of America concluded on Monday, February 6, following one of the busiest series of motion picture meetings held within the walls of the Hotel Astor. Numerous rumors concerning the status of Federated, as well as the acquisition of pictures, were set aside. The meeting was the most enthusiastic, most largely attended, and the most important held since the organization of the independent exchangemen.

Most important of the accomplishments was that resultant from an increase in the capitalization of the corporation. Just what this increase amounts to has not been made known, and the specific figures were closely guarded by the franchise-holders. It was also decided to expand operations. Negotiations have been opened with a number of independent producers for the distribution of their product. This includes features and short subjects.

The convention opened on Thursday, February 2, and the following officers were re-elected for the ensuing year:

President—J. L. Friedman, of Celebrated Players' Film Corporation, Chicago.

Vice President—Harry Charnas, of Federated Film Exchange, Cleveland.

Secretary—J. Eugene Pearce, of Pearce Exchange, New Orleans.

Treasurer—Samuel V. Grand, of Federated Film Exchange, Boston.

The fact developed, too, that while Federated will not distribute Warner Brothers' animal serial, tentatively entitled, "Shadows of the Jungle," which the latter will soon State right, that organization had opened negotiations for the distribution of the Export & Import Film Corporation's serial, "The Jungle Goddess."

Negotiations also have been opened for the distribution of a series of five reel features now being made on the coast. Two of these features are already completed and ready for release. A number of new short subjects also will be acquired.

That the future is bright and that the State rights market is on the uplift were facts enthusiastically referred to by members. One of these said:

"At no time in the history of the State rights field has the market been in such a healthy condition. While there are yet a number of spots that must be thoroughly cleansed the fact remains that the market is increasing in popularity not only among exhibitors, but equally so among independent producers, who have come to realize that the State rights market offers them a maximum return on their investment."

The convention was a business one throughout, there being little or no time left for the delegates in which to resort to play. In fact, the sessions started early and lasted late. While it had originally been intended that the convention close on Saturday, there were so many problems to be solved that the sessions were prolonged through Sunday and Monday.

Fischer Closes N. E. on New Production

A deal has been consummated between David G. Fischer of the Regal-Fischer Corporation, New York, and G. M. A. Fecke of the Motion Picture Corporation, Boston.

An agreement has been entered into whereby Mr. Fecke will release "Persecution" the first of the Regal-Fischer product throughout the six New England States. It is also the intention that Mr. Fecke will handle all subsequent output of the Regal-Fischer Corporation.

Plans are now under way whereby a special sales force will be "put on" to concentrate in securing the maximum business on all productions that are to be released in the New England territory under the direct supervision of the home office.

Hoxie's Next

"The Desert Bride Groom" is the title tentatively chosen of the next Arrow-Ben Wilson releases starring Jack Hoxie. Roy Clements is the director of this picture.

Sidelights on Federated Confab

Federated is now handling the following product: C. L. Chester "Snookie" Comedies, Monty Banks series, Hallroom Boys Comedies, Joe Rock Comedies, Screen Snapshots, Prizma and the serial, "Miracles of The Jungle."

The following franchise-holders were present at the convention: J. L. Freidman of Chicago; Harry Charnas and M. A. Lebenberger of Clevelaud; Samuel V. Grand, C. W. Dimick and Samuel Bischoff of Boston; Ben Amsterdam and S. Karson, of Philadelphia; Abe Warner and Bobby North, of New York City; Albert Wunderlick, of Minneapolis; J. T. Sheffield, of Seattle; J. Oppenheimer, of San Francisco; W. G. Underwood, of Dallas; Al Kahn, of Omaha and Kansas City; Sam Warner, of St. Louis; J. Eugene Pearce, of New Orleans; Peter Oletsky, of Baltimore; L. E. Ouimet, of Montreal, and George H. Wiley, of New York City.

G. H. Wiley was re-elected general manager of Federated Film Exchanges of America.

The Westward bound Twentieth Century on Tuesday, February 7, carried most of the delegates from the West. Joe Freidman headed the party.

Sam Grand, Peter Oletsky, Ben Amsterdam, Gene Pearce, Joe Freidman and Harry Charnas took advantage of their presence in New York to look at the latest State rights pictures. Most of them returned home with contracts for rights to these pictures.

Abe Warner is particularly enthusiastic about the forthcoming serial, "Shadows of The Jungle," which will be re-named, according to reports. The serial is being rushed to completion and, according to Coast reports, promises to be even bigger than "The Lost City" or "Miracles of The Jungle."

Ben Amsterdam is losing no bets, for he is acquiring the best there is in the market. After closing for the Eddie Polo serial last week, he closed with Louis Baum of Equity this week for that firm's big feature, "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" Ben booked it immediately after seeing the picture at the Criterion in New York on Sunday.

The Astor was virtually in charge of State rights folks during the past week. The visitors were in big demand and dinners at the expense of some of the distributors were common, although the "boys" kept very much to themselves and found so much business to transact that they had but a few minutes in which to eat Mrs. Astor's meals.

Congratulations to Federated are in order, for the splendid business-like manner in which the convention was conducted. There was not a single hitch and while there were many bitter discussions, no problem was left unsolved or was not "washed out."

Federated franchise-holders look forward to a big year and just to prove that they would back what they said they raised their capitalization in order that a number of pending big deals can be closed.

A meeting of the Board of Directors will be held within the month for the purpose of passing on pending deals for production.

Joe Freidman was indeed an exceedingly busy man during the convention, denying and spiking all sorts of rumors that buzzed about the busy corridors of the Astor Hotel.

Some of the sessions lasted into the wee morning hours. Not even the fact that February 5 was Sunday meant anything in the lives of the busy delegates, for that day was a busy one, judging from the hard time experienced in trying to locate some of the delegates. It was a strictly business session with no time for play.

Al Kahn, who came all the way from Omaha, Neb., to attend the convention, was one of the most popular men at the convention. Al looks forward to a break in prevalent conditions and has acquired some of the biggest features in the market.

Wires from the Coast to the Federated franchise-holders were numerous. For three days a New York distributor, who has an animal serial, hobnobbed with the delegates. He sought to distribute the serial through Federated, but as that organization already had decided not to handle any more serials, having originally intended to distribute Warner brothers' episode production, now in course of production on the Coast, nothing came of his efforts. The serial, however, is in big demand.

The initial session of Federated was one of the stormiest in the history of the organization, reports to the contrary notwithstanding. Rumors circulated fast and furious, but they "didn't mean a thing."

Len L. Burman was in town for the convention and certainly had a great time. Burman is running the Independent Exchange down in Philadelphia and putting over his features in exceptionally good fashion.

Abe Warner, who manages the New York Warner Exchange, was very much interested in all that went on. As was Jack Cohn, whose producing firm has been producing the Hallroom Boys' Comedy series, which Federated is distributing.

Franchise Oletsky of Baltimore is accomplishing wonders with his exchange in that city. This Baltimorean is a hustler, this fact making itself evident during the convention.

Some of the delegates from the extreme Western section had planned on staying over another week to attend the M. P. T. O. convention in Albany, N. Y., on February 15.

Contrary to the many rumors there were no changes made in the line-up of franchise-holders.

Old Testament Film Rich in Settings, Claims Weiss

Weis Brothers Artclass Pictures Corporation are advancing the claim for their film version of the Old Testament that in point of settings, picturesque values and strongly drawn characterizations it ranks with the foremost screen attractions of the past five years. Produced by the leading Italian picture organization with tremendous studio facilities in Rome, Italy, the cast of this film embraces the names of the leading players of stage and screen of the Old World. It is said to be particularly rich in magnificent pictorial backgrounds, lavish interior settings and dramatic characterizations.

The various characters of Moses, Joseph, Pharoah, Solomon, Adam and Eve, The Shulamite, etc., are interpreted by carefully picked players whose physical qualifications and histrionic ability make them perfectly suited to these difficult roles. The editors and cutters of the production have succeeded in weaving an engrossing narrative throughout the entire film, which depicts in gorgeous scenes and magnificent sets the happenings of the Old Testament from the episode of Creation to the Book of Exodus.

Cohn Finds Demand for Short Films

Announcement was made this week by Jack Cohn that two new novelty short releases, each different from the other, will shortly be announced for release.

These releases are said to be unusual in that not only are they promised as distinct surprises, but they have received the O.K. of the leading exhibitors and theatre-owners throughout the country before production details were started.

Mr. Cohn, who has been prominent in the film industry for fifteen years, "The King of Short Stuff," recently made two trips around the country for the purpose of ascertaining the needs of exhibitors and wants of the public, and found that, owing to the fact that the good average program feature is now only five reels, there is a need for good short releases. An average program, he found, needs at least two good one-reel novelties.

Buyers Clamor for "Wandering Boy" Following Criterion Premier; "Ten Nights" and "School Days" Go Big

Immediately after the world premier of Equity Picture Corporation's "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" at the Criterion Theatre in New York on Sunday, February 5, three of the biggest territories were sold on the production, and negotiations opened for the disposal of rights in two other sections. Those who bought rights to the picture after the New York opening are Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth Pictures' Corporation for New York State and Northern New Jersey; Ben Amsterdam, of Masterpiece Exchange of Philadelphia, for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, and Sam Grand, of Federated Exchange of Boston, for New England. Joe Friedman, of Celebrated Players Film Corporation of Chicago, on Thursday closed for rights to his territory, including Wisconsin.

The New York premier was much discussed among showmen and through a coincidence was opened at the same time Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., was holding its annual convention at Hotel Astor. In spite of the weather the picture attracted huge crowds with business improving as the week progressed. The picture will be held over for another week. The showing was a tribute to the State right market and convincing proof that the most alert showmen in the country are not overlooking the independent field when in want of money-making productions.

Hugo Reisenfeld, managing director of the Criterion, arranged a clever program for the premier. The picture had most of the audience in tears and these, judging from the box office figures, left the theatre, entertained, returned to their homes and passed on the good tidings to relatives and friends. This is the only reason that can be attributed to the daily increasing attendance, for with the exception of the Saturday and Sunday prior to the opening, only one-half inch ads were used in the papers. The Saturday and Sunday "ads" were two columns wide, five inches deep. They were attractive and contained just enough reading matter to arouse curiosity. However, it was the word-of-mouth publicity rendered by pleased patrons that made the engagement so successful.

The picture is an excellent box office attraction and showmen who are not afraid to mingle with the public and hustle will have no trouble cashing in.

While Equity officials were busy answering inquiries from exchangemen and exhibitors from all parts of the country following circulation of the commendable reports on the successful opening, Dr. W. E. Shellenberger, president of Arrow, was smilingly going over the batch of letters and telegrams from exhibitors who were topping the board with that firm's miracle production, "Ten Nights in a Barroom," the L. Case Russell version of the popular melodrama.

The success that has followed this picture since its premier in Providence, R. I., two months ago this week, is still the topic of the day among State righters. Business at the Globe in Boston was so big that the production has been held over for several more weeks in order to meet the popular demand for tickets. This week Tony Lucbese, of De Luxe Film Exchange, realized the ambition of every Philadelphia State rights exchangeman—that of putting a picture into a Stanley house on profitable terms. This Tony accomplished this week, for "Ten Nights" opened at the Victoria, Stanley's first-run Philadelphia house, and played to capacity business, with the probability that the feature will have to be held over. But Tony did more, for the demand for bookings on the picture was so great that he was compelled to get ten more prints. These prints are in use this week, which means that "Ten Nights" has established another record, that of day and date run. This is the first time in the history of a State rights production where ten simultaneous showings have been made necessary in any one territory.

"Ten Nights in a Barroom" opened last week at Famous Players' Strand Theatre in Toronto, Ont., and held up so satisfactorily that the management, after seeing every house record broken, was prompted to hold it over for a second week. The house manager's report is to the effect that the picture has grossed more than any other picture that has played that theatre in two years. On Sunday, the feature opened at the Rialto Theatre in San Francisco, following "Foolish Wives." Openings are scheduled next week for Fox's, Denver; Fox's, St. Louis; Strand, in Albany, N. Y., and Tally's, Los Angeles.

Educational, too, broke into a fastidious and hard-boiled Broadway house this week when Hugo Reisenfeld booked one of C. C. Burr's Johnny Hines "Torchy" comedies.

The Strand Theatre showing of Warner Brothers' Harry Rapf's production of Gus Edwards' "School Days," directed by William Nigh, was a notably successful one. While Joe Plunkett's clever showmanship and Warner's picture were drawing them into the Strand Theatre in spite of the miserable weather that prevailed during most of the week, Manager E. J. Weisfeld, of the Strand in Milwaukee, was breaking all records with the same feature.

For the first time in the history of the New York Strand, a "School Days" revue was given in conjunction with the showing, which was heralded by an exceptionally clever exploitation campaign that reached out to every section of New York. Manager Weisfeld, in Milwaukee, also spent considerable money in advertising and exploitation, but he was more than amply rewarded for his efforts. His "School Days" musical revue, including six children, proved a winner and attracted no end of attention in the press and from patrons. He is holding the picture for a second week.

Matt Radin, of Capital Exchange, New York, reports the month of February booked solid on the initial Richard Talmadge feature, "The Unknown." Fred Mitchel, the Loew picture booked, looked at the second Talmadge feature, "Taking Chances."

David Segal, of Royal Pictures, Philadelphia, who last week acquired the eastern Pennsylvania rights to Lee-Bradford's "Determination," will road-show the special in Philadelphia, where it will in all probability open at the Metropolitan.

"Persecution," the Regal Pictures Corporation initial independent release, received its metropolitan premier at the Delancey Street Theatre, New York. This is an East Side house and the picture, making a special appeal for patronage of folks in that district, played to particularly big business.

Louis Weiss, of Artclass Pictures Corporation, which will soon send out a number of shows on its Italian version of the Bible last week advertised the fact that he sought trained showmen to handle these units. He had no less than two hundred applicants—all from experienced showmen. Which proves that it pays to advertise.

Gossip of the Trade

LOUIS WEISS, Secretary of Adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation, returned to the offices of the organization this week following a protracted siege of grippe, which confined him to his home during the past two weeks. During bis ahsence Bert Ennis has been in charge of the organization's various activities. Weiss will leave on Thursday next for a three weeks' stay at Palm Beach, Florida, for the purpose of recuperation.

He will be accompanied on this trip by his brother Max, now on his way to New York from Monte Carlo. Following his vacation in the South it is understood that Weiss will arrange plans for his departure to England, where he will make arrangements with Sir William Jury, owner of "Adventures of Tarzan" for the United Kingdom, for the personal appearance tour of Elmo Lincoln in England sometime during the month of September.

Prior to his trip to England Weiss will arrange for the premiere presentation of the film version of "The Old Testament" in New York and several other cities throughout the United States. These showings will be placed in charge of Bert Ennis, director of publicity for the serial company and also Artclass Pictures Corporation, the latter named company sponsoring the Biblical film.

Clinton White, who last week joined Lee-Bradford as sales-manager, is on the road selling "Determination." This week he will visit Cbicago, St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha.

H. O. Larsen, representing Russell Productions of Chicago, State righters of "Shadows of Conscience," is now touring the South, but will return to New York late next week.

Joe Weil, "a little bird" attached to this department discovered this week, is a fullfledged "polar hear." When you and I are comfortably buried under five heavy hlankets, the genial puhlicist and editor-writer-compositor, etc. of "The Belly-ache" is taking his "hawth" on the shores of far Far Rockaway.

Nat Rothstein of Equity was confined to his bed for several days this week, but recovered sufficiently to take up his duties at his offices in the interests of "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?"

Truly B. Wildman, well-known film man of Kansas City, was made Kansas City manager for S. A. Lynch Enterprises last week.

E. H. Silcocks, general salesmanager for the Pacific Film Company, distributors of Folly Comedies, is touring the country and is expected in New York within the next week. Tbis week he is in Chicago and on his way East will make stops at Cleveland, Detroit, Buffalo and possihly Pittsburgh.

This was indeed a busy week for Federated franchise holders. Not in a long, long time was tbe Astor Hotel as busy as it has been during tbe past few days. The "hoys" certainly will be missed.

Arrow Film Corporation, Aywon, Equity, Commonwealth, Nu-Art, Warner, Capital, Jans and other New York and Buffalo exchanges have leased hooths for the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State at Albany, New York, on February 15.

Len Burman of Independent Film Exchange of Philadelphia looks forward to a record-breaker in Warner's "School Days."

This department this week came in receipt of an interesting booklet published by the Progress exchanges of San Francisco and Los Angeles. This booklet, which contains interesting data and all that exhibitors care to know ahout pictures, is perhaps the cleverest organ any exchange has issued. It contains announcements of Arrow Film Corporation, whose features Progress releases as well as intimate information on stars featured in the exchange's pictures.

The Pittsburgh Federated Exchange has moved to 1018 Forbes street, taking the offices formerly used by Realart.

Exchanges Commend Burr for Ed. Carewe Enterprise; Production in Full Swing

When announcement was made to the trade last week by C. C. Burr of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., that Kenneth Harlan, Alice Lake, Rosemary Theby, Noah and Wallace Beery and Gaston Glass had signed with Edwin Carewe as director to appear in an independent production to be released through Affiliated Distributors, it brought forth the commendation of some of the largest independent exchanges in the country.

Last week, a carload of props, and another passenger coach filled with principals and extra players, arrived at Truckee, California, where the initial Edwin Carewe-Affiliated Distributors release will be produced. Because of a special arrangement with the Chamber of Commerce in Truckee, an entire hotel was turned over to the Carewe outfit. In fact, the hotel was specially opened for them, as the company is working thirty miles from the railroad station, in the heart of the snow region, and consequently they close up during the winter season.

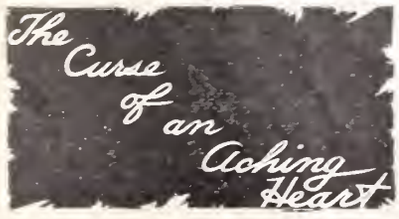
B. P. Fineman is in charge of the party which includes Alice Lake, Kenneth Harlan, Rosemary Theby, Gaston Glass, Noah Beery, Wallace Beery and Cameraman Bob Curley. The scenario prepared by Raymond Shrock calls for a number of big mob scenes laid in the snow country. For this reason it was necessary to transport a large list of players from Los Angeles.

Serial Notables Visit New York

Agnes Johnston and Frank Dazey, who collaborated in the preparation of the story and scenario for Col. Selig's new wild animal serial, "The Jungle Goddess," which the Export & Import Film Co., Inc., is state righting, arrived in New York this week from the coast, for a conference with Mr. Louis Auerbach, of this company, regarding the final episodes of the serial.

Slow Motion in "Hallroom"

Slow motion photography as a means of securing comedy effects is one of the unusual features of a new Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Comedy featuring Sid Smith and Jimmie Adams which has been completed by Harry Cohn. The comedy, which will be released through Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., has been given the title "Beware of Blondes." Noel Smith directed this release.



Books J. W. Film

E. S. Manheimer, of J. W. Film Corporation, this week reported that both the Loew and Fox circuits had booked "Road to Arcady."

Between You and Me

RICORD GRADWELL, now associated with Producers Security Corporation, and one of the best known men in the business, has been offered the leadership of a national distributing corporation. Mr. Gradwell has been considering the proposition, and will in all probability accept it late this week. The organization involved is a comparatively new one. Mr. Gradwell, with his vast wealth of knowledge of the distribution end of the business, should have no trouble building the organization.

David G. Fischer, who now heads a new distributing organization in the State-Rights market, has taken over four foreign pictures for distribution. "Persecution," which already is on the market, will be followed by two Italian-made films. He is also negotiating for the product of an independent producer. It is understood that the firm, which is said to be substantially financed by Baltimore capital, will later enter the independent production field.

George Fecke, the New England State rights exchangeman, is apparently seriously contemplating entering the national distributing field, for it became known this week that he has taken over the world rights to "Annabelle Lee," which Joan Sales Corporation advertised last season. The picture is new.

The D. F. O'Donnell, whose name appeared in the list of known dead at the Knickerbocker Theatre catastrophe several weeks ago, was none other than the owner of the Federal Film Service of Washington, D. C. Mr. O'Donnell was one of the keenest showmen handling a State rights exchange and news of his untimely death was received with regret along film row. He was vice president of the Exchange Managers' Association, of Washington.

For some unknown reason the general impression seems to prevail in the trade that because C. C. Burr, head of Master Films, Inc., and president of Affiliated Distributors, Inc., as well as sponsor for the Johnny Hines "Torchy" Comedies, has interested himself in the production of a series of big Northwestern dramas in association with Edwin Carewe, Bernie Fineman and Bennie Zeidman, he will make Los Angeles his headquarters. On the contrary, C. C. will remain right in New York, for what would Mrs. Astor or Mrs. Algonquin do without the versatile Charles?

J. J. Goodstein Optimistic on Future; Buys Arrow Pictures

Joseph J. Goodstein, president of the Arrow Photoplays Company of Denver, who is in New York City this week on a business trip finds conditions slightly improving in the Western States. Mr. Goodstein, who is one of the most energetic representatives of the motion picture industry, says that while the change noted is gradual it shows a substantial improvement and he believes that another six months will reflect a decided trend toward better times for the exhibitor. Mr. Goodstein has built up a wonderful organization for his territory. Jimmy Moran, who was associated with the Universal Film Company for several years, is manager of the Salt Lake territory. Charles Zagrams, who is also secretary of Mr. Goodstein's organization, has charge of the Denver district, assisting Mr. Goodstein. Mr. Goodstein opened the Seattle offices about six months ago. Barney Shooker is sales manager in the Denver offices. A. H. Hout is in charge of publicity and exploitation and also manager of the Seattle offices.

Besides his organization in Denver, Mr. Goodstein is owner of the Palm Theatre, Pueblo, and the Palm Theatre of Philadelphia. On his trip to New York Mr Goodstein visited the offices of the Arrow Film Corporation and purchased twelve special two reel Eddie Lyons Comedies, known as "The Big Twelve"; fourteen Broadway Comedies, featuring Eddie Barry; twelve five-reel Westerns starring Jack Hoxie; "The Girl From Porcupine," James Oliver Curwood's latest production, and two additional features to be produced in the near future.

Howells Closes Foreign Deal

David P. Howells this week closed a contract with The Argentine-American Film Corporation for the distribution of all First National pictures in the South American territory, including the countries of Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador. Former Ambassador Noan is president of the company.

MONTY BANKS IS UP TO SOME MONKEY BUSINESS
Clever comedian enjoying a smoke with "Bozo," the Chimpanzee, who appears with him in series of comedies being State righted by Warner Brothers

From the Showmen's Angle

SIXTY exhibitors in Western Missouri and Eastern Kansas on Tuesday, Feb. 7, organized an Exhibitors' Direct Service Exchange, which will handle State Rights productions, along the lines of the co-operative St. Louis exchange bearing the same name. Most of the leading exhibitors in that territory are concerned in the enterprise. Negotiations already have opened for productions to be distributed through that exchange.

Showmen in general are particularly enthusiastic about the Warner Brothers' organization. Their "Why Girls Leave Home" has saved many a house and their latest vehicle, "School Days," promises to be another record-breaker, for the showing at the New York Strand last week was exceptionally big.

Glancing through our correspondence from exhibitors one is struck by the characteristically encouraging tone of these letters. The attitude of showmen toward State Rights never was more favorable and if the opportunity confronting State Rights exchangemen today is not made the most of, it will not have been because the theatre folks gave a deaf ear.

Universal's widely-advertised picture, "Foolish Wives," was slated for a long run at the Rialto, San Francisco, but after several weeks was pulled out to make way for "Ten Nights In A Barroom," the Arrow special, which opened there on Sunday. Reports from the house manager up to the time of going to press were that huge crowds had to be turned away, with indications that the picture will stand up for five or more weeks. The success of the picture in 'Frisco immediately brought a demand from Los Angeles where the production opens on Sunday, February 12, at Tally's Theatre for a run.

Col. Selig's "Jungle Goddess" Is Nearing Completion; To Launch Newspaper Campaign

Col. W. N. Selig's new wild animal serial, "The Jungle Goddess," co-starring Elinor Field and Truman Van Dyke, will be ready for release soon, according to Mr. Louis Auerbach, of the Export & Import Film Company, Inc.

Production at the coast studios is now proceeding according to schedule. Delay occasioned by the unlooked for frost, which seriously hindered the taking of wild animal scenes, has been made up for by constant night work. Director Conway has now finished the ninth episode of Agnes Johnston and Frank Dazey's drama. Work on chapters ten, eleven and twelve is rapidly nearing completion.

The posters for the first six episodes are now ready as are the lobby display photographs for the first four chapters. Slides, heralds, banners, etc., will be available within one week. Material for a 32-page multi-colored press book with exploitation and exhibitor aids, reproductions of posters, cuts, lobby photographs, and a complete newspaper campaign is now being assembled and should be off the press within two weeks.

"The Jungle Goddess," it is said, will be backed by extensive newspaper publicity in addition to the trade paper advertising now going on. Following its release, several syndicates will distribute individual feature stories to the various periodicals and newspapers regarding the production of wild animal episode pictures.

Grace Darmond, "Shadows of Jungle" Star, Seriously Hurt

Grace Darmond, star of Warner Brothers 15 episodes animal serial, "Shadows of the Jungle," was seriously injured during the filming of an African jungle scene, according to Sam Warner, under whose supervision the episodic drama is being made. Miss Darmond is said to have fallen from an elephant's back, and while the exact injuries sustained are not known she was confined to a hospital for a week.

Scores of other accidents have occupied during the making of the serial. An idea of the trials and tribulations in serial making, including the many accidents that have befallen the players, is contained in the following letter sent by Sam Warner to his brother, Harry M. Warner.

"We have finished the eighth episode," writes Sam Warner, "and the director is completing nine, ten and eleven. I will make part of 12, 13, 14 and 15. Miss Darmond fell off an elephant's back and has been in bed a week. Mrs. Hill was attacked by one of her leopards and bitten in the neck and leg. An artist we had working insisted on shaking hands with a lion. He is still in the hospital, having nearly lost his hand. Another trainer got in the way of a tiger and landed in the hospital, but is now out nursing twenty-two wounds. A negro tried to put out a flaming torch in some gasoline, and almost burned the place down.

"All these accidents were not due to our negligence. While we are covered by insurance we have had a hard time preventing them from cancelling it, as they have paid out an average of one claim a day. I haven't mentioned the burns, monkey bites and the few fingers that have been lost by the various players in the serial."

New Amalgamated Series Acquired by East Coast, Inc.

An explanation of the extra amount of activity in the main offices of East Coast Productions, Inc., and the sudden decision of Franklyn E. Backer to leave for the coast on February 11 is forthcoming in announcement of a second series of Amalgamated Pictures to be launched through the franchise-holders of this organization upon Mr. Backer's return. The second production of the first series, designated as co-star pictures, is "Any Night" and will be followed by "The Greater Duty," the prints and accessories of which are now ready for shipment to the exchanges.

A feature of the distributing method of this series was the showing of three completed productions upon the screen before any contracts were closed with the independent exchanges holding Amalgamated franchises. The new series will be launched along the same lines, and the first three pictures are now ready and will be brought east by Franklyn E. Backer upon his return from the trip to Los Angeles some time late next month.

Producers' Security Acquires Three Melodramatic Features

"The Bootlegger," starring Walter Miller, has been passed by the New York Motion Picture Commission, according to a statement made this week by Producers' Security Corporation, which is State righting the timely feature. Roy Sheldon directed the picture, which is arousing much curiosity. Negotiations are now under way for a representative first-run showing in a New York theatre.

THIS publication started delivering a service to the motion picture industry fifteen years ago. On March 11th we will celebrate our fifteenth birthday.

Our first issue was a small sixteen-page affair.

The staff was small; the whole industry was in its infancy then. Today our staff numbers approximately sixty people and we are represented by correspondents in the principal cities of the United States, Canada and Europe.

We have lived through the various phases of the picture business, encouraging when encouragement was necessary and criticizing when criticism was in order.

All during this time our object has been to build up the motion picture industry in all of its elements. All trade papers in this field are fashioned after Moving Picture World—almost department for department. This is indeed a great compliment.

We were the first in the field and have set the pace ever since.

The fifteenth anniversary number will go a bit into history——the individuals', the corporations'—big events of the past.

We will also make a few predictions of the future on our own account.

It will be a great number. Be sure to be in it. Have your past performances on record with the accomplishments of the others, telling the trade what you have done and what you are going to do—in the fifteenth anniversary of

Small Income Managers Can Exploit by Cutting Stunts to Fit the House

PRACTICALLY all of the questionnaires filled in on the page published in this paper praise this department. Only one manager, so far, has said that he does not use the suggestions. Many have replied that they used them "with changes" and several have suggested that most of the stunts are too expensive, asking that material better suited to houses with small incomes be substituted.

We cannot quite get the angle of this last series of replies, for a large percentage of the stunts used each week are from small-income houses, and the costs have been quoted, as in the case of Howard James, of Union Hall, Voluntown, Conn., who pulled them in at a cost of forty cents. Others have required only a little carpenter and paint work and a few passes for the loan of toys and other material. You cannot get a stunt much cheaper than for nothing, and a lot of the ideas have cost the house absolutely neither money nor passes.

Wrong Mental Attitude

The trouble is that these managers approach the department with the wrong slant. They feel that exploitation costs more than they can afford, and they read the department to confirm their opinion—and find such confirmation, no matter what the department may contain.

We do not take each stunt and tell how it can be cheapened, for we do not think that the average manager needs such elementary instruction. We do, very often, suggest the simplification of an idea to give a general idea of how to treat the rest.

Practically eighty per cent. of the stunts given in any issue of this department are as available to the house able to spend three dollars in exploiting a picture as to the manager who can spend a hundred dollars. It is merely a matter of adapting the idea to the house.

Because the original stunt cost $80 to construct, it does not follow that you will have to spend as much if the income from your house does not permit such expenditure. You can take a stunt that will cost more to work than your house will hold at capacity, and you can cut it down to your exact size.

Take the issue of February 4, for example. Page 531 shows a Lindlar lobby that can be made up for about four dollars, and can be done even more cheaply by using paper cutouts instead of fabric ghosts. It does not cost much to placard the taxis in a small town. It costs nothing to use the newsgirl stunt, for you can lay this off to the newspaper, and you can figure what it costs to letter your exit doors. There is not a stunt on that page that any manager cannot work, no matter how limited his income. And if he has not booked Three Live Ghosts, he can take the idea and make a jumping banner for any picture out of any material from a one sheet pasted to a cardboard box cover from the dry goods store to a canvas sign.

More Saving Ideas

The next page carries three stunts. One shows a window dressing which cost only the cards, another tells how a cutout was worked and the third describes how working in with a charity got a house a good banner location.

The third page gives an example of the reuse of old material, tells of the snow covered lobby (which has been worked for as little as $3.50) and tells how a Paramounteer obtained a free fashion show in a store window and was asked to call again.

It is not until you come to the fifth page that you strike a stunt which is not possible to the smalles house, if done in a small way. This is the book lobby, which is here also used for a perambulator. As this can be worked every two or three months, if not more often, and serves both for the street stunt and the lobby, the $25 it cost can be divided by five to make each stunt cost only $5 plus a little painting for a really big town stunt.

You are not supposed to use these stunts as they stand, but to adapt them to your house and your purse. It can be done, because it is being done daily by hundreds of live wires who are not always going to be small town people, but who are now getting their training for larger jobs and broader fields.

This entire department is for the small town man. He can get an idea from any stunt.

Lindlar Exploitation All at Sea This Week

This week instead of showing an expensive lobby and telling how it can be cut down, Walter Lindlar, of Paramount exploitation, tells how this simple decoration can be built up. All he shows is the foundation idea. The rope ladder is simply made. You can use wooden rungs, painted black, to simulate iron, and tie these to an uncut rope, if you don't want to go to the trouble of splicing; (which you probably won't) and the life preservers can be made of old scene cloth, stuffed with straw and painted white and lettered, if you cannot borrow the real article. The box office is covered in with stiff paper and lettered "Purser" and if you have a built in box office, you need only a sign and an announcement that the steamship company will not be responsible for valuables not left in the purser's care.

With this display for a starter, you can build up the idea to the most complicated lobby you care to pay for, and you will not have to lay out very much for a material enlargment on this idea. Even a fresh water yacht club will be able to lend you signal flags and port lights, and a fog horn on the roof will give the noise you may feel you need. Any small siren or deep toned tin horn will serve as a fog warning if you keep it hidden, and you can find a small boy who will esteem it a privilege to act as stage manager in return for a pass.

Get a Change of Pace on "Molly O" Exploits

Each week we get a big batch of photographs on "Molly O" exploitation, and we do not use them because they are all like the ones we had the week before and the week before that.

For the exhibitor it is good ready-made exploitation. All he has to do is to book the picture and the manufacturers of the various "Molly O" products will do the rest with the long line of hook-up material. In the Ohio Valley section they are also using a girl impersonator of Mabel Normand, who apparently carries the First National film cans around with her.

Of course the exploitation is new in each town, but why not give it a new twist anyhow? Instead of putting a painting of Miss Normand in the window with Molly-O hats, make up half a dozen head cutouts and put the hats on these. Drape Molly-O fabrics over other cutouts and feed a cutout real Molly-O biscuits.

Don't be content with what is handed you. Jazz it up and make even more money. Stage a cracker eating contest in your lobby, using Molly-O biscuit, and awarding a prize to the boy who makes the neatest job of eating three crackers and then whistling Yankee Doodle all the way through without losing all of the biscuits. Just shoot up the town even if you have to take a fine for violating the fire ordinances against excess standing room sales. At least make them try to get in and you can hold it over for a second week.

"Molly O" has the largest hook-up possibilities of any picture since the same star's "Mickey," and it is developing the least orignality in campaigns, because so much can be gained without great managerial effort.

Audience Criticism Helped Sell Picture

Staging a pre-view at which audience comment could be obtained, Gift's Theatre, Cincinnati, put out a thousand questionnaires to a representative list, about 750 of those invited responding.

After explaining that Ince claimed "Hail the Woman" to be an exceptional picture and that the management wanted to check up the statement from opinions of their own representative patrons, these two questions were asked:

Do you think "Hail the Woman" is an exceptional picture as compared with the majority of photoplays you see?

What, in your judgment, are its chief points of excellence?

The second question naturally leads to an affirmative answer to the first, and then the spectator has to justify that answer by an appreciation.

Space was also left for additional expressions of opinion and this gave some very valuable publicity material, much of which the newspapers carried as part of a new story of the stunt. This was all velvet, as the big idea had been to obtain material for advertising work.

It's a good stunt that will bring you such opinions as: "At a time when narrow prejudices are being fostered by organizations which would attempt to clothe hypocrisy with religion, 'Hail the Woman' comes to clear the atmosphere." No press agent could do better than this.

Hyman's Novelties at the Mark Strand

For the week commencing with Lincoln's Birthday, Edward L. Hyman has selected two characteristic numbers for the program at the Mark-Strand, Brooklyn.

EDW. L. HYMAN

The overture will be Laurendeau's Memories of Abraham Lincoln, a potpourri of war-time melodies including Tramp, Tramp, Tramp the Boys Are Marching, John Brown's Body, When Johnny Comes Marching Home, Our Flag Is There, Marching Through Georgia, The Battle Cry of Freedom, Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground, Arkansas Traveler and Dixie. The stage lighting will be red, white and blue spots, stage strips and foots in blue, with flashes of the three colors from overhead strips. The house lights and dome will be white, the cove red and the box lights blue.

Following this comes a negro number, using the Levee set. The opening selections will be Old Black Joe, sung by an ancient negro; Don't Cry My Honey, sung by a mammy, and Carry Me Back to Old Virginia, sung by a younger black boy. Then a scrim is dropped with a motion allegory of Lincoln, presumably the vision of the race he freed, and the four singers drop upon their knees and shout Glory, Glory Hallelujia as the curtains close in.

Next comes the Topical Review, followed by Prosch's Variations sung as a concert number, a showy selection for an excellent coloratura soprano, and this is followed by the last production.

The setting gives a garden with a flowered wall with an arched gateway, set with a stone bench, sun dial and swing. One pair of sweethearts are at the swing and the others by the bench. The first selection is Friml's I Love You, Dear, followed by Greig's Sunshine Song. At the conclusion of this number the swing is electrically illuminated.

The film features are Nazimova in "A Doll's House" and a Mermaid comedy, "The Vagrant." Goodwin's In the Garden will be the organ postlude.

FIVE INTERESTING BOOK DISPLAYS FOR "PENROD" DONE BY PETE SMITH IN CHICAGO

Working with E. Joslyn, the local First National man, Pete blew into town with Wesley Barry and tied up traffic all over the Loop by parading the young man with the naval recruiting officers. It was the biggest time since the Haymarket riots, and made them forget the stockyards strike. This was the first fruits of a tour of personal appearances of the star for "Penrod"

HERE IS A VALUABLE SUGGESTION FOR BOOK PLAYS

Oscar Whit,e of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., devised the twelve-page book made from beaver board to stand in the lobby. The cover and four of the right hand pages are lettered with material for Paramount's "Miss Lulu Bett"

Turned the Leaves for "Miss Lulu Bett"

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., a Southern Enterprises house, has evolved something that is a cross between Lindlar's book lobby and the dispaly racks used in certain lines of business. The cut shows the general idea of the device, which is a twelve-page book, built of beaver-board, and which is stood in the lobby with the pages partly opened.

The front cover, which does not show from this camera angle, was lettered up with the title, Miss Lulu Bett, with the author's name below and "A Paramount Picture" at the bottom. The third page tells that Adolph Zukor presents the play and gives the billing. Page five reads: "The play that of New York saw and talked about. The book that half of America read and raved about. Now on the screen for all the world to enjoy."

The next page carried: "A picture of universal appeal because its deals with the lives of American people as no picture ever did before," and the last lettered page gives: "The story of a woman who thirsted for love and whose nature had always been starved. See what she did to win happiness."

The last cover page was left blank, but this gave five messages which could be read if one stopped.

This is a distinctly good idea, and not a costly one, for the book can be cut up and used for other purposes when it has served its turn for the novel origin play.

Sold An Editor on Good Sunday Shows

W. C. Johnson, of the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga., got Betty Compson in "The Little Minister" to replace a cancellation. He had no time to prepare a lobby display or do the usual exploitation, so he worked hard with slies and used the editorial comment from this paper to run in place of the regular reader, backing up the display advertisement with the strong endorsement.

Evidently it coaxed the editor in, for Monday morning the editorial column carried this:

"Went to see our first Sunday movie yesterday—'The Little Minister'—at the Rialto. It'll do ye good, mon, to see the picture like that any day in the week, and all the more on the Lord's Day."

You can't buy that sort of thing. It has to be given you. More power to Johnson!

Revives the Bull

For the past few months the "this is no bull" blanket for cows has been forgotten, but Fox's Liberty Theatre, St. Louis, very appropriately revived it for Clyde Cook in The Toreador. The animal was led through the streets by a man in a bullfighter's costume and made up to resemble the comedian. The banner also announced A Virgin Paradise as part of the bill and put both titles over.

The no-bull idea was a winner for a time. It is just as good as ever and even in the small towns is can be dug out again every six months or so. But if you work the stunt, keep the blanket short enough to prove that it really is no bull. The widder should not be covered, as was the case in many of these stunts. It helped to capacity in St. Louis. It will make standing room in the smaller towns.

Worked Again

The Mozart Theatre, Elmira, N. Y., worked the careful driver idea, orginated by a Paramount exploiteer, for Fox's "Over the Hill."

The newspapers announced that the traffic officer on the post nearest the theatre would award five pairs of seats to the most careful drivers on a certain day.

The newspaper publicity alone would have paid the trifling cost, but the stunt had the further effect of bringing most every automobile in town past the elabortely decorated house front, which was why that particular traffic post was selected.

Had Elaborate Lobby at a Moderate Cost

J. G. Crouch, of the Princess Theatre, Troy, Ala., sends in an elaborate lobby which cost him only $7.10 in money, but he does not count in his own time nor that of his violinist, Herman Moore, who helps him on these displays.

There is rather too much fence here, we think, but the display is elaborate and helped to bring them in to "The Old Nest." We presume that the patron entered through the house shown in the center and that the fences were taken down as the patrons came out, but Mr. Crouch does not supply the details. This looks like a lot for $7.10, but Mr. Crouch says that is all the material cost. It looks as well as a hundred dollar lobby and probably brought in every cent as much business.

The details do not show clearly in the photograph, but it should be noted that the background is partly filled with branches over which Spanish moss is draped, and branches run from the three-sheet boards at the corners into the picture.

If you use your head you can make a hammer and saw take the place of dollars and cents in your lobby displays.

THIS LOOKS AS THOUGH THE PATRONS JUMPED THE FENCE

But they went in through the cottage in the center when "The Old Nest" played the Princess Theatre, Troy, Alabama. The fences were taken down to let the crowd out. It was built by Manager J. G. Crouch and his violinist, Herman Moore

Scene Model in Lobby Made a Heavy Business

John B. Snider, of the Grand Theatre, Bessemer, Ala., writes an entire chapter on exploitation when he says that people are particularly attracted by miniatures. He knows, because it worked for him, and everyone else who was tried it will agree with him.

But this is not Mr. Snider's only shot. He cleaned up just before Christmas with a potato matinee stunt the four days of the week before Christmas. Any child was admitted on presentation of five potatoes, and the surprising total of 82 bushels was realized. The tubers were turned over to a local charity for distribution among the poor and in addition to 42 inches of reading matter and the use of a cut, Mr. Snider writes that he won over to pictures a great many who were inclined to look down on the "movies."

And get this angle from Mr. Snider. He suggests that in town where there is much unemployment you do not have to wait until next Christmas to work this stunt. Do it next week, or the week after. It may hurt the matinee business a little, but it will mean hundreds of dollars in the long run.

Mr. Snider tells how he made the scene model better than we can. Listen to him:

"The other two photographs show our lobby display for "The Sheik" during its run here last week. As you will see the main attraction in the lobby was the miniature reproduction of a scene from the picture. The small stage was built over our regular photo display case. The bottom of the stage was covered over with sand. The figures in the figures standing in front of the tent were cut from the 22x28 as were the horsemen in the background against the horizon. The four horsemen in the right front foreground were cut from the 3 sheet mounted on heavy cardboard and stood up in the sand. The tent was made from a plain piece of white cloth striped a brilliant red with show card ink. The lone palm tree was made by taking a round piece of wood, painting it brown and making the leaves from a piece of dark green card. The sides of the stage were made of wall board, painted with kalsomine blended, using the colors blue, white and pink to give a sunset effect for the horizon. Three 75-watt lamps kept the interior of the box well illuminated day and night, and it attracted more attention than any lobby display I have put out regardless of the cost.

"As we have received many helpful suggestions from your valued paper of the activities of fellow exhibitors I feel that I should pass on to them through your paper any ideas that we have found useful and a paying proposition. Whether they think it will help them or not is for them to determine but I will be willing to bet any of them that if the thing is put up right it will attract as much attention as if they had spent $50.00 for some elaborate lobby. It is the miniature things that count. I know for I have a display frame made using the same stage frame in my lobby now advertising 'The Old Nest' for its run during the latter part of the week and 8 out of every 10 people passing along the sidewalk stops and looks at it and I will bet that I get some money on 'The Old Nest' because of the display."

Getting Reckless

We told you E. Metzger, of the Strand, Creston, Ia., was getting to be a regular spendthrift. He spent four dollars on a single stunt and if he doesn't watch out his name will replace the drunken sailor in the old saying. Time was Metzger could upset the entire town for $1.75.

Anyhow, he hired a masked girl to sit in a department store window and write teasers for First National's "Nobody" on a slate. Half the time she wrote such cryptic messages as "I am nobody, yet somebody. Guess my identity," and the other half she wrote about the store bargains, which is why the stunt cost Metzger only four dollars, for the store paid the other half of the $2 per for four days.

Now a Debate

Eller Metzger, the economical exploiter of the Strand Theatre, Creston, Iowa, has found something with which to vary the composition contest and the newspaper symposium.

When he booked First National's The Oath he arranged for debates in the schools on the question as to whether the marriage vow or the oath of allegiance to one's country were the stronger tie.

A Dual Role Stunt

General Manager, F. J. Miller and J. L. Shields, house manager of the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga., have worked out a stunt for Chaplin in "The Idle Class" that will work for any dual role and work to the limit.

The 24-sheet gave two pictures of Chaplin, as the tramp and as the millionaire. The tramp was cutout and mounted on beaverboard. It was placed before a mirror on which had been pasted the cutout of the second character. The effect was that of looking into the glass and seeing one's other self, and it attracted no end of attention. It was put in the lobby close to the sidewalk.

Harold Lloyd was also on the bill and his 24-sheet was cutout and hung from the cornice. The two stunts cost only five dollars and brought a lot more than that in.

Split the Crowd

When the Strand Theatre, Laredo, Texas, imported a Mexican opera troupe, the Royal did not decided to give the ushers a holiday. Being a First National franchise holder, the Royal took the Associated Producers' "The Forbidden Thing" and made such a fuss over it that they played to a good business the opening night of the Mex opera.

It would sound better to say that they played to S. R. O., but they didn't. They did, however, fend off a loss and not only made a little money but held their patrons to the idea that there was still another theatre in town. That was the big point. The patrons were held.

Here's a Good One

A "Toonerville Trolley" won the first prize in the Mummers' Parade in Sunbury, Pa., New Year's Day, which inspires the First National publicity department to suggest this comedy series can be put over with small prizes offered for the best reproductions in miniature made by boys under a stated age out of the materials to be found in every home, old cigar boxes, tin cans or whatever the kinds think they can use.

It's a capital idea and you can easily tie up some prominent window for a display of the entries. They can't be any funnier than the Fontaine Fox cartoons, but they can be funny.

A MONEY MAKING LOBBY DISPLAY AND A DETAIL OF THE STUNT WHICH MADE THE MONEY

On the left is seen the lobby of the Grand Theatre, Bessemer, Ala., and on the right an enlargement of the miniature setting which got most of the attention. It was very simply made and John B. Snider says that he knows it caught on because of the number of people who stopped to linger before the display. It worked so well he is using it for a repeat

HOW GEORGE SCHADE MAKES HIS MARQUISE CUTOUTS

This picture shows how he built up his display for "Lying Lips" from corrugated board and laths, painting in where the lettering obtruded and varnishing the whole to make it weather-proof. He gets a splendid display for little cost

Playing on Curiosity

Daniel Knight, Jr., of the Globe Theatre, Marcus Hook, Del., advertised "The Sheik" for two months, but did not tell where or when it would be seen.

After a while the thing got on the nerves of the curious and they began calling the local paper up to ask when and where "The Sheik" would be played. The paper tried to find out, but no one, not even Knight, seemed to know. When he was all set he went over to see the editor and the result was a front page box headed "A Question Answered," and it was not included in the advertising bill, either. This will work just once, but it's a wonder the first time.

Toy Trestle Work to Help "The Iron Trail"

Another development in the toy train idea for "The Iron Trail" was found by James Q. Clemmer for the Winter Garden Theatre, Seattle. In place of the usual lobby display on a platform he threw a bridge across the rear of the lobby, making two spans with the box office as a central pier.

The trestle was built from the construction sets sold in the toy stores and material was supplied by a toy store in return for a credit card. An electric train was also furnished, and this ran over the bridge and returned across a panoramic setting which backed the display, and which is only faintly indicated in the cut.

By a trip arrangement a whistle was blown each time the train crossed the box office, which attracted attention to the display and added to the realism, a cylinder of compressed air supplying the whistle.

As the lobby of the Winter Garden is very wide, the raidroad had room for a full display and many persons were attracted by the ingenious device and sold the Rex Beach story. The cut shows only about a third of the display, but it will give an idea of the construction work. A headline and illuminated cars helped to attract attention to the train when the whistle was not blowing.

Sin Flood Impressed at Advance Showing

E. S. Rogers, of the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, had the first showing of "The Sin Flood" in Southern territory, and reports not only a good business, but an excellent after effect, for the picture left the people talking!

He made a part of his drive on the fact that Chattanooga was to be the first to see it, but mostly his advertising campaign was directed to the theme of the picture and was split about evenly between the moral lesson conveyed and the entertainment value, that the fact might be emphasized that this was a lesson in an acceptable form and not rigid propaganda.

The most effective appeal was an open letter to the mayor. The open letter should not be used too often, but here is an instance where it will offer its own excuse, and even though it was recently done on "The Old Nest," it had an effect.

The picture came so close upon the heels of the holiday that no records were broken, but it played to better than average business and did an amount of good that only the future can measure, and that not with precision.

Stages Chariot Race

Apparently the Fox advertising department is routing chariots for advertising "The Queen of Sheba" in the Middle West, for several sections report the use of the Roman jitneys.

The Capitol Theatre, Des Moines, bettered the stunt by getting hold of two chariots and staging a race down the main street about noontime, the course covering three blocks.

It made a lot of talk, but it is hardly safe to work the stunt with local horses, for there is something of a knack in handling the horses, and it is safe to speed them only where trained horses are employed. It should be possible to book chariot racers at a small price now that the circus and fairs are closed. Where trained horses are not to be had, it is better not to speed the carts.

How to Make Heralds Into Window Displays

Necessity may be the mother of invention, but J. H. Everett, of the Palace Theatre, Maryville, Tenn., was the proud father in this instance.

He had "The Sheik" and after he had copied the lobby of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, as published in this department, he hooked a photograph store to a drive on The Sheik record with a magnavox attachment, which was new to the town. Everyone for a couple of blocks around came to see where the brass band was, and they looked into the window before they saw the horn.

Everett wanted to put copies of the book into the window, but he could find none in the local stores. The heralds were done with the front page in imitation of a book cover. Mr. Everett took these. Pasted the inner half of page three, first creasing the sheet to get an even division. Then he glued this half to page two, bent the unpasted half sharply at right angles and had easel cards which could be set into the window for a fine display and used more liberally than any book supply.

It's a useful little kink which will make heralds available for any picture. Keep it in mind. Cutting the bottom on a slant will permit the display to be angled in a low window.

Dam Good Exploitation Helped Priscilla Dean

Harry Gould, of the Hippodrome, Fort Worth, Texas, is not dependent upon an artist when it comes to lobby work. He can roll his own, as this display for Priscilla Dean in "Conflict" very exclusively shows.

He selected the dam incident for illustration and so planned his drawing that she seems about to shoot over the falls onto the heads of the entering patrons, and the banner helped to provide the patrons in large numbers.

It gave an adequate idea of the big punch in the story and backed up the "Never Again" posters which were used on the corner boards on both sides of the lobby.

Just what the stonework wings below are supposed to represent is not clear, but the flats serve to provide a place for the stills and if they have no other reason, that is sufficient. It is very evident from this and other pictures that Mr. Gould is a staunch believer in plenty of stills to put the idea over.

Fruitless Request Really Advertised

It might sound like a foolish stunt to ask for something you know you cannot get, but I. C. Holloway, of the Imperial Theatre,, Anderson, S. C., requested permission of the Chamber of Commerce to put a banner across the street in front of the court house for "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

He knew he could not get it, but he knew that more than a hundred solid business men would hear of the coming play and help him to spread the word. He knew that this information would sink in more deeply if he got them excited about it, so he asked for the forbidden thing and every man in the room knew all about it—and remembered. It was neat work.

He gave out pupils' tickets admitting to the matinees for ten cents. That is his standard matinee price, but the cards were backed with an offer to let them in the following week for five cents to see the start of "White Eagle."

A composition contest for the schools was planned and the principals were so interested that they instructed the teachers to correct and grade the papers before turning them in, which saved Mr. Holloway a lot of work.

He brought the college principal to see the picture the opening day and got an endorsement that means that sold tickets and he bannered the taxis for a week in advance of the showing. All of which helped to a substantial increase at a cost of only $15.

THIS STRIKING PAINTING SOLD THE IDEA OF "CONFLICT"

It was planned by Harry Gould, of the Hippodrome, Fort Worth, Texas, and he put over the idea of the big punch in a most striking manner. The Universal star seems about to shoot down on the heads of the entering patrons in realistic fashion

Staged Opposition To Revive Business

Joseph Neiser, of the Majestic and Princess Theatres, London, Ont., knows that there is nothing like a good fight to get public interest. He decided that the business could stand a little more interest, so he quietly staged a scrap. He booked in Molly O against Peck's Bad Boy and advertised as though the two houses were in desperate rivalry. Then he split the second half of the week with Hail the Woman at one house and The Silent Call at the other. These he exploited through a mailing list obtained from the local paper, as against window work and lithographs for the comedies. The dramas did the better business, and now Neiser is trying to figure whether his patrons prefer drama to comedy, whether the last half of the week is better than the first, or whether mailing lists beat paper and window cards. It must be one of the three.

In any event the "fight" got the attention he was after, and business has shown a decided improvement. A little dose of exploitation is helpful now and then to the most profitable houses.

Molly 'O Ball Was a Feature in Columbus

In addition to about a hundred hook-up windows for Molly O goods, the Mack Sennett-First National feature was put over in Columbus, Ohio, by a ball ostensibly conducted by the Old Guard, an organization of G .A. R. men.

Admission was gained through donations of food or clothing to be distributed to the poor at Christmas, and some of the merchandise hook-ups added their contributions to the material brought in by the guests. They also donated prizes of Molly O goods for the most graceful dancers, and the street rubes helped the fun along with their antics.

The biscuit company making the Molly O sweet biscuit gave out samples in the lobby of the Majestic Theatre, and a cocoa manufacturer changed his brand to Molly O and added a tiny cup of hot chocolate to the cracker.

The publicity enabled the Majestic to hold the feature to solid business for two weeks, the second week being fully the equal of the first and leaving a lot for the second run houses to pick up.

Jockeys and Charts Helped "Thunderclap"

For Fox's "Thunderclap" the American Theatre, Paterson, used six jockeys on blooded horses, which patroled the street in pairs and staged impromptu races when it looked as though they could get away with it. Each man wore a sign on the back of his jacket and the saddlecloths were also lettered for the house and attraction.

The heralds were in the form of racing charts, with a mortise for the house announcement.

Got 1173 Children

When he played Rip Van Winkle, J. S. Hursey, of the Majestic Theatre, Memphis, put out a Rip to parade the streets, with instructions to kid the kiddies along. He selected a glib, persuasive talker, and he played to 1,173 children on the run, 542 being in the house for a single matinee. Even if some of the children were part orphans he probably reached two thousand adults through his juvenile press agents, not to mention the Parent-Teacher Association and some women's clubs.

"THE SHEIK" WAS SNUG AS A BUG IN A RUG IN CLARINDA

That's in Iowa, and Manager O'Hare, of the Armory, borrowed a tapestry rug that was worth a lot of money to back an oasis display for the Paramount traveling mint. It made the talk that brought in business in wholesale quantities

Desert and Rugs Made a Fine Sheik Display

Because of the phonograph records, it is easy to borrow music store windows for the display of pictures for "The Sheik." Manager O'Hare, of the Armory Theatre, Clarinda, Iowa, worked two good stunts on his music store window.

First he made a desert scene with three tents, but he did not think to people it with cutouts from the stills. Then he backed this with a tapestry rug that probably cost more money than the theatre would take in at a performance. It might have been woven with its use as a lithograph in mind, for it fitted perfectly into the display.

This was backed with another rug of conventional pattern and some pampas grass. The usual palms were omitted to give space to framed stills. A foliage background would have cut the desert off from the rug and vice versa, and this was a better arrangement. A copy of the song and two of the records constituted the store's show of the advertising, but for that matter it all ran for the store as well as for the theatre, and both cleaned up on this simple but very effective display.

Makes Short Feature His Stronger Appeal

Figuring that the name of James Oliver Curwood possessed a stronger appeal than The Serenade, Manager Bradt of the People's Theatre, Portland, Ore., gave "The White Mouse" the place of display on his front and let the longer feature ride on that.

For that matter he played the author's name to the exclusion of the title, for the author is shown in rustic letters at the base of this painted scenes in two planes, and the title is shown only on the insert cards.

The picture is a rather non-committal scene in the Northwest, but it caught the eye, was typical of the atmosphere of the Curwood stories and brought in the money, perhaps better than the more pretentious offering. Both were First National titles.

Freak Stunts Sold Caligari Booking

Booking "The Cabinet of Dr. Calibari" into the Orpheum Theatre, York, Pa., a drama house, the Goldwyn company sent Alvin R. Plough down to put it over for the benefit of the natives, and Plough dug out some freak stunts to help along.

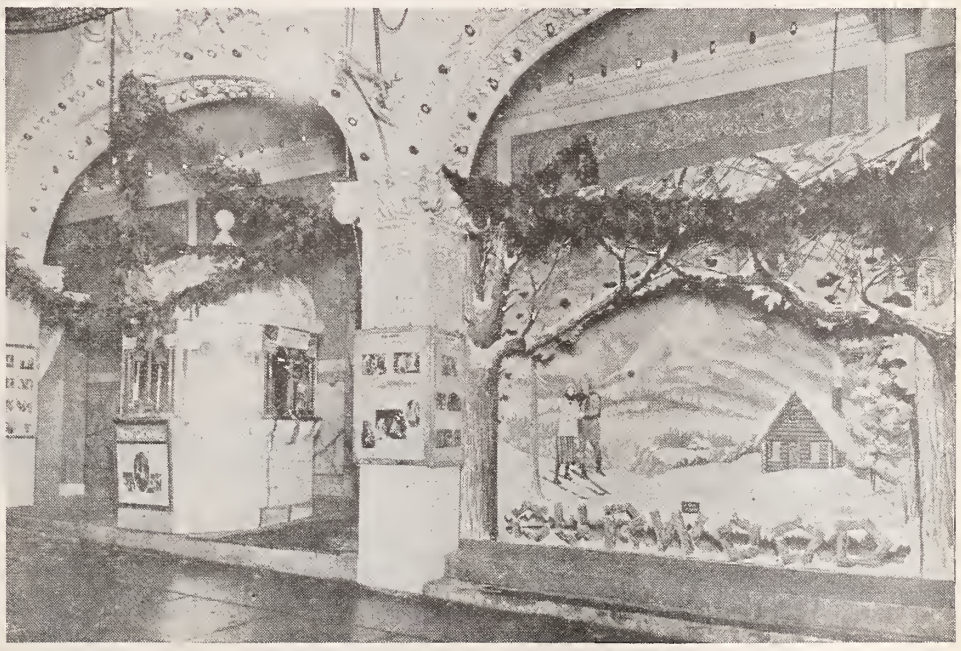
One was to charter an Indian princess mind reader in a vaudeville house next door to reply at each performance, in answer to the question: "What can I do to keep my husband from sleep walking," with the advice to take him to see the Goldwyn offering. It got a laugh, but it carried business with it.

A good stunt was placing a six sheet cutout in front of a saloon which had just been raided by enforcement officers. Everyone gave the place a passing glance, and could not well overlook the sign. Other cutouts were landed in the public square, which was also the street car transfer point, and it was announced that every person who could prove that he walked in his sleep would be the guest of the management on the second day. And five persons really qualified. These, with a liberal showing of posters and cut rate tickets to the Y. M. C. A. and T. W. C. A. kept business up for a three-day run.

Blamed it on Jackie

George Monroe, of the Gilbert Theatre, Beatrice, Neb., took all his old display cards and inserts, lettered them "Peck's Bad Boy did this," and went around town looking for broken windows, torn screens and everything that could be blamed on a small boy. He even placarded the site of a recent fire. It did not occur to him to "break" a few show windows with a jagged line of soap, but you can do this.

As a finishing touch he accumulated a pile of wrecked wagons and broken furniture in front of his house and similarly labeled the pile. It got a laugh, and the laugh brought business at practically no cost.



THROWS MOST OF THE DISPLAY TO A SHORT FIRST NATIONAL

How Manager Bradt, of the People's Theatre, Portland, Oregon, gave the major space to a short Curwood story instead of to the longer release, playing up the Curwood name even to the exclusion of the title, "The White Mouse"

Grauman Press Agent Betters Selling Talk

For Don't Tell Everything, which was the second anniversary attraction at Grauman's Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, the copy writer sells the show much more successfully than he did The Sheik, chiefly because he does not overexert himself. The panels on either side of the star names hook in to the the attractor with "We tried so hard to hear no evil, speak no evil, see no evil, but—"and on the other side "But we knew too much about each other and one of us talked too much, so———?" This serves capitally to get the interest, but the lower panel is almost a repeat, and loses force through the similarity. Here a newer approach should have been made. A good disposition of the large lines is made and those side panels contribute not a little toward the general effect since they lighten the space and keep it from becoming too heavy, as it might have been had the names been written larger. The anniversary lines are rather inconspicuous, but it is to be presumed that this feature was taken over into the news stories and on the house front. The artist's weakest point is the lettering of the names in that linear background. You scarcely see them. It does not matter a great deal whether you do or not, since they are so prominently displayed just below, but a heavier lettering would have put them over and have sold the names while the cut was still engrossing the attention.

THE RIALTO ANNIVERSARY AD

Circle Theatre Layout Makes a Good Seller

About the best of the advertising yet shown on Molly O comes from the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis where a large space did not betray the copy writer into an endeavor to tell everything he knew about the play. This is 200 lines across five; considerably better than a quarter page, and some agents would have written several thousand words about the Mack Sennett production, but there are just 49 words in that bank of selling talk—and it sells. To save you the trouble of picking it up, here it is in eight point: "Start the New Year right with a laugh—climb to success and happiness with gay and mischievous Molly and see what happens when a wash-woman's daughter leads the grand march at a society ball. It starts with a roar, runs into romance and ends with a riot of thrills." If you had half a dollar in your pocket, don't you think you would hustle over to the Circle and swap it for a ticket? We think a lot of people did. The sketches mean little or nothing. They indicate in a very general way the nature of the play, but they are not particularly characteristic nor have they very great seling value. They are used chiefly to embellish the text, and to this end they are purposely kept light in outline, which not only throws the type into greater prominence but keeps within the spirit of the talk. Solid sketches, even though they had a greater selling value so far as pose went, would deaden down the aspect of the space and detract from the intimate tone of the appeal. It is an example of closely fitting the sketches to the text and making them help instead of hinder. The only real selling picture is the character drawing of Miss Normand. That will influence the sale directly. The rest helps more through not hindering, and that, in itself is an accomplishment. We think it not only the best Molly advertising to date, but one of the best designs to come from the Circle.

Three Styles of Ads in This Set of Four

There is always variety to the Shea small advertisements, but this set of four for Don't Tell Everything offers three distinct styles. The first and third are caricatures, while the second is a straight pictorial and the fourth cleverly adapts the old East Indian monkey group of "Hear no evil. Speak no evil. See no evil." The idea is singularly well carried out in the single column space. Much of the text in these four displays is almost too small, in spite of the clearness of the lettering, because it falls below the point of easy legibility, but a personal appearance was added to the Don't Tell Everything, and you cannot tell everything in a single forty-two lines. In point of lettering the displays are below the Shea standard, merely because they are so small, but the designs are unusually well done; so well done that we regret the artist was forced to talk too much. He might have made this a set of record breakers with only the feature and the smaller reels to sell.

Odd Opening in Display Makes Good Attractor

The Karlton, Philadelphia, hit upon an excellent shape attractor lately in a display for "Fool's Paradise." This is only seventy lines across three, yet it is a dominant space on the page because the cuts are set in to make a distinctive shape for the announcement and then the title is played up without competition from the other lines, though ample copy is used. The cuts do not come up very well, but they do not have to. It would be almost as good were the cut spaces merely filled with solid black, for it is the outline and not the use of cuts which attracts. The unusual outline is always striking simply because it is unusual. Generally it is the circle or diamond which is used to get attention, and this is a modification of the diamond form with an opening at the top to keep the text in close association with the signature. The form is closed at the bottom to cut off the underline, but it is left open at the top to hold in the house name. If the line ran across the top the same as it does at the bottom, the effect would not be as good by at least 25 percent for then the message of the title would not be as clearly linked to the house. At it is you get Karlton and "Fool's Paradise" in one glance because there is no heavy matter intervening. Here is an idea which any fairly competent artist can copy, and he will find that it gives him more in a comparatively small space than would a reverse cut of four times the area. Good attractors can be had, if one plans intelligently, and this is a really clever bit of work, and it looks like intelligence and not accident.

—P. T. A.—

This Reverse Drawing Lacking in Strength

Probably in pure whites and blacks this drawing for the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, was a very sightly thing, but when it was reduced to a greyish black on a yellowish paper it did not look so well. A much better result could have been gained with black lettering and light benday curtains, with the drawing cut into with a white line to define the black.

A SKETCH THAT FELL DOWN

Even better would have been an outline sketch with some real type instead of lettering. This is an example of a lot of the work done between the two oceans. It seldom comes out well, yet artists keep on turning out the design in spite of that fact, possibly because they hope to be the exception to the general rule. With such a drawing, the star and title should have been painted in a thick white letter. This would not have been as symmetrical as the lettering used, but between symmetry and ticket sales, we think that most managers prefer money to art effects, and this is not even sufficiently artistic to come under the latter classification. The sketch means nothing. It is a picture of two curtains with a man in oriental dress standing beside the opening. He does not arouse any particular curiosity as to why he should be there, and the portrait does not look enough like Miss MacDonald to permit a clear type announcement to be dispensed with. It is four 175 lines with about 150 lines on each column wasted. A four twenty-fives would have told more than is given in this sketch, and there is not enough to that mortise to save the space. We might excuse the reverse if the drawing meant something, but it has not even that excuse. It is mostly a waste of about 500 out of 700 lines.

Adding to the Title a Trifle Confusing

With the Son of Wallingford and Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford both on the first run market, there is bound to be some confusion in the minds of the fans, and the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, adds to the confusion by contributing a third title, The Son of Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford. From the appearance of the copy it would seem that the Get-Rich-Quick was added after the lettering had been done, for it is in a different style. We think that with so much type to be used, the management has lost out through not telling of the big punches of the play. The lake of burning oil is sensational enough to get anyone's money, the real estate deals and the drilling for the oil are all points which will sell better than the generalities in this copy. It is very poor selling for a first run house and is either careless or ignorant, for the Vitagraph press book carries a wealth of material. The copy almost suggests that the management hoped that the picture would not make money. It might have been written by a man who had heard of the Chester stories but had never heard of the play, but it should not have been written from this slant by anyone who reads the trade papers or the fan magazines. It is the poorest copy we have ever seen from a McCormick-managed house. Possibly the advertisement writer thought he could sell the characters better than the story, but he should have sold the characters through the story. It just goes to show that even the best of us will take a tumble now and then.

Schenectady Theatre Has Good Sheik Ads

The Strand Theatre, Schenectady, put over The Sheik with a well planned campaign. It started in ten days in advance to tell that the big Paramount production was coming. A series of three reading advertisements about three and a half inches, single, were first used on successive days. The first gave a general outline of the picture, the second told just who the Sheik was and the third went back to a general seller. There was a drop for a couple of days, then one teaser, followed by four the next day, then another two-day cessation and the big campaign broke. with a few extra lines built on, but it shows that the press book stuff can be used to make money with—which was not always the case a couple of years ago. It is a good selling cut because it tells in the single pose the essential idea of the play. It is conventional work, but it put the engagement over to a lot more money than is usually made by the house, and paid for all the extra advertising.

This Cleveland Trio Shows Good Writing

We rather imagine that the advertising copy for the Gusdanovic houses in Cleveland is done by the sign writer rather than an artist. This looks more like the work of a sign writer, who is intent upon getting the message over in good lettering. He does a better and neater job of it than would an artist, who probably would be more concerned about his art than legibility. The lettering is a little rough, but every line of it can be read in the size in which it is shown in the original, and this s a great deal more than can be said for some of the art work in which the pictures are more or less pretty, but in which the message is not put over. The only type is the cast and other details of the operatic production at the Circle, where a comic opera company plays each night and three matinees, the film feature rising to star place at the other afternoon performances.

Selling the Picture to the Public

This is an odd idea, but probably the signers will not play daily matinees, or possibly the other days were used for rehearsal of the next production, the matinees being given on Saturday, Sunday and Monday. The second string houses merely offer the main title and the comedy, but get those over well. We do not like the "first four days." Probably that is explicit enough, but Monday to Wednesday is more definite and more elegant. The space is 150 lines across four, and this gives ample room without crowding. It strikes us that comic opera should give a stronger appeal than vaudeville and will cost less. The idea is interesting, for there is more sound music tucked away in the old opera comique than can be found in most of the present day girl shows.

finest house of the old Hulsey string, and we think a lot of Texans were coaxed into the house to see "the silken darling of a hundred harem beauties." We didn't notice a hundred beauties when we saw the First National presentation, but perhaps Texas liked them. It was more the production than the players which seemed to count, but it goes to show that the Palace press agent has imagination. For a comparatively small space this display makes a big flash. Paneling the announcement, with the light line used, does not cut the text from the cuts, and yet it serves to widen the space without increasing the space bill. It is a very intelligent handling of the three sevens, both as to the copy and its disposition, in the space. The placement of the signature is unusual, but this balances better than where the signature is centered, for then it would be in confliction with the cut at the left. It is all so well done that we hope to obtain other examples of the work. The copy is the chief point of merit, for it gives the idea of a snappy story with an elaborate production. It sells just what the house has to offer, and all too often the copy for a display is at variance with the nature of the story to be sold and sells people on the wrong idea. Often a patron will feel dissatisfaction with a story, not because it is poor, but because it is not what he had been led to expect, and disappointment is mistaken for lack of merit. The same play, properly sold, might have pleased the same person.

Strong Selling Talk for Over the Hill

J. M. Blanchard, of the Strand, Sunbury, Pa., does not tell where he got this copy for "Over the Hill." If he wrote it himself, he should hire someone to pat him on the back, for it is capitally done. If he found it somewhere, he at least has an appreciation of a good thing. We are inclined to believe that Mr. Blanchard wrote it, for he was one of the earliest contributors to this deparment, and he was not a newcomer then. He lays his copy very interestingly. He starts off with a statement that gets attention and then he proceeds to prove his point in well written argument. He hinges his appeal on the argument that a story which ran for a year in New York and appealed to all classes of patrons must be out of the ordinary. There is nothing flamboyant about the talk. It is all sane and analytic. There is not a single "greatest" or "most costly" in the entire panel. It is as sane as the announcement of a legitimate bond issue, but every argument carries deep conviction with it.

The crowds that made up the audience of "Over the Hill" conshtute one of the strongest psychological phenomena of stage history. It was not a gathering of the erudite and wealthy. MR. BLANCHARD'S COPY

It is a fine example of selling a picture on pitiless logic and it stands in a class almost by itself. It carries a greater appeal than the type displays used by Griffith for "Way Down East" and "Orphans of the Storm," and we think it did him infinitely more good than a lot of loose talk and unsupported statement. It is not the sort of advertisement to be run for all attractions, week in and week out, but for a worthy production it puts over the idea as nothing in the line of jazz writing possibly could. We believe that this brought out more cash buyers than any other form of approach could have done. It's one advertisement among thousands. Some of these old-timers are still hard to beat.

"To our patrons" just below the title, which reads: "We are not placing sensationally titled photoplays on our program, nor adopting flagrant methods to win patrons to our box office. We want you to know that in this picture you will find a remarkable story well worthy of your presence." This will do a lot toward saving the business of the conservatives and add their numbers to those who will come in the hope that the story will prove sensational in spite of this disclaimer. The display is well treated to achieve this end, for the statements are sensational, they lead to speculation, which will develop interest, and yet there is at no time a statement made that the story is what the title suggests at the first glance. The printer has done his share and has turned out something he need not be ashamed of. The absence of all heavy type, even in the title, also helps not a little. With heavy display lines the effect aimed at would have been destroyed, for this cannot be handled in heavy type without conveying the suggestion of a sensational and rather questionable melodrama. The press agent has adopted just the right note for the most advantageous sale.

News in Brief from Everywhere

Washington State

The Allied Amusement Interests, of Washington State, held an organization meeting at the Washington Annex Hotel on January 31. L. O. Lukan, manager of the Seattle First National Exchange, was elected president.

An epidemic of grippe which has been going the rounds in Seattle has incapacitated a great many of the managers and employes in the film offices and also a number of exhibitors in the surrounding territory. Some of the film offices have been so handicapped that it was almost impossible to continue business. For instance, last Monday at the Vitagraph office not a single stenographer turned up, and Manager George Jackson was taken sick the next day and confined to his bed for several days.

Among others who have been ill are Jack Lannon, president of Greater Features; J. G. Von Herberg, of Jensen & Von Herberg; L. J. Schlaifer, manager of Universal; William W. Lewis, of the Theatre Equipment Co., and W. C. Gowen, Oregon representative for Vitagraph. Mr. Lewis is the only one among these who has been seriously ill.

When the Pantages Theatre in Spokane advertised the coming of the film depicting the adventures of Roy Gardner, famous train bandit, together with the personal appearance of Mrs. Gardner, the censor board of the city demanded a preview of the act and afterwards ordered its suppression. The theatre management took the case into court before Judge Lindsey, who upheld the censor board's decision on the ground that such films might encourage crime. Mrs. Gardner's regular speech was suppressed because it was an appeal for sympathy for the convict, she claiming that all he needs is an operation on the head and that it is to raise money for this purpose that she is appearing on the stage.

"Molly O" is completing its third big week at the Strand, Seattle.

An attempted robbery of the film vault of the Pathe Exchange on the night of January 27 failed after the robbers had knocked the combination lock from the door. The robbers lowered themselves into the film offices with a knotted rope tied around the chimney after taking a square of glass from the skylight. The offices were ransacked, but nothing of value was stolen. The clumsy manner in which the attempt was made in evidence that these were not experienced film thieves, as was the case in the two recent film thefts in Seattle.

J. G. Von Herberg returned from his Benton County ranch last week with a story of a rabbit hunt as marvelous as anything the film salesmen tell exhibitors about their productions.

"Our ranch is the only one under irrigation for some distance, consequently the rabbits, searching for food, have been concentrating there. In Eastern Washington they are an extreme pest, for they consume tons and tons of hay, grain and alfalfa. With the snow on the ground they seek out the haystacks. And so they came thousands upon thousands, just like great droves of sheep, running hundreds abreast on the ranch. From one haystack we killed 150 rabbits in one day, and about the same number the next day. One merely pulls the trigger and he can't miss. But our efforts were puny; we didn't make a dent among them. They are thicker than ever."

J. A. Conant has resigned the management of the Select office and has gone to New York. Claude C. Ezell, personal representative to Lewis J. Selznick, is in temporary charge of the Seattle office.

Work is being rushed on the new T. & D. Theatre at Richmond and when this is completed two theatres will be operated there by the Turner & Dahnken Circuit.

A miniature war is being waged at Oakland over the right of Commissioner Albert Carter to refuse to permit large productions being shown in the Oakland Auditorium Theatre. Following the showing of several large pictures there the local managers of the T. & D., the Century, the American and the Franklin filed protests, declaring that the projection of pictures in the city building prevented them from getting the pictures themselves and was being held as a club by booking agents who demanded exorbitant prices.

C. F. Montgomery, manager of the T. & D. Theatre, Berkeley, recently received word from his daughter to the effect that she and her husband were members of a party trapped by snow in the mountains near Los Angeles, following a snowstorm that swept the southern part of the state.

Redecorated in old rose and gold and with new screen settings and draperies, the Orpheum Theatre at Hammond, which was taken over recently by the S. J. Gregory Theatre Company, owners of the Parthenon Theatre, was formally opened under the new management on Wednesday, January 25. The Orpheum had been a vaudeville house for years and was operated by Gumbinger & Michelsetter. However, when the new Parthenon, devoted to moving pictures, was opened, business at the Orpheum decreased and the lease was then sold to the Gregory Theatre Company. The programs will consist of moving pictures and music.

The anti-Sunday moving picture show forces, which, several months ago, were conducting an active campaign at Portland, Ind., apparently have given up the fight. Among a number of the state cases dismissed from the circuit court docket at Portland this week on motion of the prosecuting attorney were thirteen Sabbath desecration charges against three Jay county moving picture exhibitors.

One case was against Earl Coble, proprietor of a theatre at Redkey, four cases were against J. S. Hines, of the Princess Theatre at Portland, five were against Mrs. Hines, two were against William M. Francis and the other against Francis' wife, for operating the Crystal Theatre at Portland on Sundays. The jury in two former cases against Hines disagreed after long deliberation.

The Neal Theatre at Montpelier has been sold by Charles Neal to C. O. Pickens, manager of the Strand at Kokomo. Mr. Pickens said the theatre will be closed for some time for repairs and improvements.

Jacob Handelman, manager of the Oliver at South Bend, had as special guests at a matinee this week more than 100 youngsters from the Orphans Home at Mishawaka. They were transported in a special car provided by the South Bend and Northern Indiana Railway Company.

A number of improvements have recently been made in the Luna at Logansport, which not only have added to the appearance of the theatre, but have made it more convenient for the patrons. The projection booth has been moved from the balcony to the first floor, the screen has been moved back about twenty five feet and the seating arrangement has been materially changed.

Canada

Civic officials in a number of Canadian cities hastened to make announcements regarding the safety of theatre structures under their jurisdiction following the Knickerbocker Theatre disaster in Washington, D. C. Victor Carmel, superintendent of the civic building department of Montreal, issued a statement in which he declared that Montreal theatres were built with a view to carrying a very heavy load of ice and snow. Thorough precautions were, he said, a premier consideration in all Canadian cities where climatic conditions rendered them necessary.

H. Newlands, city building inspector of Ottawa, Ontario, declared in a similar statement that all floors and roofs in Ottawa were tested to double their guaranteed capacity for weight. Snow on the roof was calculated to weigh from twenty-five to thirty pounds a cubic foot and tests were made for double and triple this weight.

There was considerable theatrical color to the Canadian National Winter Carnival which was held in Ottawa during the week of January 30. One of the stunts was a demonstration by a band of Mohawk Indians from the St. Lawrence Reservation under the command of Chief Martin Two-Axe. The Braves were guests at Loew's and the Family Theatre during the week, while the many visiting snowshoers were the guests at a theatre party in the Francais Theatre.

Manager Livingstone, of the Allen's Regent Theatre, had a float in the various parades to boost the Fox special, "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court." Harry Brouse, proprictor of the Imperial Theatre, hooked-up with the carnival idea in various ways in the presentation of "Carnival."

Three theatres of Ottawa were checked up because they were not providing an official matron to act as general guardian for unaccompanied children admitted to the theatres for Saturday and holiday matinee performances, as required by the Ontario statutes. The Francais, Casino and Princess Theatres were the ones which received the warning from the local police department.

Chicago

Theatre managers whose patrons come from the agricultural class have lost the air of gloom which enveloped them earlier in the winter. The outlook is bright, and as for the present, Petey Wales, who owns a chain of small town theatres in Northwestern Illinois, declares that the week just ended was the best he had known for some time. Mr. Wales headquarters at Lanark.

The newspapers are co-operating with the theatres of Davenport, Iowa, this week, to make a big success of their "Go to Theatre Week."

Richard Robertson, of the publicity department of Ascher Enterprises, is making a tour of the out-of-town Ascher houses, spending a couple of weeks at each place and putting on a special exploitation campaign. His first stop was at Peoria, where he worked in the interests of the Palace Theatre. Miss Esther Brandt has been added to the publicity department.

Following the Knickerbocker Theatre disaster at Washington, the Chicago theatres have been undergoing a rigid investigation by city officials. All have been found thoroughly safe.

Another meeting of the Chicago exhibitors was held last Tuesday to discuss ways and means for reducing film rentals. No definite method was decided upon and further meetings will be called.

* * *

A picture theatre seating 1,160 will be built next spring in Lincoln, Ill., by Steve Bennis, owner of the Lincoln Theatre. The theatre building will have three stores and a lobby. Construction work will start in March. Mr. Bennis is a successful theatre manager, who started in the picture show business many years ago.

Washington, D. C.

Joseph P. Morgan, general manager of the Crandall Enterprises here, was given a great surprise recently, following his joining the ranks of the benedicts. One morning orders were issued that all employes of the Crandall Theatres should attend the screening of a picture in the screening room of the Metropolitan. They were told to be on time, the orders being conveyed to them by Mr. Morgan at the request of Mr. Crandall.

Mr. Morgan was the last one to enter the room. When he arrived he was thunderstruck to see the new Mrs. Morgan sitting up in the front row. Still wondering he joined her and later lost his breath when Mr. Crandall on behalf of all those assembled made a speech accompanying the presentation of a complete set of sterling silver table ware all engraved with an old English "M."

Dr. Herbert M. Rollins, of Hong Kong, is in Los Angeles forming a producing organization to go to the Orient. He states he will produce a series of photo-dramas that will be a combination of educational and dramatic efforts combined. He has the endorsement of the Chinese Government. Two studios have recently been constructed in China—one in Pekin and one in Shanghai.

Independent productions seem to be getting a new impetus. M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios, states that three additional producing units will soon be at work at that studio. John Jasper, president of the Hollywood Studios, is planning for two more producing companies to start operations with in the next few weeks. One of these will be a company of players from Mexico City who are seeking to learn American methods of production.

The W. M. P. A. is planning its first annual frolic and ball to be held at the Ambassador Hotel on March 15 with all stars in attendance. Ray Leek will be in charge, with Harry Hammond Beall as editor of the newspaper 'The Wampus," to be printed in honor of the occasion. W. E. Keefe will be business manager.

C. S. Jensen, senior member of Jensen and Von Herberg, Portland and Seattle, with Mrs. Jensen is a visitor to Los Angeles and is being piloted back and forth to the studios by John S. McCormick, western representative of the Associated First National.

Allen Holubar is cruising off the coast of Mexico in the former German raider, "The Oregon," shooting scenes for "The Soul Seeker," in which Miss Dorothy Phillips is starred. He expects to spend two weeks aboard the vessel.

W. Lawson Butt has formed his own producing company to be known as the W. W. Lawson Butt Productions. The first picture will be a film version of "The Flying Dutchman" with Lloyd Carleton directing. The initial production will be made at the Pacific Studios, San Mateo.

A new laboratory capable of turning out a total capacity of 1,500,000 feet of film every forty-eight hours will soon be installed at the Famous-Players Lasky studios, according to Frank E. Garbutt, recently appointed technical advisor. This will almost double the capacity of the laboratory.

Dr. H. B. Breckwedel is soon to build a $100,000 theatre on Pico street, near Twefth avenue. Its capacity will be slightly more than 2,000 and it will open sometime in November. A Roman garden will be one of the features.

Richard Walton Tully has received word that Milano Hilden stage manager for Guy Bates Post for eight years, will soon arrive at the United Studios to assist him in the production of the Tully features.

Edna Purviance, who has been leading woman for Charlie Chaplin for several years, will burst forth as a star in her own right as soon as Chaplin completes his current production in which Miss Purviance plays the leading feminine role. Chaplin will probably act as supervising director. Miss Purviance has received numerous offers from various independent producers to star in her own right, but has always refused to leave the Chaplin organization.

Pearl White sailed for France on the Aquitania February 7. She will be gone but a few weeks.

Samuel L. Rothafel has been made honorary member of the New York City fire department in recognition of his paternal interest in the fire department band, and carries an inscribed gold badge to prove it.

Probably an immediate overture at the Capitol Theatre will be "Fireman, Save My Child," set to music, "When the Firebells Are Ringing" or "The Fire in the Old Stoneyard."

Or maybe he will make a revival of Selig's old picture, "The Still Alarm."

Anzia Yezierska, author of the eminently successful "Hungry Hearts," which Goldwyn made into a picture to be released soon, has written another novel called "Salome of the Tenements." Boni & Liveright are publishing it. We have also heard a rumor to the effect that Goldwyn intends making a picture of it.

One of the humorous occurrences of the week was watching Lowell Sherman strutting around the Sixty Club dance sporting a monocle.

Jack Mulhall, whose latest appearance was as leading man in "Turn to the Right," arrived in New York last week from Hollywood. It is his first visit in the East in eight years.

It remainder for marriage to disclose the fact that Fred E. Baer, advertising manager for Charles Urban, is known to his family as "Eugene." Friends who have been calling him "Fred" are surprised, upon meeting his bride, to hear her call him "Eugene." Presumably, we may expect Baer now to part his name in the middle, thus: F. Eugene Baer.

Clarence L. Brown, who has been directing Hope Hampton in her forthcoming First National feature, "The Light in the Dark," is confined to his apartment in the Commodore, a victim of influenza.

Shooting the final scenes have continued at the Paragon studio under the direction of Jack Hyland, assistant director, a number of big sets being completed under his guidance.

A new infant in the infant industry!

Born, a baby with a problematical future!

Kathryn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Victor Heerman, made her debut on this terrestrial ball Sunday, February 5. Mr. Heerman is the widely known motion picture director now in the employ of Selznick Pictures' Corporation. Mrs. Heerman is professionally known under her maiden name of Sarah Y. Mason as the writer of many successful motion picture plays.

Kathryn may become a scenarist —or she may become a motion picture directress, for these are the days when women are invading every field heretofore dominated by men. Certainly she's going to have something to do with the infant motion picture industry.

"Back Pay" Opens at the Rivoli

"Back Pay," a Cosmopolitan Production released by Paramount, will have its first New York presentation at the Rivoli Theatre the week of February 12. This production represents the combined talents of the same three cinema experts who collaborated on "Humoresque," Fannie Hurst authoress; Frank Borsage, director; and Frances Marion, scenarist.

While Cosmopolitan Production was at work on its screen version, the story was dramatized and has since been seen on the speaking stage on Broadway and elsewhere.

Seena Owen and Matt Moore, the two leading players are said to give the best performances of their careers in this drama. They are supported by J. Barney Sherry, Ethel Duray, Charles Craig and Jerry Sinclair.

Miss Holmquist Sails on Short Visit Overseas

Sigrid Holmquist, the Swedish Mary Pickford, who recently finished a starring part with Pyramid Pictures, Inc., in Ray C. Smallwood's latest photodrama, "My Old Kentucky Home," was a passenger on board the Acquitania last Tuesday. Miss Holmquist, although she has been in this country only nine months, has appeared in three photodramas of excellence.

Her American debut was made at the Rialto Theatre when International released "Just Around the Corner," "Prophets Paradise," a Selznick attraction in which Eugene O'Brien is starred and Miss Holmquist plays the female lead, will shortly be releaesd. "My Old Kentucky Home," Miss Holmquist's most recent vehicle, will be given to the trade world within the next several weeks.

Before boarding the Aquitania, Miss Holmquist said that she was delighted with the reception that the American public has given her personally and the manner in which they have received her work via the silent drama. She is going away for six weeks.

Uses Wealth of Pictorial Matter

Three twenty-four sheet stands, twelve six-sheet boards, nine three-sheet stands, and fifty half sheet stands is the wealth of pictorial matter taken regularly on every Selznick attraction by J. Dalrymple, of the Imperial Theatre, Rockdale, seven miles from Sydney, Australia.

His theatre seats 1,500 and has orchestra of eight and a pipe organ which is operated during matinees. The theatre is open nightly and twice on Saturdays.

Storm Joins Fox

The latest acquisition of the Fox Corporation is Jerome Storm, director. Mr. Storm's first picture will be a production starring John Gilbert, being made under the working title, "In the Land of Beginning Again."

Consensus of Published Reviews

Here are extracts from news available at press hour from publications of the industry boiled down to a sentence. They present the views of Moving Picture World (M.P.W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E.H.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitors' Trade Review (T.R.); Film Daily (F.D.).

Why Announce Your Marriage

(Elaine Hammerstein—Selznick—5 Reels)

M. P. W.—Delightful entertainment.

F. D.—Will please star's admirers and title can be used effectively.

N.—Pleasing story on a novel theme.

E. H.—An exceptionally good comedy.

Turn to the Right

(Alice Terry—Metro—8 Reels)

M. P. W.—Perfect balance of drama promises to make the picture duplicate the success of the famous stage play.

T. R.—The box-office appeal of this picture is perfectly easy to recognize.

N.—Mr. Ingram has embroidered it with deft touches, providing happy balances, well-rounded character sketches, and a subtle vein of humor.

F. D.—Stage play makes fine entertainment for screen.

E. H.—Here is a remarkable, smooth-running and entertaining adaptation of the famous stage play of the same name.

Why Men Forget

(Featured Cast—Robertson-Cole—5 Reels)

M. P. W.—Has nothing to redeem it, nor anything that would justify more than the slightest consideration.

T. R.—This picture will get over.

E. H.—Stock situations and mediocre story here.

F. D.—Below the average.

N.—In factory localities this may get over. Even these spectators may not find it a means of entertainment.

The Scrapper

(Herbert Rawlinson—Universal—4,491 Feet)

M. P. W.—Particularly interesting to those of Irish extraction.

N.—Irish character sketch mostly sub-titles.

F. D.—A very mild story in comparison with its title. Rawlinson's admirers may be satisfied.

T. R.—Here's a pleasing offering starring Herbert Rawlinson.

E. H.—This picture will prove a hit with any Irish audience and will probably please others as well.

Man to Man

(Harry Carey—Universal-Jewel—5,629 Feet)

M. P. W.—Good entertainment.

N.—Physical action in Carey's latest.

T. R.—Here's one of the best Westerns of the season.

F. D.—Will satisfy admirers of Harry Carey.

The Prodigal Judge

(Jean Paige—Vitagraph—7,803 Feet)

M. P. W.—Maclyn Arbuckle gives an unfortunate performance. Any number of excellent characterizations. The opportunities for drama are many and the last part of the picture, especially, excels in the way the big scenes are handled.

N.—"The Prodigal Judge" will be remembered as a picture for its clearly defined characterization and its rich and quaint atmosphere.

T. R.—It has been a long time since we have seen so pleasing a picture as "The Prodigal Judge."

F. D.—Fine characterization and pleasing atmosphere in this.

One Glorious Day

(Will Rogers—Paramount—5,100 Feet)

M. P. W.—Well presented novelty full of imagination. Entertainment of high order, and the whole thing is presented in a whimsically humorous vein.

N.—Decided novelty and cameraman's triumph.

T. R.—The film is simply made to amuse, and attains its object so thoroughly that the most hardboiled cynic could not view it without being cajoled into wearing a broad grin.

E. H.—"One Glorious Day" is long on novelty and short on story. It has a certain amount of fascination.

F. D.—Genuinely fine comedy offered in distinct novelty feature.

Nancy from Nowhere

(Bebe Daniels—Realart—5,167 Feet)

M. P. W.—Mingles good comedy with strong melodrama.

N.—Conventional "slavey" story.

T. R.—Offers pleasing entertainment.

E. H.—One of the first and one of the commonest themes for sentimental screen drama. Old plot is worked out in good old-fashioned way.

F. D.—Star and direction help put over weak story.

Red Hot Romance

(Featured Cast—First National—5 Reels)

M. P. W.—John Emerson-Anita Loos production lives up to its lively and alluring title.

W.—"Red Hot Romance" a red hot comedy number.

T. R.—It is amusing entertainment and ought to prove a good box-office asset.

E. H.—This is a satirical comedy handled in a manner that makes it an unusual photoplay feature.

Smiles Are Trump

(Maurice Flynn—Fox—4,049 Feet)

M. P. W.—Coming under the class of railroad thrillers, the picture has the exciting trend that gave the earlier features such a fascinating appeal, and wherever this type of subject is appreciated, it should be a success.

N.—Railroad story is there with the action.

F. D.—Fine railroad melodrama with good action and plenty of thrills.

T. R.—Old fashioned railroad melodrama.

Two Kinds of Women

(Pauline Frederick—R. C. Pictures—5 Reels)

M. P. W.—Splendid directing and the star's remarkably vital personality have an effect like a tonic on scenes and circumstances that would otherwise be like many of our heroic Westerns.

N.—Pauline Frederick scores in a Western.

T. R.—A real thriller. It is a story of the West, old as the hills themselves, yet brought up to date with excellent attention to detail.

F. D.—Should satisfy.

E. H.—A well produced, convincing story of the West.

White Hands

(Hobart Bosworth—Wid Gunning, Inc.—5,654 Feet)

M. P. W.—Hobart Bosworth has a vehicle here that should offer a more advantageous selling angle than many of his previous ones.

N.—Good audience picture from every angle.

T. R.—There is not a lapse in the telling and interest holds sway to the end.

E. H.—This photodrama depends upon the star's performance and personality for its success.

Exit the Vamp

(Ethel Clayton—Paramount—5 Reels)

M. P. W.—Amusing comedy.

E. H.—Is easily the best of the recent Ethel Clayton pictures.

N.—Ethel Clayton puts sparkle in this conventional story.

F. D.—Pleasing entertainment made more so by a pleasing star.

Anne of Little Smoky

(Winifred Westover—Pathe—5 Reels)

M. P. W.—Story of the hill country portrayed by fine cast.

F. D.—Varied action, a good cast and some interesting situations place "Anne of Little Smoky" above the average Western entertainment.

E. H.—Western narrative that proves fair entertainment.

Lucky Carson

(Earle Williams—Vitagraph—5 Reels)

M. P. W.—Earle Williams, star of Vitagraph feature, which is of only ordinary program quality.

E. H.—Story is interesting at times but at other times is unconvincing and has too few dramatic incidents.

N.—Earle Williams will please his admirers here.

T. R.—This is a picture of average merit.

The Ruling Passion

(George Arliss—United Artists—7,000 Feet)

M. P. W.—This is a picture with an exceptional appeal.

T. R.—Here's one of the most entertaining and interesting photoplays of the season.

F. D.—Another superb performance by Arliss in a picture that's real entertainment.

N.—Great entertainment; the gem of the season.

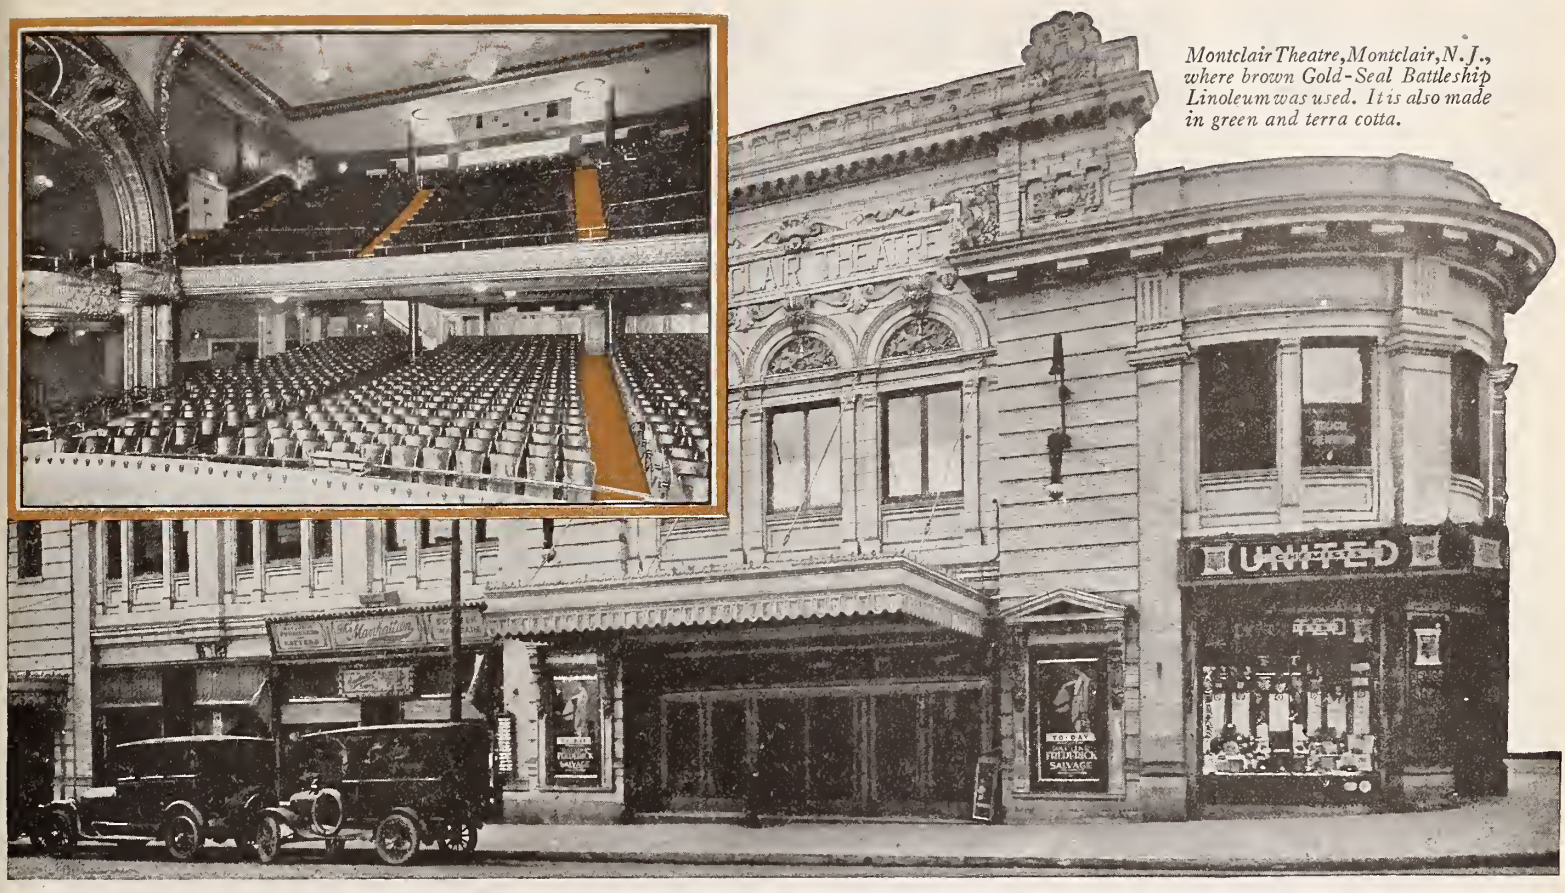
The Single Track

T. R.—The spirit of adventure runs riot through this picture, which registers as a good melodrama.

W.—Average picture mildly amusing; story weak.

N.—Story entertains.

E. H.—It is beautifully photographed and the various dramatic situations are effectively handled.



Montclair Theatre, Montclair, N. J., where brown Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum was used. It is also made in green and terra cotta.

Economical Floor-Covering for the Medium-Size, High-Class Theatre

What the average theatre owner wants is a good looking, durable, and reasonably priced floor-covering.

Expensive, easily ruined carpet may be the choice of palatial movie houses in the big cities, with their high prices and thousands of admissions every day. But the initial and replacement costs of carpet would make an appalling dent in the bank balances of most theatre-owners. Nor is fabric carpet the most practical from an efficiency standpoint.

For the man looking for the qualities most desirable in a floor-covering—attractiveness, quietness, and durability, ease and low cost of maintenance—Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum is the soundest possible investment.

Here is a floor-covering admirably suited to theatre service. As cork is one of the principal ingredients, it is pleasingly resilient and quiet beneath the tread of ever-changing audiences. The durability of Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum is beyond question. It is made in strict accordance with the rigid specifications of the United States Navy.

Gold-Seal Cork Carpet

Where absolutely quiet floors are desired, we suggest Gold-Seal Cork Carpet. This durable floor-covering is as silent and comfortable underfoot as a thick woven rug. A super-quiet covering for aisles, rest rooms, etc. It is made in attractive shades of brown, green and terra cotta.

Consult our nearest office for any information you may wish on floors or floor-covering for your theatre. We shall be glad to send you information, samples of Gold-Seal Battleship Linoleum and Cork Carpet, and specifications for their proper laying.

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER. This was a fine picture, pleased 90%, but we're paying too much money to the exchanges. They are not satisfied with their share, they want all you take in. Advertising; extra newspaper space and 24 sheet. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; good, considering conditions. Stanley H. McNeill, Rideau Theatre, Smith's Falls, Ont., Canada.

CHILD THOU GAVEST ME. Just a little draggy, but had many favorable comments on this one. Most everybody likes little "Dickey" Headrick and his name listed amongst the cast means a few extra "shekels" for us. You make no mistake playing this one. Advertising, newspapers and lobby. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. C. A. Pratt, Fox Theatre, Washington, Iowa.

DAUGHTER OF TWO WORLDS. Well received. Star local favorite. Weather unfavorable. Advertising; usual. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Thos. E. Orr, Princess Theatre, Albertville, Alabama.

DINTY. A very good picture, you will cry a little and laugh a lot; if you haven't played it you are missing a good one. Advertising; newspaper, heralds, slide and litho. Patronage; best. Attendance; poor. F. M. Holeman, Garrick Theatre, Madisonville, Kentucky.

A FIGHTING SHEPHERDESS. A mighty good picture that pleased 100%, and clean enough for anyone, according to a comment from the clergy. A tonic for any small town theatre, whether run-down or not. Advertising; posters, press and mail. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre, Grand Gorge, New York.

GIPSY BLOOD. A box-office failure. It failed to please and failed to draw. Advertising; post cards, posters, newspaper, etc. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; poor. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

LAST OF THE MOHICANS. Picture seemed to take well with nearly all. Advertising; extra newspaper. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; fairly good. Stanley H. McNeill, Rideau Theatre, Smith's Falls, Ont., Canada.

A MAN FROM NOWHERE (Arrow-released through F. N. Exchange). Exhibitors in small towns, if you cater to the better class, lay off this one. Jack Hoxie dead here after this. The most indecent picture ever shown here. Advertising; local newspaper, one and three-sheet posters. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; good. J. E. Evans, Star Theatre, Smithville, Tennessee.

MAN, WOMAN, MARRIAGE. Fine production, took well, ran for our New Year's program. Advertising; extra newspaper and 24 sheets. Patronage; all kinds. Attendance; good. Stanley H. McNeill, Rideau Theatre, Smith's Falls, Ont., Canada.

MAN, WOMAN, MARRIAGE. A wonderful picture and patrons were very well satisfied. Received more word of mouth advertising than any other picture ever shown in this theatre. Advertising; 24 sheets, sixes, threes and one sheets, newspaper, heralds, photos and home-made crosses or millposts designed from cuts in press book. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. A. W. Kaspar, Electric Theatre, Pomeroy, Ohio.

ONE ARABIAN NIGHT. A very poor feature for small cities, does not appeal to many first night, does not pull for the second. Advertising; extra newspaper, billboards and heralds. Patronage; family. Attendance; poor. J. A. McNear, Jr. Hill Opera House, Petaluma, California.

THE SCOFFER. A splendid picture that will please any audience. Don't judge the picture by the title, but judge for yourself. You can't make a mistake. Advertising; one six sheet, two one sheets, slide. Patronage; small town. Attendance very good. J. F. Schlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, North Carolina.

THE SCOFFER. Trade journal reports were off on this one, as it was extra good. Pleased all who saw it. Advertising; ordinary. Patronage; general. Attendance; light. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

SCRAP IRON. One of Charles' best pictures. He is liked by all. Advertising; slide, threes, ones, photos. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. D. D. Purcell, Amuse-U Theatre, Cortex, Colorado.

THE SIGN ON THE DOOR. Not much. Picture pleased, only fair. Norma Talmadge is not good in such pictures as this one. Advertising; one six sheet, four one sheets, window cards, heralds. Patronage; small-town. Attendance; fair. H. Odom, Dixie theatre, Durant, Mississippi.

THE WOMAN GIVES. Fair picture. Norma Talmadge not very popular here, so we lose money on this star on account of high valuation. Advertising; regular. Patronage; average. Attendance; fair only. Stanley H. McNeill, Rideau Theatre, Smith's Falls, Ont., Canada.

Fox

AFTER YOUR OWN HEART. A combination of comedy and thrills that is hard to beat. Audience well pleased with this one. Advertising; one sheets, three sheets, sixes, slide, photos. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. J. H. Holeman, Auditorium Theatre, Dawson Springs, Kentucky.

AFTER YOUR OWN HEART. An extra fine Tom Mix picture. Don't pass this one up, it's great. Advertising; three sheets, one sheet. Patronage; first class. Attendance; good. H. Odom, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Mississippi.

HANDS OFF. Mix as the star, 'nuff said. He always pleased them all. This is as snappy as any of his. Patronage; middle class. Attendance; good. M. Oppenheimer, Empire Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

JUST PALS. Buck Jones, five reels, semi-western, not much action in first two reels, but balance very good. Good comedy and splendid character acting. Advertising; hand bills, three sheets, one sheets and photos. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. Harry C. Waffle, Lyric Theatre, McIntosh, South Dakota.

MOUNTAIN WOMAN. Very good Pearl White picture. Went over fine. Advertising; sheets and photos, regular. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. Jno. Cleva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

OVER THE HILL. Opened fair attendance and ended week with day's record. Has a peculiar appeal which gets under the skin. We need more pictures of this calibre. Advertising; 800 inches paper, snipes, window tie-ups, contests, everything. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. L. Santikos, Rialto Theatre, San Antonio, Texas.

OVER THE HILL. A 100 per cent. picture from every angle. Ran three days to very poor business, not fault of the picture. Advertising; newspaper, billboards, handbills. Patronage; high class. Attendance; poor. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

OVER THE HILL. The best picture we ever had in the house. On account of Christmas eve and big storms only small crowd, but all agreed with us in our opinion of the picture. Admission advanced to 45c. Advertising; lobby, slides, program and handbills. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. W. H. Pike, Majestic Theatre, Las Vegas, Nevada.

PRIMAL LAW. This went over very good for us. Good stories will make Farnum popular here. The child actor in this deserves mention. Advertising; newspaper and lobby. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; poor. Ray Pfetcher, Isis Theatre, Roseville, Illinois.

A RIDIN' ROMEO. A good, peppy Tom Mix western. Subtitles very funny. Best business in two months. Advertising; lobby and program. Patronage; family. Attendance; good. Jos. J. Christie, Third Avenue Theatre, Watervliet, New York.

SINGING RIVER. Fair picture, nothing to brag about. Advertising; posters. Patronage; rural. Attendance; fair. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

BE MY WIFE. Max Linder pleased patrons very much and we are looking forward to his next. Good for children. Advertising; newspaper and hand bills. Patronage; small city. Attendance; good. Harold S. Clouse, Hollywood Theatre, Highwood, Minnesota.

GRIM COMEDIAN. Just another picture. An attempt at something bigger, but it doesn't get across. Advertising; lobby, slides and program. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. W. H. Pike, Majestic Theatre, Las Vegas, Nevada.

THE MAN WHO HAD EVERYTHING. Jack Pickford seemed to please the most of them and that's all I care for—to please my patrons. Advertising; lobby cards, paper and slide. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

Hodkinson

GOD'S CRUCIBLE. Beautiful scenery, good cast. All seem to be miscast. Story jumps around and is jerky. Most anyone with care could have arranged it much better. Our people did not go crazy over this one. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

RIP VAN WINKLE. A very pleasing production of this old time classic. Used a prologue and put it over good. Advertising; newspapers, mail, posters. Patronage; best rural. Attendance; good. B. A. Aughinbaugh, Community Theatre, Lewistown, Ohio.

Metro

ALIAS LADYFINGERS. Good, Lytell fine. Advertising; regular, posters, newspaper. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; average. W. B. Aspley, Aspley Theatre, Glasgow, Kentucky.

ALIAS LADYFINGERS. Pleased 100 per cent. Star is very popular here, and it is a very good story. Advertising; billboard, newspaper, lobby. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. G. E. Shilkett, St. Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

GARMENTS OF TRUTH. We did fairly well on this picture and everyone seemed to be satisfied. Good smalltown picture. Advertising; local newspaper. Patronage; smalltown. Attendance; fairly good. Harold S. Clouse, Hollywood Theatre, Highwood, Minnesota.

Paramount

AFTER THE SHOW. Good feature, only we think that it is a little too long and drawn out. Advertising; regular. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Fred S. Widenor, Opera House, Belvidere, New Jersey.

CALL OF THE NORTH. The best Holt picture I have ever run. A wonderful story well acted, pleased 100 per cent. Advertising; newspaper, lobby. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. G. E. Shilkett, St Denis Theatre, Sapulpa, Oklahoma.

CALL OF THE NORTH. 100 per cent. good, everyone was pleased with this one. Bigger business than with "The Affairs of Anatol." Advertising; three newspapers, window-cards, etc. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; great. J. Edw. Mitchell, Strand Theatre, Waverly, Massachusetts.

CALL OF THE NORTH. Exceptionally good picture with star, Jack Holt, liked better in this picture than any other. Advertising; newspapers, lobby, twelve one sheets, two 24 sheets. Patronage; the best. Attendance; good. H. B. Barr, Rialto Theatre, Enid, Oklahoma.

CAPPY RICKS. Picture pleased everyone. Boost this and you'll pack 'em in. Vaudeville and high prices killed it for us. Advertising half sheet cards, newspapers and window display. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; only fair. C. D. MacGregor, Princess Theatre, Chatham, Ont., Canada.

CITY SPARROW. Splendid, but failed to draw; however, no fault of the picture. Business is still dull. Advertising; posters. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; poor. Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

CRADLE OF COURAGE. Best Hart picture in long time. Even the few women that came liked this one. Advertising; regular. Patronage; family. Attendance; fair. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

ENCHANTMENT. Good picture, title means nothing, some good shots, get them in. they will be pleased. Advertising; newspaper, one sheets, three sheets, 3,000 heralds, photos. Patronage; highest class. Attendance; fair. Jno. G. Pierce, Family Theatre, Mahanoy City, Pennsylvania.

FOOTLIGHTS. Excellent picture. Advertising; big. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. E. H. McCarthy, Orpheum Theatre, Fargo, North Dakota.

GET RICH QUICK WALLINGFORD. Very good, pleased them all, entire cast excellent. Patrons commented on appearance of Wallingford, however; they expected a fat, bald-headed man as he is pictured in magazine illustrations. Substituted at last minute, but pulled strong. Patronage; high class. Attendance; good. E. W. Large, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

HEADIN' SOUTH. Good, even if shrunken with age, lots of action; however could not help notice how much progress has been made in the motion picture industry since this one was made. Advertising; posters and press. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; good. Chas. W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre, Grand Gorge, New York.

HELIOTROPE. A real picture, patrons like it. Advertising; five one sheets, photos and heralds. Patronage; home people. Attendance; fair. Ernest M. Carules, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

THE IDOL OF THE NORTH. Keep off of this one. Paramount never released a worse one, looks as if it had been assembled from cuttings of old Dorothy Dalton features. Did not please 5% of our patrons. I always avoid the word "rotten" in discussing pictures, but I am sorely tempted to employ it here. Patronage; high class. Attendance; poor. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, Jonesboro, Arkansas.

THE LITTLE MINISTER. Certainly is a fine picture. Wonderful cast and photography, best I have even seen in any picture. It will be a feather in your cap if you play this one. More compliments than on any picture for a long time and that is the only real dope to go by. They liked it and said so. Was not ashamed to stand out in front. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Okla.

THE LOVE SPECIAL. Weakest Reid picture in some time, but it's worth booking. Patronage; downtown. Attendance; fair. T. M. Hervey, Unique Theatre, El Paso, Texas.

Realart

SUCH A LITTLE QUEEN. The mush kind that drives the manager out of the box-office along about nine o'clock when his patrons begin to leave. These weak productions do harm and this we consider one of the weakest. Have one more to play and it will not be played, we have it paid for and willing to lose the price rather than play it. Patronage; country town. Attendance; very, very poor. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

R-C

DUKE OF CHIMNEY BUTTE. Don't know what is lacking, but whatever it is, it wasn't there. Would say they let Stone stand too long in front of camera, seemed to need lots of time to think what to do next, and when he did it, what was it he did? I don't know. Very much disappointed, wanted to play the next one of Stone's. Attendance; poor. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

THE STEALERS. A good picture and you need not be afraid to boost it. Advertising; lobby and daily paper. A. R. Workman, Coliseum Theatre, Marseilles, Illinois.

Selznick

CONCEIT. Not up to expectations. Beautiful exteriors, but that won't put the picture over. Fair entertainment. Advertising; special slides, posters, also stock posters, inserts. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Jno. W. Creamer, Pert Theatre, Gillespie, Illinois.

A MAN'S HOME. Rotten. How can a producer have the nerve to hold the exhibitor up for such a price for this very ordinary program picture. If the other five of the supreme six are no better than this, let's hope they are never released. Advertising; billboards. Patronage; better class. Attendance; fair. L. O. Davis, New Theatre Hazard, Kentucky.

United Artists

DISRAELI. Fine picture, acting excellent, cast and story good. Picture only suited to very high class audience. No good for small town. Arliss has no drawing power here. Advertising; usual methods, nothing exceptional. Patronage; small town industrial. Attendance; poor. P. W. Kunze, Orpheum Theatre, Stoughton, Mass.

DREAM STREET. Did good business with Griffith's name published to the limit, very good on return engagement, something unusual for a neighborhood theatre to do. Advertising; regular newspaper. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; capacity. John F. Carey, Liberty Theatre, Providence, Rhode Island.

ACTION. Featuring Hoot Gibson, a fair feature, not as good as his former pictures. Advertising; usual advertising, four one sheets and local newspaper. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Jerry Wertin, Winter Theatre, Albany, Minnesota.

BIG ADVENTURE. This one was great. Universal is a life saver for some of us little fellows, but when they see this kind of report maybe they'll do like others, jump up the price. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Illinois.

THE FOX. An exceptionally good western picture and excellent business stimulator. Advertising; billboards, heralds, lithos, lobby. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. Ray Pfetcher, Isis Theatre, Roseville, Illinois.

PLAYING WITH FIRE. A very good picture and pleased 100 per cent. I think Gladys Walton is improving wonderfully and in the near future will rank with the biggest stars. Exhibitors can't go wrong on this one. Patronage; small town. Attendance; extra good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

Vitagraph

THE LITTLE MINISTER. This is a wonderful picture and Vitagraph should have the credit of making a great masterpiece. The stars, Calhoun and Morrison, did fine work. Wish to call your attention to the fact that we have a state college and they came 100 strong. Advertising; two newspapers and lobby. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fine. Thomas Clark, Electric Theatre, Maryville, Missouri.

Comedies

HIS HOME SWEET HOME (Vitagraph). Ape put this picture over equally as well as Semon did. Ape adds more to the comedy than Semon does. Best we have had in either series. Advertising; lobby. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. H. R. Walker, Classic Theatre, Dartmouth, Canada.

IDLE CLASS (First National). Picture pleased all classes. Some said it was Charles' best picture. Advertising; extra. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Arch E. Bamberger, Empress Theatre, Owensboro, Kentucky.

MARRIED LIFE (First National). A riot and a picture that is bound to please any audience. It is a laugh from start to finish. Advertising; newspapers and billboards. Patronage; the best. Attendance; capacity. William P. Flemming, Academy of Music, Newburgh, New York.

OH, BUDDY (Educational). This is one of Christies best ones, and got some real genuine laughs from my people. E. E. Carr, Princess Theatre, Thompson, Iowa.

PUT AND TAKE (Federated). Good comedy. Find these comedies all good, once in a while you may get a weak one, but at that its not bad. W. Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

SAILOR-MADE MAN (Pathe). Hats off to Hal Roach and Harold Lloyd on this. Patrons greeted comedy with great ovation when showing began. Advertising; local newspaper. Patronage; general. Attendance; great. Harold S. Clouse, Hollywood Theatre, Highwood, Minnesota.

SAWMILL (Vitagraph). Good, consider its one of his best, good stunts, not a dull moment in this. You can boost this as strong as you like. Business off for Semon. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

Serials

WINNERS OF THE WEST (Universal). An honest to goodness serial. If you want to make money, book it. Advertising; six-three-one slide. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Walter Albers, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Short Subjects

AESOPS' FABLES (Pathe). Best short reel cartoon we receive. Better than most simple comedies. H. R. Walker, Royal Theatre, Dartmouth, Canada.

JOHNNY RING AND THE CAPTAIN'S SWORD (Temple Prod Co.). Very well received, good clean picture, pulled 1,000 house on extremely cold night. Advertising; one and six sheets. Patronage; select. Attendance; 1,000. J. M. Graves, Liberty Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.

State Rights

BANDIT'S GRATITUDE (Federated). A two-reel western, according to the lithographs, but has no action or anything else to comend it. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

GOD'S COUNTRY AND THE LAW (Arrow). Good picture, my patrons pleased. Scenery beautiful, animal scenes pleased kids. Advertising; as usual. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. H. D. Wharton, Pastime Theatre, Warren, Arkansas.

MARY, BE CAREFUL (Pioneer). Putrid—five reels of nothing! Ashamed to look patrons in the face after the exhibit. Independent producers come around crying for business and then slip "limes" like this. I want to be fair and refrain from criticism because I know the difficulty of producing a good picture, but when such a picture is handed to you as "Mary, Be Careful" I feel I should advise exhibitors. I have a health seekers' resort here, where people come from everywhere to get relief from illness. I have a $100,000 theatre and I have to run good pictures; when this exchange manager came for business and I had his positive guarantee on the merit of the picture, I played "Mary, Be Careful," a picture three or four years old, costumed in that ancient period and all in all a picture that caused frightful comment from my patrons. Advertising; threes and one sheets. Patronage; health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

OUT OF THE DEPTHS (Pioneer). Very good program picture. Pleased 90%. Did extra good business on this one. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Ala.

THE SERVANT IN THE HOUSE (H. O. Davis). We lost money on this one. 90% liked this picture, personally I consider it a wonderful picture. Advertising; large ad. in paper and handbills. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. Kenneth Thompson, High School Movies, Hancock, Wisconsin.

THE STRUGGLE (Canyon). A good western, marred somewhat by a print that seemingly had a dark picture every three feet, resulting in unsteady light. Advertising; local papers and posters. Patronage; local. Attendance; good. Chas W. Lewis, I.O.O.F. Hall, Grand Gorge, New York.

THAT SOMETHING (Columbia). We would want more of this kind of pictures. Very pleasing to all patrons. Advertising; same as usual. Patronage; all kinds. Attendance; very good. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

WINGS OF PRIDE (Jans). This is the kind to get, some little picture. Pleased all. A little rough but good. Ran with "Thunder Bolt Jack," fourth episode. Going big. Advertising; lithographs, daily paper. Patronage; fair. Attendance; fair. C. L. Kirby, Elk Theatre, Longview, Texas.

"The Enchanted City"

Inspired One Reeler Made by Warren A. Newcombe Who Has Reached the Pinnacle of Artistic Film Achievement

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

"The Enchanted City," a distinctively worthwhile, artistic novelty, establishes a new standard of comparison for moving pictures. It is the most exquisitely beautiful thing that has ever been done in films. It is so fine a thing that any spectator's reactions to it can not be measured in cold words. It is a matter purely of the senses.

Warren A. Newcombe is responsible for this decided contribution to the screen. "The Enchanted City" is a perfectly contrived mingling of exquisite painted scenes and living characters, which relates a charming and sympathetic dream with more imagination and phantasy than the screen has before reflected. It is an artistic contribution that no exhibitor need be afraid will be over the heads of his audience, no matter of what type, as it embraces the great beauty of simple things simply done, but which accomplishes the intricate achievement of astonishing the senses to such an extent that it leaves one fairly gasping. Not only should an exhibitor realize that "The Enchanted City" is a safe proposition as an embellishment for a program, but that it is his duty to show it to his clientele. To deny such pure beauty of presentation to any group of people is unwittingly robbing it of something it has a right to demand from the source of its entertainment.

There is so much sheer beauty in what may be called the visual parts of "The Enchanted City" that it counteracts whatever effect the written titles might have upon the onlooker. These latter do not measure up to the sweep, gesture or the soul of what Mr. Newcombe has supplied in his work. And attention should be called to the fact that in the event of the artist's continuing a series of what he so clearly demonstrated he has the power to do, he should not panorama his camera so frequently from left to right and right to left. Better effect, if such a thing can be imagined, would be gained if he adhered to but one panoramic direction for his camera, say from right to left. Anything else has a tendency to be dazzling.

If anything more were said of "The Enchanted City" in this review it would be merely a constant reiteration of such things as "exquisitely beautiful," "sheerest artistic imagination" or "most moving phantasy." It should be said, however, that the writer saw the one-reel picture numerous times during the week it was presented at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, and each instance the well filled house responded at the end with either demonstrative enthusiasm or equally demonstrative tense silence of deeply affected persons, punctuating their reaction with gasps of emotion at such appealing beauty. Anyone sincerely interested in the advancement of moving pictures should do everything in his power to encourage Mr. Newcombe to continue making such things as "The Enchanted City," which previously had editorial comment made upon it in Moving Picture World before its title was changed from the title of "Land of Love's Dreams."

"Any Wife"

The Story of the Discontented, Straying Wife Reappears in Fox Feature Starring Pearl White.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

By the use of an "it was all only a dream" ending, Fox has saved this feature somewhat from the criticism that it is one of the oldest, most obvious, and consequently most uninteresting of the stories that repeat themselves on the screen. This anti-climax at the close which adds a comedy twist pacifies to some extent but does not justify the use of so much footage to the tiresome theme. The discontented wife who strays, loses her husband, grows penitent, is rebuffed by him and drowns herself in the river is a character who may still retain some charm for a certain class of patrons, but who must by this time have outworn her welcome with the majority.

The acting, directing and continuity are not particularly at fault. Pearl White no doubt has a following and she is the most promising feature from the standpoint of selling. She knows how to play upon the sympathies successfully and has a style and wardrobe that is pleasing.

The Cast

Myrtle .....Pearl White
Hill .....Gilbert Emery
Gray .....Holmes Herbert

Story and Scenario by Julia Tolsva.
Direction by Herbert Brenon.
Length, 4,597 Feet.

The Story

Myrtle is growing discontented with the monotony of married life and household duties. When her husband asks her to accompany him on a business trip she declines and accepts the attentions of Gray, her husband's business assistant while he is gone. Her husband, returning, finds her in Gray's arms, a divorce follows and then her unhappy marriage to Gray. The child fails to reunite them and she drowns herself. This proves to be all a dream, however, and Myrtle hastens to accompany her husband, as he desires.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

Even the Child Failed to Reunite Them After the Wife's Faithlessness—Desperate, She Jumps Into the River—You Think This is the End, But the Biggest Surprise of All Follows.

Exploitation Angles: Just tell them it's Pearl White. She'll do the rest.

"The Golden Gallows"

Weak Story and Faulty Continuity Make This Universal Feature Starring Miss Dupont, Below Average In Interest.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

For her third starring vehicle, Universal has provided Miss DuPont with "The Golden Gallows," based on a magazine story. The early scenes contain some fine lighting effects and the production starts off as though it were going to be a pretty little stage romance. The interest, however, soon begins to lag, and the story never recovers its original pace.

Faulty editing and cutting have resulted in weak screen continuity, and this, coupled with a story that does not hold you, due partly to a somewhat illogical material, result in making the production below the average. The personality of the star, and the manner in which Jack Mower portrays the leading male role, fail to create necessary sympathy to make the spectator vitally interested in the outcome of the story. Coupled with this is a lack of suspense and the fact that the story is but a variation of the theme of the actress who is turned down by her lover because he believes she has had improper relations with another man, only to finally discover his error and become reconciled to her.

The best work in the production is done by Edwin Stevens, who is killed early in the film and leaves half his fortune to the girl, which causes all of her trouble.

The Cast

Willow Winters.....Miss DuPont
Leander Sills.....Edwin Stevens
Cleo Twayne.....Eve Southern
Peter Galliner.....Jack Mower

Story by Victoria Galland.
Scenario by Harvey Gates.
Directed by Paul Scardon.
Photographed by Ben Reynolds.
Length, 4,808 Feet.

The Story

Willow Winters, a chorus girl, suddenly leaps to fame, due to the illness of a star. Peter Galliner falls in love with her. Sills, a wealthy friend who admires her fight against temptation, is killed by a former sweetheart, and leaves half his wealth to Willow, instructing his lawyer to handle the matter in such a way as not to bring unjust suspicion on the girl. The lawyer, however, has other plans, and gives the matter publicity with the result that Peter, believes Willow's relations with Sills have been improper, denounces her and leaves town. Willow, under an assumed name, becomes a friend of Peter's mother, and wins her respect. Peter, returning home, is surprised to see her, but still is not convinced. Finally his better nature asserts himself and when she produces proof of her innocence, he refuses to read it, deciding to take her own word for it. Peter and Willow become reconciled and he then goes to thrash the rescally lawyer, the cause of all the trouble.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

One of the Screen's Most Beautiful Women in a Charming Romance of Stage Life.

The Brave Fight of a Good Girl Whose Name Is Under a Cloud Because an Admirer Has Left Her a Fortune.

Her Reputation Ruined on a Gallows of Gold, She Fought and Won the Uphill Fight for the Love and Respect of the Man She Loved.

Exploitation Angles: Play up the beauty of the star and put that over, along with the announcement that this is a story of the stage that differs from most.

"Boomerang Bill"

Paramount Picture Featuring Lionel Barrymore Is Entertaining.

Reviewed by Marguerite Kemp.

The commandment, "Thou Shalt Not Steal," is taught with the utmost simplicity, yet effectively, in this Paramount production, featuring Lionel Barrymore. The theme has been handled throughout with a thought to the censors and the result is a feature teaching a moral by giving the life and punishment of a hold-up man which will pass the strictest censorship, yet which retains a decided box office value.

The characterization of Lionel Barrymore as 'Boomerang Bill" is the outstanding feature. Although far removed from the stereotyped crook type, indeed looking more like a placid agriculturist coming in for the stock show when his fall plowing is done, the hard working sub-titles keep the plot moving, carrying out the idea of his nefarious work as hold-up man, while Bill is shown only in his love scenes and buying balloons for unfortunte children. Beginning with his "last trick," which he pulls to secure money for his sweetheart's sick mother, and his prison sentence, Mr. Barrymore's work becomes a vivid repression of feelings, the mad scene being an appalling bit which would have been ghastly in less capable hands.

Marguerite Marsh makes an appealing heroine, and Margaret Seddon plays the mother role with an appreciated minimum of sighs. A word of commendation must be said for Miriam Battista, as the Chinese girl whose love for the renegade is the one consistent bright ray in the picture.

The settings are well done, the all night, one-arm restaurant, the dirty windows of the Chinese laundry, and the ward dance, give splendid bits of atmosphere.

Two instances of bad cutting in the third reel should be eliminated.

The Story

Terrence O'Malley, a plain clothes man, tells a youngster who faces a great temptation, the story of Boomerang Bill, an ex-hold-up man, now a shoestring peddler.

"Bill drifted into New York from Chicago, seking new fields for his gunman work. His first acquaintance with the Bowery came at a ward dance when he defended Annie from the advances of Tony, the Wop. Later, Annie acknowledged her love for him and he resolved to go straight, after turning one more trick to secure money to send Annie's sick mother to the country. He was caught by O'Malley, and sent to prison. Annie broke her promise to wait for him, marrying to secure a home for herself and mother. In his prison cell, Bill went mad, but later comforted himself with the thought that he may find her unhappy and can take her away on his release from prison. On the contrary, he found her happy with husband, mother and baby. Bill's great hope died, but he adhered to his promise to go straight—finding a meager living by selling shoestrings."

The youngster resists temptation to steal a valuable fur for his sweetheart—Bill's unhappy life has taught a lesson.

Exploitation Angles: Pin most of this on Barrymore, with a hook-up to his unusual character. Play also on the time-tried East Side angle.

"The Ghost City"

Helen Holmes Exploits Her Physical Fearlessness in Picture Made By Associated Photoplays

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

Essentially a vehicle for Helen Holmes, "The Ghost City" has been constructed so as to exploit her proficiency as a horsewoman and acrobat. Like most features of this type, the psychology of the story is weak at times and the drama, forced, as most of the attention has been directed toward the technique of thrill-production. Admirers of Helen Holmes and vigorous outdoor action will find it much to their taste as the star does some rocky riding, daring jumping and climbing, and engages in several hand-to-hand encounters with men in which she is beaten only after difficulty.

The material might be described as sure but old. The bootlegging industry serves as the background to some of the villainous procedures, the map of a silver mine as the bone of contention, the burning of the shack where hero and heroine are held prisoners, as the spectacular climax and the fistic combat on the edge of the cliff as the final test between the strength of the good man and his evil rival.

The Cast

Nada Mayhew .....Helen Holmes
Desert Meg .....Anne Schaefer
Jim Hendricks .....Leo Maloney
Bob Clark .....Leonard Clapham
Dick Carroll .....Jack Connolly
Adapted from Story "The Girl in Gopher City," by George Rix.
Direction by William Bertram.
Length, Five Reels.

The Story

Nada Mayhew, who is vacationing with her father on the Mexican border, is attracted by a mirage to an untravelled section where she finds a map to a secret silver mine. The rest of the story is taken up with the difficulties she encounters in protecting herself and her new interests from lawless attacks. She wins the love of a construction engineer and with his help she outwits the others.

Program and Exploitation Catchline:

She Fancied She Saw a Secret City in the Wilderness and Followed the Vision and Discovered the Map of a Silver Mine, and Hunted for It, Fought For it and Won it.

Exploitation Angles: Sell them Helen Holmes and tell them it is a miniature serial packed with punches. That will be about all you will need, unless your patrons have forgotten Miss Holmes as one of the first thrill stunters, when it may be necessary to identify her.

Official Urban Movie Chats No. 3

This film is one of action almost throughout, but there are also some "restful shots" that are none the less interesting. In the latter category are pictures of the Yerkes Observatory at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, where the monster telescope is constantly trained on the heavens in the interest of science.

Among the pictures of action are those showing alligator hunters at their work, diving into the water, and with no weapons capturing with their bare hands the dangerous creatures which live in the lagoons and along the swampy shore. Some desperate battles between man and reptile are pictured. The military maneuvers of Scandanavian soldiers in the deep winter snows are also pictures of hardihood and extreme action. —T. S. daP.

"Chasing the Moon"

Tom Mix's Activities Are Accompanied and Enhanced By Some of the Wittiest Sub-titles Ever Written —A Fox Production.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

A Tom Mix fantasy with more rhyme than reason is this, but with a dash and a swing that prevent one from taking it too seriously. It is as if the star had written of his own career as a screen actor, and finding all plots stale, even as the hero in the picture finds all life stale, breaks forth into a wild experience of things that could never happen.

It is up to Tom Mix and the sub-titles to sell this story. It is not a matter of selling his stunts this time, as he engages in practically no new tricks, but his magnetic style of going about the old ones, and the dynamic sub-titles which are the most striking feature of the picture have a big appeal. They reveal a neat twisting of words with a keen sense of comedy, but would make a better impression if they were less frequent, as it is obvious that a rather weak story had been bolstered up by clever sub-titles. Some estimate of the quality of these can be made from the following: (Description of a brainless beauty) "They often come pretty but seldom complete," and "In certain parts of Russia there are 1,000 persons per square mile, and 15,000 per square meal." Ralph Spence is responsible for the titling.

The Cast

Dwight Locke.....Tom Mix
Jane Norworth.....Eva Novak
Milton Norworth.....Wm. Buckley
Velvet Joe.....Sid Jordan
Princess Sonia.....Elsie Danbric
Prince Albert.....Wynn Mace
Scenario by Edward Sedgwick and Tom Mix.
Direction by Edward Sedgwick.
Length, 5,092 Feet.

The Story

Dwight Locke is a blasé millionaire looking for a new thrill. He handles some chemical fluid, is told he is poisoned and that the only antidote is in the hands of a professor who has just sailed for Russia. He sets out on a desperate chase to save his own life, which he has been told will last just thirty days longer. Meanwhile his sweetheart has found that he was not really poisoned and has followed him, hoping to overtake him before he takes the deadly antidote. She succeeds.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

He Thought He Was Poisoned—His Sweetheart Found Out He Wasn't—But Already He Was On His Way to Russia for the Only Antidote—He Had Been Sick of Life, But He Found a Few New Thrills On the Way—His Sweetheart Followed—to Save Him From Taking the Antidote, and She Got There Just in Time!

Exploitation Angles: Never mind the story, just sell Tom Mix and add that the story is crazier than the stunts he tries. You can get a kick out of the thirty days to live stunt if you need a pusher.

Official Urban Chats No. 1

Official Urban Movie Chats No. 1 carries a diversified and interesting line of subjects. Among the most amusing are those concerning "Sports and Pastimes," which show fishing for salmon along the banks of a Western stream. One of the interesting details of these "shots" is that showing a bull dog which has learned to dash out into the water and catch and drag back to shore any salmon which has happened to venture into the shallows.

There are also pictures showing experiments in science, nature studies, and films showing workers in various industries at their occupations.—T. S. daP.

"Moran of the Lady Letty"

Distinctive and Rousing Sea Melodrama Made From Norris Novel For Paramount.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

In "Moran of the Lady Letty" there is such a strong combination of selling advantages that exhibitors supplying entertainment provender to any type audience should have no trouble in drawing a gratifying queue before their automatic ticket selling machines. Chief among the magnetic possibilities is probably the drawing power of the leading man, Rudolph Valentino, and the wide popularity of the star, Dorothy Dalton. Not to be forgotten is the fact that it is a picturization of a widely read novel of the same name, written by Frank Norris.

Assuming that a theatre manager is able to capitalize these distinct advantages, he may rest assured that his patronage will suffer no disappointment in having bought its way into the house. "Moran of the Lady Letty" is a rousing sea melodrama that is presented with distinctive artistry from all angles of production, and if not new in basic theme, at least there is something different in the way of characters, as exemplified by "Moran," played by Miss Dalton. There are enough thrills to satisfy the most avid and the suspense may be theatric but is nevertheless effective. The atmosphere is and the characters are carefully portrayed. Valentino gives a performance that will increase his popularity. The star has a difficult role to handle, and she more than meets the requirements.

The Cast

Moran ..... Dorothy Dalton
Ramon Laredo.....Rudolph Valentino
Captain Sternersen.....Charles Brindley
Captain Kitchell.....Walter Long
Nels ..... Emil Jorgenson
Josephine Herrick.....Maude Wayne
Bill Trim.....Cecil Holland
'Chopstick" Charlie.....George Kuwa

Adapted from Novel by Frank Norris.
Scenario by Monte M. Katterjohn.
Directed by George Melford.
Length, 6,360 Feet.

The Story

"Moran of the Lady Letty" tells a dramatic story of the sea, with scenes along the coast of Norway, in Magdalena Bay, Mexico, and along the waterfront of San Francisco. The principal action takes place aboard two sailing vessels, one a trader and the other a smuggling ship, commanded by Captain Kitchell, a murderous ,tyrannical seaman. Ramon Laredo is a society man, who has been shanghaied, and forced to join Kitchell's crew. On the other vessel, which becomes a derelict, is Moran, a girl of the sturdy, rough, seafaring type. Kitchell finds the derelict, Moran is carried aboard by Ramon, and from then on ensues a series of exciting events that for the most part embrace a continued fight for the sailor girl, with Laredo the justifiable winner in the end.

Exploitation Angles: Sell the two stars, getting all you possibly can out of this combination of box office benefactors. Then sell it as a melodrama done by artists instead of the ten-twenty-thirty type of players.

"Hunting the Hawk"

William Courtleigh and Marguerite Snow are the stars of this Pathe Playlet now reissued in three reels, cut down from its original five-reel form. It is a mystery story involving crooks and the secret service, involving a chase after an international jewel thief. The action is rapid and the question as to which of two characters is "The Hawk" is maintained until the last, however the manner in which the mystery is sustained has been overdone, with the effect of misleading the spectators, as no explanation is given as to why the detective should take the jewels from the safe and make a spectacular escape only to return and confront the real criminal. The story involves a girl whose father is charged with making counterfeit plates, in seeking to help him get away she believes she has killed one of the secret service men, after marrying one of the men without knowing he is a counterfeiter. Leaving her husband when she discovers his real identity she later falls in love with another man. Circumstances lead her to believe that he is "The Hawk," but it develops that it is a secret service man and that the "Hawk" is her former husband, who is slain in revenge by one of the gang. The costuming shows that this picture was made some time ago, and the technique is not up to the present standard. —C. S. S.

"Tillie"

Realart's Production of "Tillie, a Mennonite Maid," a Work of Cinematographic Art.

Reviewed by J. M. Shellman.

A cameo of cinematographic art aptly describes "Tillie," the Realart production from the well-known play and novel, "Tillie, a Mennonite Maid," starring Mary Miles Minter.

The character portrayal of Tillie by Miss Minter is natural, forceful and convincing. She lives the part of the Mennonite maid, who is imbued with a light, gay, youthful spirit in love with life, but forced to relinquish everything she loves due to the narrow-minded bigotry of her father and the people by whom she is surrounded.

Every member of the cast, from the leading player to the actors, who portrayed the two tramps, has made each part shine, and Lucien Littlefield's work is particularly good.

Alice Eyton has written a well connected, smooth running scenario; Frank Urson has directed the picture with an extraordinary insight, bringing out the latent qualities out of the actors and emphasizing telling situations. Lighting effects which are a delight to the eyes; photography subdued and beautiful, describes the work done by Allen Davey. The titling is clear and effective and the art work great.

This picture should prove of great box office value wherever it is shown in the largest to the smallest houses. While essentially of the subdued and tense dramatic variety, the scintillating humorous touches throughout relieves, yet heightens, its vividness.

At the time it was reviewed the audience was pleased and delighted with it. It is a picture which should gain patronage as it runs, as the people go out pleased with it, which implies word of mouth advertising.

The Cast

Tillie.....Mary Miles Minter
Jacob Getz.....Noah Beery
Little Sister Sallie.....Marie Treboal
Doc Weaver.....Lucien Littlefield
Sarah Oberholtzer.....Lillian Leighton
Lawyer Blentz.....Ashley Cooper

Direction by Frank Urson.
Photographed by Allen Davey.
Length, 5,125 Feet.

The Story

Tillie is a drudge on her uncle's farm in Pennsylvania. According to the terms of an old lady's will, she is to receive a rich legacy providing she becomes a Mennonite before her eighteenth birthday. Some of the villagers learn of this and try various schemes to cheat her out of what is coming to her. The arrival of a mysterious young lawyer, however, upsets their plans and brings happiness to Tillie, in more than one way.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

Girls—If Your Father is Miserly and a Religious Fanatic and Wants You to Be a Frump, Then See How Tillie Outwitted Her Dad—Mary Miles Minter at Her Best—and That's Saying a Lot!

Exploitation Angles: Play this on Miss Minter's name, suggesting the story to tell that it has a new theme, but doing your banking on the personality of the star.

"Too Much Married"

An Associated Photoplays Farce That Stars Mary Anderson In a Hilarious Role.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri.

A. H. Woods is the father of bedroom and wayward bride farces, but he overlooked Florence Bolles' hiliarity, which was borrowed for cinematographic entertainment under the title, "Too Much Married," which really doesn't do the tale that is unfolded any justice. Although one is led to suspect some sort of tangle when it is disclosed that there has been an elopement, the plot is so cleverly handled by the director that one comfortably sits back into his seat anxiously awaiting developments, hoping against hope that something original or new will be unfolded.

"Too Much Married" will make you laugh, but if you expect anything new in the line of farces you will be disappointed. And, yet, there is that touch of directorial ingenuity that makes for worth-while entertainment.

Mary Anderson, who is rightfully starred, makes the character of the blushing, timid and ever suspicious bride a refreshing one. Mary has her own ideas concerning a bride's behavior and one can not help but hope that they all were as cute and decorous as she makes Betty Colford. Roscoe Karnes as the groom is hard luck personified, but he portrays a difficult role in satisfactory fashion, while Jack Connolly as Bill Trevor gives an interesting study of the art of screen acting.

The Cast

Betty Colford.....Mary Anderson
Bob Holiday.....Roscoe Karnes
William Trevor.....Jack Connolly
Mrs. DeCourcey.....Mathilde Brundage
Detective ..... Ben Lewis
Mrs. Wm. Trevor.....Carmen Phillips
Mrs. Peter Gulp.....Lillian Elliott
Peter Gulp.....Bert Woodruff

Story by Florence Bolles.
Scenario by John W. Grey.
Directed by Scott Dunlap.
Photographed by Steve Norton.
Length, 5 Reels.

The Story

Betty and Bob, guests at the brilliant DeCourcey-Varnay wedding, suddenly decide to elope. Bob slips away to make accommodations at a nearby Inn, where they plan to spend a honeymoon. Betty prepares to join him, but is halted by a detective who demands to know the contents of her bag. She refuses, but is told by the sleuth that a necklace belonging to the bride had been stolen. She opens the bag, but Billy Trevor, standing nearby, stoops to help the young woman, dropping a handkerchief into the bag. He offers to accompany Betty to the station. The detective allows Betty to go, but holds Billy, who escapes and arrives at the Inn before the girl and Bob, who had figured in an automobile accident and taken to the hospital. Developments show that Billy had dropped the necklace in the bag and tries in vain to regain it, these efforts resulting in a series of complications. Finally Bob arrives and the bride is saved from further humiliation and embarrassment, while Billy makes a confession that exonerates everybody.

"Julius Caesar"

Once a Masterpiece Always a Masterpiece —Describes George Kleine's Film Starring Anthony Novelli.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

The developments of the past seven years in film production have failed to overshadow the beauty and art of a picture that once stood and always will stand for the best that the screen can give. "Julius Caesar" is such a picture, and as such, is recognized by MOVING PICTURE WORLD as worthy of repeated mention and commendation. (A review was previously published in the issue of November 21, 1914.) The present version is some two reels shorter than the first and has been subjected to a few changes in the matter of editing.

Space limitations forbid an exhaustive description of the splendor of this classic. It can only be suggested by a few references to the integrity of the production as a whole, in its relation to moments of great history, the seriousness of the acting, stupendousness of the cast and nobility of the material appointments. It depicts the political situation in ancient Rome, the glory and egotism of Caesar, the treacheries of his enemies and magnificence of his warfare in a way that is vivid and intensely interesting. Anthony Novelli's "Julius Caesar" is an achievement of strength and art, and thanks partly to expert directing, every other important characterizations, too, is superior.

The Cast

Julius Caesar.....Anthony Novelli
Marc Anthony.....Michaelo Valenzano
Cato ..... A. Mastriepetri
Brutus ..... Gaetano Ricciardi
Pompey ..... Ignazio Lupi
Vercingetorix ..... G. Umberto
Cornelia.....Matilde di Marzio

Directed by Alberto Guazzoni.
Length, 5,748 Feet.

The Story

The life of Caesar between the years of 83 B. C. and 44 B. C. forms the basis of the story. His love for Cornelia and their marriage, followed almost immediately by a separation due to the interference of Sulla, dictator of Rome at the time, then his political rise, his advantageous marriage with Calpurnia, his conquest of Gaul and finally the conspiracy against him resulting in his death are the principal events pictured.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

A Glorious Reproduction of a Life That Was Crowded With Drama—the Love Story, Political Progress and Militarism of Caesar—a Fascinating Chapter of History Enacted by a Stupendous Cast.

Exploitation Angles: Tell frankly that this is a revival, slightly shortened and made up-to-date with titles in the new manner. Play hard on the fact that the really great play will stand the test of time.

"The Dog and the Thief"

Here is another of Paul Terry's animated cartoon fables based on the sayings of Aesop. This time he has selected the moral "Beware of Strangers Bearing Gifts" and shows a dog as a guard over a farmer's flock of ducks, while a fox is the thief. When the fox fails to get one of the ducks, he tries to bribe the dog with a bone, but is soundly trounced for his attempt. This cartoon is well up to the standard of the others of the series, and is filled with Mr. Terry's clever humorous touches.—C. S. S.

"Rich Man, Poor Man"

Paul Parrott, Ethel Broadhurst and "Sunshine Sammy" are the most prominent players in this single-reel Hal Roach comedy distributed by Pathe. It contains some good laughs and is about on the standard with the former comedies in which these players have appeared together. The story revolves around a rich girl who wants to marry a poor man. Falling in love with the janitor, she is shocked to meet him at a swell ball. She finally learns that he is only masquerading as a celebrity who was unable to appear and everything is straightened out satisfactorily.—C. S. S.

"Taking Chances"

A Cyclonic Knockabout Comedian Furnishes Acrobatic Thrills In This State Righter.

Reviewed by Roger Ferri.

Richard Talmadge made his bow in "The Unknown," reviewed exclusively by this publication about six weeks ago. At that time this writer stated that "Dick" was one of the cleverest knockabouts flashed on the silver sheet. He is convinced more than ever that in this fearless, reckless young man there is the making of a big box office asset. He has a carefree, bold manner that, mingled with a rare personality, will endear him to most moving picture enthusiasts. But he must be exploited carefully and systematically.

His second vehicle, "Taking Chances," produced by Phil Goldstone, is a series of acrobatic feats held up by an old theme, which is well handled. The story without the personality of this star, if left on its own merit, would fall flat. But the presence of Talmadge not only arrests the spectator's attention and holds it undividedly, but injects into the story an entertainment value that can be capitalized. There are one or two absurd situations, but these are quickly forgotten and overlooked because of the rapid succession of escapades in which a miss seemingly would have meant instant death.

Richard Talmadge is given the support of a hard-working company, led by Zella Gray, who makes a petite and lovable heroine. Scenically, "Taking Chances" is a gem. There are some splendid shots. The direction is flawless. All in all, "Taking Chances" is a safe bet for any enterprising showman who isn't afraid to spend money exploiting a worthwhile star who in time will command the best there is to be had at the box office.

The Cast

By Himself.....Richard Talmadge
Mildred Arlington.....Zella Gray
Jose Borquez.....Elmer Dewey
James Arlington.....Percy Challenger

Adapted from the Story, "Vim, Vigor and Vitality."
Directed by Grover Jones.
Photographed by Harry Fowler.
Length, 5 Reels.

The Story

Richard Talmadge, a book salesman, not only sells James Arlington, a capitalist, a volume of his firm's latest novel, but also talks himself into a position as private secretary to the millionaire. He falls in love with his daughter, whose hand is sought by Jose Borquez. The latter is scheming with a number of financiers to gain control of a corporation headed by Arlington. He plans a cruise and invites Arlington and his daughter to go along as his guests. At a ball prior to the departure of the party, Dick overhears a conspiracy in which Borquez plays a leading part. It is planned to keep Arlington away from New York so that the "bulls" can wash him out financially. Richard is kidnapped, but after a series of adventures he not only overtakes the party but subjects Borquez to a severe punishment and wins the hand of Miss Arlington.

"Welcome to Our City"

Farce With Maclyn Arbuckle Has Every Reason For Success—Produced by S. A. Pictures Corporation.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

"Welcome to Our City" is a comedy-drama that can be recommended without reservations to any exhibitor desirous of securing first-class farce entertainment. The original material is charged with the keenest sort of humor, the continuity is excellent and the direction has successfully brought out the many delicious situations. To continue in praise, the performance of the star, Maclyn Arbuckle, and the rest of the cast as well, is delightful.

It is difficult to say which are funnier—the situations or the characterizations, so consistently amusing is the whole. It is a treatment of married men's dilemmas, and in particular of one who was innocent but too chivalrous. Everyone conspires to "frame" him and when it is accomplished, he spends the rest of the picture in trying to keep the truth from his wife. The picture is an unusual success because the humor is apparently inexhaustible. one laugh leading to another with amazing cleverness. In addition to Maclyn Arbuckle's acting, the roles of the temperamental professor and captain from the South Seas are handled in a way that is exceptionally good.

The Cast

Jim Scott.....Maclyn Arbuckle
Geraldine.....Bessie Emerick
Luigi ..... Fred Dalton
Agnes Scott.....Bessie Wharton
Richard Scott.....Jack Crosby
Eleanor Scott .....Gertrude Robinson
Bert Scott.....Charles Holleman
Dolly ..... Joyce Fair
The Maid.....Gene Baker

Adapted from the play by George V. Hobart.
Scenario by Basil Dickey.
Directed by Robert Townley.
Length, 5,100 Feet.

The Story

Jim Scott on a visit to New York with his wife, steals out one evening for a little adventure and meets a young lady who is weeping. His efforts to assist her result in the arrest of both, and a number of embarrassing complications that threaten Jim's marital happiness. It turns out that the whole experience was a "frame up"—an effort on the part of Jim's son to force Jim to consent to his marrying a chorus girl.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

Just Because He Had a Soft Heart and Assisted a Weeping Lady—He Fell Out With His Wife, Got Quarantined for Smallpox, Lost Ten Thousand Dollars and Was Almost Murdered by a Jealous Husband!

Exploitation Angles: Play up the caption as a catchphrase ,and sell this as a terrible warning to married men who go to the big city. That will suggest enough of the story to gain interest. A good street stunt would be to put out a weeping girl who would hand out cards to all who offered assistance.

"Why Adam Walked the Floor"

This should be a popular leaf from Tony Sarg's Almanac, especially with men. Its appeal to women is perhaps not such a certainty, as there is something typically masculine about the humor and the general motive of the subject. The pleasures of amusing the baby at midnight have been cleverly satirized. Reverting back to the days of Adam and Eve and Cain, the sufferings of the first father have been graphically sketched, not entirely without risque touches. Papa Adam had his compensation, however, at such moments as when an unknown maid from nowhere, dressed a la South Sea Isles, danced for him, although the giraffe nearly swallowed the baby while he watched.—M. PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

For Mazda Men

A high-class, progressive motion picture projectionist, writes:

I have read with very much more than ordinary interest your article on Mazda lamp projection in a recent issue of the department. I am wondering if you have been shown only the bright side.

Right in the beginning let me say, the results attained with the 900 watt Mazda are so wonderful that they approach the marvelous. By this I mean, that they approach the marvelous when we consider the limitations of such a light source when used in conjunction with the projector optical train, as at present constituted.

Where A. C. has been supplied a projection arc through a rheostat the Mazda will improve results tremendously, and at the same time reduce the electric bills. In my opinion where A. C. has been supplied a projection arc through an Economizer Inductor or A. C. to A. C. Compensarc (low voltage transformer) the results will fully justify the expense of substituting Mazda.

These things I believe to be true, BUT where fifty or sixty amperes D. C. has been used, and the Mazda is substituted, as in my case, the audience is not satisfied with the result, and if competing houses use a fifty amperes and up arc, with an optical line-up which utilizes the resultant light, the man in charge of Mazda automatically becomes and is the GOAT. Wherever he goes, and is known, if picture fans be present he is accused of not being "on the job," trying to save juice et cetera, and this condition is intensified by the advent of the new H.I. (high intensity Conductor) arc, if it be numbered among the competitors.

I readily agree with you that the screen used has a TREMENDOUS bearing on results. We are using an old, painted canvas one. I have seen mazda results under practically identical conditions, except that a Mazdalite screen was used, and the difference (improvement) was very thoroughly apparent.

Is not the statement that no adjustment is necessary after taking the lamp from the "setter" and placing it in the lamphouse a bit in error? I found it ALWAYS necessary to readjust the mirror. This may, of course, be done with very fair accuracy while the projector is working, by means of the image on the revolving shutter. I found this to be necessary with the lamps set by Mr. Hosmer, as well as those set by his capable right-hand man, Mr. Edson. In fact, they themselves found it necessary to reset the mirror.

Another thing, while we have never had a lamp burn out, still we have not yet been able to get the 100 hours guarantee out of any one of them, though it is true, the manufacturer makes good on the guarantee, therefore we are at no financial loss.

Have found most short-life lamps to be short life because of filament distortion caused by the filament anchor failing to move freely in the guides. And it is right here that improvement may be made in the lamp, I think, which will lengthen their useful life—and improve their performance in several ways.

Knowing the cost of the lamps the projectionist does not like to discard one as long as there is the chance of getting a decent screen result. One mazda man told us that unless we could hear a slight "rattle" when a new lamp was shaken, it would not be a long-life lamp, because the "anchor" would not move freely in the guides. My experience seems to confirm this.

As to Projection Pitch

I have noticed that where the projector sets at a considerable angle the filament will sag towards the collector lens. This occurs here, and the angle is but eight degrees. No two filaments seem to act exactly the same in this respect, some sagging in a couple of hours, and some not for a day or two. This calls for the turning of the lamp halfway around in its socket. I prefer turning mine before opening time, as I can then give the adjustment my undivided attention. Between reels the time is limited; sometimes too short to permit of a good job.

A Suggestion

I believe it is quite possible that a holder might be so made that the lamp could be withdrawn, the holder turned end for end and reinserted with a minimum of trouble.

Let no one suppose that Mazda will not ignite film at the aperture as quickly as will the arc.

A projectionist in a nearby town thought this, and a stampede followed. No one was injured because business happened to be punk just then. The only damage was that one reel of film went up in smoke.

Still another thing: how many have found the Mazda lamphouse douser an awkward contrivance when fading, single handed, from the left to the right projector? I am unable to suggest the improvement, but there surely is room for one.

In closing let me say that I do not, as this letter may indicate, know very much about Mazda projection. I think I once heard one F.H.R. say that it is often necessary to expose one's ignorance and ask questions in order to get wise.

Time for Discussion

I have published this letter, because I firmly believe that, whereas the Mazda is rapidly coming into use for projection purposes in nearly all non-theatrical fields, as well as in a rapidly increasing number of theatres, it is high time it be subject to frank and public discussion and constructive criticism. Thousands of exhibitors, theatre managers and projectionists want to know more about the Mazda, its possibilities, its limits, its faults and, in short, all about it.

If at any time anything may appear in this department which the Mazda men, either manufacturers or projectionists, believe to be in any way in error, they will be cordially welcome to space in which to set matters right.

It is just the plain fact and the truth I want, and I don't care who supplies. I do NOT profess to be able to check up on all statements made concerning the Mazda projection light source. But expect, in due time, to learn —also I do NOT expect to do it sitting at a desk. I visit projection rooms where Mazda is used, talk with those who use Mazda and expect to keep in touch with the manufacturer, but it nevertheless takes time to learn all those many things which must be learned about any new thing.

Plain Foolish

And now as to your various remarks: first, it is just plain foolishness for your "boss" to install Mazda and use an old painted canvas screen surface, especially when he is in competition with surrounding theatres using the much more brilliant arc. The screen surface should be a matter for VERY careful consideration. What is needed is the most brilliant surface (best reflective surface) that can be had which will give the diffusion necessary to your local condition—not forgetting that the latter item is of great importance.

With regard to necessity for adjusting the mirror after a lamp which has been adjusted in the lampsetter is installed in the lamphouse, why maybe it must be done, though I see no reason why it should be so, except in cases (which may include most of the lamps removed) where the filament of the old lamp has become warped or sagged, and the mirror has been set to meet this condition. The mirror adjustment is a comparatively simple matter, and as you have pointed out, may be accomplished with at least fair accuracy while the projector is working. I will be glad to hear from the manufacturers and from Mazda projectionists on this point.

But the item of filament sagging toward the lens because of projection pitch, with the lamp necessarily setting at an angle from vertical, is a very practical point, because pitch in projection is a condition which probably three out of four men taking charge of Mazda will encounter. We should have practical instruction in exactly what may be the best mode of procedure.

Illustroting how the respective cooling plates should be filed

Up to date not a single man or a single manufacturer has so much as mentioned it. Query, do projectionists who project at an angle find that the filament sags? If so how much, and exactly what remedy have they applied?

Of course sagging of the filament will alter the distance from its plane to face of collector lens, which would, I believe, call for pulling the lamp back and moving the mirror ahead. WHAT IS YOUR OWN EXPERIENCE IN THIS ITEM?

The Big Problem

The anchor of the filament has been THE big problem encountered by and worked upon by Mazda engineers for a long while. I understand it has been so nearly solved that there is now but slight fault to find in its performance, or at least that is the case with the G.E. lamps. The Westinghouse has, as we understand the matter, adopted a similar anchor. We must compliment the Mazda men on what they have accomplished in this matter. Perhaps there may be further improvements, but as the matter now stands the anchor works wonderfully well.

As to the possibilities of a reversible lamp holder—well, that is a subject on which only the Mazda engineers could talk on intelligently. It is therefore respectfully referred to them without comment, except to remark that we personally doubt the feasibility of such a thing.

The Mazda is no longer to be considered as an experiment or a thing to which we "may" be obliged to give serious consideration. It is now here. It has definitely arrived. Also we might say a small bird has been whispering in the conductorial ear to the effect that possibly, perhaps maybe, we shall before long be introduced to one grand little—nope, one grand BIG surprise in Mazda projection light.

General Electric Replies

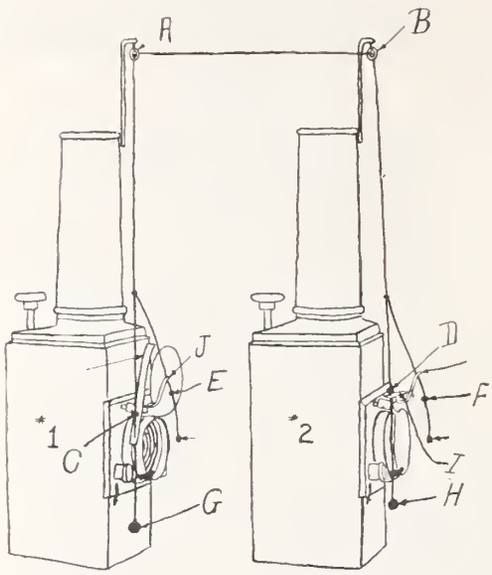
In order that no injustice be done I sent a carbon copy of the foregoing to the West Lynn, Mass., plant of the General Electric Company, where much of the Mazda projection lamp experimental work and designing is carried on, suggesting that the folks up there make such comment as might seem right and proper.

I received the following reply, by Stephen Carleton Rogers, one of the engineers in charge of Mazda experimental work and the practical application of Mazda to projection:

There Is No Question

We have read with a great deal of interest the projectionists' story titled "As to Mazda." There can be absolutely no question as to the correctness of his statement that all a. c. arcs can be replaced with Mazda to great advantage both from the visual and the financial standpoint. As to replacing d. c. arcs, there is no doubt but that the 50 ampere d. c. arc can be replaced with Mazda to the betterment of results, but when 60 to 90 ampere d. c. arcs are to be displaced, special treatment may have to be given, such as the selection of a proper screen for Mazda projection in that individual theatre, the selection of a projection lens of proper diameter and type, filling the cooling plate as per attached illustration, and absolutely perfect alignment.

Under these conditions the higher amperage arcs can be successfully displaced by Mazda.



SIMPLE METHOD FOR CHANGE OVER.

Illustrating a simple method of dissolving at change-over

As to the necessity for adjustment of mirror after lamp which has been adjusted in a lamp setter has been installed, we would merely say that IF the lamp is CORRECTLY and ACCURATELY adjusted in the setter, then no readjustment of the mirror is necessary, but in this connection it must be remembered that even so little as 1-32 of an inch out in the matter of adjustment in the setter will mean a non-meshing of the filament with the mirror image when the lamp is installed in the lamphouse.

In our projection here we very rarely find it necessary to make any adjustment of the mirror when a new lamp-setter-adjusted lamp is installed, and then only when some one has been hasty or careless in the lamp-setter adjustment.

Important

It is absolutely imperative that after the lamp filament has been lined with the two notches in the lamp setter, the two pins be brought EXACTLY between the two center coils of the filament. The bottom of the filament coils must then be set flush with the edges of the sighting holes and the socket clamp ring tightened, thus locking lamp in position. Next open the lamp-setter gate and unscrew both knurled adjusting screws. Upon installing the lamp if the two center coils of the filament be not exactly in position, the large nickled adjusting screw on the socket must be screwed in or out, as may be necessary, and if it be out then that the lamp be pushed in until the alignment is correct.

NOTE: Care should be taken that uniform, steady pressure be exerted both in pushing or shoving the lamp into the setter, and also into its base in the lamphouse. A quick shove may easily displace something, and thus throw everything out of adjustment. THE PROJECTIONIST MUST REMEMBER that he is working with something which requires absolutely accurate adjustment, and that if it be out of correct adjustment by even so little as 1-32 of an inch the results may be very unsatisfactory.

With regard to the "rattle" serving as a guide to life of lamp, we believe there is little in it, as we have had hundreds of lamps which had no "rattle" at all operate more than 100 hours.

As to the filament sagging when the projector is projecting at a downward pitch, why that of course is natural, but if the lamps be turned around regularly, say once a week in this case, no trouble should be experienced, as we have many installations operating at from twenty to twenty-six degree pitch in projection, with the lamps giving satisfactory life performance. As the projectionist says, the lamp should be turned either before or after the performance—not during same.

Experience Counts

It has been our experience that the longer a projectionist uses the Mazda lamps the longer will be the lamp life he will obtain.

As to the suggestion of a new design holder, the matter has been considered at various times, but we will again take the matter up and see what, if anything, can be done. We, however, believe that difficulties will be encountered.

With regard to fire hazard, the Mazda is just as dangerous as is the arc, so far as practical results be concerned. This is true because a second or two either way really makes no practical difference in the matter of film ignition, unless the projectionist actually happens to see the film break and shuts off the light instantly. There is a device especially designed for Mazda projection, now being sold, which greatly reduces certain types of fire hazard.

The sketch, figure 2, shows a very convenient, satisfactory and simple method of dissolving at change-over. It is being used in many theatres. The dousers of the projectors are connected by means of a heavy fish line, as shown, A and B being small pulleys, C and D and E and F small nuts tied into the string ,and G and H small counter weights.

Suppose dowser on lamphouse No. 1 to be open, by pulling down on string H Knot D is made to pull down on handle I on lamphouse No. 2, thus opening its douser. At the same time, since string H is moving downward, it pulls knot E up against douser trip J and releases the douser on lamphouse No. 1, thus closing it.

With regard to screens, will say that Mr. Richardson has set the matter forth very clearly and well.

In closing we might remark that the sagging forward of the filament when the projector is at an angle will cause but little difference in screen illumination, the absolute maximum of loss through this cause being five percent.

Why Projection Room Photos Are the Last Views of a New House to Reach Us

ONE thousand and thirty-two new picture houses were planned or commenced building operations during the calendar year of 1921.

In corresponding with the builders and proprietors of many of these new houses, we have noted that, while their plans in regard to size and arrangement of the houses, the decorations, lighting systems and house furnishings have often been quite definite, they were, in very many cases, unable to tell what they would install in the way of projection equipment.

This confirms a gradually growing belief on our part that, in numerous instances, the very last thing to receive attention or consideration at the hands of the prospective builder is the selection and arrangement of his projection equipment, and it seems to be about the last thing for which installation arrangements are made as a new house approaches completion.

Business Depends Upon Screening

Aside from the fact that the entire business of the theatre depends upon the proper screening of its program and that one of the first items of arrangement to be considered should be the location and size of the projection room, which latter should be governed by the equipment to be housed therein, this last minute ordering of projection apparatus constitutes a big drawback all along the line.

For almost every new house building, improvements will be made in one, two or more of its older competitors in order that they may be in a position to meet the forthcoming competition, and this means placing of contracts for improved projection apparatus in both the new houses and their neighbors is bound to cause an inevitable delay when the orders finally do come through.

It is far better that such apparatus be ordered well in advance and stored with the local equipment dealer or even in a storage warehouse in order that there may be no possibility of late installations when the house is ready to receive the equipment.

Cannot Deliver "Yesterday"

Many unsatisfactory first performances and many delayed openings are due to no inefficiency on the part of the architect, the building contractor, or their workmen, but simply to the inability of supply houses to immediately fill the order for necessary equipment, which has been held off until the last possible moment and is then accompanied by a request to deliver "yesterday."

In proportion to the total cost of a picture house, that of the projection equipment, in spite of its importance, represents but a small percentage in dollars and cents and yet, without it, the house remains dark or even with rushed and temporary installations, the opening performance must be far from satisfactory.

The actual cash assets of a house opening, as per original schedule and satisfactory performance starting with the initial program, represent considerably more than the interest on the cost of a most elaborate projection outfi, even though it be stored for a considerable period of time, as precaution of remeassure against last minute delays.

When a supply dealer pleads for an early order, it is even more to the interest of the exhibitor than to the supply dealer himself that the request be granted.

While such requests may appear to be made merely from the viewpoint of nailing the order and nailing it early, the advantage that the exhibitor receives from granting it is far greater than that obtained by the recipient.

World Publishes the Best

It is an acknowledged fact that the best and most helpful descriptions and illustrations of new picture houses appear in the pages of the Moving Picture World. It is in the course of our endeavors to provide such information that will present to the exhibitors of this country illustrated evidence of the improvements in picture house construction that we have been brought to realize the magnitude of the evil which we have pointed out above.

Long after we have on file complete data regarding the area and seating capacity of a house, its arrangement and decorations, down to the last detail, we are unable to obtain a line on the equipment of its projection room, or even the size or arrangement of the room itself.

Days after we receive photographs of the house exterior, the lobby, the magnificently decorated ceilings, the lighting fixtures, and every other part of the house, in fact—along come the photographs of the projection room and in these are often evidences of temporary installations that have been made to tide over the opening performances.

Send in Your Views

Frequently, indeed, we receive the photographic layouts with the explanation that, as the projection equipment has not yet been installed, no photographs of the projection room are yet available.

This bears out our assumption that the real mainspring of the average picture theatre is the last thing for which arrangements are made when it really should be among the first.

Conditions which render this necessary may have escaped our knowledge and we will be more than glad to have our exhibitor readers write us, presenting their views on the subject. And we will be equally glad to publish such communications as may be received in an early issue of this department.

Great Falls Liberty Uses Two Simplexes

The accompanying illustrations show the projection room of the new Liberty Theatre, Great Falls, Mont.

The entire projection equipment was installed by the Western Theatre Equipment Company, of Seattle, and includes two Type "S" Simplex projectors, finished in battleship grey. Hoods have been placed over the projector lamphouses to carry away from the projection room the gases and heat generated by the arc light.

In addition to the projectors, a dissolving Mazda stereopticon, mounted on a Simplex pedestal, a spot light, Fulco arc controls, two seventy-five ampere, Hertner transverters, a combination enclosed film rewinder and film storage cabinet, with tool drawers to complete the equipment.

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM

Paddling Up Stream

THIS IS THE YEAR WHEN THE SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST WILL DOMINATE BUSINESS. The militant—aggressive—progressive policy for Exhibitors will be necessary to keep up attendance.

WITH OVERHEADS FIXED, AND ORGANIZATIONS BUILT, there is but one course: FORWARD! Conditions will not permit standing still or backing.

Far-sighted and hundred-percent-successful Exhibitors throughout the country have INSURED THEIR SUMMER BUSINESS, by adopting the TYPHOON POLICY of providing the acme of cool-comfort for their patrons.

The superiority of the TYPHOON SYSTEM is attested by thousands of successful exhibitors, as evidenced by the large number of repeat orders:

TYPHOONS COOL

51 Theatres for S. A. Lynch
33 for Saenger Amusement Company
21 for Signal Amusement Company

Typhoon Comforts attract millions of summer patrons.

TYPHOONS would prove a source of big profit to your house.

When one theatre pays better than two

You know how very little business a hot stuffy theatre can get in hot weather.

It takes two of them to get as much business in July or August as one of them gets in cooler weather.

But cool one of those houses with Monsoon Cooling System, and it will pull as much business as two hot, uncomfortable theatres.

And do it with half the expense and more than twice the profit.

News of Installations in the Busy Northwest

William W. Lewis, of the Theatre Equipment Company, Seattle, recently made a trip to the Puget Sound Navy Yard at Bremerton for an inspection of the projection equipment on board the Battleship Texas, which boasts of two Power's 6B machines.

The Bailey Gatzert School, Seattle, which is devoted to the education of Japanese children, has installed a new Power's with Mazda equipment.

A. G. Pecchia, manager of the Orting Theatre, Orting, Washington, has bought a Power's 6B Cameragraph, motor driven.

R. H. Glenn, of Issaquah, has also bought a similar machine. Both these machines were installed by the Theatre Equipment Company.

A. W. Eiler, of the American Theatre, Walla Walla, has installed a big, new Wurlitzer Hope-Jones orchestral organ.

The Methodist Church at McCleary, Washington, is putting in a new Simplex projector, which is being installed by the Western Theatre Equipment Company. This company is also installing two Simplex Type "S" projectors in the Colonial Theatre, Ellensburg, Washington.

New Model Automaticket Gains Rapid Popularity

The new model Automatic Ticket issuing and registering machine is making great strides in popularity, and its builder, the Automatic Ticket Register Corporation, reports that the January sales were the best in the history of the organization.

Among recent purchasers of the new model are Poli's beautiful new house in Waterbury, Conn.; the Eastman Theatre, of Rochester, and the new Lafayette, one of the finest of Buffalo's picture houses, which is due to open shortly.

New Buffalo House Is to Open February 20

Fred Schaeffer, formerly manager of the Fox Crotona and Academy of Music in New York, will be the manager of the new Lafayette Square Theatre, which is scheduled to open February 20, but which will probably begin supplying entertainment at a later date, because there is much work yet to be done. C. Sharp Minor, formerly organist at Grauman's Theatre in Los Angeles, has arrived in town.

"Why Announce Your Marriage," an Elaine Hammerstein star feature on the Select program, will be the opening film attraction. Pantages will supply the vaudeville. M. Slotkin will be general manager.

Buffalo Academy Now Plays Pictures Only

The Academy Theatre, owned by I. H. Herk, of New York, has discontinued its burlesque policy. Commencing Saturday, February 11, the house will re-open with an exclusive picture policy, under the management of Sam Carver. There will be continuous presentation from 10 a. m. until 11 p. m. There will be three changes a week, Sunday, Monday and Thursday.

Will Continue the Empire

Mr. Carver will also continue to operate the Empire, a picture theatre on Pearl street. Next fall the attractions on the Columbia burlesque wheel which has been supplying the Academy will be transferred to the Criterion, which has been leased by Mr. Herk and Max Spiegel from Walter Hays.

Hampton Studios Sold

The Jessee D. Hampton studios, consisting of ten acres, complete work shops, property department, dressing room and administration buildings, swimming pool, and what is claimed to be the second largest stage in the world, has been purchased by Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks.

$150,000 is said to be the price paid and the studios will henceforth be utilized for Pickford and Fairbanks productions.

Two Power's Projectors

Frank Davidson, manager of the Buffalo branch of the Independent Movie Supply Company, has installed two Power's high intensity projectors in the Victoria, Rochester.

A similar machine has also been sold to Vern R. Cummings for use in the new Groveland Theatre, Groveland, N. Y. George Hallett is now in charge of the Albany branch of the company.

Answering a Big Editorial Question from the Motion Picture News

By the way, isn't it about time for a drama of the American Revolution? We've seen a lot about the French Revolution. Has every one forgotten America?

How about the midnight ride of Paul Revere—the flash of signals—the tramp, tramp, tramp of the long line of British redcoats—the tumbling out of the farmers, over fields and along stone walls—the rattle of pot shots—the volleys—the lone rider again along the black country lanes, cape flying in the wind—the lights in the houses—the gathering storm of freedom—the girl awaiting rescue—the lone rider again—the desperate battle—the rescue—crescendo, whoop, bang!

Here's Griffith suspense for you. And the American flag waving over it all!

Debauching the Public Mind

IT is a matter of proverb that even so inoffensive, so peaceful and so non-combatant a thing as a worm will turn to defend itself if it is sufficiently prodded.
The screen has at last proved the truth of the adage.

Stung by the injustice of a nation-wide dissemination of vile scandal about the lives of players and others in the moving pictures, a number of people well known to all of us have combined in an appeal to the public for fair play. Elsewhere in this issue appears the appeal in full, together with the signatures of the group.

This appeal is a good thing as far as it goes and it will help, but it fails to go far enough. We suggest that the same group or another group, and the more important the better, consider seriously the issuing of a plain statement which will place the blame for this outrage where it properly belongs. The blame rests with the sensation-mad newspapers and their Los Angeles correspondents, who have deliberately fabricated the most impudent, the most conscienceless and the most damnable scandals, out of whole cloth and with an utter disregard of the reputations of innocent men and women, have produced stories that on their face would seem to be the product of drug-crazed brains.

These correspondents have been aided by Thomas Lee Woolwine, District Attorney of Los Angeles, who has become a correspondent himself, writing, no later than last Sunday, of the case under his own signature. He is an officer of the court and yet he joins in the mad scramble for this unholy publicity.

Los Angeles can only save itself from material disgrace by starting now to call a halt on this orgy of falsehood, mendacity and rotton fiction retailed to the country as facts. Los Angeles knows these correspondents. Let them be taken in hand and called upon for the sources of their contemptible output.

This situation is the concern of the public quite as much as it is the concern of our industry. The public has been shamefully and shamelessly imposed upon. It has been lied to and deceived.

As for our industry, the situation promises a decrease in legitimate business, and what is far worse than that, the creation in the public mind of the impression that the people it has admired and patronized are nothing but a group of immoral, indecent and wholly unworthy men and women.

If the newspapers won't give the industry fair play, then the screens of America can save the situation by telling the public the truth about the Taylor case and about the newspapers as well.

The men who control the screens don't want to do that if they can help it, but if they see their business being buried under an avalanche of sewage they will be forced to save themselves.

Every exhibitor in America, every producer and every distributor, is just as much hurt as are the innocent men and women who are the victims of this unprecedented saturnalia of slander and lies.

We suggest concerted and immediate action, following without delay the appeal already made by the group of self-respecting men and women in the film colony of Los Angeles.

The American public is fair, but no public can remain fair, if it is fed upon untruths without refutation or a square presentation of the other side.

Arthur James

High Spots in the Week's News

HOW can one summarize in this department of brevities a convention as big as the Albany exhibitor affair? Here are a few of the high spots, but you'd better be sure to read the story:

An ultimatum demanding lower rentals, issued by National President Cohen, hints at a great centralized distribution system under the jurisdiction of local organizations affiliated with the M. P. T. O. A.; newspapers must stop slandering the industry because of the acts of individuals; Hays' activities will determine his status with exhibitors.

But read the story.

Now that the M. P. T. O. of New York State has convened at Albany apparently unaware that a certain Nathan Miller is governor—he wasn't invited, you know—the chief executive's "soft shoe" army is angrily planning, it seems, to jam through the legislature a number of bills harassing to the industry. Just for example, they want to increase the pay of the censors to encourage them to hector the industry, 'tis said. Also, the bill providing repeal of the censorship body probably will be lost in convenient pigeon-holes. Further, the Knickerbocker Theatre disaster has "inspired" an investigation of all picture theatres in the state. Then, too, they hope to make capital of the lack of harmony between distributors and exhibitors, a little bird advises us. It looks like a real battle.

"Those naughty bathing girls," chortled the New York censors as they gleefully wielded the scissors.

"Those pretty bathing girls," raptured the New York newspapers as they rushed the pictures into print.

That was then; now:

"Darn those bathing girls," regret the censors.

For Pathe has brought suit against the New York Motion Picture Commission to determine its right to censor news reels, pointing out that they're entitled to the same freedom granted the press by the State Constitution. The defendants are George H. Cobb, Helen May Hosmer and dear, excitable "Joe" Levenson. The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court will hear the case. The firm of Coudert Brothers represents Pathe.

Demanding fair play of the general public, and especially of the newspapers, the Independent Screen Artists' Guild of Los Angeles has issued a statement asking why the faults of the few are charged to the many.

* * *

Famous Players is said to have decided to finance the whole Canadian proposition itself and fix no new policies for the present. A week ago, as Moving Picture World told you, the company took over the Allen chain of theatres. A reorganization may take place, in which event stock in a new company will probably be given Allen stockholders.

* * *

By a vote of 7 to 2, the Senate committee on general laws of the Virginia legislature has voted to indefinitely table the censorship bill.

Mississippi bids fair to "fall for" the censorship hysteria. Acting on Governor Russell's recommendation, the Senate has passed a resolution providing for a board of censors. The House of Representatives is expected to follow suit. The board would be composed of a school teacher to be named by the State Board of Education, a woman to be named by the women's clubs and a minister to be named by the chief justice of the State Supreme Court.

* * *

H. M. Richey, manager of the Michigan exhibitor organization, recently got in touch with Hubert E. Hartman, formerly Henry Ford's attorney, and requested an opinion as to whether or not the operation of theatres in Michigan on Sundays constitutes an indictable misdemeanor under the state statutes. Mr. Hartman did considerable research work and replied: "Insofar as the Michigan statutes are concerned, and their interpretation by the Supreme Court, it seems clear that the operation of a theatre on Sunday does not justify criminal process." Civil action may be instituted, he finds.

It will be interesting to see how Mr. Richey makes use of the information.

The attorney-general of Nebraska and county attorney of Douglas county have filed in Federal Court an answer to the Goldwyn suit attacking the validity of the state anti-deposit law. That means the suit probably will come to trial before three Federal judges some time in March.

Si Clark spat reflectively against the red-hot stove and thrust a gnarled fist into the cracker barrel.

"Bill was tellin' me t'other day," he said, "about a pastor that wanted the movies closed up on Sunday nights tighten 'n a clam's face so's he could get a decent-sized congregation. Well, now, I see in Movin' Pitcher World that seventy pastors up in northern New York State are a-goin' to preach Sunday night sermons on observin' the Sabbath without makin' a lot of noise about callin' the cops. That's more sportsmanlike, ain't it?"

Ricord Gradwell, president of the Producers' Security Corporation, has become associated with Wid Gunning, Inc., as managing director but will continue as head of the service organization. Mr. Gradwell was vice-president and general manager of the Oliver Typewriter Company and had charge of the World Film on behalf of banking interests some years ago. Nathan Vidaver has been elected general counsel of the Gunning interests. "Wid" is off on a tour to give all his time to his direct booking, profit-sharing plan.

Do you recognize the naked truth when you meet up with it Well, we suggest, without malice, that if you're one of these publicity chaps you'd better attend the A. M. P. A.'s "Naked Truth Dinner" on March 25 at the Biltmore, New York.

Pearl White has signed a contract with Pathe to star in another serial, production of which will start July 15.

Julian Johnson, former editor of Photoplay Magazine, dramatic critic of the Los Angeles Times and film production editor, has been created manager of the editorial department of Famous Players.

"The melodrama comes right out into the open and says frankly, 'Here I am ready to take your minds off your worries and amuse you.' That's the reason I believe in melodrama, and am bending every effort to make it so high-class in character that its appeal will be strengthened and broadened in scope." — Whitman Bennett.

Postpone Hearing on Censorship Law Repeal

The public hearing on the bills which have been introduced in the New York State Legislature, asking for a repeal of the present censorship law in that State, will be held on Tuesday, February 21. It was originally intended to hold this hearing on February 14, the opening day of the State convention.

Mississippi Senate Passes Censor Bill; Provides Board of Three, One a Woman

FOLLOWING recommendations of Governor Lee M. Russell in his regular message to the legislature, the Mississippi Senate on Wednesday, February 8, passed a censorship bill admittedly fraught with dire possibilities for the industry in that commonwealth. Not among the least of the objections to the bill as viewed from the interest of the motion picture industry are, first, the manner of its appointment and, secondly, the personnel that is to compose it.

There are to be three members and they are to be a woman, a public school teacher and a minister of the Gospel. Reversing the regular order of things, the bill does not provide for the appointment by the governor, as is the case with practically all other state employes of a similar nature, but it declares that the teacher is to be recommended by the state superintendent of public education, that the woman member is to be the creature of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, while the preacher is to be named by the chief justice of the State Supreme Court.

The bill provides that each member shall be compensated at the rate of $2,400 a year, the revenue for this purpose to be derived, in accordance with Governor Russell's recommendations, from a special tax levied upon the exhibitors within the state. It now goes before the House of Representatives, where its final passage, probably without the slightest change, seems only a matter of time.

May Sue Out Appeal

The bill as originally presented to the Senate left the motion picture people without any recourse whatever against the teacher-preacher-woman combination of censors, but following an interesting fight in the halls of the Senate it was finally amended so as to include a clause providing that the exhibitor, who considered himself aggrieved, might sue out an appeal, first, to the chancery court of Hinds County and, subsequently, if he wished to push it that far, to the Supreme Court of the state.

Interesting comment on the subject of censorship was revealed in the discussions by the Mississippi Solons, who by their legislative enactments of other days have successfully driven the great fire insurance companies of other states out of their jurisdiction, who more recently have jumped upon the necks of the lumber manufacturers through over-drastic forestry legislation, and who now seem bent on handicapping the "movies." The final vote stood 28 to 14 for the passage of the measure, but it was not without its able opponents on the floor, who pointed out the futility of censorship legislation in general and reminded the Senate that the best censors of pictures young people should see are their mothers.

Opponents of the measure were led by Senator Shields, who insisted that most pictures with respect to their morality or immorality are not properly understood by many of the theatre-going public, that virtue always triumphs at the end of the picture and that when considered as a whole the number of pictures that might possibly be objected to by the most Puritanical is as a rule infinitesimally small.

Senator Roberts who, as he himself phrased it, handled the question of sex morals "without gloves," declared that the efforts of parents to keep their children in the dark toward these matters are overdone. Why not let them in on some of the secrets? They will have to learn some day. The sooner the better. Certainly the motion pictures cannot reasonably be objected to because of their amorous presentations. The legislature had just passed a bill providing for the teaching of the Ten Commandments in the public schools. What explanation is a young woman teacher to give to an inquisitive student who insists upon knowing what is referred to in the Seventh Commandment?

A large gallery of members of women's clubs of the state heard the debate, but did not show a great deal of interest in the censorship question. In fact, there was very little applause or other indications of approval.

Ricord Gradwell Becomes Managing Director of Wid Gunning Organization

WID GUNNING announces that he has arranged with Ricord Gradwell to become associated with him in the distribution corporation Wid Gunning, Inc., as managing director.

Several weeks ago Wid made the first announcement of his direct booking profit-sharing plan of co-operation between producer and exhibitor and he will now give practically all of his personal time to production for the benefit of his exhibitor partners.

Wid plans to leave on a trip through the country within a week, stopping on the Coast long enough to arrange certain production activities.

Mr. Gunning states that the flood of responses which have come in from exhibitors following the first general announcement of his partnership plan has definitely registered the fact that he has chosen the proper moment to announce this method of co-operation.

Ricord Gradwell, who comes into the Gunning organization as managing director, is one of the unique figures in American sales history. Mr. Gradwell, as vice president and general manager of the Oliver Typewriter Company, established himself in a high position as a manager of men.

Mr. Gradwell took charge of the World Film on behalf of banking interests some years ago and proved there that successful business methods outside this industry could be properly and intelligently applied in the film business.

Mr. Gradwell will continue as president of the Producers' Security Corporation, which special service organization he created after completing his work at World Film.

Nathan Vidaver has been elected general counsel for the corporation.

There will be no changes in the personnel of the Wid Gunning organization, Mr. Gradwell coming in to assume the executive direction of the distributing corporation, thereby relieving Mr. Gunning and making it possible for him to devote his time to production in partnership with the exhibitors throughout the country in accordance with his recently announced co-operative plan.

Would Change Name of Maryland's Censor Board

The name of the censor board of Maryland will be changed to the Board of Review, and it will have five members instead of three, if the bill which was introduced in the House at Annapolis, Md., on Tuesday, February 7, by Delegate Kelly, of the Second District of Baltimore City, is passed.

Edward D. Bennett, whose wife is the president of the Parents' Club of Forest Park, which is one of the movie reform bodies of Maryland, drew up the bill and after being introduced it was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Other provisions in the bill include: That three of the five members be required to give eight hours a day to the work and their salary would be $4,000, $3,500 and $3,000 a year instead of the $2,400 now paid each of the three present members of the board. The services of the two other would be gratis but they would be required to give four hours a week to the work.

The State Department of Education would have the power to appoint one of the gratis servers, while the City Education Board would appoint the other.

Exhibitors at Convention Threaten to Will Defer Action if Rentals Are

Two Distributing and Producing Concerns and Many Directors and Producers Promise Their Aid if M. P. T. O. A.'s Ultimatum Is Unheeded, National President Cohen Declares

(By Wire to Moving Picture World) By ROGER FERRI Albany, N. Y., February 16.

What proved to be the most important State exhibitors' convention ever held in this country came to a close today with numerous vital developments. The outstanding features of the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State follow:

Serving notice on producers and distributors of the country that unless they practice strict economy and reduce film rentals at least 33 1/3 per cent over the 1920 prices, the M. P. T. O. A. will take charge of the situation and, if necessary, take drastic measures to protect the exhibitors.

Declaration by Sydney S. Cohen, president of the national organization, who presided over the convention, that the M. P. T. O. A. already has received offers from two of the leading distributing and producing concerns, and many directors and producers, to release their product direct to the exhibitor through the theatre owners' national body.

Hint by Mr. Cohen that the M. P. T. O. A. is considering the advisability of handling pictures of independent producers and distributing them to exhibitors pursuant to an ultimatum issued at the Minneapolis convention last summer, to national distributors, voicing the sentiment of the organized exhibitors of the country.

The state exhibitors officially declared war on "yellow" journalism and in emphatic terms reiterated their confidence in motion picture players as a whole.

As a consequence of the opinions and sentiment demonstrated at this convention, an inkling was given of what may be expected of the exhibitors at their national meeting in Washington. That the national convention will act on the distributor-producer proposition is accepted as a foregone conclusion. Definite action on this movement is expected to be taken at that meeting.

Fully 500 exhibitors from every section of the Empire State came to Albany. While social events had been arranged for the reception of the delegates, all of them were dispensed with except the Movie Ball, at which Doris Kenyon, Norman Kerry, Monte Blue, Clifford Gray, Montague Love, Ann Forrest, Lew Cody, Reginald Denny, Grace Davison, John Lowell, L. Case Russell, Marcus Loew and Charlotte Walker were present.

The convention closed with a banquet on Thursday night, February 16. Senator James J. Walker of New York was toastmaster. The speakers all agreed that the newspapers of this country had treated the motion picture industry unjustly by their sensationally untrue reports of the Taylor tragedy, slandering innocent players and convicting an entire business because of the act of a few individuals. Those who spoke included former Governor Martin H. Glynn of Albany, Judge Almet F. Jenks, Mayor George R. Lunn of Schenectady, President Sydney S. Cohen of the M. P. T. O. A., Charles L. O'Reilly of New York, president of the state organization, and former Senators J. Henry Walters and George F. Thompson and a former speaker of the assembly, Thaddeus Sweet.

Charles L. O'Reilly of New York amid cheers was re-elected president of the M. P. T. O. of New York State. Others re-elected included William H. Linton of Utica, treasurer; Samuel I. Berman of Brooklyn, secretary, and William Dillon, vice-president-at-large.

Others elected follow: Zone vice presidents, Frank Koch, Louis Buettner and Bernard Edelhurst of the Bronx; chairman of executive committee, Jules Michaels of Buffalo.

Board of Directors: H. J. Smith of Buffalo, Walter Hayes of Syracuse, Charles Steiner of New York, Samuel Suckno of Albany, David Cohen of Binghamton, Jules Greenstone of Rochester, M. Quittner of Middletown, A. A. Elliott of Hudson, Sam Peyser of Staten Island, New York; Sam Sheer of Queens, New York; C. A. Warren of Messina, Rudolph Saunders of Brooklyn, Nate Robbins of Utica and Leo Beecher of New York.

Albany spared no effort nor expense to make the convention one of the happiest held within its confines. The Albany Theatrical Managers Association left no detail overlooked and, all in all, the exhibitors left the city satisfied not only in the thought that they had solved many important problems, but also with the fact that they had enjoyed their stay in the Capital.

The convention was a record-breaker not only in the point of attendance, which was the largest recorded at any state meeting, but also on the item of business. The delegates settled down to business immediately after their arrival. Committees lost no time in passing on measures entrusted to them. Every meeting was well attended. The exhibitors came here for business. They had grievances and problems and they rolled up their sleeves and settled them.

Socially Successful

Socially, the convention was equally successful, for never in the history of this historic city was there held a more brilliant affair than the film ball turned out ot be. The armory was crowded with distinguished and representative men and women of all walks of life. The banquet that brought the convention to a close was also notable and the public told in an intimate way that the industry was prepared to defend its good name against the maliciously unfair attacks of yellow journalism, professional reformers and wilful propagandists.

As a consequence of the work of exhibitors here, the citizens and press of Albany were made to realize that the industry had been grossly and unjustly slandered by sensationalists who had condemned the entire business because of the wrongdoing of a few. State and city officials joined in with the local press in acknowledging that an injustice had been done the industry and expressing their confidence in the integrity and character of the business in general. Newspapers here commented editorially on the question, with the result that public opinion here has been reversed and the good name of the industry cleared beyond any shadow of doubt.

Miss Minter Defended

Receipt of a telegram from Mary Miles Minter, whose name had been mentioned in the unfortunate Taylor tragedy, was announced by Mr. O'Reilly at the ball. The message expressed the sentiments of a heart-broken young girl who wanted her friends, the exhibitors who have contributed so materially toward popularizing her, to know that she had committed no wrong, that she had not betrayed any confidence or trust placed upon her by exhibitors and the public, that she is guiltless of the sensational insinuations published by the "scandal-crazed" press.

The telegram, coming soon after Mr. O'Reilly and others had eloquently defended the good name of Miss Minter and others who performed their duties as law-abiding American citizens, by voluntarily offering to aid in solving a gruesome crime and by telling all they knew, was cheered when read. It was addressed to Mr. O'Reilly and reads as follows:

"Please express my kindest wishes to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York and assure them that the many wicked and mean stories about persons in connection with the Taylor case will be proved false. Public opinion already is turning and papers are calling for fair play from the public. I want you as exhibitors to know the truth and for that reason am wiring you direct this message to be read to your convention. Best personal regards and best wishes to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners."

Brandt Arranges for Address by Hays

Albany, N. Y.—While the M. P. T. O. of New York State tabled a resolution extending the co-operation of the exhibitors to Will Hays, at the Wednesday session of the convention here, William Brandt, president of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York, announced that the postmaster general will personally address the latter organization in the metroplis late this month.

The action of the delegates in tabling the Hays resolution was to be expected following the statement of National President Cohen that the "M. P. T. O. A. had nothing whatever to do with the engagement of Mr. Hays." The surprise came when Chairman Michaels of Buffalo of the resolutions committee read the measure, which was quickly tabled on a motion immediately after the reading.

Tuesday's Session

AN ultimatum to producers and distributors that they would either have to cut rentals or compete with the national organization of exhibitors, which "would be forced to accept offers of two of the leading distributing organizations and a number of leading producers and release their products direct to the exhibitors," was issued by Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and incidently furnished the outstanding feature of the opening day of the convention—a day that was literally choked with significant and important developments directly concerning the relations of exhibitors and producers and distributors.

The ultimatum, hinting at a great centralized distribution system under the jurisdiction of local organizations affiliated with the national exhibitor organizations, took the delegates by surprise and furnished this history-making convention with its first big thrill. Preceding the Cohen speech, made at the opening session held in the spacious ballroom of the Ten Eyck Hotel at 8 o'clock, a series of important meetings were held by the executive committee. At these meetings the program was adopted and the ball started rolling for the important transactions that were to be made on the following two days of the convention.

Even the weather man sympathized with the exhibitors, for after a freezing Monday the sun shone brightly on Tuesday morning and helped materially in making the day one of the brightest of the year here. While most of the Western New York exhibitors had arrived by Monday night, it was not until late the following afternoon that the Greater New York and Southern delegations reached the city. Because of the tardy arrival of these delegates, the executive committee earlier in the day changed the hour for the first session from 3 to 8 p. m. By 6 o'clock more than 200 exhibitors had registered with Executive Secretary Sam Berman.

While the executive committee was drawing up the convention program, the representatives of distributing organizations of the state, anticipating the attack on high rentals, held a meeting of their own. As a result of this session it was decided that a representative distributors' committee co-operate with a committee to be named later by the exhibitors on the proposition of furthering the co-operative arbitration program agreed to some time ago by the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York City.

That the delegates to the convention did not care to waste any time and were desirous of getting down to brass tacks immediately was apparent, for the spacious ballroom was hardly large enough to accommodate the exhibitors and their wives, sweethearts, daughters and sisters, for, be it understood, at no previous M.P.T.O.A. convention has there been such a large representation of the fair sex as was here.

President Charles O'Reilly called the first session to order shortly after 8 o'clock and introduced City Treasurer John Boyd Thatcher, representing Mayor Hackett, who contracted a severe cold on Monday. Mr. Thatcher in the name of the city of Albany welcomed the exhibitors and paid an eloquent tribute to the "splendid service rendered the public by the motion picture industry and particularly the exhibitors." Roy Smith, secretary of the Albany Chamber of Commerce, welcomed the exhibitors on behalf of the commercial and business interests of the city.

In outlining the activity of the past year, Mr. O'Reilly submitted the following report:

"It is my pleasure, as well as my duty, to give you a brief summary of my stewardship of your organization, which you placed in my hands in Rochester last April. The credit for the success of the activities of your organization belongs to no individual, or set of individuals—it belongs to each and everyone of you, who have given your time and attention to the many details of the organization work, which has brought about a great measure of success, particu-

Heavier Penalties for Film Thieves

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 16.

(By Wire to Moving Picture World)

Under the terms of a bill introduced in the legislature today, provision is made for the imprisonment of not more than five years in state prisons, or not more than six months in the county jail, or a fine of $250, or both fine and imprisonment for persons who buy, receive or are found in possession or control of films or accessories that had been stolen.

If the property valuation is more than $50, the charge shall be criminally receiving stolen goods in the first degree.

If the valuation is under $50, the charge is one in the second degree and punishable by not more than one year imprisonment or a fine.

larly the co-operation of your entire state body with that of your national organization in the elimination of one of the most serious and burdensome taxes that was ever placed on any industry. I refer to the 5 per cent. film tax, the credit for the elimination of which belongs to your national organization and its great leader, Sydney S. Cohen.

"When you were assembling in Rochester in the spring of last year, there was before your state Legislature the so-called Lusk-Clayton bill which imposed a censorship on motion pictures. Despite every effort of your officers and despite the fact that we presented 1,200,000 signed petitions by the citizens of this great state, who were our constant patrons and supporters, this bill, at the command of the governor of this state, was passed through in the closing hours of the session and became a law, thus imposing an unnecessary restriction on this great medium of expression—the screen press of the state.

"To my mind the greatest censor is the public. I do not believe, and I know you do not believe, that any three—or in fact any other group of men and women—no matter how conscientious their efforts may be, can honestly assume the moral guardianship of the great mass of people who enter our theatres daily.

"Is it not a direct challenge to the clean womanhood and the clean manhood of our state, to assume for a moment that they need the guidance of any three political appointees to tell them what they should or should not see? You and I know as practical exhibitors that the great public would not tolerate anything of salacious or inhuman character being depicted upon our screens, and that our auditoriums would stay empty if any one of us persisted in showing pictures of the kind that this censorship law is supposed to prevent—assuming that such pictures were or are made. The question of censorship will be decided in a greater court in the near future—that great court of public opinion.

"One of the great leading parties of the state has incorporated in its platform a plank opposed to this un-American restriction—the censorship of the screen. This was unsolicited by the industry or any part thereof, but it should be the duty of every theatre owner to leave no stone unturned to acquaint the people of the state of the issue, should it be presented at any coming election.

"Our national organization has provided a means whereby we can bring to the attention of our patrons the great menace of this law and laws of this type that are being forced upon the people by insidious propaganda and un-American tactics of fanatical reformers. The Movie Chats, the screen organ of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, which should be and which will be on every screen of this state, will give us the proper medium of exposing to the people the dark lantern tactics of some of these so-called and would-be reformers.

"It is a pleasure to report to you that after considerable effort on the part of your executive committee, each and every member of which has given to me, as your president, his constant and untiring support, that we were able to establish a better and more amiable relationship between the distributor of motion pictures and us exhibitors.

"After many conferences with the officers of the film clubs, an agreement was drawn whereby an equal representation of both organizations would sit as an arbitration committee in various disputes which arise between exhibitors and exchanges, and after a brief trial of this system, I am delighted to report that it is working harmoniously and with every evidence of success. Case after case has been amicably adjusted with satisfaction to both parties, and while the agreement is but an experiment and covers only a short period of six months, we believe that before the time of expiration draws near a still more satisfactory arrangement will be entered into whereby this method of arbitration will become more equitable, as well as permanent, to the great advantage of the industry in general, in bringing about a more friendly and better business relationship and a better protection to the sincere exhibitor who is more than anxious to run his enterprise on clean and wholesome business principles.

"While on the subject of legislation we want to say that we are doing our best to modify the present law on the admission of minors to our theatres and insofar as ours is an effort to protect the morals and welfare of the children who enter our theatres, it should have the support of all good citizens.

"Through the co-operation of our Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New YorkCity and the Woman's City Club, an experiment was conducted during the past summer whereby these ladies who had the interest of children at heart, designated matrons to be at various theatres and children were admitted to three matinees each week, absolutely free of charge. The reports submitted as the result of this experiment, I am reliably informed, have been of such favorable character that legislation, if introduced, which would protect the child in the theatre rather than prevent its entrance to the theatre, will have the full and hearty support of these good women who had the interest of the child so much at heart that they volunteered their services gratis in order to conduct the experiment, a practical test of what we have always contended, that regulation should be inside and not outside the theatre.

"It is my hope that the committee on laws and legislation will take up this great subject which means so much to the little ones, and present or recommend to the present session of the Legislature a bill which, if passed, will safeguard the welfare of the child whether accompanied or unaccompanied, in theatres.

"It is very gratifying to listen to the treasurer's report. The statements for yearly dues were mailed less than two weeks ago and the ready response displayed in this abnormal business depression through which we are now passing, is full evidence of the place this organization has in the heart of the theatre owners of this state. It, however, devolves upon our committee on ways and means to devise a plan which will insure the continued financial support of every picture theatre owner in the state.

"While our organization is growing in leaps and bounds, still there are a number of owners of picture theatres who have not as yet shown their interest in organization, and it should be the duty of the organization committee to stimulate that interest which will insure a 100 per cent. representation between now and the next convention.

"The public service program, as mapped out for us by our national organization, should be elaborated upon by the committee which will be appointed on this importan work.

"In every instance where the theatre owner in co-operation with the plan of the national organization has turned over his theatre to this work, the result has been more than satisfactory. It will be for your public service committee to stimulate and encourage this department.

"Despite the fact that the officers of your organization and the rank and file have been kept busy defending their industry and their business against the attacks of those who would destroy it, we still have found time to use our screens and our rostrums and our auditoriums, as well as our exchequer, to bring relief to the needy both at home and in many other lands.

"No charity worthy of the name has been denied the fullest co-operation of the theatre owners of this state, and it has been my proud privilege, with the officers and members of your executive committee, to pledge and to work for these worthy causes to the extent that we have collected for needy charities in our theatres in the State of New York, considerably over $1,000,000, which was utilized for the relief of the destitute.

"No organization whose heart is always open to do its share in the cause of humanity can help but prosper and your organization has been no exception to that rule.

"We have prospered. We are stronger. We will grow stronger year by year, because the very foundation of our organization has been built on that motto—"For the good of all."

"And so in turning back to you the organization which you entrusted to me, with a larger treasury, a greater membership, stronger of purpose and ready to meet every attack no matter from what quarter it may come, as promptly as it will meet any relief no matter where needed, I have the proud distinction this moment to hand over the gavel of authority to our great national president—our National President Sydney S. Cohen."

National President Cohen was introduced by Mr. O'Reilly as the chairman of the convention. Mr. Cohen attacked the tendency of newspapers to slander the entire industry because of the acts of a few individuals. He pleaded, too, for public confidence, asking that judgment be withheld until the courts had passed on the acts of the alleged breakers of the law.

"This organization knows that those who are at fault will be prosecuted, as they should be, by the same methods and under the same laws that the humblest citizen in any state would be dealt with, and if a jury decides that one is guilty of a crime as charged, not only will this organization refuse to sympathize with that person but will ring loudest in the condemnation. However, we believe that it is not for us to pass judgment, but to withhold our judgment until that jury shall return a verdict and to be guided by that alone.

"We keenly resent the indictment hastily and unthinkingly made against the entire industry because of these most unfortunate occurrences. Not so long since, when a minister of the gospel was charged with a heinous crime, no one ever thought, and properly so, that it cast a reflection upon all those distinguished gentlemen of the cloth, nor yet when one of America's foremost bankers played an important part in a sensational domestic controversy, did the public look with suspicion upon the entire banking interests. And so I might recount instances in every profession and every industry known to the civilized world and find exact analogies. The industry is made up of the best executive minds, greatest artists and the best mechanics, and it is high time they were accorded the same fairness and justice that is so freely given to men in every walk of life."

Mr. Cohen then dwelt at length on the question of reform and the power of the screen, the public service work of the organization, the civic co-operation being given by exhibitors, likening the screen to the pulpit, school and press and emphasizing the ability of exhibitors to fight their enemies by means of the silver sheet.

Relative to Will H. Hays, former postmaster general, Mr. Cohen said, in part:

"The engagement of Postmaster-General Hays as the leader of a group of producers at an announced salary of $150,000 a year need not cause any alarm among us. Your national officers met in Washington in January and issued a statement concerning Mr. Hays. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are in no way connected with any of the moves which led to the introduction of Mr. Hays into the business. We are not especially concerned about it and will deal only with such developments affecting us as may follow. Mr. Hays has as much right in the industry as any other man. His activities will alone determine his status with the other persons and elements involved and the American people as a whole."

Later, he added: "Because of the all-powerful effect of the screen on government, business, public and private morals and social and civic advancement, the American people have a right to demand that the persons, and instrumentalities used in this most potent motion picture program, shall measure up to the required standards of decency, integrity, honesty and propriety and have the necessary high regard for the righteous opinions, the customs, the manners, and other ethics prevalent in all communities. If our business was simply commercial, its inner elements might not be subject to such a searching public review. The product could be made to answer the question. But the intimate association of human screen factors with the American people, gives it a wholly different aspect and places the standards of living and personal conduct necessarily high.

"We do not need the insidious aid of professional reformers who smile at evil and gloat over wrongs while pretending horror, because of the notoriety it gives them to expose evil and attempt reform. Let us serve notice on elements responsible that no picture containing the face, form or name of any person involved in these tragic and scandalous procedures shall be shown on our screens. Let us be our own censors in this regard. Our organization respectfully submits that of the hundreds of thousands of men and women earning a livelihood in the motion picture industry, there has been a mere handful who do not enjoy an enviable reputation for industry, citizenship and morality.

"Our organization has never swerved from its original intention, to protect and serve the public, and is determined to remain steadfast as long as it exists. We will never, insofar as we can prevent it, permit any one to capitalize crime or indecency, nor to use our screens for the purpose of morbid notoriety. Upon this, we assure the public, they can absolutely depend. Let us protect the hundreds of thousands of clean, honorable and decent people in the producing and other divisions of our business and not allow the conduct of a wilful few to injure them."

Mr. Cohen next referred to the acquisition of the Movie Chats. He reviewed the work of the organization in fighting adverse legislation. He stated, too, that the Washington national convention on May 8 would bring together 5,000 exhibitors. He reviewed the work of the M.P.T.O.A. in campaigns against the music tax, seat tax and other matters of direct import to the exhibitors.

But it was not until Mr. Cohen opened his attack on high rentals that the first bomb was exploded and the keynote of the convention sounded in no uncertain terms.

"Your state and national officers are very much interested in bringing about a reduction of film rental prices and the introduction of more equitable contracts with mutual features attached. We hope to bring our business generally up to higher standards and work out the elimination of the parasitical influences now feeding on the exhibitor. To this end we must encourage the independent producer so that better and more acceptable pictures will be made and, in this way, build up our business.

"But the time has come when we must have a showdown on this rental proposition. I have statistics that tell an interesting story. These statistics will give you an idea of what exhibitors have been up against. Government statistics based on the 10 per cent. admission tax show that in 1921 there was collected the sum of $52,633,023, while in 1920 the tax netted the government $56,944,000. These figures indicate that more than $4,000,000 was collected in 1920 than in 1921. It shows also, taking the 10 per cent. tax as a basis, that exhibitors did $40,000,000 less business in 1921 than they did the preceding year.

"And taking government figures again, we note that the 5 per cent. tax on rentals in 1920 amounted to approximately $5,373,000, against more than $5,900,000 in 1921. Those figures tell the story of the injustice of the rentals. Imagine, fellow exhibitors, at a time when we were making the least money—and many of us digging deep in our pockets to make up for losses sustained—we were being charged more for film rentals. Think it it over. These figures are authoritative and tell the story without mincing words.

"The time has come to reduce film rentals. Unless this is done there will be many exhibitors thrown out of business. The situation is deplorable and unless altered immediately and the rentals sliced so that they will be fair, thousands of exhibitors will have to toss in the sponge.

"The time has come when we must all stop fighting. An armistice must be declared. We must get down to brass tacks. I have come into possession of many cases in which high rentals have all but forced exhibitors to quit.

"A case was brought to my attention only the other day relative to the tactics utilized by United Artists. And right here let me register my emphatic protest against the business tactics of Mr. Hiram Abrams. I am not speaking from a personal angle, for complaints that have poured into my offices against United Artists and Mr. Abrams prove my charges. I contend that Mr. Hiram Abrams is a parasitical factor in this business. He puts nothing into this business and yet he ventures to take everything. We have scores of protests from exhibitors who have vainly sought productions released by Mr. Abrams' organization.

"Let me cite you the New England situation. There exhibitors have long been waiting for a chance to show 'Way Down East,' but in vain, for without notice to exhibitors and without giving them a chance to bid for the picture, Mr. Abrams' agents have leased town halls and booked the picture there on a percentage arrangement. This has been done in the very smallest of towns. Imagine that. And when Mr. Abrams' pictures are shown by exhibitors the rental is made so high that it is impossible for the theatre owners to make any money.

"Why should such a condition prevail? Why should stars whose popularity has been made possible only through the efforts of the exhibitors assume such an attitude? Why should these stars whom we have 24-sheeted and put on the high pedestal they now occupy, be permitted to drive us out of business? This matter is so important that action should be taken on it immediately.

"At our last national convention in Minneapolis there was much discussion on the question of centralized distribution. A special committee was elected to pass on the proposition. This committee has been working intelligently and industriously. That proposition was a warning to distributing interests that the exhibitor would not stand for exorbitant rentals or unfair treatment. We gave them fair warning and in no uncertain manner did we indicate that we meant business.

"Now the time has come when we must act. The time is here when we must stop resolving. You have read in the trade press and also heard in your own circle considerable gossip of curtailment of production on the part of some of the companies. I want to say to you that you need entertain no fear.

"Two leading and important national distributing companies have, without solicitation and in a distinctly voluntary way, offered to turn over their entire program of productions for direct distribution to the exhibitor through our national organization. We have received, too, offers from some of the biggest and best known producers, and directors who want to make productions and turn them over to our organization for distribution as long as they receive a fair profit on their investment. So you need have no fear. We gave them a warning. Rentals must come down.

"The time for determined action has come. We have read in the trade press much concerning various weeks boosting the product of various distributing companies. I think it's about time that there was an Exhibitors' Week.

"Only the other day we read about Al Lichtman making a proposition to First National involving an annual salary of $100,000 for some executive position. These salaries are all artificial and should be stopped immediately.

"And the accessories? The same situation prevails. We have figures from manufacturers of accessories proving conclusively that we are paying exorbitant prices for accessories and that the distributors are getting an enormous and unreasonable profit on a few cents' investment in them."

Mr. Cohen then spoke of the campaign of the national organization against salesmen of "fake" motion picture stock, the repeal of the 5 per cent. tax, accrediting the repeal to the activities of the national organizations, and to the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce of New York, praising that organization and stating that last week it had turned over $5,542 to the national organization, the sum representing a single week's saving incurred by elimination of the rentals tax.

He also commended the film salesmen and exchange managers in New York State. He stated that the national organization is at present investigating the insurance situation, claiming that the rates on liability and fire insurance are exorbitant.

Following Mr. Cohen's address, Secretary Berman announced the following committees:

Resolutions—Jules Michaels of Buffalo, chairman; David Cohen of Binghamton, H. Silverstein of Catskill, Max Barr of Brooklyn, Cass Stahley of Rochester, H. Rachwit of New York, F. W. Mausedt of Glens Falls, Louis Schnider of New York and S. K. Rhonheimer of Brooklyn.

Publicity—S. A. Beuthner.

Wednesday's Session

While National President Cohen had succeeded on the preceding evening in arousing the exhibitors to a fighting mood, it was not until Wednesday morning and afternoon that the actual oratorical pyrotechnics were started. Taking the hint from the introductory remarks of Mr. Cohen, the resolutions committee let loose with a barrage of important resolutions, all touching on vital issues and giving the exhibitor an intimate idea of what may happen when the national convention is held in Washington.

It was a strictly business session with all members taking an active part in the deliberations and clearly explaining their positions on every issue. Not since the M.P.T.O.A. was organized has there been such a busy, straight-from-the-shoulder session. Although more than an hour late in getting together, the session developed many significant points that promise to play a leading part in the activities of the organized exhibitor during the current year. Although the committees had been organized at a late hour the preceding evening, the Wednesday morning period was devoted to meetings of these bodies who reported through their respective chairmen later in the day.

$5,000 In Treasury

Treasurer Linton submitted the annual report showing a balance in the treasury of $5,015.83. The total receipts for the year were given as $13,023.57. Disbursements amounted to $9,107.74, not including $1,000 which remains in the contingent fund. Total receipts collected at the convention were set at $2,100.

Chairman Michaels, reporting for the resolutions committee, read a resolution demanding lower rentals embodying a temporary basic reduction of 33 1/3 per cent. over the 1920 rental prices on all existing and future contracts. Mr. Michaels supplemented this with the statement that the high rentals question is the foremost issue confronting theatre men today, a remark to which State President O'Reilly not only assented but emphasized by stating that he had received complaints from exhibitors who stated that unless some immediate relief is secured they will have to go out of business.

Exhibitor Dillon added that it was not so much a question of inactivity on the part of exhibitors in protecting their interests but rather one of immediate organized relief. Mr. Smith of Buffalo charged that exhibitors had been intimidated into signing contracts by circulation of reports of curtailment of production, which threatened to keep them without pictures. Mr. Edelhurst opined that the exhibitor himself was much to blame for existing high rentals, charging that "little do some of us know that when we sign some of the contracts we are mortgaging our theatres." He argued for the insertion of a more equitable cancellation clause in contracts.

Newcomer Speaks

Mr. Quitner of Middletown, who said he had been in the exhibition business for only six weeks, gave the impressions of a newcomer. He condemned the business methods prevailing in the industry today and said that unless these tactics are changed there will be additional evils. He characterized the treatment of exhibitors as "unfair and destructive." Then he ventured the statement that "the exhibition end of this industry is built on a more legitimate foundation than the production end and it represents considerable more financial investment."

Mr. Bitner claimed that competitive bidding among exhibitors for certain pictures have contributed toward shooting the rental prices skyward. Mr. Renslar contended that there are exhibitors today who are getting films 80 per cent. cheaper than they paid in 1920 and that others are paying considerably more, claiming that this situation developed as a consequence of exhibitor competition of which the distributor took advantage, he said.

Chairman Cohen suggested the appointment of a special committee to take this matter under advisement and consideration. He then alleged that producers and distributors are guilty of a wholesale extravagance and waste of money that otherwise could be utilized in exploiting and advertising pictures for the theatre local, in attaining the good-will of the public and in helping the exhibitor combat detrimental interests.

Had Their Warning

"We gave these producers a warning in Minneapolis last summer," Mr. Cohen stated, "and if they continue to disregard it, why there is nothing more left for the exhibitor to do but show them how to make more money and give service to the exhibitor. They must bring down the cost of production and eliminate this waste and gross extravagance."

The resolution passed unanimously and was referred to the committee on adjustments.

Another resolution related to a proposed amendment to the law relative to the admittance of children accompanied by their parents. The resolution suggests an amendment that would provide for proper chaperons under the supervision of the exhibitors.

As was exclusively predicted in Moving Picture World several weeks ago, the exhibitors have declared war on dealers of "junk" films and "bunk revivals." This fact developed in the form of an emphatic resolution pledging the co-operation of the exhibitors in driving these "junk dealers" out of the business and refusing to use "bunk revivals" or in any way be a party to any reissue that would constitute unfair competition.

Press Arraigned

Exhibitors listened attentively to Chairman Michaels as he read a resolution pledging the confidence of the exhibitors in the bulk of artists in the industry, condemning the press for its unfair arraignment of the entire industry because of the wrongdoing of a few individuals, appealing to the public for a fair consideration and not to pass judgment on individuals involved in the Taylor tragedy merely because these names have been sensationally linked with that case, serving notice on stars and others that they must behave, and expressing the refusal of organized exhibitors not to use or show pictures featuring stars or players who have been found guilty of any violation of the law.

Mr. O'Reilly arraigned the attitude of the newspapers for the unfair manner in which they have treated the Taylor murder, charging gross misrepresentation and injustice. "Just because Mary Miles Minter, a young, unmarried girl, happened to write love letters to an unmarried man with whom she was in love, certainly did not justify the attacks and insinuations that have been made against that girl and the industry as a whole. Since when has it become a great wrong for a young girl in love to send love letters to the one she loves? There was nothing extraordinary in what she did, then why all the slander and tommyrot that newspapers have published? I am in favor of conducting an aggressively determined campaign to offset this ridiculous propaganda and uncalled for attacks upon the good name of our industry and those in it."

That Mr. O'Reilly registered the sentiment of the entire assembly was apparent, for he was greeted with an applause that lasted fully three minutes.

Economy Urged

The resolution pledging the support of the State organization to the Urban Movie Chats was passed, as was also a measure guaranteeing the support of exhibitors in the campaign against dispensers of fake film stocks.

A. C. Hayman's resolution urging the national organization to make a direct connection with producers and directors for the purpose of effecting economy and reduce the cost of production, was referred back to the committee for redrafting, while a resolution extending to Will Hays the co-operation of the State organization was tabled.

The exhibitors, hungry but determined to complete all busines before them, forgot that it was lunch time when Mr. Bithner cited the case of the owner of the Colonial Theatre, a 411 seat house in Kingston, N. Y., that has to close "because of the unfair dealings of United Artists." Mr. Bithner pointed to the former owner of that house, who occupied a seat in the rear of the ballroom, charging that "that man had paid $3,600 to United Artists for second run on 'Way Down East,' 'Three Musketeers' and 'Little Lord Fauntleroy'."

Story of a Bankrupt

Said Mr. Bithner: "This man, who is now bankrupt, was talked into paying $1,500 for 'Way Down East' for a second run of four days in a 411-seat theatre. Later he gave $1,500 for 'The Three Musketeers,' United Artists agreeing to make up the difference in the event of a loss. There was a loss, but this gentleman's appeal received a deaf ear from the producers and he was talked into taking 'Little Lord Fauntleroy' for $600 for four days. He lost out, but got not even sympathy, let alone a square deal. In four months that man was put out of business, and when he acquainted Mr. Abrams with the deplorable situation in which he had been cast because of his tactics, he got no relief for they passed the buck, saying no settlement could be made without the consent of John Fairbanks, brother of Douglas, Mr. O'Brien and Mrs. Smith, mother of Mary Pickford. That man is here broke, without a job. We should see to it that he gets fair play. This case outshines the Mrs. Dodge controversy."

Mr. Hellman of Albany also registered a complaint and after much discussion the Kingston case was referred to a special committee for adjustment. The case will be taken up by Messrs. Elliott, O'Reilly, Bithner and others.

Mr. O'Reilly's suggestion for the adoption of a resolution protesting against the giving of pictures to churches and schools in preference to professional exhibitors in the small town, adding that a continuance of that alleged practice would eventually drive the little fellow out of business, was carried.

Reports were made by Walter Hayes for the ways and means committee, Mr. Smith for the business relations committee and Mr. Manheimer for the committee on constitution and by-laws. Adjournment was taken until Thursday morning for the final session.

Wednesday evening all Albany, Schenectady and other neighboring cities and towns seemed to have turned out at the ball. The spacious armory was jammed with humanity, which began pouring in as early as 6 o'clock. Popular stars made special trips from New York. Among them were Grace Davison, Doris Kenyon, Bert Lytell who for several years played stock in Albany; Eugene O'Brien and many others. The Armory was beautifully decorated, with state, city and exhibitor delegations occupying the boxes.

Sidelights on the Convention

TALK about a fellow being on the job, "Vic" Bendell had them all beat. In the first place, he knows about every exhibitor in the state, and in the next place his booth was the first one on entering the big room. As one of the exhibitors said, any one who got by Bendell and the Goldwyn booth had more than a fair chance of breaking into heaven. And, incidentally, Bendell did a land office business during the three days.

"Jim" Loughborough, Albany manager of Pathe, who knows the publicity game from A to Z, scored a big hit with the crowd with a couple of tots dressed up to imitate Harold Lloyd and Ruth Roland. Mr. Loughborough served overseas, which possibly prompted his decorating the booth in national colors.

John Lowell, star of Arrow's "Ten Nights in a Bar Room," was much in the limelight during the convention, with personal appearances at the Mark Strand Theatre and again at the booth.

One of the most striking booths was devised by Robert Bertschy, who looks after the Grand-Warner productions in the Albany territory. Taking advantage of the fact that the company is exploiting Wesley Barry in "School Days," Mr. Bertschy rigged up a booth of imitation red bricks, and through the window the public could get a glimpse of sure-enough school desks, a stove, books, etc. And at the same time there was plenty of advertising to inform the public that "School Days" was a sure-fire hit.

George Roberts, president of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association, received a wire just before the convention opened from "Jackie" and "Broncho" Buxbaum, to the effect that they were conferring with President Harding on the bonus bill, and that if they were through in time they would attend the convention.

* * *

One of the prettiest booths at the convention was that of the Merit Company. It so happens that I. E. Chadwick, vice-president of the company, is an old Cornell man, and so a little bit of college days was injected in the booth by using the college colors. Mr. Filkins and Miss Wheeler also did not lose sight of the fact that the convention opened on Valentine's Day, and used a lot of hearts in the decorative effects.

HERE THEY ARE, THE BUSY BEES OF THE ALBANY CONVENTION

"Burt" Gibbons, who handles Vitagraph's Albany branch, certainly put one over in the Larry Semon cut-outs. Wherever one went around the city's business center, he was confronted with a life-sized figure of the well-known star. Two of them flanked the entrance to the Hotel Ten Eyck.

Two guesses on the busiest man at the convention. If you guess Irvin Salyerds, of Rochester, national organizer of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, you win. Some one remarked that Mr. Salyerds wasn't any bigger than a pint of cider, but that he had the punch of a full-sized barrel of 100 per cent. proof.

About the time that this magazine comes out, Samuel Suckno of Albany, who not only looked after the hotel reservations but was chairman of the ball committee as well, is having the first good night's sleep in weeks.

There wasn't any camouflage about Mayor William S. Hackett being ill in bed at his home. Mayor Hackett is a firm friend of the screen, but, anyhow, City Treasurer Thacher opened the convention in fine style.

Does Sam Berman play poker? You can't prove it by his wife. When some one was seeking Mr. Berman the other night they knocked at his room at 11:30 and were informed by Mrs. Berman that her husband was "watching some game." Incidentally, there were a few others who later on remarked that it was certainly "some" game.

Frank Tierney, now with Fox productions, was the hit of the banquet with his original songs. What he said about O'Reilly and Cohen had the crowd laughing from the start.

* * *

The Albany crowd never believes in doing anything half way. They have been working on the convention for weeks and it certainly went over in fine style.

And speaking about the convention, every woman who attended it was entertained from the moment she arrived in Albany by the women's entertainment committee, of which Mrs. George Roberts was chairman.

* * *

The electric piano in the exchange room helped to liven things up for the first few hours of the convention. After that it simply helped out, but it lent an attractive atmosphere to the room.

W. Dillemuth, of the Broadway Lyceum, Buffalo, was so anxious to get Moving Picture World's story on the convention that he asked a representative of this publication "to make sure and send it special delivery. I always look forward to my copy of Moving Picture World, for it is giving me not only all the news of the industry, but incidentally rendering me a service that I can not do without. It's a part of business."

William A. True, of the Strand Theatre, Hartford, Conn., dropped into town to meet friends. Mr. True is president of one of the livest exhibitor organizations in the country, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut, which boasts a membership of 146 of a total of 155 picture theatres in that state. True is one of the most progressive and popular men in the organization and his advice was much sought during the convention by many New Yorkers.

So that the men folks would not have to worry over their feminine escorts, the women's committee saw to it that not a spot in Albany was not visited by the fair delegates. Result: the men stuck to business from early morning to the wee sma' hours of the following morning.

* * *

A. C. Hayman, of Niagara Falls, refuses to get excited. Not even a newsboy shoutlng "Uxtry! Prohibition law killed!" caused any unusual excitement. But then A. C. is one of those very few exhibitors who know the Empire State. And then some.

There were more bombs exploded at this convention than were fired off at any other four similar gatherings held within the past year. But 'tis only a forerunner of what may be expected at other conventions slated for the near future.

Wednesday was a holiday in Albany, for this city seemed to have turned out en masse to greet the stars who later appeared at the movie ball. The legislature boys may be inclined to boost Joe Levenson's claims, but when it comes to saying "how-dee-do?" to the film luminaries—ah, that's the other half of it!

Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Exchange of New York was a happy visitor. Sam informed exhibitors here that his exchange in Gotham and the Nu-Art in Buffalo would distribute the Clara Kimball Young features in New York State, Clara having decided to release her five pictures this year through Metro exchanges in every territory excepting the Empire State.

Owing to the fact that we became deluged by a series of "13" even to the extent of being asked to occupy room 313, we recklessly declined all invitations to imbibe of Albany's popular Bevo.

* * *

A quartet of jazzy feminine musicians in Peacock Alley of the Ten Eyck Hotel managed to hold the attention of the exhibitors when they were not engaged at the sessions.

No sooner had the advance brigade of exhibitors set foot on this proud municipality's soil than the delegations from Buffalo and Syracuse started their campaigns for the 1923 convention. New York City, too, wants the convention.

Sam Berman, of Brooklyn, executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, arrived on the scene a week ago and to him and the local committee must go the bulk of credit for the splendid program that confronted the exhibitors on their arrival here. Hotel accommodations had been properly taken care of, entertainment for the women arranged for in advance and, in fact, the details incident to the convention had been so thoroughly perfected that not a single moment was wasted.

Rumors galore were afloat. Most of them proved mere idle chatter. Some promised to develop interesting facts.

Mrs. George W. Roberts, chairman of the women's entertainment committee, was on the job bright and early Tuesday morning, meeting the wives, mothers, sweethearts and sisters of exhibitors. Socially, the women had their hands full, for Mrs. Roberts had prepared an interesting program for them. Other members of the committee included Mrs. Samuel Suckno, Miss Noma Suckno, Mrs. Fred P. Elliott, Mrs. William Berinstein, Mrs. Harry Hellman, Mrs. Harry Lazarus, Mrs. Jack Leonard, and Mrs. O. E. Stacy.

No little disappointment was felt by exhibitors when, on their arrival here, they learned that the hearing on the bill providing for the repeal of the censorship law had been deferred from February 14 to February 21.

Charles F. O'Reilly, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, not only was one of the busiest men at the convention, but he also was the human target for inquiring newspaper reporters from the moment he arrived here until he left after the banquet on Tuesday night. Incidentally, the newspaper folks voted Charles "a regular" who was never too busy to hand out information. He was so popular with the newspaper fraternity that the convention press agent did not even exist so far as the pen pushers were concerned.

When the M. P. T. O. A. of New York State starts something it usually completes the task with a bang, for in addition to commanding front page publicity every day during the convention the "movie" ball was given prominent "play." When one is reminded of the fact that local theatre owners pay 10 cents a line for reading notices, the recognition given the convention, ball and banquet seemed like a dream to those who were intimately acquainted with local conditions as they relate to theatre and press.

A huge and brilliantly illuminated electric sign that could be seen for ten blocks on State street read "Welcome Motion Picture Theatre Owners." The sign was prominently placed in front of the State Capitol, facing State street.

W. H. Linton, treasurer of the State M. P. T. O. and owner of the Hippodrome, Utica, knows every legislator by his first name, and spent the week introducing the "boys" around at the Capitol.

The "reform" lobby is busy here. But take it from Sam Berman, who has reached the point where he has decided to commute between Albany and Brooklyn, his home, it "doesn't mean a thing."

Fred P. Elliott, who presides over the Clinton Square Theatre in Albany, and several other exhibitors, became involved in an interesting set-to with several exchangemen in the spacious lobby of the Ten Eyck. One exchangeman ventured the following remark: "Why, the trouble with some of you exhibitors is that you will never admit you're making money."

"And that crack just shows how much you know about the situation," came back Fred. "Say, boy, have you stopped reading the newspapers? Seems to me you must be getting your information from some of those press books you send me. Why, haven't you heard about that measure now in Congress seeking to increase instead of eliminate the admission tax? And why do they want to raise that tax? I'll tell you: because a lot of us have said we have been making money when we have had to dig down deep into our jeans to make ends meet. Those Congressmen have been jollied long enough. They know that there is not a single industry in this country that has returned to normalcy. They get complaints daily from these industries. Still motion picture press agents grind out yarns about what this or that picture is making at the box office. Is it any wonder why Congress wants to raise the tax? Think it over. Business isn't what it should be in the motion picture industry."

And the twenty or more theatre men who had been attracted to the scene by enterprising Elliott's oratory, could not refrain from indorsing Fred's remarks.

Martin G. Smith, president of the Ohio M. P. T. O., was here, as was also President R. F. Woodhull, of the New Jersey organization. Mr. Woodhull is confident that when the Skeeter State organization holds its convention this year it will be representative of 100 per cent. of the theatre owners in Jersey.

Mayor W. S. Hackett, of Albany; Mayor George R. Lunn, of Schenectady, and former Governor Martin H. Glynn, who is publisher of an Albany daily, did not wait for the banquet to meet the exhibitors, for on Monday night they were spotted in the Ten Eyck lobby shaking hands with the visitors.

Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, some one had said, were due here on the 1 o'clock from New York Monday. Result: several hundred folks who had heard the rumor crowded the Albany railway station hoping to get a glimpse of the popular duo, but, alas, Mary and Doug did not come.

Walter Hayes, representing the Strand Theatre interests in this city, New York, Buffalo, Syracuse and Brooklyn, arrived on the scene bright and early, accompanied by Judge Schott, of Gonda, N. Y.; Howard Smith, of the Palace, Buffalo; J. H. Michaels, of the Regent, Buffalo, and Earle L. Crabb, of the System, of Syracuse.

Mabel Ballin and Hugo Ballin presided over the Hodkinson booth.

Lobbyists at the Capitol joined with the legislative correspondents in unanimously opining that the "word has gone the rounds to pigeon-hole the censorship repeal bill."

Henry W. Kahn, Buffalo manager of Metro, managed the Metro-Loew booth with the assistance of E. K. O'Shea and Thomas J. Joy.

Sam Bullock of Cleveland, a national official, was an interested visitor at the convention and spent Tuesday shaking hands and otherwise renewing old acquaintances.

The following companies were represented in the exhibit hall of the Hotel Ten Eyck; Famous Players, Goldwyn, Metro-Loew, Select, Robertson-Cole, Wid Gunning, Hodkinson, Pathe, Pioneer, Fox Film, Arrow Film, Grand-Warner Exchange of Buffalo, Universal, Commonwealth, Nu-Art, of Buffalo, First National, United Artists, Lightning Coin Changer Corporation of New York, Automatic Ticket Register Company, Merit Exchange of Buffalo, Pantomime Publishing Company, American Lux Products Company and Link Piano Company.

It had been expected that most of the delegates would arrive on Monday, the day previous to the opening of the convention. Instead, on Monday there were only twenty-two delegates on hand, but with the advent of Tuesday the crowd began to pour into the lobby of the Ten Eyck, exciting one prominent Buffalo politician to remark that he "didn't know there were so many theatre owners in the state."

The Albany Theatrical Managers' Association, which paved the way for the convention here, knew that the task it was assuming was a difficult one, but it accomplished the job in a satisfactory way and there was no end of commendation for the organization. Charles M. Winchester spent a sleepless five-day period seeing to it that the every want of the exhibitors was filled.

Rumors concerning the next election of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce traveled thick and furious during the convention. One report has it that several factions have developed, each with their own leaders who aspire to the presidency of the organization.

The F. I. L. M. Club delegation from New York included Charles Rosenweig, of Universal; A. Blumenstein, L. Rosenbluth and I. Schmertz, of Fox; J. Klein, of Robertson-Cole, B. Levine, of First National; F. Goldfarb and Van Berg, of Climax; J. Kleim, of R-C; S. Eckman, of Goldwyn; M. Weinberg, of Wid Gunning; Tom Connors and Arthur Abeles, of Metro; M. Beier, of Myriad exchange; W. Raynor, of Pathe; Jerry Wilson, of National Exchanges, Inc.; Henry Siegel, of Select; J. Bellman, of Pioneer; J. J. Eris and I. Walenstein, of Educational; E. Saunders, of Metro; Sam Zierler, of Commonwealth; J. Levy, of Alexander Film, and B. Schwartz, of Warner Brothers' exchange.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, attended the convention and incidentally took occasion to see his Blazed Trails Productions feature, "Ten Nights in a Barroom," with John Lowell, tax the capacity of the Strand Theatre six times daily with hundreds turned away. Many exhibitors took the opportunity of "catching" the picture, and many booked on the spot. John Lowell, the star, personally appeared, as did also the scenarioist, L. Case Russell.

A delegation of exhibitors from Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont and Connecticut were on hand.

Those politically-inclined gentlemen ever ready to deliver a stunning blow to the "movies," suddenly developed an "extreme pleasure" when introduced to some of the stars brought here to appear at the ball at the Armory, which attracted about 5,000 folks.

Sol Myers, who has taken over the management of the Criterion, formerly Shea's, in Buffalo, attended his first exhibitor convention. Sol. is new in the picture game, but he is one of the keenest and shrewdest showmen that ever travelled back with a troupe. Sol has been long with Max Spiegel, having handled that enterprising showman's burlesque attractions for a long period.

The Rochester exhibitor delegation brought the following to Albany: Albert Fennyvessy, of the Fennyvessy Theatres; Willis G. Broadbooks, George Kress, of the Hudson; Frank Koch, of the Lyndhurst; Mortimer Howell, of the Lincoln; George Stahley, of the Rose Garden; Edwin Huber, Julius Greenstone, of the Empire, and Jack Farren, of the Victoria.

Somebody circulated the rumor that Joe Levenson, of the Motion Picture Commission, would be a speaker at the banquet. When asked about the report, an official of the M. P. T. O. A. replied that "Joe was in conference with the governor, and as the latter could not be on hand, neither could he." It is Joe's great ambition, 'tis said, to write a volume entitled, "My Pal, The Exhibitor."

Everywhere one went the topic under discussion was that of high rentals, which the M. P. T. O. A. has pledged to bring down. The opening shot was fired at this convention and it will echo for weeks, judging from the talk prevalent here.

The Syracuse theatres were well represented. Al Robbins, of the Robbins-Eckel, was the first to arrive. Other Syracusans here included Francis P. Martin, managing director of the Robbins-Eckel; Ben and Mitchell Fitzer of the Empire, Meyer Port of the Grange Theatre, Baldwinsville; Edgar Weill of the Strand, Earl Crabbe of the System, John M. Griswold of the Savoy, and George E. Scherrer of the Savoy Theatre Corporation. Scherrer is also commissioner of public works in Syracuse.

The F. I. L. M. clubs of New York, Albany and Buffalo held a big get-together luncheon and meeting at the Hotel Ten Eyck on Wednesday noon. About eighty were present. The speakers included William Eckman, president of the New York City club; C. R. Halligan, of the Albany club, and W. A. Chase, president of the Buffalo club; H. H. Buxbaum, district manager of Famous Players; James Loughborough, manager of the Pathe office in Albany; Allen S. Moritz, of Buffalo; W. E. Raynor, of New York, and others.

Sydney S. Cohen arrived late Monday night and immediately went into conference with President O'Reilly and Executive Secretary Sam T. Berman.

Governor Miller so far as could be ascertained, was not invited to any of the sessions, ball or banquet. Mayor Hackett, of Albany, welcomed the exhibitors and was the guest of honor at the ball.

A few of the exhibitors had to remain away from the first session on Tuesday night as they contracted the "flue" on the previous evening. The "sick list" was virtually monopolized by Manhattanites who were not prepared for the frigid cold that prevailed here on Monday night. But then Albany, too, has its doctors.

"Smiling" Sam Suckno, treasurer of the Albany Theatrical Managers' Association, knows his Albany and its suburbs and proved one of the best and most accommodating guides this writer has met at any exhibitor convention. If Sam didn't have what you wanted, it didn't exist within a radius of 100 miles of this burg.

Albany hotels will not have to worry if their rooms are unoccupied for the next two months. The cost of living may have come down, but managers of the local hostelries probably never heard of it.

Company's Booths

The following is a list of the exchange booths at the Albany convention, with the decorative effects of each, together with a list of those in charge:

Goldwyn, gold and white, V. H. Bendell, Albany; E. L. Hickey, George Hickey, R. B. Matson, Buffalo; S. Eckman, Jr., New York; J. A. Korpel, Boston.

Select, green and white, E. W. Kramer, R. S. Bendell, of Albany.

Pathe, national colors, James Loughborough, S. Hochstein, J. Rose, E. Hochstein, Theodore Hayes, J. Sachs, J. Krause, Albany. Miniature "Ruth Roland" and "Harold Lloyd" used in front of booth.

Lightning Coin Changer Company, purple and white, L. E. Dauer, Chicago; F. Baxter, New York.

Automatic Ticket Register, buff and green, S. G. Lamm, J. C. Enselen, New York.

Metro, orange and black, Henry Kahn, Buffalo; E. M. Saunders, Arthur Abeles, New York; Joseph Schwartz, "Al" Shea, Thomas Joy, F. C. Robke.

United Artists, green and pink, Moe Streimer, C. A. Saunders, New York.

Arrow, red and blue, Charles Davis, New York; Grafton Corbett, Boston. John Lowell, star of "Ten Nights In A Barroom," personally appearing at the booth.

Commonwealth and Nu-Art, blue and white, Samuel Zierler, New York; E. C. Dickman, Buffalo; M. Cohen, Albany; F. M. Zimmerman, of Buffalo, president of Nu-Art, and George Ferguson of Buffalo.

Paramount, blue and gold, M. W. Kempner, Albany; F. V. Green, New York; Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Buxbaum, New York; N. B. Freeman, D. Lake, J. W. Thurlow, John McConville, Boston; L. B. Butler, J. W. Mitchell.

Grand-Warner, imitation of district school house, booth containing stove, school desks, etc., with a number of pictures of Wesley Barry, appearing in "School Days." Robert Bertschy, Albany; Sidney Sampson, Buffalo; Samuel Grand, Boston, treasurer and general manager; E. W. Dimmick, Boston, president.

Fox, green and pink, W. J. Kupper, William Brenner, Arthur Goldsmith, W. A. Woodward, Jean Lowe, Albany; I. Smertz, Louis Rosenbluh, New York; Fred Meyers, C. F. Sheehan, Buffalo.

Merit, carnelian and white, plentifully besprinkled with red hearts, the convention opening on Valentine's Day. I. E. Chadwick, N. I. Filkins, Buffalo and Albany; Miss Marie Wheeler, Homer Howard, Harold Filkins, Albany.

Vitagraph, red and blue. Booth included striking cut out of Larry Semon. Burt Gibbons, S. N. Burns, C. C. Charles, George Goldberg.

Hodkinson, green and gold, Warren Lewis, Harry Thompson, assistant general sales manager, New York; Thomas Brady, Buffalo.

Wid Gunning, purple and gold, Dan Dolan, Mack Weinberger, New York.

Universal, white and blue, C. R. Halligan, Albany; M. A. Chase, Jess Kauffman, Buffalo; F. S. Hopkins.

First National, purple and gold, A. Herman, Harvey O. Sachs, Nathan Dobson, Albany.

Miller Machine Out to Harass Industry Because Convention Ignores Its Boss

THE Miller "machine steam roller" is at work and seems determined to make its power felt within the ranks of the motion picture industry in the Empire State.

The failure of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the State of New York to invite Governor Miller to any of the functions incident to the convention here was the chief topic of conversation in political circles. That the chief executive of New York is not ignoring the move is conceded by those close to his offices. These officials and lieutenants of the governor point out that the action is the first public demonstration of the picture interests of the state of their unfriendly feeling toward Miller. The Miller adherents are emphatic in their statements that "the end is not yet" and that the challenge—for challenge it has been characterized by "machine" men—has been taken up.

What the next move will be is the subject of considerable speculation. However, those in a position to know what is what in the inner circles of the gigantic political "sweep," are inclined to believe that the governor will use his influence in jamming through the Legislature a number of bills harassing to the industry, which are slated for introduction in the Assembly and Senate within the next few weeks.

"Soft Shoe" Army Bitter

Politicians here are active and in no uncertain terms are they making known the fact that they resent the antagonistic attitude of the motion picture industry and trade press towards the Miller administration.

One report that has come like lightning from a clear sky is that the administration will back a measure that will "put teeth in the present censorship bill."

The attacks to which the censorship measure has been subjected have intensified the ill feeling of the administration's "soft shoe" army.

Pending in the Legislature at present are several measures directly affecting the industry. One is embodied in the annual appropriation bill, which was introduced on Monday night, February 13. There is a provision in this measure that increases the appropriation for the censorship commissioners. Another bill relates to a six-month apprenticeship for projectionists. This measure, carrying with it the indorsement of the Miller adherents, will in all probability be passed within the next two weeks.

May Shelve Repeal Bill

However, the "blow" that the administration intends to deliver will be against a bill providing for the repeal of the censorship law. This bill had been originally slated for a hearing on Tuesday of this week. At the eleventh hour, however, word was given out at the Capitol that the hearing had been postponed at "the request of the exhibitors." This announcement has been proved erroneous and developments later in the week brought out the fact that the postponement was made at the instance of Miller lieutenants.

This postponement announcement was received with much disappointment among delegates to the convention, who had intended to be present in a body. There is now being circulated what can be accepted as a fairly reliable report that the bill will never be given a hearing, but instead sidetracked by the committee and a substitute and more drastic censorship measure reported to the legislature that will "have teeth and claws."

Why the Theatre Investigation?

Definite action on this measure, it is reported, will not be taken until after the report of Henry B. Sayre, industrial commissioner of New York, who was recently appointed by the governor to make a thorough investigation of the construction and durability of picture theatres in this state. This move was "inspired" by the Knickerbocker Theatre catastrophe in Washington.

Sayre is a Miller man and his investigation will extend to every section of the state. The investigation is now being carried on by an army of inspectors from the office of the industrial commissioner. It is reported that the findings of Mr. Sayre will be submitted to the governor and subsequently to the Legislature within the next three weeks. The report, it is hinted, will contain an excuse for the increase of the army of representatives of the censor board.

The report, too, according to those on the inside, will provide the committee now deliberating over the censorship repeal bill an excuse to incorporate in that measure a provision that will give the censors jurisdiction not only over the pictures shown in this state but incidently over theatres themselves, making the censorship inspectors subsidiary inspectors for the industrial commissioner.

Bound to Make Trouble

That the administration is aware of the reported intentions of picture theatres in New York to bring about the downfall of the administration is evident. The Miller organization is seemingly prepared for such an attack at the next state elections and is resorting to every political trick to retaliate.

Administration officials here point optimistically to reports of a lack of harmony between the producer-distributor and exhibitor interests and contend that with such a situation they have nothing to fear. However, there are not a few Miller adherents who realize the power of the screen and no surprise will be occasioned if, when the "teethed" amendment is reported to the Legislature, some joker is incorporated in the bill that will give the censorship authorities jurisdiction over exhibition and stereopticon slides.

"Joe" Still Peeved

The unconstitutionality of such a move has been pointed out to the administration, but the latter is seemingly adhering to the policy of "taking a chance." This attitude is interpreted by exhibitors assembled here as indicative of the fear entertained by "machine" men over the screen campaign. However, the "machine" does not make any effort to keep secret the fact that its "most powerful tool will be disguised under the word censorship."

Conferences between Joe Levenson, secretary of the Motion Picture Commission, and Governor Miller have been numerous. The former maintains the attitude that the motion picture industry "has not behaved" and should be punished.

That the "machine" interests will renominate Governor Miller for the gubernatorial honors at the next primary prior to the state elections is accepted as a fact here.

New Bill Increases Powers of Censors

(By Wire to Motion Picture World)

Albany, Feb. 15,

Through Assemblyman Walter F. Clayton, who introduced the censorship measure last year, the New York Motion Picture Commission today proceeded to make good its threat to put teeth in the censorship law.

Clayton today presented a bill increasing the powers of the censors.

Under the terms of the bill the censors are given the following powers: the right to conduct an investigation of all film concerns, with the authority to issue subpoenas and compel the attendance of witnesses; the right to inspect all books of picture companies.

Provision for the dropping of regular inspection fees for educational, charitable and religious films made.

Press Freedom Is Claimed by Pathe in Suit Over Censorship of Its News Reel

THE right of the New York State Motion Picture Commission to censor news reels is questioned in the suit filed by Pathe Exchange, Inc., with the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, direct appeal to that court having been taken with the consent of the attorney general. The plaintiff maintains that news reels are in the same category as newspapers and as such entitled to the same freedom granted to the press by the State Constitution.

Coudert Brothers filed the suit for Pathe. The defendants are George H. Cobb, Helen May Hosmer and Joseph Levenson, members of the commission. The suit is based on the right of the commission to examine and license all motion pictures unless they shall be found to be "obscene, indecent, immoral, inhuman, sacreligious, or of such character that exhibition would tend to corrupt morals or to incite to crime."

The petition declares that the commission had threatened to prosecute Pathe unless such news films are licensed, which adds to the cost of the films supplied to customers under contracts made before the law went into effect. The elimination of pictures of bathing girls at Atlantic City, which were published in the newspapers without protest of any kind, brought about the suit.

Miller Keeps Quiet

Governor Nathan L. Miller has refused to comment on the case.

"I am no longer a judge," he said. "Since the question is now before the courts, I do not care to express any individual opinion."

Paragraphs one to four, inclusive, of the document filed and signed by both parties deal with the identification of the plaintiff. The text of the remainder follows, in part:

"Fifth: Such films of the plaintiff contain no portrayal of imaginary scenes or occurrences staged or created for the purpose of making pictures, and are not reproductions or re-enactments of the events depicted, but consist of truthful pictures of actual transpiring events and actual things, and are taken on the ground as they exist or occur with motion picture cameras and made by the usual processes of photography.

"Sixth: Exhibition of pictures by means of such films is susceptible of being made by any one possessing an appropriate projecting machine, and in any place having suitable lighting facilities, and such exhibition is frequently made in private homes, army camps, passenger vessels, warships, town halls, churches, schools, welfare centers, public squares and parks, public meetings, private gatherings and elsewhere as well, without the charge of admission fees as otherwise, and plaintiff's business in part consists in leasing such films for use at such exhibitions, but plaintiff does not participate in such exhibitions.

"Seventh: Plaintiff is under contract with a large number of persons, firms and corporations by which plaintiff is bound to supply them and they to take and pay for such films when and as issued by plaintiff which contracts were in existence and in force at the time said Chapter 715 of the Laws of 1921 came into effect.

"Eighth: Defendant has threatened plaintiff with prosecution under the penal provisions of said Chapter 715 of the Laws of 1921 in case plaintiff shall sell, lease or lend for exhibition at any place of amusement for pay or in connection with any business in the State of New York, any such films of the plaintiff unless there is at the time in full force and effect a valid license or permit therefor of the Motion Picture Commission of the State of New York and unless such film or reel shall contain for exhibition upon the screen identification matter in substance, style and length as prescribed by the commission, and plaintiff is unable to obtain such license or permit without first paying the fees prescribed by said statute and observing the other requirements thereof and of the rules and regulations of said commission, all of which things delay, hinder and interfere with the plaintiff in the distribution of such films to defendant's loss.

"Ninth: Compliance by plaintiff with the requirements of the Motion Picture Commission in the particulars named in the next preceding paragraph hereof adds to the cost of the films to be supplied by the plaintiff pursuant to the contracts specified in paragraph eight hereof, sums equal to the fees and expenses prescribed in said Chapter 715 of the Laws of 1921 without opportunity on plaintiff's part to recoup the same from plaintiff's subscribers under said contracts.

"Tenth: Defendant has caused wide publicity to be given to its intention to prosecute under the penal provisions of said Chapter 715 of the Laws of 1921 every person who shall exhibit in the State of New York motion pictures, including 'Pathe News,' or current event films such as are produced, made, issued, and distributed by plaintiff as above set forth, unless there is at the time in full force and effect a valid license or permit therefor of said Motion Picture Commission and unless such film or reel shall contain for exhibition upon the screen identification matter in substance, style and length as prescribed by the commission.

"Eleventh: The requirements of the defendant set forth in the next preceding paragraph hereof, and its widely announced purpose to prosecute exhibitors as therein set forth, have made it impossible for plaintiff to lease, deal with, issue and distribute to and among exhibitors in New York any current events films for exhibition at places of amusement for pay or in connection with any business in the State of New York, except that the plaintiff first obtains a license or permit for the same in the manner and at the expense more fully set forth in said statute; and enforcement of such requirements will result in the loss to plaintiff of its New York State business in such current event films which has been quite profitable in the past, unless plaintiff complies with said statute by obtaining licenses or permits as therein prescribed.

"Twelfth: The plaintiff claims that said statute is in violation of Section 8 of Article 1 of the Constitution of the State of New York and void, insofar as the same purports to subject such current event films to licensing or permission or examination or inspection by said Motion Picture Commission, and to give such commission any control, power or authority over the exhibition, selling, leasing, or lending of the same; and claims further that the plaintiff is entitled to have and should be granted an injunction or other process of this court restraining the defendant from applying or purporting to apply to said current event films or the exhibition, selling, leasing, or lending of the same any provision of said statute or any rule and regulation of the commission made thereunder.

"Thirteenth: The defendant claims that said statute in all parts and particulars and the rules and regulations made by said commission thereunder are constitutional and apply to and govern the motion picture industry as therein specified and in particular the exhibition, sale, lease and lending of current event films such as those above, in the State of New York, and that the plaintiff is not entitled to the relief sought.

"The parties hereto accordingly submit their respective claims and contentions to the court and agree that the court pursuant to Section 546, et. seq., of the Civil Practice Act shall render such judgment as shall be proper on the law and the foregoing facts, shall declare the rights and legal relations of, the parties hereto, in the premises, pursuant to Section 473 of said Civil Practice Act and the Rules of Civil Practice applicable thereto; all without costs to either party as against the others."

St. Louis Urges Sacks for Postmaster General

All elements of the film business in St. Louis have swung behind William Sacks, director of the Republican National Bank, St. Louis, oil producer and refiner and former postal clerk, for appointment as postmaster general by President Harding to succeed Will H. Hays, who recently resigned to accept his new position in the film industry.

A delegation of prominent St. Louis officials and Republican leaders visited Washington and called on President Harding in behalf of Sacks. The F.I.L.M. Club of St. Louis and the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of St. Louis at special meetings have unanimously indorsed Sacks for postmaster general. Telegrams to that effect were sent to President Harding and Attorney General Daugherty.

Ministers Say Movies Take Their Congregations Away

Sunday motion picture shows are proving such a popular diversion in Watertown and northern New York that the Jefferson County Ministerial Union will begin a campaign on February 26 in an effort to increase the dwindling attendance of their congregations on Sunday nights. Some of the ministers admit that it will be a close contest between the proprietors of motion picture houses and the churches, as they claim the Sunday shows are attracting more and more each week.

While no city ordinance against Sunday shows will be sought by the Ministerial Union, the pastors of seventy churches affiliated with the association will seek through a series of Sunday night sermons on the strict observance of the Sabbath to win back those who are now attending the theatres on Sunday night.

Los Angeles Film People, Maligned, Demand Fair Play of General Public

WE are not rampant with vice, we do not ask favors but cessation of idle gossip," that is the plea for fair play that comes from prominent film people in Los Angeles, addressed to the general public. It was made at a gathering termed "the fight for life" which, arranged by Chairman Joseph M. Schenck of the Independent Screen Artists' Guild, brought together the greatest array of film celebrities ever assembled. Production had been stopped on forty-two features at Los Angeles studios when the call for the meeting was issued.

A statement was issued to the press over the signatures of Schenck, Thomas H. Ince, Charles Chaplin, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Anita Stewart, Allen Holubar, Richard Walton Tully, J. Parker Reid, Jr., Colonel William H. Selig, H. O. Davis, E. B. P. Schulberg, Colleen Moore, Ben Turpin, Carter De Haven, Marshall Neilan, Mack Sennett, Louis B. Mayer, Katherine MacDonald, Charles Ray, John M. Stahl, Maurice Tourneur, Guy Bates Post, J. L. Frothingham, King W. Vidor, Buster Keaton, Dorothy Phillips, Douglas MacLean, Florence Vidor and Hobart Bosworth.

The Official Statement

The official statement follows:

"We do not ask for special favors, but only for the American principle upon which this democracy was founded—one of fair play.

"The recent unsavory publicity that has followed in the wake of the demise of the late William D. Taylor has resulted in our industry being maligned, mere rumor accepted as fact and idle gossip magnified into reality.

Not "Rampant With Vice"

"Billy Taylor needs no eulogy. The life he led was but an indication of the true character of the man who was struck down by an assassin's bullet.

"The police have given to the public a theory that revenge accentuated the crime that resulted in William Taylor's death, exonerating the motion picture industry or any of its persons as being implicated.

"We are not rampant with vice.

"The American public didn't attack all governors because a charge was filed against a certain state executive.

"Law-Abiding Citizens"

"The American public did not attack all ministers because a wanton crime was charged to a preacher of the Gospel.

"All we ask is that the public bear with this industry and not accept rumor as fact.

"We are just normal human beings. We are not ethereal and do not want to be regarded as such.

"Our happy marriages far exceed those of divorce; our church-going populace is equally as much as those of any other profession.

"We are law-abiding citizens, and we rear families. And yet William Taylor's death has resulted in aspersions being cast upon this industry and upon us, while we are striving to make the world a better place to live in through the screen.

"Personal Affront"

"And we who have accepted that responsibility placed upon us by the public through their patronage feel it a personal affront for others to assume through innuendo that we are not worthy of that honor.

"We have striven hard and, we believe, succeeded in giving joy to millions. In return it is only fair that we expect support, at least until rumor is substantiated by fact.

"Let Him Without Sin"

"We deny that motion picture people are as pictured. We deny the industry is rampant with crime and vice. We deny that motion picture people are sinners, and we only quote the Bible to those who malign us:

" 'Let him without sin cast the first stone.'

"We are a part of every American home, not through any selfish desire, but because it is the will of the public. The public has virtually accepted us as a member of each family. Yet they do not, we believe, accord us the same treatment that they would others of their household.

"That's America's idea of fair play. Certainly we do not ask too much in expecting that."

Nine Men Held in Connection with Theatre Collapse

The coroner's jury investigating the Knickerbocker Theatre disaster in Washington, D. C., has ordered nine men held for the grand jury. All are of Washington. They are: R. G. Geare, architect of the building; J. H. Ford, the engineer who designed the roof structure; Morris Hacker, building inspector when the theatre was constructed; Frank L. Wagner, builder; Donald Wallace, general superintendent of construction; R. G. Fletcher, superintendent of the Hammett Fireproofing Company, which built the walls; John L. McDonald, the contractor who erected the steel; Thomas L. Costigan, engineer and computer for the District of Columbia Building Department, who passed on the plans, and Julian R. Downman, the assistant building inspector when the building was constructed.

The coroner's jury in its verdict declared that "the collapse of the roof was due to faulty designing and construction and inadequate supervision and inspection."

It also submitted a number of recommendations, one being that "all theatres and places where the public assemble be closed and kept closed until such time as their safety is assured."

Hays to Be Guest of Honor at Annual M. P. D. A. Dinner

The Motion Picture Directors' Association will hold its fourth annual dinner dance at the Hotel Astor on the evening of Thursday, March 16. The guest of honor will be Will H. Hays, who assumes active participation in the picture business on the sixth of the same month. Extensive plans are on foot to make this occasion one of the memorable events of local screen history.

The M. P. D. A. will alter its general procedure in the handling of this special occasion. The plan now includes a reception to Mr. Hays, a dinner in the Gold Room of the Astor, to be followed by entertainment and general dancing.

One radical change is that whereas former social functions of the association have been more or less limited to the producing end of the business in this instance all branches of the industry will be asked to co-operate in extending a welcome to Mr. Hays. The producers, exhibitors, exchangemen, publishers will have this opportunity of greeting Mr. Hays on this, his first public appearance after beginning his new duties.

Action Unnecessary After Brady's Emergency Call

The board of directors of the N.A.M.P.I. responded last Monday to a hurry-up call from William A. Brady, president, to adopt plans for opposing the double theatre admission tax, which on the previous Saturday seemed to be scheduled for early adoption by the ways and means committee of the House of Representatives.

At the meeting President Brady stated that authoritative word had just come from Washington that the double admission tax had been abandoned by the ways and means committee, thus removing the necessity of sending a delegation to Washington to protest against it.

Science Service Dedicates Self to Visugraphic for Short Films Giving Scientific Information

GREAT significance attaches to a series of productions to be issued shortly by Visugraphic Pictures, Inc. Tarkington Baker, president of Visugraphic, has concluded negotiations that will secure for the motion picture industry the sympathetic co-operation of certain influences which, while not hostile, have heretofore shown no active or positive friendliness.

Mr. Baker announces that Visugraphic has signed contracts with Science Service, an endowed institution of Washington, D. C., devoted to the dissemination of scientific information in popular form. Science Service dedicates its funds, efforts and time, on a non-profit basis, to the work for which it is organized, and is looked upon as the official spokesman for all the important associations of scientists and for all the most prominent individual scientists engaged in research and experiment throughout the world.

Up to the present time, Science Service, representing the sentiment and will of its membership—surrounded by ethics as rigid as those governing the medical profession, if not, indeed, more rigid—has steadfastly declined to employ moving pictures. Now, however, its former decision has been rescinded and Science Service, in connection with Visugraphic, is already at work upon a series of short-reel pictures that should prove novel and valuable.

"There is an increasing demand for really interesting, refreshingly new short subjects," Mr. Baker insists. "Spectators, as exhibitors know, are tired of the sort of short subjects now available. They lack newness, freshness; they are all cast in the same mould. The Science Service series will cover a wide field."

The Personnel

Dr. Edwin E. Slosson, himself one of the best known scientists in the United States, is the editor of Science Service. Howard Wheeler, for many years editor of Everybody's Magazine and a newspaper man of nation-wide prominence, is the manager. On the board of trustees are such men of international reputation as George E. Hale, director of the Mount Wilson Observatory; Vernon Kellogg, permanent secretary of the National Research Council; Dr. John C. Merriam, president of the Carnegie Institution; Edwin F. Gray, president of the New York Evening Post; E. W. Scripps and R. P. Scripps, both of the great chain of newspapers known as the Scripps-McRae League; William Allen White, editor and author; R. M. Yerkes, chairman of the Research Information Service; D. T. MacDougal, director of the Arizona Desert Laboratory; R. A. Milleken, professor of Physics, Chicago University; A. A. Noyes, director of chemical research of the California Institute of Technology; George T. Moore, director of the Missouri Botanical Garden; W. E. Ritter, director of the Institution for Biological Research, and Chester H. Rowell, editor and writer.

To those callow critics who have lately found much unwarranted fault with the industry, the enlistment of the co-operation of such a group of men should prove decidedly disturbing, Mr. Baker believes. It should put an end to the idle talk of those who profess to see in pictures no background of intellectual substance.

The Science Service-Visugraphic series contemplates scenarios by such famous people as Stefansson, Sir Oliver Lodge, Dr. Woods Hutchinson, Dr. Harvey Wiley, David Starr Jordan, Mary Roberts Rinehart and Thomas A. Edison. Also, coincident with the weekly release of the pictures, there will be a nation-wide publication of corresponding articles in the leading newspapers of the country.

Nixon's Glenside Has Public Opening Feb. 3

Philadelphia's newest suburban theatre, Nixon's Glenside, after a private opening Wednesday, opened its doors to the public Friday, February 3. Ex-Mayor Thomas B. Smith, Henry Saffer, Arthur Arnold, C. R. Wanamaker, Fred G. Nixon Nirdlinger, Herbert Effinger, Mrs. Jennie Effinger and others are interested in this new enterprise.

The Nixon's Glenside seats 700 and is built of brick and concrete, being of colonial design. A special feature of the house is the wiring system, which controls the indirect illumination, and the booth.

Kent on Tour

Sidney R. Kent, general manager of distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, left New York February 1 on a four weeks' tour of Paramount exchanges, during which he will visit the offices in Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Des Moines, St. Loius, Denver, Salt Lake, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

Editorial Sanity

THE Chicago Herald and Examiner in an editorial entitled "Picking a Goat," is in striking contrast to many of the newspapers' utterances on the subject of the Taylor case. It is so sane and so clear-headed that we print it in full for the information of the industry and as a heartening example.

It reads:

We love the dramatic. We revel in the play of the spotlight. We like to think of history as a series of crises, to regard life as an affair of jet blacks and bright whites, to see a goat driven into the wilderness with the sins of the whole tribe done up in a symbolic package on his back.

Therefore we read with relish of the scandals of Hollywood, and picture to ourselves in fine sharp colors the details of the daily life there. We see Hollywood in purple and, lately, dashed with blood.

Our view and our imaginings are mostly foolishness. Hollywood has its percentage of blazing folly and its percentage of crime.

These percentages are higher no doubt, than in, let us say, La Grange. But we doubt if they differ much from those of the ordinary colony of the rich in suburban New York; nor are they nearly as high as in certain sections we might name here in Chicago.

What has happened among the dwellers in Hollywood is unfortunately happening in many other places; only, because we have to have a goat, Hollywood gets the advertising.

And it is the advertising that does the business. Take the Casino Club here in Chicago. It is a placid, even at most times a dreary spot. Guests undoubtedly took liquor to it—one could hardly blame them—and even got drunk there. So they did elsewhere.

But advertising began to center on the Casino Club; the police "raided" it at intervals; and in the imagination of thousands of solid, honest, but goat-loving citizens, it immediately became lurid.

Such parties as Arbuckle staged in San Francisco are a disgrace anywhere. But one observes that Arbuckle's party was in San Francisco.

Such a life as the murdered Taylor lived will be disagreeable to the ordinary moral sense anywhere. But how does it differ in course or end from Elwell's, which ran and finished in New York? Or except in its conclusion from a thousand and one others?

Hollywood will do well to take thought for the morrow. The force of public opinion is nothing to monkey with. But to hold Hollywood or the moving picture interests generally responsible for the unfortunate prevalence of dissipation and crimes of violence today seems hardly fair.

Four Newspapers Have the Fairness to Declare Picture People Good Citizens

NOT all newspapers and newspapermen are so susceptible to the temptation to wax sensational that they must, by "coloring" their articles, attribute directly or by innuendo to the many the evils done by the few. The storm of notoriety fostered by the press in connection with the murder of William Desmond Taylor has not been approved by many news publications.

The Detroit News is a fair example of these better class journals. Its issue of Thursday, February 9, carries an article by H. G. Salsinger, a staff correspondent, on "The Truth About Hollywood as Found by Reporter." The conclusion is: "Minister and Others Living Among Movie Actors Declare Most of Them Are Decent Like Other People."

Other papers that have been editorially fair are the New York American, New York Morning World and Chicago Post. The American said editorially on Wednesday, February 15:

The Mayor of Los Angeles has issued an appeal to the common sense and decent feeling of the public and the public press. He says:

The Arbuckle case and the slaying of Mr. Taylor were indeed unfortunate affairs, but it is not just to criticise an entire group of people such as those engaged in the motion picture industry for incidents, many of them not true as to fact, which have been published broadcast recently.

I believe that the Hollywood motion picture colony should not be condemned for the actions of a few of its members any more than a district or an industry located in San Francisco, New York or Chicago.

I am convinced that there are hundreds of clean, law-abiding men and women engaged in the making of motion pictures, and in their behalf I ask the open-minded judgment and the even-minded justice characteristic of our American people.

The Mayor tells the exact truth, and his utterance should have the effect of correcting some of the misrepresentation and some of the misconception in regard to the Taylor murder and the film industry.

An enormous amount of flagrant misstatement and vague and unjustified speculation and insinuation has been sent broadcast in regard to the Taylor murder, largely because neither the authorities nor the newspapermen on the case could find many established facts on which to base their conclusions and inferences.

Stripped of wild theories and reckless exaggeration, however, the facts appear to be as follows:

A director of some importance in the film world was killed mysteriously in his own home. He was a man of peculiar popularity with women. Love notes from several women were found in his home and there is a possibility, but by no means a certainty, that he was murdered on account of some love affair.

The case is so exactly similar to the Elwell tragedy in New York—first as to the character of the two victims, second as to the possible motive of the murder, and third as to the circumstances surrounding the murder—that they might be exact duplicates one of the other, with merely change of scene.

Under those circumstances there would seem to be no more basis for the wicked distortion and exaggeration of the simple facts in regard to the film people than there would have been of similar attacks upon society people on account of Elwell's social connections.

Every class, every profession, has its "black sheep." There are some shyster lawyers who rob their clients, some doctors who are actually criminal in their operations, some statesmen who figure in Standard Oil exposures, some architects who build criminal death-traps.

There are, in fact, disgraces to every class and every profession; but intelligent and judicious people do not hold a whole profession or a whole industry or a whole element of society responsible for the acts of a few deliquents and disreputables.

Intelligent and informed people realize full well what an important and commendable part the film industry plays in the life of this nation.

It is the fourth industry in extent of operations.

It provides employment for approximately a million people directly and indirectly.

Its product reaches the enormous sum of a thousand million dollars a year.

It is among the most educational and uplifting of influences and ranks in those respects with literature and journalism.

It teaches art, architecture, decoration, history, science, world news, and instils the culture of poetry and romance.

It provides the chief entertainment of millions, and brings joy to the hearts of young and old.

It invades the most distant and desert districts and links them in knowledge and understanding with the most favored metropoles.

Its hard-working men and women are in fact public benefactors, earnestly endeavoring to bring enlightenment and enjoyment into weary and dreary lives, laboring loyally to contribute their share to human progress and human happiness.

Why disparage and defame them?

Why not give them the credit and the consideration which the immense majority of them deeply deserve?

The appeal of the Mayor of Los Angeles to the conscientious and discriminating portion of the press and the public will not be in vain.

The World on February 12 said:

Contrary to the prevalent belief, says Mrs. Gertrude Atherton, the town of Hollywood, lately unpleasantly associated with a murder mystery and previously famed almost as widely for its production of scandal as for its moving pictures, is no more a centre of vice and high living than any other suburban section. Mrs. Atherton has lived there, and though she heard of "wild parties," as one does in any community these days, the majority of the population seemed to her "too busy, too hard-working, to be able to afford dissipation." They work by schedule and long hours.

They must be on the lot at 8 o'clock in the morning in order to make up and be on the stage at 9 o'clock. They rarely leave before 6 in the evening. By that time their one idea is to rest and be ready for another hard day's work next morning.

To make the picture more convincing, Mrs. Atherton shows that one can live more cheaply in Hollywood than in the East. "Food," she testifies, "is cheap. The warm climate makes one fairly independent of coal. A car can be kept in a garage at from $12 to $20 a month. Here it would cost $75. People complain of rents, but they are far more exorbitant elsewhere."

Evidently the popular conception of a moving-picture colony as one long and hilarious picnic must be discarded as at least erroneous. If the cinema actors and actresses start the day at 8 and quit at 6, if they complain of rents and take careful thought of the price of living, they are not so different from ordinary mortals. There have been murders in other villages, and parties of which the inhabitants were not proud. Perhaps there is even occasional high thinking in Hollywood to go along with the plain living.

The Chicago Post on February 11 said:

There was a time when "All the news that's fit to print" meant exactly what it said in the newspaper world. Later, with the development of sensationalism as a fine art, not for the study of human emotions but to pander to morbid human curiosity, the "yellows" began edging over in the line of decency. But it has taken the demoralization of the movie colony at Hollywood, and a murder mystery which has remained for ten days unsolved, to show how thoroly some of the Chicago papers have scrapped all idea of what really is fit to print.

People are interested in movie stars because they know them by sight. They are always interested in an unsolved mystery, particularly when the "gripping" hand of death has done its work. So the latest crime in Hollywood movie circles has had an unusual drawing power as news. But for lack of progress in the detection of the criminal, certain Chicago papers have begun to vie with each other in the turning up of foulness and degeneracy, and in the brazen openness and cynicism with which they have forced on their decent readers all sorts of filthy gossip about depravity and unnatural vice. Much of this slime can not qualify as news, none of it as fit to print.

It is getting hard to tell which are the most demoralized and demoralizing, the overpaid, unbalanced decadents who form a lunatic fringe of the movie world, or the cynical, unabashed circulation-chasers and scandalmongers of the Chicago press.

Forget Him, Mr. Brady

We indulge the hope that William A. Brady, whom we honor as a vigorous fighter and champion of the amusement world, will remember that every time he argues or debates with the Rev. Notoriety Straton of New York, he gives that gentleman as much advertising as he himself receives. Straton would expire if it were not for the newspapers and we, in the most friendly manner, admonish Mr. Brady not to be what they call in the vernacular "a fall guy," or a "Patsy."

The Oldest and Newest Trade Paper in the Field

FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY NUMBER

Dated March 11th
Out March 3rd

THIS publication started delivering a service to the motion picture industry fifteen years ago. On March 11th we will celebrate our fifteenth birthday.

Our first issue was a small sixteen-page affair.

The staff was small; the whole industry was in its infancy then. Today our staff numbers approximately sixty people and we are represented by correspondents in the principal cities of the United States, Canada and Europe.

We have lived through the various phases of the picture business, encouraging when encouragement was necessary and criticizing when criticism was in order.

All during this time our object has been to build up the motion picture industry in all of its elements. All trade papers in this field are fashioned after Moving Picture World—almost department for department. This is indeed a great compliment.

We were the first in the field and have set the pace ever since.

The fifteenth anniversary number will go a bit into history——the individuals, the corporations—big events of the past.

We will also make a few predictions of the future on our own account.

It will be a great number. Be sure to be in it. Have your past performances on record with the accomplishments of the others, telling the trade what you have done and what you are going to do—in the fifteenth anniversary of

Famous Players to Finance Whole Canadian Proposition Itself and Fix No New Policies at Present

FURTHER details are forthcoming regarding the absorbing of Allen Theatres by Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Toronto. The interest of the Allens in the Allen Theatres is said to be 51 per cent. of the common stock, and the statement has been made that a re-organization may take place, which will probably mean that stock in a new company will be given to the other stockholders. The original capitalization of the Allen company in Canada was $2,500,000, but there are a number of subsidiary theatre companies for individual theatres and it has not been announced what total has been paid up in the general or subsidiary companies. According to N. L. Nathanson of Toronto, managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, the amount involved in the purchase may reach $5,000,000.

When the Allens owned or controlled over fifty picture theatres in the Dominion, they ruled an investment of over $20,000,000, it has been estimated. Yet Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen, who were born in Bradford, Pa., are still in their thirties. Assessment on their ten theatres in Toronto totalled more than $1,000,000, according to a statement at the Toronto City Hall, this amount being the valuation on which they paid civic taxes. Actual value is much greater, however. The Famous Players Canadian Corporation has nine theatres in Toronto. The absorption of Allen theatres will eliminate a great deal of duplicate organization, but it is stated that the change will not mean the closing of any of the theatres taken over. When the deal is actually closed, the Famous Players will have eighty or more modern picture theatres in the Dominion.

N. L. Nathanson of Famous Players has announced that his company will be able to finance the whole transaction itself and that no special issue will be required. He declared that no policy had been fixed for any of the affected theatres. These would be operated as at present until the close of the season. Mr. Nathanson announced that he held the Pantages franchises for Toronto, Hamilton and Montreal. Pantages theatres have been built in Toronto and Hamilton but no decision had been reached regarding the disposition of the Montreal franchise. This matter belonged to the future, he declared.

Asked as to the reasons for the offer to take over Allen Theatres, Mr. Nathanson declared that there had been expensive competition. Business in general throughout Canada had improved during recent months with the exception of Calgary, Alberta, where the situation was affected by agricultural losses. There had been a decided increase in Montreal, Toronto and the Pacific Coast.

In Hollywood the Poppies Blow

By BAXTER

In Hollywood the poppies blow,
Tall columns rise of poppy smoke.
The correspondents snuff the "snow,"
Then write in dreams that come from "coke."

The hop pipes glow, the stories grow—
Old heroin provides the facts—
Imaginations slumming go,
And twist the simple, kindly acts.

The hemp, the hasheesh and the dope
Arrange that blameless folk bear blame.
Fake interviews with shadow ghosts
Are easy when you use no name.

The orgies that they write about
Are brain creations of their own,
The lethal fumes arising high
Come up in rings that they have blown.

It matters not how wild the lie,
If readable "it's fit to print."
The buzzards to their carrion fly
And gorge their public without stint.

In Hollywood the poppies blow;
They will continue so to do
Until the voice of truth prevails
And tells the liars they are through.

Winifred Verina Wins Place in Pathe Serials

Winifred Verina, a slim young English dancer, was graduated Monday last from the Hippodrome ballet to a job as a "daredevil" beauty in Pathe serials starring Charles Hutchison. Miss Verina was not only the unanimous choice of the judges, but an audience of more than five thousand had clamored for her before the end of the contest and shouted its approval at the finish.

While the judges were deciding the winner, a Harold Lloyd comedy was shown.

Winifred Verina has been trained in the ballet since she was five. She is now twenty-one. She will leave shortly for Florida with the Pathe Company, directed by George B. Seitz, and will be cast in the same Pathe serial with Charles Hutchison and Lucy Fox.

Rupert Hughes Is Working in West Again

Rupert Hughes, Goldwyn's author-director, has returned to the Culver City studios after spending several weeks in New York attending to personal matters and conferring with Goldwyn executives on new pictures, business conditions and policies.

His new photocomedy, "Come On Over," will be released with the third group of Goldwyn fifth year pictures, in time for showing during the week in which comes St. Patrick's day. Upon his return to the Pacific Coast, Mr. Hughes at once began final editing and titling of his next production and will soon prepare the continuity for "Bitterness of Sweets," one of his best short stories the screen rights to which Goldwyn recently purchased.

Associated Exhibitors Close for Australia

The foreign expansion of Associated Exhibitors is revealed in a statement that arrangements have just been completed for the distribution of its entire product in Australasia for a period of three years by Alec. B. Hellmrich of Sydney, Australia.

It is understood that Mr. Hellmrich will operate an organization similar to that of Associated Exhibitors in the United States. He has already opened offices in Sydney, Melbourne and Brisbane, and is leaving immediately to complete an exchange system throughout Australia and in Auckland and New Zealand. He also closed a deal with Arthur E. Rousseau, export manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., to handle the entire product of Pathe under a similar contract.

Julian Johnson Appointed to High Place in Paramount Company by Jesse L. Lasky

JULIAN JOHNSON, former editor Photoplay Magazine, dramatic critic of the Los Angeles "Times" and successful film production editor, has been created manager of the editorial department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The appointment was announced by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the company.

The presence of Mr. Johnson in Los Angeles proved the starting point for the negotiations. The new executive, however, will make his headquarters at the home office in New York. He will return there shortly after familiarizing himself with conditions at the Hollywood Lasky studio.

In speaking of the appointment Mr. Lasky said, "Obtaining Mr. Johnson is another step in our policy of routing the best procurable literature and drama through our studios. It is, of course, not our belief that we can produce all the good stories or plays but we are determined to produce the best, and not lose a chance to look at all of them. Mr. Johnson's very considerable experience in magazine and newspaper work and actual film production has, we think, given him just the right viewpoint to judge material from the diverse angles of audience, critic and producer."

Miss Minter Speaks

Mary Miles Minter, through her Los Angeles attorneys, has made the following statement to the press in the Taylor case. It has been generally printed throughout the country and it is to be hoped that the American sense of fair play will become active in behalf of Miss Minter and others who have been the victims of a disgusting exhibition on the part of Los Angeles newspaper correspondents who seem dead to honor, lost to decency and callous to their professional responsibilities.

The statement reads:

"There is no personal or financial sacrifice I would not gladly make to bring the slayer of William Desmond Taylor to justice.

"Mr. Taylor was one of my best friends.

"His death was a great shock to me.

"I met Mr. Taylor first in 1919 when he became my director. I was then seventeen years of age and his inspiration, his unfailing courtesy and his consideration not only to me but to all with whom he came in contact immediately won my highest admiration.

"From 1919 until the day of his death Mr. Taylor was to me a symbol of honor and manliness—a symbol of all that a girl admires in a man. His friendship was uplifting, his advice and aid invaluable. It would be nothing less than veritable ingratitude if I did not, now that he is dead, raise my voice to proclaim what he was, to repudiate those who would besmirch his character.

"I have told the authorities all I know of both his life here and in the East. That, I fear, has been of little aid to them.

"I cannot conceive the character of the person who would voluntarily wrong Mr. Taylor or cause his death."

Film Exports Are On Upward Trend

Statistics compiled by the Specialties Division of the Department of Commerce for the last three months of 1921, indicate that the tendency in exports of motion picture films and other specialties is now upward.

Exports of exposed film in December amounted to $479,458 as compared with $468,408 in October and $459,727 in November. Exports of unexposed films, however, have fallen off materially, being only $52,923 in December as compared with $106,764 in November and $92,871 in October.

Burdick Goes Abroad

B. W. Burdick, of Albany, N. Y., president of the O. H. Stacy Amusement Company, sailed this week on an extended trip abroad. Just before Mr. Burdick left Albany for New York, he was presented by the employees of the company with a diamond Masonic ring. He will return in May.

Pearl White, Serial Star, Signs a New Agreement with Pathe

Pearl White has signed a contract with Pathe to star in another serial, production of which is to start July 15.

Following the signing of her new Pathe contract, Miss White sailed for France on the Aquitania last Tuesday to fill a revue engagement in Paris. During her three years' absence from serial work she has spent much of her time abroad. It is well known to the theatrical world of two continents that she has become one of the most popular stage favorites in the French Capital.

Several times within the last six months newspaper cables stated that capital was ready to induce her to establish herself permanently in Paris at a theatre built for her and bearing her name. It will therefore cause surprise in many quarters that she is to return to the hazardous work of a serial heroine, especially as reports agree that no actress of any nationality has ever enjoyed greater financial rewards than she has gained on the Paris stage.

Receiver Denied

The efforts of Charles O. Baumann and Anna Baumann, president and vice-president respectively of the Willat Studios and Laboratories, Inc., of 1476 Broadway and Fort Lee, N. J., to have the corporation dissolved and a receiver appointed met with a set-back at the hands of Justice Geigerich of the New York Supreme Court the past week.

Justice Giegerich in his decision finds that the Willat corporation is solvent, the application for the dissolution of the corporation and appointment of a receiver must be denied, but the court entertains as a substitute a hearing before a referee.

Crowds Fight to Get in at Opening of New Fitzpatrick and McElroy Theatre

CROWDS thronged to the opening of the new Fitzpatrick and McElroy house—the Liberty Theatre—in Benton Harbor, Michigan, Saturday, February 4. But they couldn't all get in on the opening night, and many came again to bring their friends, so that on Sunday the crowds were so great the management was forced to open the doors half an hour earlier than announced to keep them from being broken down.

The Liberty Theatre—No. 30 of the F. & M. chain—seats 1,600, and was erected at a cost of $200,000. The keynote of the house is luxury, beauty, coziness, comfort and artisticness. After the opening Messrs. Fitzpatrick and McElroy were the hosts at a banquet at the Whitcomb Hotel at which one hundred covers were laid.

Associated Motion Picture Advertisers to Give "Naked Truth Dinner" March 25

THE Associated Motion Picture Advertisers are announcing the second edition of their Naked Truth Follies, the first of which was held at the Biltmore Hotel last year and established a new high water mark for original novelty entertainment in film circles. Like its predecessor the present volume will be bound with all the formalities of an evening occasion and the gilt trimmings of the Biltmore hostelry.

The date has been set for March 25 and A. M. Botsford assisted by "Doc" Tom Wiley and the remainder of the entertainment committee are preparing the edition for going to press.

Members of the Green Room Club have again volunteered their aid in the preparation of sections of the edition; but with this exception all the material will be supplied and run by A. M. P. A. members.

More than 400 executives, producers, stars and advertising members of the motion picture industry attended the dinner last year which marked one of the most representative gatherings ever assembled under the same roof. As was the case last year, this year's edition will be strictly stag. To provide for the large number of requests that have been made for reservations, accomodations are being made for guests in a limited number.

Tentative outlines for the skits reveal an abundance of entertainment that will vary from single acts to sketches and running the gauntlet of burlesque on well known figures in the industry and out of it to semi-serious pot pourris.

Final plans for the program will be arranged at a joint meeting of the entertainment committee and board of directors of the A. M. P. A. to be held the latter part of this week.

Melodrama As Pure Entertainment Stands Highest of All, Says Whitman Bennett

Whitman Bennett, producer of "Lady Fair," second of the Rex Beach pictures for United Artists Corporation, in presenting this new screen romance said:

"It is my belief that melodrama if made clean enough to appeal to the educated, and elemental enough to appeal to the ordinary person, furnishes the most acceptable of all forms of picture amusement as melodrama is decidedly stimulating. After all, what we want in the theatre is entertainment and melodrama seeks only to be entertaining without any pretext at unfolding great truths or theories, or expounding hypothetical sex or domestic problems. The melodrama does not draw people into the theatre under a pretext of amusement, and then asks them to burden their minds with riddles of the why and the wherefore of some question of morals or politics.

"The melodrama comes right out into the open and says frankly, 'Here I am ready to take your minds off your worries and amuse you.' That's the reason I believe in melodrama, and am bending every effort to make it so high-class in character that its appeal will be strengthened and broadened in scope.

"There is another thing about melodrama, and that is its informative value. By paying close attention to the subject one can glean much information about a wealth of matters without the information being forced on one. For instance in 'Fair Lady' much can be learned about the customs of Sicilians, about foreign and domestic architecture, about the quaint city of New Orleans, and a sprinkling of political history. But all these things are secondary to the story and its purpose. 'Fair Lady,' primarily, is meant for entertainment."

Nebraska Anti-Deposit Law Fight Will Probably Be Begun in March

THE attorney-general of Nebraska and county attorney for Douglas county, including Omaha, have filed in Federal Court an answer to the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation's suit attacking the validity of the Nebraska anti-deposit law, passed by the last legislature. The filing of the answer means that the suit probably will come to trial before three Federal judges some time in March.

The answer is a blanket denial of the charges brought in the Goldwyn petition. It denies that the Nebraska anti-deposit law attempts to regulate interstate traffic; that it impairs the obligation of existing contracts; that the State of Nebraska is without authority to create constructive trusts or to regulate trust property and prescribe remedies respecting same; denies that the law appropriates property or violates the constitutional rights of the plaintiff; asks for a hearing before three Federal judges and the denial of the interlocutory injunction asked and the vacation of the temporary restraining order now in effect.

The answer is signed by Clarence A. Davis, attorney-general for the State, and Abell V. Shotwell, county attorney.

Motion picture distribution men in Omaha say that the tone of the answering gun indicates there is to be a fight to the death over the Nebraska anti-deposit law. There is evidence, they say, of the organized exhibitors taking a direct interest in the legal battle.

Appoints Three New District Managers

Due to two promotions and the creation of a new division, Universal has made several new appointments of district managers in its exchange system.

The new territory is called the Mountain Territory and includes Butte, Salt Lake City, Spokane and Denver, and was previously included in the Pacific Coast Division.

The Pacific Coast Division now consists of San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland and Seattle. This division remains under the charge of Edward Armstrong, division manager, who makes his headquarters in San Francisco. The manager of the new Mountain Division is announced as H. M. Herbel.

N. W. Gettelson, formerly manager of the Minneapolis exchange, continues as district manager of the department known as the Central Western Division. In this division are the exchanges situated at Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha and Sioux Falls.

Herman Stern remains as manager of the Central Division including the exchanges of Chicago, Kansas City, St. Louis, Milwaukee, and Oklahoma City.

Asks Legislation Curbing Piracy

H. Minot Pitman, chairman of the Film Theft Committee, and Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, left Thursday, February 16, for Albany, N. Y., to arrange for the introduction of a legislative measure, backed by the industry, to curb film piracy in New York State.

In Albany they will confer with committees representing exhibitors and film exchange managers and with legislative leaders in an effort to secure strong support for a proposed amendment to section 1308 of the Penal Law which would impose drastic punishment for the conviction of anyone purchasing or receiving or having in his possession stolen film or advertising film accessories.

Operation of Michigan Theatres on Sundays Does Not Justify Criminal Process, Advises M. P. T. O. A. Lawyer

THE operation of a theatre in Michigan on Sunday does not justify criminal process," is the opinion of Hubert E. Hartman, a prominent attorney and formerly counsel for the Ford Motor Company, as expressed to H. M. Richey, manager of the M.P.T.O. of Michigan, who asked him to consider the matter.

The so-called Sunday Observance Statute is Section 7764, Volume 2, Compiled Laws of 1915, which is as follows:

"No person shall keep open his shop, warehouse or workhouse, or shall do any manner of labor, business, or work, or be present at any dancing, or at any public diversion, show or entertainment, or take part in any sport, game or play on the first day of the week. The foregoing provisions shall not apply to works of necessity and charity, nor to the making of mutual promises of marriage, nor to the solemnization of marriages. And every person so offending shall be punished by fine not exceeding ten dollars for each offence."

This section of the statute, Mr. Hartman finds, does not confer authority for the issuance of a criminal warrant and no amendment of the statute affecting this construction has been enacted by the Legislature.

Yerkes-Smith Case

"The Supreme Court of Michigan has consistently so interpreted the statute. Probably the leading case is that of Yerkes vs. Smith, decided July 15, 1909, and found in 157 Michigan, Page 557. That was a case brought by the prosecuting attorney of Wayne County to compel the police commissioner of Detroit to enforce the law against the playing of baseball on Sunday. An order denying the writ was reviewed by the Supreme Court and affirmed. The court, in rendering this decision said:

" 'The action sought to be enforced by this proceeding is primarily the prevention of a game of baseball, advertised for August 30 last, and of games that are said to have been contemplated on Sundays of later dates. We suppose that relator expects such games to be prevented by arrest of those engaged in them. The law has prescribed another method for preventing infractions of this law, viz., a penalty to be collected through judicial proceedings; and a summary arrest, even after a violation of the law, is not contemplated, and is not authorized by law, as a means of preventing the violation of this statute.'

Overt Acts Must Be Violent

"The Supreme Court in this case further held that the playing of baseball on Sunday was not necessarily a breach of the peace, justifying arrest and indictment, and that before a summary arrest can be made, not only must overt acts be committed in the presence of an officer, but they must be violent and dangerous acts of some sort; that there must be—first, a condition of things justifying a command to disperse by the proper officer designated by law. Second, disobedience of the command."

After quoting other cases on record in substantiation of his opinion, Mr. Hartman concludes:

"It will be noted that I have not discussed the question as to the violation of an ordinance specific and broad enough to constitute a criminal offense, nor power or a municipality through withdrawal of license privileges, to prohibit the operation of theatres on Sunday, but insofar as the Michigan statutes are concerned, and their interpretation by the Supreme Court, it seems clear that the operation of a theatre on Sunday does not justify criminal process."

N. A. M. P. I. in Brave Fight Against Brazen Attempts to Throttle Screen

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has pressed into service its strongest anti-censorship champions to combat the attacks of the professional reformers who seek to muzzle the screen in several states.

David Wark Griffith next week will appear before the Kentucky Legislature in opposition to the censorship measure pending there.

Thomas Dixon spoke Monday before the Virginia legislators and will doubtless join the fighting line elsewhere. Other speakers of note and able organizers are in readiness for the final struggle in Mississippi, South Carolina and other danger spots.

Gabriel L. Hess, chairman of the Censorship Committee of the National Association, who is directing the campaign, is greatly encouraged by the result of preliminary skirmishes in several of the trouble centers, though the fights are far from won. In each center he and his fellow members are co-operating with local committees representing exhibitors and the exchanges.

The censorship measure now pending in Kentucky is known as Senate Bill No. 176. It was introduced by Senator Brock and provides for a film censorship board under the supervision of the Department of Education—the board to be composed of three members at a salary of $3,000 each.

Under the direction of Chairman Hess, Jack S. Connolly, Washington representative of the National Association, is now in Mississippi co-operating with E. V. Richards, vice-president and general manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, and Y. F. Freeman, of the Southern Enterprises, Inc., in establishing a strong front to combat the efforts of the reformers to force through a censorship bill. This measure has been reported favorably by the Senate Committee on Education. The legislation was urged by Governor Russell of Mississippi.

In Massachusetts the Censorship Committee of the National Association, through its representative, ex-Judge J. Albert Brackett, is co-operating with the Allied Theatres of that state and has a stiff fight on its hands to prevent the passage of a bill which seeks to bar the use of the screen in the forthcoming censorship referendum campaign. At a hearing on this bill before the Committee on Election Laws of the Massachusetts Legislature, on February 19, Judge Brackett entered a vigorous protest against the passage of the bill and charged that the measure was a covert attempt to forestall any campaign of education on the screen by the moving picture theatres to tell their side of the story to the public in connection with the censorship referendum.

With Judge Brackett, in opposition to the measure, were Sybil Holmes, an attorney, and Mrs. Albert T. Leatherbee of the Women's Municipal League. The "muzzling" measure is known as House Bill No. 467 and provides that "no person shall publish or cause to be published, for pay, in a newspaper or other periodical, or show or cause to be shown by a cinematograph or otherwise in any theatre or other public place, whether for pay or not, any matter designed or tending to aid, injure or defeat any candidate for public office or any question submitted to the voters, unless the name of the chairman or secretary or the names of two officers of the political or other organization inserting the same, or the name of some voter who is responsible therefor, with his residence and the street and number thereof, if any, appear therein in the nature of a signature."

Is This a Record?

Of the 9,201 children enrolled in the public schools of South Bend, Ind., 7,547 of them attended picture theatres in one week.

This was disclosed recently through an investigation by the state as to the extent of the patronage of theatres by school children.

The maximum amount spent by one pupil for moving pictures in one week was $3.75.

Stale Musical Pieces to Be Avoided in Compiling New Synchronized Scores

By MARY KELLY

HARDLY less important today is the need for new music in picture theatres, than new subjects. This is an opinion which has been frequently expressed and which is the immediate cause for a reform which has been planned by the Synchronized Scenario Music Company. Several changes have already been made in the organization and policy of this company since the new offices at 350 Madison avenue, New York City, were opened a few weeks ago.

"The public is as tired of certain musical compositions as it is of certain plots which have ben used over and over again," said Walter Engles, president of the company, who was outlining a few of the new plans. "Many of these well-known selections are classics and are often both beautiful and appropriate, but because of the frequency of their use always in the same situations, they add an effect of monotony that is sure to detract from the picture."

Much Abused Selections

Mr. Engels referred to the habit that has almost become a law in theatres shown for instance in the playing of Grieg's march, "Asa's Death," every time there is a funeral scene, or the much-abused Wagnerian song, "Erlkonig," to denote the coming of tragedy. These are numbers, so standardized that it would be inane to attempt a discussion of them as music, but the use of them so constantly in picture houses has become so tiresome that there is a danger of them creating an impression that the whole program is stale, when this may not be the case.

"The public is entitled to new music just as it is entitled to new films," Mr. Engels said. "There are thousands of descriptive pieces that have never been put into service by the movie orchestra, and we have now made a movement to get hold of these.

Access to Big Libraries

"We have recently made an arrangement with G. Schirmer, Inc., and with Carl Fischer for the unlimited use of the libraries of these two firms. This will mean access to several thousand compositions with each of these firms, whereas previously the Synchronized Company had the use of a collection of only about 250 in the case of the Schirmer library.

"It will be easier to keep our scores varied now because of the change in our publication policy. Instead of publishing twelve books, for twelve different instruments to accommodate the needs of the large orchestra, we are issuing only one book for piano and organ to go with each feature production. This entails so much less labor and expense that we can resort to hundreds of new selections without so much difficulty. Of course our greatest appeal will now be to the house with the small orchestra, or with just a piano or organ, but it is such theatres that are especially in need of strengthening their musical program."

Another important announcement which Mr. Engels made concerned the Synchronized Scenario Music Company's intention to keep up with other modern features, in addition to those produced by the biggest companies. Scores will be supplied for many of the big independent productions and ultimately for some of the high-class comedies.

Sue Over Title

The proposed launching of "What No Man Knows" by the Equity Pictures Corporation has resulted in a suit brought in the New York Supreme Court by Temple Scott and Emil Pascal, in which an injunction is sought.

Claim Authorship

They allege that they collaborated and wrote the book known as "What No Man Knows" and in July last sold the publication rights for a serial story to the Detective Story Magazine, that they had offered it to Robertson Cole, Universal, Famous Players and others, which negotiations for its sale are still pending, and that Equity has no authority from them to apply the title to their motion picture play.

Virginia Censorship Bill Tabled Indefinitely by Senate Committee

AT a hearing February 13 in Richmond before the Senate Committee on General Laws of the Virginia Legislature, voted to table the censorship bill indefinitely. The committee vote was 7 to 2.

Thomas Dixon, the author, appeared as spokesman for the N. A. M. P. I. He pointed out the absurdities of legalized censorship and the inadvisability of such legislation.

Other speakers were Windham Meridith, representing Virginia exhibitors; Mrs. Speed of the National Board of Review; Mrs. Channing Ward, a club woman of Richmond, and Mrs. J. E. Krise, chairman of the Motion Picture Committee of the Parent Teachers' Association and Mothers' Congress of Virginia. Both Mrs. Ward and Mrs. Krise vigorously opposed the pending measure.

The campaign against censorship in Virginia has been directed by Jake Wells and the Censorship Committee of the National Association. Jack S. Connolly, Washington representative of the National Association, has also aided materially in the campaign.

The professional reformers, headed by Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, have been centering their censorship activities upon Virginia for several weeks. Canon William Sheafe Chase has been stumping the state, and on Saturday, Dr. Crafts and his group appeared before the Senate Committee on General Laws, urged the passage of the censorship bill, and issued a tirade against the motion picture industry. This was followed on Sunday by the appearance of Dr. Crafts in many of the Richmond churches in an endeavor to rouse sentiment for censorship.

The Virginia censorship measure provides for the creation of a Board and three censors and for license fees of 50 cents a reel for original film and 25 cents per reel for additional copies. The measure, if adopted, would become effective August 1, 1922.

Oooh! A Wicked Plot

THE Reform Bulletin, a weekly issued by the Rev. O. R. Miller, ("State superintendent of the New York Civic League"), and which specializes exclusively in presenting the twisted views of one of New York's chief professional reformers to the clergy of New York State, in its issue of February 3 goes a bit beyond even its own record for "dream stuff." An article headed "The Movie Censorship Law in Danger" says among other things:

"The state convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State will meet here at Albany February 14, 15 and 16. Evidently the chief object for the calling of this convention at this time and at this place is an effort to stampede the New York Legislature for the repeal of our state movie regulation law.

"At the hearing on Tuesday of that week at 2 p. m., which is the first day of their convention, they will present the biggest movie men in the United States to denounce and attack movie censorship and also to have some of their big high-priced lawyers, able men from New York City and elsewhere, to argue against our present law and urge its repeal. There is very serious danger that unless the good people of this state wake up quickly and send in a mighty protest against any such effort that the movie men will succeed in their wicked plot."

Wicked plot! A fight for human liberty is a wicked plot! This sounds like the boom of the Canon Chase, the Rev. Mr. Miller's boss.

This publication is dedicated to the service of the moving picture industry in all of its elements. Its foundation is character, its watchword is enterprise, its aim is betterment.

WE commend to your reading the case of Pathe Exchange, Inc., against George H. Cobb, Helen May Hosmer and Joseph Levenson, as constituting the Motion Picture Commission of the State of New York. The action is brought in the Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court and is highly important because it proposes to test the right of the censors to interfere with news weeklies at all. It is the contention of Pathe, that to do so is a violation of the Constitution of the State of New York, Section 8, Article 1. A victory for Pathe will mean that the censors cannot interfere with Moving Pictures that present news and actual events and one part of the irritating burden of censorship will be removed.

The censor law is so drawn that if any of the sections are found in violation of the constitution the other sections are not nullified. What would probably satisfy the censors themselves would be to eliminate all the sections except the one giving them salaries of $7,500 a year. We believe all should read the Pathe complaint carefully, and we are sure the legal luminaries will see justice in Pathe's contention.

The Wall Flower a Fine Blossom

RUPERT HUGHES the director differs from Rupert Hughes the novelist, or Rupert Hughes the title writer.

As a titler and a novelist he came under the classification of finished products. As a director he turns our eyes toward the horizon of hope. We don't know that "The Wall Flower" is the first picture he has directed, but we believe it is.

In the pictures he has written and titled he always influenced and in fact dominated them. In his own work we find a new type of direction, so rich in promise of great things that we have still farther confidence in the excellence of the association of the exceptional brain and heart with the screen's development.

When we saw the first part of "The Wall Flower" we felt that the comedy was too hurried, that it was a trifle overdone and that Colleen Moore was acting a lot. There seemed to be an absence of that repose and calm from which the gentle quality of the delightful Hughes humor sparkles out in contrast—or eases its way into our sympathies.

Then we began to forget the hurry because we encountered a story and a very human character drawing that finds its counterpart in so many lives. Next we met novelty in the simplicity with which this artist gained his effects and in the restraint that made his points so inevitable. All of a sudden we were lost in the story. We forgot we were there for the purpose of telling others what we saw. We began to follow the whimsical, pathetic little figure through her way of woe and we resented considerably the mean things that others were doing to her. Finally we despised the whole cast, barring the doctor and the rich young woman who were kind to our little heroine. The villains—we felt them to be nothing short of that—should be destroyed by something sudden, awful and complete. Only the satisfaction of her triumph or rather her joyous reward after her sacrifice made us willing that the death list be omitted.

What we saw in the completed show was a charming entertainment, a simple, delightful story that will live with us as a reality rather than as a bit of art. The little comments on life, kindly and understanding, are triumphs of applied philosophy, so deftly done that even the most wary will scarcely suspect the fact that they are being given something they cannot and should not forget.

Goldwyn and the industry has cause for rejoicing again in Rupert Hughes. We present our respects and compliments believing that as a director he has just begun.

ARTHUR JAMES.

Goldwyn Short Subjects Rapidly Gaining Popularity in Programs

Goldwyn's two new series of short subjects, the Sport Review and Goldwyn Graphics, have been on the market for four months and reports show the demand for them has kept increasing as each new subject was issued. Exhibitors have found their patrons greatly interested in both the sport and the travel reels.

The Sport Reviews, edited by Grantland Rice, and produced by Jack Eaton for Artclass Pictures Corporation, that have been released include: Speed, Form, Stamina, In the Pink, Drawing, Cards, Self-Defense, Centaurs of the Field and Winter Pep. The Goldwyn Graphics, from motion pictures taken by the traveler and lecturer, Major E. Alexander Powell, and by William and Irene Finley of the National Associationf Audubon Societies, issued up to date are: High Water, Page Mr. Edison, Climbing Mazamas, Angling in Oregon Waters and Healthy Appetites, all Finley nature studies; and Ship Ahoy, Tropical Tea-Time and Cupid in Djckjakarta, Powell scenics.

E. W. Hammons Announces Plans for Educational Pictures Week

Plans were announced last week by E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., for Educational Pictures Week, beginning Sunday, April 16, and ending Sunday, April 23.

An event of national recognition on the part of exhibitors of the importance of the superior short subject to his program and recognition on the part of the public of the greater strides being made in the production of short reel subjects is what Educational aims to make of Educational Pictures Week.

One of the features of the week, it is said, will be a great number of programs made up entirely of short subjects.

Vitagraph Will Soon Release Film Dealing with Irish Life

Vitagraph will soon release a special production treating of Irish life, which David Smith, one of Vitagraph's chief directors, is now completing on the West Coast. Vitagraph says it is believed that nearly everybody will in be interested at this particular period in seeing a motion picture of the "troublous times" of the Emerald Isle.

The production is "The Shaughraun," taken from the stage success of Dion Boucicault and the production will take an important rank among the Vitagraph specials for 1922.

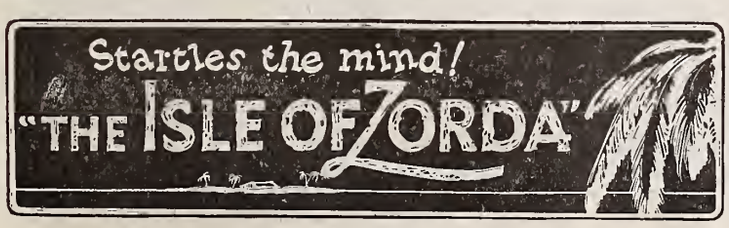
Crandall Presents Laemmle with Cup

Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, was last Friday presented with a beautiful silver loving cup suitably inscribed, by Mr. E. L. Crandall, director of lectures and visual education of the Board of Education of the City of New York. The cup itself was inscribed on its three faces as follows:

To Mr. Carl Laemmle, Pioneer Producer of Historical Chapterplays in Motion Pictures—Presented February 3rd, 1922, by the Director of Lectures and Visual Education, Board of Education, City of New York—On Behalf of the Teachers and Pupils Who Enjoyed Mr. Laemmle's Central Theatre Matinees of 'Winners of the West.'"

New Chaplin Film

Charlie Chaplin has nearly finished the filming of his latest comedy for First National. The cast includes Edna Purviance, Sid Chaplin, Mack Swain and Henry Bergman. In his latest picture Charlie is said to have gone back to low comedy.



Selznick Film a March 10 Release

In Selznick's arrangements for early releases "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots" will issue from Select exchanges March 10 with Constance Talmadge the star. This number will be a revival of one of the photoplays Lewis J. Selznick used when he was making Norma and Constance screen stars and it now returns to the screen after about four years.

The Talmadge revivals are issued by Selznick, after re-editing and titling, on new stock.

Press Book by Metro Contains Valuable Data

Quite in keeping with the nature of the appeal which "Turn to the Right" has made both as a play and as pictured by Rex Ingram, is the forty-page press book which Metro has just released for exhibitors. The first purpose in preparing it has evidently been to be informative, and the result is unusually free from meaningless eulogisms. It is unusually compact, with valuable descriptions of the character of the production and how and what to exploit.

A three-toned cover, in black, green and white, suggests to anyone unacquainted with the theme of the picture, something of the wholesomeness and refreshing summer atmosphere of the drama originally written by Winchell Smith and John E. Hazzard. The script as used by Rex Ingram is the work of June Mathis and Mary O'Hara. Further facts give complete account of the history of the drama and the sale of the screen rights, so that there is no reason for the exhibitor to lack for any information that he may desire.

The selection of stills is another point of good taste—and showmanship. Every angle—and there are many—the mother love, the prison pals, the town swindler and the triple romance—has been remembered in choosing these. Newspaper material and fan stories and advertising matter have been carefully provided.

Campaigning for "Peacock Alley"

Albert S. Nathan, the Metro exploitation representative in the territory stretching from Washington, D. C., to Dallas, Texas, with headquarters at Atlanta, Ga., is following the unusual campaigns that put over Nazimova's "Camille" and Rex Ingram's "The Conquering Power" so successfully, with a campaign for Mae Murray's "Peacock Alley" that is helping the picture duplicate in the South its sensational success in the East, Metro says.

Says Re-Issue Films Are Liked

Exhibitor testimony from the greater New York district received at Pathe Exchange shows that the Harold Lloyd one reel re-issues are meeting with the most emphatic success, Pathe says. It is estimated, from attendance averages, that one million persons in the metropolitan district are weekly entertained by these comedies.

Judge Titus Will Build Film House

Judge H. T. Titus, First National franchise holder and owner of two motion picture theatres in Daytona, Fla., is to add a third house to his string in the southern city. He has purchased the Malby Building on Orange avenue, constructed for garage purposes, and is having it converted into a showhouse with all modern appurtenances and conveniences.

Educationals in First Run Houses

The week of February 11 was, Educational says, a great week for Educational Pictures in the New York metropolitan area. Nearly every series of pictures released by Educational film exchanges was represented in the important first run and big circuit showings in Greater New York and Newark during the week of February 11.

Miss Loeb Writes Story for Jackie

Sophie Irene Loeb, famous author and newspaper woman of New York City, has written a novel story for Jackie Coogan and has entered into an agreement with Sol Lesser, producer of the Coogan pictures whereby she will leave for the Coast shortly and assist in the production of her scenario.

Flynn to Direct "Monte Cristo"

Emmett J. Flynn, by doing so well the job of directing Fox specials, "Shame," "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court" and "The Last Trail," has caused William Fox to place in his hands the production of "Monte Cristo."

Barrymore in "Boomerang Bill" Wins Big Praise of Critics

Lionel Barrymore makes "Boomerang Bill" one of the finest screen characterizations of the year, says the New York "Evening Telegram" of the featured player in the Cosmopolitan Production shown to New Yorkers for the first time at the Rialto Theatre the week of February 5.

"The Evening Sun" likewise gives Mr. Barrymore great praise, saying: "Lionel Barrymore is fine. We don't remember having seen him do anything as well in pictures as his portrayal of the pistol-toter."

According to the "Evening Post," "Lionel Barrymore has a good story in 'Boomerang Bill,' and he makes the most of it. All the other characters, too, in this photoplay at the Rialto are well cast."

The reviewer of the "Evening Globe" writes: "'Boomerang Bill' is worth seeing because Lionel Barrymore plays the part of the gunman who reforms. There is many a thrill for the jaded moviegoer in the workings of his emotions as indicated by his facial expressions."

The "Evening Mail": "It is to be taken for granted that whatever the role he assumes Lionel Barrymore's work will be superlatively good, and as 'Boomerang Bill' he is no exception. The picture, as a whole, is excellently well done, but Mr. Barrymore suffers from no rivalry; his own performance stands out prominent over his associates in the cast."

The "Evening World": "With Lionel Barrymore as the star 'Boomerang Bill' is well worth the seeing."

The "Evening Journal": "It's the amazing realism of Lionel Barrymore that impresses you first as 'Boomerang Bill' is projected on the screen, then the simple strength of Jack Boyle's story comes through with its logical sequences; and soon after the arts of the actor and the author blend in a splendid epic of every day life."

The "Herald:" "As a convict who momentarily loses his reason over a farewell letter from his sweetheart, telling of her marriage to another man, Barrymore may not have liked jumping against the bars of his cell, but he does it with all the fire of a plunging football back."

The "American": "It is the best work that Lionel Barrymore has done."

Fox Films Show How American and Japanese Interests May Cross and What Might Happen

After several months preparation and the expenditure of many thousands of dollars, William Fox announces the publication of "Face to Face With Japan," big news and educational films which deal impartially with the important question of the so-called peril of Japanese expansion and territorial aggrandizement in respect to the effect of these upon American interests.

The film will be released in installments, each of which is to be embodied as a portion of the even numbered issues of Fox News. The first installment appears with Fox News No. 40. Fox News, in this series of pictures, for the first time, it is said, throws open the door of mystery, lifts the curtain of intrigue and reveals the secrets of Japan's Army and Navy.

These unusual pictures are an integral part of every second issue of Fox News and are accordingly supplied to subscribers at no additional cost. Further announcements will be made by Fox Film Corporation concerning this highly informative news film in the near future.

Kineto to Release Series of One-Reelers Featuring Animals

Comments from Hodkinson exchange managers who are handling the distribution to theatres of "The Four Seasons," the four reel nature classic produced by the Kineto Company of America, and also from the theatres which are playing it, indicate, Kineto says, that its largest element of popularity is due to the animals which form a great portion of the subject matter.

In this connection Kineto Company has a large series of single reels on animals which are being edited for early release.

The entire series will be styled "The Animal Kingdom" and includes at the present time more than 40 reels and is not yet completed. Each of the reels is edited to be complete in itself, though every reel is a distinct part of the entire series. Charles Urban, president of Kineto, will probably edit the entire series to comprise 52 reels and then release it on a yearly basis, making one animal reel for each week in the year.

First National Studios Active

Activity continues unabated at the independent studios which are turning out motion pictures in Los Angeles and New York studios for First National release.

Marshall Neilan began shooting last week on "Fools First." Allen Holubar spent last week shooting seaside scenes for his latest, being produced under the working title of "The Soul Seeker." Editing of Norma Talmadge's "Smilin' Through," has been completed.

Three costume pictures are now in the course of filming: Norma Talmadge in "The Duchess of Langeais;" Mabel Normand in "Suzanna," and Maurice Tourneur's "Lorna Doone." At the Louis B. Mayer studios work has been finished on John M. Stahl's "One Clear Call" and on Anita Stewart's "Rose o' the Sea." Final scenes have also been taken on "On Patrol," a Mack Sennett-Billy Bevan two - reel comedy. In the East Richard Barthelmess is working on "Sonny" and Hope Hampton on "The Light in the Dark." Other independent producing units are working at full speed likewise.

"Prophets Paradise" New O'Brien Film

In "The Prophet's Paradise," which Selznick sends to the screen through Select Exchanges February 28, Eugene O'Brien will wear the raiment of a Turkish prince. In the role of a Yankee adventurer, under the Star and Crescent, O'Brien rescues an American heiress from the clutches of Turkish brigands and all ends well.

This picture introduces Sigrid Holmquist, as O'Brien's leading woman. Miss Holmquist appeared in "The Prophet's Paradise" when Alan Crosland directed the work at Selznick's Fort Lee studios during the past summer. This was her second picture work in America. In "Just Around the Corner" she first played and she is now appearing in "My Old Kentucky Home," facts that showmen will do well to remember in advertising "The Prophet's Paradise."

Madsen Praises Paramount Films

S. R. Kent, general manager of distribution, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, recently received the following letter from J. E. Madsen, manager of the Idaho Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho:

"Recently I signed contracts for Paramount pictures with your traveling representative, and after having used these pictures with success here, the writer desires to congratulate you on the splendid output."

Goldwyn Filming Zane Grey Story

Goldwyn announces the early release of "When Romance Rides," a Benjamin B. Hampton production. The press and service book and other exhibitor aids are being prepared. "When Romance Rides" is the new title for "Wildfire," and was made from Zane Grey's novel. "Wildfire" is the wild horse which wins the $5,000 stakes in the free-for-all horse race which forms one of the high spots of interest.

Claire Adams as the girl has one of the finest roles in which she has appeared. Carl Gantvoort is the operatic recruit to pictures and Jean Hershot acts the role of the grown man with a child's mind and Harry L. Van Meter the villain. Tod Sloan, the famous jockey, appears in the picture.

"When Romance Rides" is Zane Grey at his best and his best has proved what the great American public wants—both in his books and their screen versions. Mr. Hampton was assisted in the production of this picture by his general manager, Hewlings Mumper, with Eliot Howe, Jean Hersholt and Charles O. Rush aiding in the active directing.

Elaine Is Making Another Selznick

Production work on the new Elaine Hammerstein release for the Selznick is being pushed under the supervision of Vice President Myron Selznick. The story is by Cosmo Hamilton, and Ralph Ince is directing. The title is "Reckless Youth."

Niles Welch continues to appear as Miss Hammerstein's leading man. Huntley Gordon, Myrtle Stedman, Frank Currier and Constance Bennett are prominent in the supporting cast.

Patrons Pleased

E. H. Gentle, manager of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, reports that Rex Beach's "The Iron Trail," a United Artists' release, was entirely satisfactory to his patrons and did a good box-office business when shown there.

5,000 Theatres and Many Producers and Stars to Celebrate First National Week

In celebration of the anniversary of exhibitor co-operation, five thousand theatres in every part of the United States and Canada will participate in First National Week, February 18 to 25, according to the latest returns available at the home office of Associated First National Pictures on the eve of the big eight-day event

Allied with these thousands of exhibitors in the celebration of this anniversary is The Independent Screen Artists' Guild, comprising most of the principal independent stars and producers of the United States. Their productions will be available for all these theatres during this week, following the resolution adopted by the Guild at its formation in Los Angeles last December, to dedicate this week in February to the widest possible exhibition of its creations in the independent theatres of the North American continent.

"What the condition of the exhibitor and independent producer would be today if there were not and never had been any such thing as First National is something worth thinking about," said Moe Mark, president of the Mark Strand Company, one of the original franchise holders and member of the Executive Committee of Associated First National. "But it is safe to say that hundreds of theatre owners would have been driven to the wall, and hundreds of others would have been practically serfs of distributing monopoly at the mercy of arbitrary and ruinous rental prices and playing any pictures they were able to get regardless of their quality or drawing power.

Monopoly Was Blocked

"The now independent producer would have been equally at the mercy of a distribution system that would insist upon machine-made product, its nature and contents dictated by overseers and ground out under the shadow of the time-clock. Quality would have been thrown to the winds. Producing genius and brains would have been yoked to a mill, and the public would have been fed the resulting cheap and worthless product as long as they would have stood it.

"Exhibitor and producer independence is today such a tremendous and inescapable fact that there may be a tendency to forget how gravely the producer's and exhibitor's freedom was actually imperiled in 1917.

"That was the year in which fifteen far-seeing exhibitors in self-defense rallied in response to the warning of First National and met the threat of producer-distributor tyranny with the announcement that they were prepared to encourage independent producers by guaranteeing them a profitable market for their product—asking in return only that the picture be the best that could be made, from the standpoint of box-office value.

Thought it Impossible

"The exhibitor body was interested, but incredulous. It was the answer to the gravest of their worries and difficulties, but could it ever be successfully put into practice? Other groups and organizations had come to them before with plans that promised to be a panacea for their ills—but nothing had ever come of them. Was this another Will-o'-the-Wisp, or was it to be the real dawn of a real era? The harassed exhibitor wanted to believe that deliverance was at hand, but the cynics and wiseacres shook their heads and said, 'We'll give them six months.'

"The fifteen exhibitors who had thrown down the gauntlet to the monopoly knew perfectly well the stupendous nature of the task ahead of them. It was no calm and sunny sea upon which they had embarked. But, in spite of the flood of propaganda let loose against them by the producer-distributor group, in spite of the initial difficulties of obtaining first-rate product in a field where the old-line companies were prepared to pay any price to keep a picture out of the hands of First National, the response of exhibitors and independent producers alike from the beginning was definite and enthusiatsic enough to make the ultimate success of First National only a question of time, patience and wisdom.

Made Them Free

"The history of First National naturally falls into two divisions—that of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., and that of Associated First National Pictures, Inc. How rapidly and soundly the First National took root in the minds of motion picture exhibitors may be seen from the fact that at the end of two years First National was distributing the output of such signal favorites as Charles Chaplin, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Mary Pickford and Anita Stewart, in addition to a number of single productions of producers who were quick to grasp the opportunities offered them by the new situation created by First National. Before another year had passed the productions of Charles Ray, Marshall Neilan, Katherine MacDonald and D. W. Griffith had been added to the list.

From that time the activities and interests of the circuit increased and multiplied until the original franchise holders found themselves confronted with the natural embarrassments of success—a volume of business that had so completely outgrown the original limits of the concern that reorganization upon larger lines became a necessity.

Wanted Franchise Extended

"The franchise idea had demonstrated its validity, when applied to a score of exhibitors The feeling had been growing for some time that the franchise could and should be extended to a point where at least one exhibitor in every city, town and hamlet and exhibiting zone could become a franchise holder if he desired. Months were spent in working out a sound and consistent plant for building a huge national co-operative organization, with every exhibitor participating as a franchise holder like every other one.

"The final realization came at the franchise holders' meeting held in Atlantic City in January, 1920. Exhibitor distribution became a full-grown reality. A franchise plan which gave membership in the new organization to every exhibitor who bought a franchise was presented and adopted and Associated First National Pictures was the result.

"The best proof that the twenty-six original franchise holders had read exhibitor opinion correctly and struck the popular note is to be found in the fact that within eighteen months more than thirty-five hundred franchises had been sold.

"The final answer to those who had constituted themselves a wrecking crew for the purpose of destroying First National, if such a thing was possible, was given at Chicago in October, 1921

"It will never be possible to estimate in dollars and cents the value of the Chicago Get Together to the organization and every franchise holder in it. It gave us the system of local advisory boards, the creation which it is believed will double the efficiency of the organization. It has brought into being policies which are concrete expressions of the recommendations made by the delegates of the meeting. But its greatest value lies in the loyalty, faith and understanding it has engendered among the franchise holders, and the realization which came to every delegate at the meeting that First National was really a co-operative organization in every sense of the word, and not a foreign corporation designed to exploit the exhibitors or manufacturers for its own purpose and ends.

Confident of Success

"We, as an organization, have had our problems to solve and our difficulties to overcome. We expect to have them in the future as we have in the past. And we are equally confident that we shall solve them as successfully in the future as we have in the past, because First National is built on the right basis, and its members are imbued with the proper spirit toward one another and toward the organization.

"First National Week, 1922, is more than a booking drive. It is more than a sales scheme. It is exhibitor recognition of the fact that independence has been possible and profitable in the motion picture industry for the producer and for the exhibitor who wants to be independent. It is a tribute to the success of the 'fair play and a square deal for all' policy upon which First National is and always has been founded. It is a celebration by the independent exhibitors and producers of America of the victory they have won, through co-operation, for the freedom of their screens and the freedom of their studios."

Joe Farnham Is a Very Busy Man

Indications of a marked increase in motion picture producing and a rapid return to normal conditions of manufacture in the industry are evidenced in reports of activities that come from the offices of Joseph W. Farnham, expert in picture construction, scenarioist, editor and writer of titles.

During the past few weeks, Mr. Farnham and his staff have completed the editing and titling of "Oh Mabel, Behave" starring Owen Moore and Mabel Normand for the Aywon Film Corporation; "Squire Phin" starring Maclyn Arbuckle for the San Antonio Pictures Corporation, "The Madness of Love," a Wray Physioc production for release through Wid Gunning; "Uriel Acosta" for Sigmund Lubin; "Mountain Laurel" the first of a series of five reel satirical productions, and "The Soul of Man," a superfeature production to be released through the Producers' Security Corporation.

New contracts entered into by Mr. Farnham provide for the application of his services to edit and write titles for "The Blonde Vampire" for H. H. Brunner of the Biograph Co.; a special production of George Eliot's greatest writing, "Silas Marner," and a series of 26 comedy releases for the Buckeye Photoplays Company, of Youngstown, Ohio, for release through the Forward Film Distributors, Inc.

American Releasing Names Its First Six Pictures; "Cardigan" Opens Series

Messmore Kendall's production of Robert W. Chambers' Revolutionary romantic drama, "Cardigan," is the opening attraction offered by American Releasing Corporation, the new international distributing company organized by Walter E. Greene and F. B. Warren.

The picture was directed by John W. Noble and edited by Mr. Chambers, Mr. Kendall and their editorial associates. It will have its world premiere the week of February 19 (Washington's Birthday week) at the Capitol Theatre, New York, with simultaneous engagements in first run theatres in twenty of the largest cities east of Denver.

"Cardigan" is the story of the outbreak of the American Revolution, and its big historic moments embrace the battle of Concord, the march on Lexington, the thrilling ride of Paul Revere and the bitter struggle between the Loyalists and patriots in New England. The all-star cast includes Betty Carpenter and Willaim (Buster) Collier, Jr.

American Releasing also reveals its next five subjects. "Martin Johnson's Jungle Adventures," presented by Exceptional Pictures, which had its American premiere at the New York Capitol Theatre recently, is the second release. It has been given pre-releases within the last fortnight by Jones, Linnick & Schafer in Chicago and Eugene Roth at his California Theatre, San Francisco.

Chester Bennett's Klondike melodrama, "Belle of Alaska," starring Jane Novak, is the third production. James Oliver Curwood's "Jan of the Big Snows," is the fourth. It was directed by Charles M. Seay and stars Louise Prussing. Marion Fairfax's "The Truth," personally directed by Miss Fairfax, has been held back off the market since November to be one of the early-released productions.

A new star and a new producing organization offering lighter romantic comedy-drama comes into the field through Frank Tuttle and Fred Waller, Jr., who present Glenn Hunter in "The Cradle Buster," Hunter is known as the boy in Tarkington's "Clarence." He is now leading man in Billie Burke's stage play, "The Intimate Strangers." In "The Cradle Buster" he is supported by Marguerite Courtet.

Sixth among the release comes the first of the Pyramid productions, Ray Smallwood's "My Old Kentucky Home," with an all-star cast comprising Sigrid Holmquist, Monte Blue, Lucy Fox and others.

William P. S. Earle Pictures Inc., also bring forth another director of note producing with his own personal organization. The first of his series is "Destiny's Isle," made in Florida and the Bahamas with an all-star cast including Virginia Lee, Florence Billings, Ward Crane, Geo. Fawcett, Arthur Housman a William B. Davidson. The Earle productions are made exclusively under the direction of Mr. Earle and the business management of J. Stuart Blackston, Jr., son of one of the founders of the Vitagraph organization.

American Releasing Corporation now makes definite announcement of one production to be released each week from February 19 to July 9. Fourteen of these twenty releases are completed and in the distributing company's vaults in New York.

The company will release in its first calendar year an absolute minimum of twenty major grade productions and between twenty and thirty additional moderate-priced productions of well known directors.

"Four Horsemen" Back on Broadway

"The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" will return to Broadway February 5, when this Rex Ingram screen production of Vincente Blasco Ibanez's novel, presented by Metro Pictures' Corporation, will open at the Capitol Theatre.

This will find two Rex Ingram pictures playing on Broadway at once. The young director's subsequent photoplay, "Turn to the Right," began what promises to be an all-season run at the Lyric Theatre, January 23. It is a picturization of John Golden's great stage hit of a few seasons ago, a play written by Winchell Smith and John E. Hazzard. On the screen it is presented by John Golden and Marcus Loew. Metro produced it.

The return of "The Four Horsemen" is in response to a popular demand.

Hodkinson Film Pleases Crowd

Following the engagement of "Jane Eyre," Hugo Ballin's production for Hodkinson, at the Sheridan in New York, which resulted in one of the biggest week's receipts in the history of the house, Edwin T. Emery, managing director of the Sheridan, declared that the production was a wonderful success both from an artistic and financial standpoint.

A wire this week from W. S. Barbee, managing director of Barbee's Loop Theatre in Chicago, said: "In my campaign of rehabilitating my theatre I have found Hugo Ballin's fine production a great business getter."

Basil King Film Nears Completion

"The Dust Flower," Goldwyn's picturization of Basil King's new novel of that title, and his first picture since "Earthbound," is in the final stages of preparation at Culver City. It was published serially in Good Housekeeping Magazine and will be brought out in book form by Harper Bros. next autumn.

Rowland V. Lee directed. Miss Chadwick and James Rennie have the leading roles, but the cast is an all-star one, including Claude Gillingwater, Mona Kingsley, Edward Peil and George Periolat.

Mrs. L. T. Bradley Joins Paramount

Mrs. L. Trimble Bradley has joined the staff of Chief Supervisor Frank E. Woods at the Lasky studio. Mrs. Bradley, author of such successful stage plays as "The Wonderful Thing" and "Mr. Mid's Mystery" and co-author "The Moon on the Index," is perhaps best known as the only woman stage director who follows that profession as an all year-round employment. She has been for four years stage director of such George Broadhurst productions as "The Crimson Alibi" and "The Storm."

Eve of First National Week Finds Array of High Grade Films Ready for Exhibitors

According to an announcement from the office of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., which accompanied a resume of recent extraordinarily successful runs of First National attractions, the first six weeks of the new year have seen more shattering of box office and attendance records than any similar period within the last two years.

This sudden revival of prosperity in the motion picture industry the company attributes to the general excellence of the recent productions it has released. The eve of First National Week, February 18 to 25, finds an exceptional array of high grade entertainment available for the exhibitors, it is said, and there has been a spiritual demand for the productions.

Reports from its exchanges indicate, it is stated, that First National Week, celebratng the second anniversary of the formation of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will exceed the most optimistic expectations. More than 5,000 theatres have booked First National attractions solid for the week, and the avalanche of bookings being received in the eleventh hour are expected to add considerably more to this number.

"Man from Home" Finished Abroad

The concluding scenes of "The Man From Home," George Fitzmaurice's second European-made picture for Paramount, have been completed in the London studio.

The all-star cast includes James Kirkwood, Anna Q. Nilsson, Dorothy Cumming, Norman Kerry, Jose Ruben and John Miltern. The cast also includes three well known British players — Ells Dagnall, Geoffrey Kerr and little Annette Benson.

Making pictures at 7,500 feet above sea-level and thirty degrees below zero, in five feet of snow was the recent experience of the Penrhyn Stanlaws Company at Truckee, California, where they are making the Paramount production of "Over the Border," with Betty Compson and Tom Moore.

"Sink or Swim" Chosen as Title

"Sink or Swim" has been definitely chosen as the title for the forthcoming Selznick picture, starring Owen Moore, which has been widely heralded as the biggest production which the Selznick Company has ever made. This announcement was made by Vice President Myron Selznick, in charge of production. Henry Lehrman wrote and directed the picture.

Exhibitors Help to Pick Winners

Every exhibitor in the country is being requested to assist in picking the winner of the New Faces Opportunity being conducted by Goldwyn and Photoplay Magazine. The successful exhibitor will be awarded a prize of $500.

Exhibitors are asked to invite the girls in their audiences, who believe that they have charm and personality to leave their names and photographs at the box office of the theatre that they may be entered in the New Faces Contest.

Playgoers Film for February 26

With the release on February 26 of Jack McGowan's "Hills of Missing Men," Playgoers Pictures say they have a worthy success to the previous McGowan Westerns, "Reckless Chances," "The Ruse of the Rattler" and "Discontented Wives." "Hills of Missing Men" is declared to be the most lavishly produced of the series. The cast besides McGowan, includes Jean Perry, Florence Gilbert, Andrew Waldron, Helen Holmes, James Wang and Charles Brindley.

"Peacock Alley" Breaking Records

Since "Peacock Alley" was first shown at the opening of B. F. Moss's new Cameo Theatre in New York, where it played to three weeks of S.R.O. business, it has broken all Mae Murray records for business in every city in which it has been seen, Metro says. It is the first of a series of Tiffany productions, presented by Robert Z. Leonard and released by Metro.

Tells 'Em Metro Man's in Town

As a means of telling Sioux Falls, S. D., that the representative of Metro Pictures Corporation was in that city for several days, D. J. Blumberg, Jr., of the Minneapolis exchange, placed in the lobby of the Cataract Hotel of that city a special stand for the display of scene stills from several of the most distinctive Metro photoplays, and of players' portraits.

New Wichita House

First National attractions will have another home in Wichita, Kans., in April with the opening of the new Miller Theatre there, being constructed by L. M. Miller, who owns a string of theatres in the state, including the Palace and Regent in Wichita. Stanley N. Chambers, managing director of the two houses, will also have supervision of the new one. The Miller will have a seating capacity of 2,000. It will cost in the neighborhood of $700,000, and promises to be one of the finest houses in the middle west.

Goldwyn Has Ten New Stories to Be Filmed in Near Future

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, with the recent purchase of three scenarios by Carey Wilson has ten stories for early translation to the screen. Nearly all of them are stories written directly for motion pictures.

Rupert Hughes is represented in this list by "The Bitterness of Sweets." Gouverneur Morris has also written a new story expressly for motion pictures. It is called at present, "Always Warm and Green." A new author to come under the Goldwyn banner is Pete B. Kyne whose story, "Brothers Under the Skin," is being prepared by the scenario department for filming.

Carey Wilson is another new Goldwyn author. Goldwyn has bought three scenarios from him. One of these is a South Sea story, "Captain Blackbird." Another is "Women Love Diamonds," and the third story is called "This Way Out." Charles Kenyon, author of two Goldwyn successes, has sold a new original story to Goldwyn. It is called "Fame" and deals with the life of a grand opera prima donna.

The screen version of Hall Caine's great novel, "The Christian," prepared by Charles Kenyon and approved by the author, is now in readiness for filming. A new western drama by Katharine Newlin Burt called "Summons" has been purchased. It is an original screen story. The screen rights to a new Kathleen Norris story, known for the time being as "Sis," have also been obtained by this producing corporation.

Pathe to Release "At Bay" and Other Films Week of Feb. 26

Pathe Exchange, Inc. announces a strong array of subjects for release the week of February 26, with the outstanding feature the new Pathe Playlet, "At Bay," starring Florence Reed. In its present form, "At Bay" has been re-edited into three reels from a Pathe feature success of several years ago.

"The Flaming Arrow" is the ninth episode of the new Pathe serial, "White Eagle," starring Ruth Roland.

"Here Come the Girls" is the current re-issued one-reel comedy starring Harold Lloyd. "Down and Out" is the title of the latest Hal Roach comedy featuring "Snub" Pollard. "The Cat and the Swordfish" is the latest animated cartoon of the series of "Aesop's Film Fables," produced by Fables Pictures, Inc.

Pathe Review No. 14 presents a number of interesting and entertaining subjects of a widely diversified nature. Pathe News Nos. 18 and 19 present the current events of importance of the world photographed by the staff of Pathe cameramen. Topics of the Day No. 9 throw the latest bits of wit and humor of the world on the screen.

Katherine MacDonald Completes First National's "Heart Dealer"

Katherine MacDonald's latest picture, just completed for First National release, has been titled "The Heart Dealer." It is a modern comedy by Charles A. Logue. Miss MacDonald is supported by Nigel Barrie, Ethel Key, Charles Borrard, Charles Clary and Mona Kingsley. Mr. Barrio played in "The Notorious Miss Lisle" with Miss MacDonald and also in "The Turning Point," two First Nationals.

Miss MacDonald has the role an authoress who has no difficulty making her characters "behave" in printer's ink but has more than her share of trouble with her fiancee who is pursued by the wife of her publisher. The authoress eventually proves that she is master of her own life as well as of her fictional creations.

Chet Withey directed "The Heart Dealer." This is the fifth picture Miss MacDonald has completed under her new First National contract. Her next production will be "Conquer the Woman," written by Violet Clark.

Vitagraph Acquires Rights to French Film, "Gypsy Passion"

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has announced the acquisition by that company of "Gypsy Passion" for the United States and Canada. Mr. Smith announces that this unusual French production, an adaptation of Jean Richepin's famous gypsy story, "Miarka, the Child of the Bear," will be released during March.

The general release will be preceded by a Broadway showing which will take place this month. The picture has already been shown in France and England, where, it was said, it was acclaimed as one of the greatest film productions of the year.

Foch Film Shown in French Capital

The Pathe News' film record of the enthusiastic receptions which welcomed Marshal Foch during his tour of the principal cities of the United States and was presented to him on his departure for his own country, has had a first showing in Paris under distinguished auspices. The leading Paris newspapers made advance announcements of the event, and reported it at length. The showing was conducted by Post No. 1, of the American Legion.

Baird Picture Due March 12

March 12 is the release date of "Don't Doubt Your Wife," first of a series of Leah Baird productions on domestic life which will be released by Associated Exhibitors during 1922.

Leah Baird is assisted by Edward Peil, Emory Johnson, Katherine Lewis and Mathilda Brundage. The director is James W. Horne. Arthur S. Beck supervised.

Names Three Fox Films Among Best

Three Fox super-productions are included in the list of best ten pictures of the year selected by the dramatic editor of the Manitoba Free Press and printed in that paper February 4.

The three pictures are "Over the Hill," "Queen of Sheba," and "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court."

"'Tis the Bull" for Educational

"'Tis the Bull" is the Christie Comedy now being completed for Educational release with Bobby Vernon in the featured role. Vernon was assisted in making the bullfighting scenes by Harry Burns, one of the best professional animal men in motion picture work.

Keeping in Personal Touch

By FRITZ TIDDEN

ON Sunday evening, February 12, a group of people, among whom we had the extreme pleasure of being present, were guests of Burton Holmes at his typical travelogue, "Venice and the Italian Lakes," which proved as interesting as usual, which is saying much more than it casually sounds. Following the lecture the party was invited to Mr. Holmes' home, where a supper was served.

Where the renowned traveller lives while in New York is situated on the fourteenth and top floor of an apartment building on the corner of Central Park West and Sixty-seventh street. The building was erected on the co-operative plan and Mr. Holmes had a duplex apartment built to his own plans, and to conform with his marvelous collection of Orientalia.

The apartment is a treasure house of Oriental trophies, which baffle description except from an expert in things Oriental, to which we lay no claim. But "we know what we like" when it comes to art objects and we could spend a two weeks' tour of admiration through Mr. Holmes' studio rooms. And, of course, the collection which the famous traveller has made to decorate his home is not merely a mass of things that are just odd, valuable or hit-or-miss. Each object has been selected for its special place in the rooms and for its special application to the general scheme of decoration. That the collection is enormously valuable, however, is gainsaid. It is one of the most exquisitely decorated homes in which persons have been careless enough to invite us.

Incidentally, Mr. Holmes left this week for a cross-country lecture tour, and when he arrives on the coast he will sail for China and Japan, to be gone three years at least, gathering material for a series of Oriental travelogues and perhaps additions to his large collection of art objects for his home.

Louis Francis Brown, personal representative for Mr. Holmes, was a member of the party on Sunday evening. And we can understand why the globe trotter has had him as manager for the past twenty-six years. He is the kind of man anyone would like to have around for twenty-six years.

The Passing Week in Review

FINALLY the time has come when independents have been forced to acknowledge the true value of an organization within their ranks. The market has made remarkable progress in the past two years until today its productions number among them the best box office attractions to be found in this industry. And this progress has been recorded at a most discouraging time. There have been many changes but most of these have been for the best. And yet the very future of this fast growing market is today jeopardized—jeopardized to such an extent that those in it have been forced to don their fighting togs. The ultimate result of this clash depends entirely upon the united action of independents, for without it there can be no material headway.

THE five per cent. sales tax has brought about that much needed feeling of organization within the market. This tax, if imposed, will drive virtually 95 per cent. of the independent producers and distributors out of business. It will bankrupt national State rights distributing organizations to such an extent that the future of the market will be impossible. Coming at a time when the market is confronted with promises of greater exhibitor patronage and popularity, the fight means everything and should be backed by every State righter whether he be an independent producer, national distributor, local exchangeman or independent exhibitor.

THIS tax question has been before the industry for some time, but it was not until the eleventh hour that independents fully appreciated the predicament in which it had been placed. The I. P. D. A. was the only representative organization in the field, but not until the very last minute did the members of this body come to the conclusion that immediate action was necessary. When the interpretation of the Internal Revenue Commission was made known every firm went up in arms, for that body's version of the tax is seemingly unconstitutional inasmuch as enforcement of its alleged provisions would bankrupt a progressive, but not luxurious business. It was realized immediately that only through organization could this tax be fought successfully.

AND this tax must be fought as nothing else has been fought. It means everything. It is unreasonable and cannot be borne by State righters. It is discriminatory. Yet, it was not until the very last minute that such an intelligent market as ours awoke to a realization of the destructive attitude of those who had been empowered to collect this tax. Necessity resulted in united action. But whether or not this belated action will effect the sought revision of the commission's interpretation of the law remains to be seen. Regardless of the final result, however, the situation carries a most important lesson.

THAT the I. P. D. A. did not start to function properly and effectively until six weeks ago when its members were securely brought together through a threatened jeopardy of mutual interests can not, however, be attributed to any fault of any individual. This organization fills a long felt want in the market. It can do much to effect the number of reforms still needed. No national distributor should or can afford to remain out if he values his interests. Concerted action assures effective and immediate results.

ORGANIZATION is the first and most important need of the industry. There is everything that the I. P. D. A. must live for. But this organization spirit should not be confined exclusively to national distributors. We believe in a national cooperative organization of local State rights buyers. At present there is no such organization. Local organizations of State rights exchangemen number two, but neither has functioned properly or has made any effort to bring about certain changes that must be made at once if the business in those territories is expected to prosper.

THERE are any number of good reasons why local State rights exchangemen must be organized. We believe that the time has come when there must be a revision of the many territorial percentage charts. And we believe, too, that the local exchangemen are the only ones logically fitted to fix these percentages. Some of the percentage charts are adopted by some distributors for no reason but that some other competitor is using them. We believe that an organization of national State righters and local exchangemen can, through representative committees, compile a uniform and fair percentage scale.

WE believe, too, that two organizations, one representative of national distributors and the other of local buyers, can avoid the many disputes that now bob up daily. Through concerted action two such organizations can permanently eliminate "fly-by-nights" and pirates. The national distributors have their organization. It is yet young. It has been a bit tardy in effective action, but now that it has donned its fighting toggery a most encouraging future confronts it. But without local endorsement and co-operation the progressive program of the I. P. D. A. will carry no weight.

THIS writer has finally viewed the old "Ten Nights In A Barroom" now being offered exhibitors as "opposition" to the remarkably entertaining Arrow L. Case Russell version of the same melodrama. If you have no further use for your theatre, if you want to keep patrons from your house, if you wish to lose the good-will of your public or if you would treat your friends to a good laugh—on you, book this splendid example of all that a motion picture should not be. It will win the prize in any antique and horrible contest, for there is absolutely no reason for its being other than that it has the same title of an entertaining box office bet that has proved its popularity.

STATE RIGHTS exchangemen and exhibitors everywhere are enthusiastically referring to the very complete line of accessories being offered by Warner Brothers for their Harry Rapf production, "School Days." Never has there been a picture that has given a more complete or elaborate line of exploitation helps. The accessories inspire innumerable and original tieups. These helps are dignified, mutually benefiting and designed with the interests of the outsider carefully considered. With splendid accessories, unusual box office value and remarkable entertainment to back the every claim of the showman, "School Days" can not help but come out a big winner. The Warners, Harry Rapf and Bill Nigh can indeed consider themselves fortunate on having the services of a publicity and exploitation department that is not afraid to work day and night conceiving new and original ideas. There is no harder working pair of publicists in this industry than Eddie Bonns and Louis Marangella.

Exhibitors Declare War on "Junkers"

New York M. P. T. O. A. Pass Resolutions Condemning Such "Junk Peddlers"

ALBANY, N. Y.—That the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will refuse to use the product of peddlers of "junk" pictures offered under the guise of "re-issues" and to serve as unfair competition against meritorious productions was established when a resolution was passed here by the New York exhibitors dedicated to drive these "leeches" out of business. Verifying the exclusive statement in MOVING PICTURE WORLD, which inaugurated the fight against "junk" dealers a month ago, that the exhibitors would take concerted action against the activities of these "get-rich-quicks," announcement was made by Sydney S. Cohen, president of the national organization, that the time had come when theatre owners had to defend themselves against such a practice.

The exhibitors have decided not to book such film, but the New York action is only a forerunner to similar moves to be made by other exhibitor organizations.

Second National Establishes Exchange in New England

Two new exchanges have been added to Second National Pictures Corporation's list: Second National Pictures Corporation of New England was established with offices at 57 Church street, Boston, with Herman Rifkin, manager. The Eastern Film Features Company, Inc., 134 Meadow street, New Haven, which also is under the direction of Mr. Rifkin, is announced as having been made a branch exchange of Second National. These exchanges will distribute the series of twelve photoplays to be released by Second National. Announcement already has been made of the release of "David and Jonathan," from the novel by E. Temple Thurston, and "Her Story," by Dion Titheradge, who also directed his talented sister, Madge Titheradge, in the production.

Three Sales On Warner's Big Feature

Three State right exchanges have purchased the rights to two Warner Brothers productions, according to an announcement by Harry M. Warner. The productions in question are, "Ashamed of Parents," with an all star cast, and "Parted Curtains," featuring Henry B. Walthall, and Mary Alden.

Big Feature Rights, Louisville, Ky., has purchased the rights for Kentucky and Tennessee; Specialty Film Company, Dallas, secured the territorial rights for Texas, Oklahoma, and Arkansas; Warner's Exchange, Los Angeles, has acquired the productions for Nevada, Arizona, California and Hawaii.

Chic Sale in "His Nibs" Being Well Received All Over Country

Following the announcement that "His Nibs," starring Chic Sale, will be shown at the Capitol Theatre, New York, L. L. Hiller of "His Nibs" Syndicate, state righting this production, reports that it is being received with favor throughout the country.

From Ogden, Utah, and Pantages Theatre in Salt Lake City, come advices of unusually big business. It was also hailed by large crowds at the Doric in Kansas City and Allen in Cleveland. It has been booked for the Rivoli in Toledo and several other first-run houses in Ohio.

Favorite Film Corporation, controlling Michigan rights, reports this production has been booked over the entire Butterfield circuit. It has also been booked over the entire string of theatres composing the Exhibitors' Direct Service in Missouri.

Max Weintraub of Fontanelle Feature Film Corporation of Omaha, has purchased the Nebraska and Iowa rights and arranged first run bookings in Des Moines, Sioux City and Omaha.

Convention Week Finds Albany Thronged with State Right Men

Albany, N. Y.—The annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State resulted in a wholesale invasion of this city by State Rights film men from New York and other points. Arrow Film Corporation made a big week by showing its Blazed Trails Production special, "Ten Nights In A Barroom" at the Strand Theatre here. J. Charles Davis, Arrow's publicity director, was in charge, and secured considerable front page publicity for the picture with the result that capacity audiences ruled at every performance.

Most of the exhibitors took the opportunity of viewing the picture that has surprised the entire industry because of its remarkable drawing ability. Despite the fact that absolutely no paper was used to advertise the engagement, the advertising campaign being confined exclusively to display displays and newspapers, the resultant business was declared by the Strand management to have been the best that house has recorded in many months. The star, John Lowell, and author, L. Case Russell, both appeared in person.

Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Pictures Corporation, was one of the most popular exchangemen here. Sam was congratulated from all sides on his success in securing the distribution of the Clara Kimball Young productions in New York State. Metro, it is understood here, will distribute these pictures, which have in the past been handled by Equity Pictures Corporation.

Warners, Nu-Art, Commonwealth, Merit and Arrow all had booths in the exhibition room of the Ten Eyck Hotel.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Film Corporation, made a flying trip to Albany as did also Mr. Bunsch of the Lightning Film Exchange of Boston.

Warner Brothers had the distinction of having the most novel booth in the exhibition hall. Incidentally the Warner exploitation men were busy flooding the convention hall with literature concerning "School Days." The booth represented a school and was lighted in such a way that it caught the eye of every visitor.

Curwood Visits

James Oliver Curwood, the popular writer whose pictures are being produced by the Pine Tree Pictures Corporation and State Righted by Arrow Film Corporation, visited New York this week.

Weiss Will Plug Serial for Buyers

Louis Weiss, Secretary of Adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation, will put into effect next week a novel plan in behalf of the two territories unsold at the present moment in this country for the serial starring Elmo Lincoln. These territories are New England and Washington, Oregon, northern Idaho and Montana. In order to help prospective purchasers of these states, Weiss will inaugurate a comprehensive exploitation campaign designed to acquaint the exhibitor and public with the unusual qualities of "Adventures of Tarzan."

Baum Closes Big Deal for Equity

Louis Baum, sales manager of Equity Pictures Corporation, has closed a deal with J. J. Goodstein of Arrow Photo Plays Company of Seattle, whereby that company will distribute in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana, the second series of Clara Kimball Young productions which embrace "Hush," "Straight From Paris," "Charge It" and "What No Man Knows," together with another production now being made.

In the Independent Field

Blizzard Delays Carewe Feature

For the first of the series of Edwin Carewe independent productions, C. C. Burr announces that the title, "I Am the Law," has been selected as being particularly suitable to the nature of the story.

The entire cast for this production, including Alice Lake, Kenneth Harlan, Rosemary Theby, Gaston Glass, Noah Beery and Wallace Beery are on location, taking outdoor shots at Truckee, Cal., where they encountered a furious blizzard. This aided the work, as the script called for just such a storm; however, the blizzard became so furious that it became necessary to temporarily suspend work on the picture. Most of the snow scenes are finished and the company expects to return in a few days to the Fine Arts Studio to film the interiors.

Mr. Burr reports that several territories have already been closed on this picture, and that an elaborate billboard campaign is being planned. This production, with its unusually prominent cast, promises to be one of the biggest attractions on the independent market. The half-way mark on the production has already been reached and it is expected it will be completed at an early date.

Brandt-Davis Film Breaks House Record

The George H. Davis-Joe Brandt feature, "Life's Greatest Question," opened for a run at the Strand Theatre in San Francisco, on February 12, and according to reports is breaking house records. Manager M. L. Markowitz, immediately after the opening, wired congratulations to Messrs. Brandt and Davis, stating "You certainly have a winner in 'Life's Greatest Question.' Played capacity all day yesterday and last night. Matinee Monday held them out. Picture is certainly a box-office attraction."

"Ten Nights" "My Wandering Boy" and "School Days" Continue to Maintain Record-Breaking Pace

This week finds no let-up in the rapid pace already set by Arrow's "Ten Nights In A Barroom," Equity's "My Wandering Boy" and Warner's "School Days," all three of these attractions continuing to establish new records.

"School Days" will on Saturday, February 19, open for a run at the Newark Theatre in Newark, N. J., and as reports show that this production has made a regular clean-up in the Middle West, and showmen everywhere are realizing its box-office possibilities, there is every reason to believe that it will play to unusually big business in Newark.

In Albany, where the New York State Convention of M. P. T. O. is now being held, "Ten Nights In A Barroom" opened on Monday to turn-away crowds, and this has been repeated each day at the Strand Theatre, with the prospect that the end of the week will see many disappointed at not being able to get into the theatre. This picture is duplicating at Albany the record-breaking performance which started with the Providence showing and which has continued in practically every house in which it has yet been shown. Exhibitors from all over the state, who are attending the convention, are particularly interested in the big success of the Albany showing of this attraction and marveling at the business it is bringing to the box office.

Other bookings on "Ten Nights in a Barroom" include the following: The Strand at Buffalo; Grand at Columbus, Ohio; Fox' Washington in Detroit; Fox' American in Denver, and Tally's in Los Angeles for week of February 19, and Strand in Syracuse for week of February 25; while at the Rivoli in San Francisco it is now in its second week and duplicating the big business reported for the first week.

Although "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" the first independent production to play the Criterion in New York, did big business during the opening week, the second week finds this unique attraction even exceeding its own record. Buyers everywhere are intensely interested in the record being made by this picture as evidenced by the phenomenal number of sales reported in another article published in this section.

"The Parish Priest," which has been in great demand in Baltimore, is reported to have attracted the biggest business the Belnord Theatre, in that city, has ever done. The picture showed there last Monday.

"Ten Nights in a Barroom," by the way, is now in its third big week at the Globe Theatre in Boston where, despite bitter opposition, it is more than holding its own, playing to capacity twice daily, with Sunday's attendance so big that two extra shows had to be given.

"Why Girls Leave Home" made such a big noise in Chicago's Loop that the Madlin, a neighborhood house, repeated it this week, and business the first half of the weeek was so promising that the house predicted a capacity run for the seven-day period.

"The Right Way," the Producers' Security Corporation Thomas Mott Osborne prison melodrama, held the boards at the Blue Mouse in Minneapolis last week, and as the result of a clever exploitation the feature got over satisfactorily despite the weather.

"The Parish Priest," owned by Herman J. Garfield, has just closed a three-week record-breaking run at the Euclid Theatre, in Cleveland, opening that house, which had been closed because of poor business for two months.

The Shuberts are after big State rights features and this week offered a prominent distributor in Cleveland one of their houses in that city, offering to gamble on the picture.

"His Nibs" is scoring satisfactorily on the Coast, where it already has played a number of big cities. Last week it opened at Pantages Theatre in Salt Lake City, where it established several new records. According to reports the first day resulted in a turn-away, with the result that an extra performance had to be given.

Another commendatory report came from Phil Selznick, of Cleveland, who owns the Ohio rights to "His Nibs," which Exceptional produced and which stars "Chic" Sale, reporting heavy bookings in that territory.

Lande Breaks Theatre Records with "Adventures of Tarzan"

Harry Lande, whose organization, Lande Film Distributing Company, controls "Adventures of Tarzan" for Ohio, has smashed all records for important bookings in connection with serials. During the four weeks in which the Lande firm has been selling the Tarzan offerings, they have secured contracts for week stands in Ohio, in such cities as Cleveland, Columbus, Canton, Dayton, etc. In Cleveland the first runs for the serial have been placed with Marcus Loew's new theatres, the Metropolitan and the Liberty, each house showing the film for one week on each episode. The Lorain-Fulton, Cleveland's newest half million dollar theatre, has contracted to show "Adventures of Tarzan" for a week's run on each episode. For the first time in the history of the house, B. F. Keith's Broadway, at Columbus, Ohio, has arranged to show a serial, selecting the Tarzan film for this experiment. The Broadway presents Keith vaudeville weekly. The Tri-State Amusement Company, controlling the Olympic theatre in Steubenville and the American Theatre, in East Liverpool, have also broken their policy regarding serials by presenting "Adventures of Tarzan." These two houses are among the leading motion picture palaces in Eastern Ohio. Among the other remarkable bookings secured by the Lande organization may be mentioned a week's run for the serial at the Lubin theatre in Cincinnati, the Lyric theatre in Portsmouth and the Ideal theatre in Dayton, Ohio.

Amalgamated Franchise Holders Convene in New York City

Before leaving for Los Angeles Sunday, where he will confer with G. M. Anderson about the twelve co-star features including "Ashes" and "Any Night," starring jointly Robert Edeson, William Courtleigh, Myrtle Steadman, Tully Marshall and others and now being released through franchise-holders from among the independent exchange owners of the country, Franklyn E. Backer took advantage of the fact that New York would be the headquarters of many of the leading independent exchange men last week to arrange for a meeting of Amalgamated franchise-holders at the hotel Astor.

Talk of New Comedies

In addition to a further study of the plans of the new organization in relation to how they are operating while actually in force through the release of the first two pictures, the matter of the new series of two-reel comedies featuring Stanley Laurel, will also be taken up for consideration. Among the well-known film men handling the Amalgamated product in their respective territories were Sam Werner, of St. Louis, Al. Kahn of Kansas City and Omaha, Peter Oletsky of Baltimore, Bill Underwood of Dallas and Sam Grand of Grand and Warner of Buffalo. All were deeply interested in the method of launching the first co-star productions introduced by Warner's exchange handling the pictures in New York. Mr. Warner is releasing the first subject, "Ashes" as a Washington's Birthday present on February 22nd, and the second subject follows it almost imediately, being released on March 2nd.

Fifth Bible Film Ready

The fifth episode of the Old Testament being produced by the Sacred Films, Inc., of California, has been completed. It deals with the story of Abraham. Col. J. T. Axton, of the U. S. A., has endorsed the Bible pictures Barrett McCormack of the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, has booked the pictures, as has also Sam Rothafel.

Sensational Aerial Thrills in Selig's "The Jungle Goddess"

Word has been received at the offices of The Export & Import Film Company, world distributors of "The Jungle Goddess," that Col. Selig, producer of this, his third wild animal jungle serial, has successfully completed the shooting of one of the most daring stunts in the serial, a stunt which has up to this time "stumped" him.

The scenario called for a fight in mid-air in a speeding airplane between the pilot and two leopards. Several attempts to stage this thrill for the camera met with failure. In one of the attempts one of the leopards, frightened by the deafening exhaust of the airplane motor, clawed and ripped the linen off the wings and fuselage of the plane. Two more attempts to accomplish the feat met with failure. Selig decided to try once more and if unsuccessful to give up the idea of the mid-air struggle.

The third time the two planes took to the air with the leopards invisibly strapped to the struts. Elinor Field and Truman Van Dyke, co-stars, then took their cues and the fight in the air was caught by the airplane circling above. The result, according to Selig, who was immensely gratified with his final success, was the filming of the most precarious stunt scene ever shown in a serial.

Loew Gets Tarzan

Harry Lande who is distributing Weiss Brothers' "Adventures of Tarzan" serial in Ohio, this week closed a deal with Marcus Loew whereby every Loew Theatre in that State will show the episode play. Elmo Lincoln, the star of the serial, will make personal appearances. Tieups with Ohio newspapers also have been arranged by Mr. Lande.

Western Exploitation Gets "The Man from Hell's River"

Western Pictures Exploitation Company will distribute Irving Cummings' "The Man from Hell's River" picture and Irving M. Lesser and Mike Rosenberg heads of that concern promise it to be as nearly an all-star production as it is possible to get. The story is by James Oliver Curwood. Irving Cummings has gained a big following for his stage and screen roles, having played in support of such notable stars as Nazimova, Kitty Gordon, Ethel Clayton, and others. In this picture he is said to do the best work of his career. He is starred in "The Man from Hell's River."

The adaptation was made by Tod Browning, widely known for his direction of such big boxoffice pictures as "The Virgin of Stamboul," "Outside the Law," and "No Woman Knows." The notable array of talent includes Eva Novak, who was starred by the Universal. Wallace Beery is cast as the "heavy." He has gained for himself a distinct boxoffice value and public following through the portrayal of highly dramatic characters. In this he adds laurels to his already great success. Others in capable support of Mr. Cummings are Frank Whitson, Lillian West, Robert Klein and Will Herford. The unusual photography which Abe Fried has given to the Irving Cummings Maple Leaf specials up to now is noteworthy in "The Man From Hell's River."

Between You and Me

The Stanley circuit in Philadelphia has had things pretty much its own way in Eastern Pennsylvania. State Rights exchangemen had as much chance of getting any reasonable profit by booking their wares over the Stanley circuit as a Chinaman has of leading the Ku Klux Klan. But time brings changes and State Rights exchanges in Philadelphia report a wholesale demand for State Rights productions by Stanley at present.

Universal and its former box office serial star, Eddie Polo, are involved in a merry race. Four weeks ago THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD exclusively announced that Eddie was in Florida working on a Robinson Crusoe serial to be distributed in the State rights market. The following week Universal came out with a double page advertisement announcing a serial on the same subject, starring Harry Myers. The Universal serial will be known as "Robinson Crusoe," but the Polo episode play, which is being made in Florida under the direction of J. P. McGowan, will have some other title, although bearing on the same subject. Eddie Polo is one of the best serial stars and should have no trouble disposing of his picture in the independent market. In fact, much of the territory on this picture already has been sold.

A new distributing company has entered the field with a foreign made spectacle on which it has placed a certain valuation. In doing business with exchangemen the firm does not insist on receiving the territorial quota on its estimated gross value of the picture. Instead it asks for that quota and when that is turned down, as is usually the case, the salesman offers to allow the exchange to handle the physical distribution in that section on a certain percentage, the owner of the film paying the exchange a certain amount every week as well as paying the salaries of salesmen who are to do nothing but sell that particular picture. The spectacle was given a showing in a downtown house in New York this week.

That showmen are on the alert for money-making State rights pictures is evident from the batch of inquiries that poured into this department this week. Seven exhibitors of national reputation have written in for details on the Sherlock Holmes two-reelers which Alexander Film Corporation is handling.

A certain producer whose pictures have recently been State righted was offered the necessary capital for his next picture by a syndicate of Florida business men, provided the production was made in that State. Inasmuch as the syndicate wanted to engage their own executives to co-operate with the producer the latter turned the offer down and is now working on the picture in New York.

Northwest Features Will Make Up Edwin Carewe Offerings

Judging from the telegrams that have been pouring into the office of C. C. Burr, president of the Affiliated Distributors, the announced series of Edwin Carewe Productions should go over with a terrific bang as a State Right proposition. Every corner of the United States is represented in these wires and they are said applaud the idea of making pictures specially for the independent exchange owner.

Negotiations have been practically closed with a prominent author, for a story of the Canadian northwest, to serve as the first Carewe release. Needless to add that the latter is best known as a director of this type of story bearing in mind "Isobel" with House Peters and Jane Novak. "The Snow Bird" and "The White Raven" for Metro, "Playthings of Destiny" with Anita Stewart for First National and an unannounced special production soon to be released by William Fox.

This corporation is controlled by a group of men who have earned enviable reputations in the motion picture industry. The president of the company is B. P. Fineman, formerly with Katherine McDonald Productions. Bennie Zeidman also prominently connected with it, also has a long and successful career.

C. C. Burr, the other executive of the company, started with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, serving in all departments, and resigned as assistant general manager to form Affiliated Distributors and also to produce Torchy comedies with Johnny Hines.

Rice-Lardner in the South

Grantland Rice, the sport writer, who together with Jack Eaton produce Weiss Brothers' "The Sport Review," released by Goldwyn, this week went to Bellaire, Fla., with Ring Lardner and George Ade. There he will make special pictures for the popular sport series.

In Record Time Equity Sells Half of Territory on "Wandering Boy"

As exclusively reported in this department last week sales on Equity's "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" were closed immediately following the New York premiers with the following well-known exchangemen: New York and Northern New Jersey to Sam Zierler of Commonwealth Film Corp; Eastern Pennsylvania and Northern New Jersey to Ben Amsterdam of Philadelphia; New England to Sam Grand, of Federated Exchange of Boston; Indiana, Northern Illinois and Wisconsin to Joe Freidman of Celebrated Players of Chicago.

In addition to these, Stephenson Attractions, Ltd., of Toronto, have purchased rights for this picture for the entire Dominion of Canada, Equity announces that all of these deals were closed within twenty-four hours after the Criterion premiere, making a total of forty-seven and a half per cent. of the entire domestic territory, which is believed to establish a record of quick sales on State Right productions.

Not only is this a glowing tribute to the recognized box office possibilities of this production, but inquiries have been received for the remaining territory and deals are now pending which it is believed will be closed within a very short time.

Buyers have been quick to recognize the unique exploitation possibilities of this B. F. Zeidman production and several of the independent exchangemen are preparing special exploitation stunts which will be out of the ordinary. In addition, Equity is also planning a unique campaign for this production.

C. B. C. Arranges to Distribute Series of Hy Mayer "Travelaughs"

C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation announces the completion of arrangements by which they will State Right the series of Hy Mayer "Travelaughs." This series will consist of fifteen single reel subjects, including such subjects as "Mon Petit Paris," "Such Is Life in Monte Carlo" and "Such Is Life in London's West End;" being the picturized impressions of Europe as seen by one of America's foremost cartoonists. Mr. Mayer has been abroad a large number of times and has in this series presented in his own unique and humorous style quaint scenes and features in connection with European life.

For more than a year the Mayer "Travelaughs" have been a special feature at the Capitol Theatre, New York, and Mr. Mayer's creations have also been shown in many high class theatres through the country, receiving praise from exhibitors and press representatives because of their novelty, and Jack Cohn of C. B. C. is highly elated at securing this series for the independent market, and believes it will prove a banner attraction.

This series includes material secured by Mr. Mayer in England, France, Italy, Czecho - Slovakia, Holland, and other European countries.

Old Testament Will Be Boost for State Right Exchanges

The decision of Louis Weiss, executive of Artclass Pictures Corporation, to distribute "After Six Days," the tentative title of the film production of the Old Testament, via the state right exchanges, has elicited hearty approval from the leading independent distributors of the United States and Canada. Weiss has been in receipt of numerous letters during the past six weeks, all voicing the opinion that this production will be one of the most distinctive and important which the state right man has ever had the opportunity to handle.

It is said to be the first complete feature dealing with the subject of the Old Testament from Creation to the Exodus ever presented in this country and Artclass Pictures Corporation has been in receipt of several offers from national exchange system to distribute the production as a special attraction. Owing to the tremendous success scored by "Adventures of Tarzan" on the state right market, Weiss Brothers feel that the various independent distributors are entitled to receive serious consideration in the marketing of the Italian film spectacle based on the Old Testament.

"Carnivals" Popular

The Carnival Comedies, the series of two-reel laughmakers featuring Polly Moran and Bill Jones, which C. B. C. Film Sales Corp. is distributing, are proving highly successful. With four of these comedies already completely edited and ready for release, the title "Look Before You Sleep," has been given to the fifth of the pictures on the series.

Wilson's Next

Arrow Film Corporation announced that "The Innocent Cheat," by I. Grubb Alexander, will be Ben Wilson's next feature. Roy Stewart, Kathleen Kirkham, Rhea Mitchell and George Hernandex are in the cast.

"Your Best Friend" Is Vera Gordon's Warner Feature

Harry M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, announced this week the release of "Your Best Friend," starring Vera Gordon. This production was made by Harry Rapf, and directed by Will Nigh, both of whom brought forth "Why Girls Leave Home," and the recent Wesley Barry feature, Gus Edwards' "School Days."

"Your Best Friend" is declared to have furnished Miss Gordon with a story possessing humor and pathos, and a keen insight into the trials and tribulations of mothers the world over. Its subject matter is said to be a revelation of mother love in its most poignant phase.

Briefly, a widowed mother brings up two sons. One turns out to be a black sheep, and the other marries a girl outside of the mother's social sphere. She showers her wealth and love and protection on her sons, but at every turn she meets with a rebuff from her daughter-in-law and the girl's frivolous, society crazed mother. How circumstances revolve, extoling the beauty of parental self-sacrifice, and how, in the end, the mother is left alone to shift for herself, is said to bring to light a drama replete with all the essentials of a powerful box-office attraction.

Torchy Premier

"Burn 'Em Up Barnes," starring Johnny Hines, State righted by C. C. Burr, has been booked for a first run showing at the Rialto Theatre in Providence, R. I., for the week of Feb. 20.

Novel Check-Up System Devised For Hallroom Boys Comedies

A new method of checking up the popularity of each of the Percy and Ferdie Hallroom Comedies, as a means of discovering which type comedy meets most with public approval and in which characterizations Percy and Ferdie Hallroom are most popular, has been instituted by the producers of these two-reel laugh-provokers.

Each week since these comedies were first shown in the leading film theatres throughout the country, many requests have been received from "fans" for photographs of Percy and Ferdie, not only as they appear in real life, but for stills of them as they appear in various releases—these requests being filled at the end of each week.

The producers have hit upon the plan of tabulating these requests under the name of the particular release on which the photograph is desired so that, by means of comparisons, they will have a sure method of learning which comedies were best liked and a basis for conducting further inquiries into the reason.

We regret to announce that the beginning of the series of state right articles by Joe Lee has been postponed for one week, as it was found impractical to start this series in this issue. However, the first story will positively appear in our next issue. Watch for it, boys, and don't miss any of this series, as you will find them both entertaining and instructive.

Gossip of the Trade

W. H. Donaldson, of the Cleveland Second National exchange, spent a few days in Pittsburgh recently, and in return for the visit, Earl Forsythe and Jack Frazier, of the local office, went back to the Sixth City to look things over with Mr. Donalson.

The Weiland Brothers, Albert and William, of the Standard Film Exchange, have purchased Arrow's "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" for this territory.

O. B. Hullinger has been appointed receiver of the Simlec Film Exchange, Pittsburgh. It will be offered for sale about the end of February.

The management of the Blue Mouse Theatre, Seattle, who booked "Why Girls Leave Home" to follow "Shame," are working up for exploitation for the opening of the picture. Manager Al. K. Brin of Kwality Pictures reports contracts coming in very fast for this release.

Henry G. Meyer, long identified with the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., Kansas City, passed away at this city on February 6 at the age of 57 years. He is survived by his widow and a son.

Boy Murphy, manager of the Pioneer Exchange in Buffalo, is on the road trying to set a new record for contracts at his office. The way he is sending in contracts, it looks like he will be successful. Business must be picking up, after all.

Dave Levy of Niagara Pictures Corporation, Buffalo's newest State rights exchange, is sales manager of the organization. He has been in the business in Buffalo for many years. Dave has a big mahogany desk in his new office. When he sits behind it, he looks like a Wall street banker. Business is starting off in fine shape at the new exchange.

The Minter-United Amusements who recently took over the Strand Features, Detroit, Mich., are spending $2,500 in posting billboards on the serial "Adventures of Tarzan," for which they have the Michigan distribution rights. Furthermore, in their own exchange, they have fitted up an attractive jungle scene to give atmosphere to the serial. W. A. Haynes has been appointed sales manager of Minter-United.

Filing of incorporation papers with the secretary of state at Indianapolis, Ind., by the National Cinema Corporation this week has disclosed plans for a national motion picture distribution organization, with headquarters in Indianapolis.

The corporation is capitalized at $250,000 and it is understood this will be increased as the concern develops. Theodore Vonnegut and E. H. Mathews of Indianapolis are among those interested in the venture. The corporation plans to open twenty-six film exchanges in each of twenty-six strategetically located cities.

Second National Pictures will be controlled in three film sections by Pittsburgh and Canonsburg people, with Earl Forsythe, of the Imperial Film Co., Pittsburgh, at the head of the organization. Offices will be opened in Cleveland and Cincinnati in addition to the one in Pittsburgh at 414 Ferry street, and salesmen are already on the job in all three film sections.

Jack Frazier is manager of the Pittsburgh office and W. H. Donaldson will be in charge of the Cleveland office. The Cincinnati manager has not yet been chosen. T. C. Bronstetter, well-known Pittsburgh film man, will be general sales manager for the three offices.

Kwality Pictures Exchange, which is distributing Warner brothers' productions in the Northwest, is sparing neither time nor money putting over "School Days" in that territory. Harry Brin, special representative for the Seattle exchange, is making a tour of the territory visiting Spokane, Salt Lake City and Denver. Three other salesmen next week will tour Montana, Idaho, Utah, Washington and Colorado, booking "School Days" and "Why Girls Leave Home."

The American Releasing Corporation, for which W. A. Crank is local manager, has opened temporary offices at 191 Golden Gate avenue.

In the Montague Studios Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, Harry Revier is making "Mothers of Men," with a cast which includes Dorothy Valerga and Juanita Hansen.

Work on still another ambitious production will be started at the Pacific Studios before the end of February, "The Flying Dutchman," featuring Lawson Butt, the Australian star.

J. W. Jossey, special representative for the Arrow Film Corporation, is visiting states rights exchanges. Mr. Jossey was recently in Omaha.

Savini Films, Inc., of Atlanta, distributors for the Sacred Films in the South, announce closely of contract with S. A. Lynch Enterprises for the exhibition of the entire output of the Bible Narratives.

John M. Sitterly and George Witzel have resigned from the Buffalo Nu-Art sales force.

J. Charles Davis, 2nd, the enterprising Arrow publicity genius, left this week for Albany, N. Y., where "Ten Nights In a Barroom" will open on February 13 at the Strand Theatre, simultaneous with the convention of the New York State exhibitors.

"Izzy" Cobe, a well-known figure in the State rights field, in fact, one of the veterans of the business, has been engaged by M. A. Chase, manager of the Buffalo Universal office, to succeed Phil Smith as Utica representative for the company. Mr. Cobe is well-known in his new territory.

Harold B. Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, is planning an elaborate prologue for "School Days." The well-known western New York exhibitor has booked the production for showing in February.

Educational Pictures Exchange is doing so much business in Western New York that it is necessary to enlarge the contract files every week. Educational is sharing space in the Nu-Art exchange, 221 Franklin street.

Ellen O'Connell, formerly with Pathe and Pioneer, has been placed in charge of the inspection department at the Buffalo Merit exchange.

According to Sydney Samson, manager of the Buffalo Grand & Warner office, there are only three towns over 5,000 in western New York that do not know "Why Girls Leave Home." Mr. Samson and his able deputy, Howard F. Brink, have helped explain the question to all the rest, as every theatre except the three has shown and booked the production. In Buffalo alone almost two dozen theatres have shown the feature.

Joe Davidson, formerly head of the Buffalo Lande office, is meeting with success at his new Cleveland post with the same company, according to word received by Dave Adler, his old friend, at the Buffalo exchange. Joe reports "Tarzan" going strong in his city.

"The Splendid Lie," Grace Davison's Latest, Is Ready

The second J. G. Pictures production, starring Grace Davison, is announced available for immediate release by the Arrow Film Corporation, the title is "The Splendid Lie," and it was written and directed by Charles T. Horan, who was also the author and director of Miss Davison's first starring vehicle, under the Arrow banner, "Love, Hate and a Woman."

It is a story of the small town girl in the big city; a misunderstood woman who, forced to earn her own living, is touched by the tongue of slander, which falsely accuses her of treading the primrose path. As a result she loses her position and being unable to endure the attendant notoriety goes to another city. Here she becomes the wife of a prosperous banker whose sister has been the unknowing cause of her difficulties. Her husband is called to take charge of the firm from which she had been dismissed and her good name is not only cleared, but she is brought to a position of prominance in the society which had formerly ostracised her.

Pacific Film to Release Two with Popular Stars

The Pacific Film Company announces that it will release two features to independent exchanges during the current month. Henry B. Walthal, supported principally by Elinor Fair, in William Leighton's Saturday Evening Post story, "The Able Minded Lady," is one feature, while the Frederick Becker production, featuring Ora Carew in "The Girl from Rocky Point," is the other. In the latter, Miss Carew is supported by an all-star cast, headed by Walt Whitman, Theodor von Eltz, Gloria Joy and others. Sample prints have already reached the New York office of Pacific, where Julius Singer is in charge.

According to John J. Hayes, executive head of the Pacific, several new productions will be started shortly, all to cast by stellar players with a wide following.

Lesser-Rosenberg's Production Units on Coast Are Increased

Contrary to the tendency on the coast of decreasing production, Irving M. Lesser and Mike Rosenberg, of Western Pictures Exploitation Company, have increased their production units turning out pictures for State rights distribution. Irving Cummings is to start work at once on "The Man from Hell's River," an adaptation from James Oliver Curwood's story, "The Coyote." This unit will be known as the Irving Cummings-Ernest Smith Productions. Up to the present Cummings has been appearing in two-reel Northwesterns.

The Irving Cummings picture is the second special being made by the Rosenberg-Lesser combination. The first is now underway. This unit was formed by Hugh B. Evans, Jr., starring Roy Stewart. H. H. Van Loan's story, will be used. The story is untitled at present. Stewart will be supported by Marjorie Daw, George Nichols and Wallace Berry. Robert Thornby will direct. Thornby directed "The Fox" for Universal.

Weil Has a Novel Lobby

Joe Weil, publicity director for Export & Import Film Corporation, which is State Righting Col. W. Delig's latest animal serial, "The Jungle Goddess," has in preparation what should make a very attractive lobby display to be used in conjunction with the showing of that episode production. He has also ordered two oil paintings, lobby cards, uprights and countless other novelties to aid the exhibitor.

"Persecution" Ready for Release

David G. Fischer, vice president and general manager of the Regal-Fischer Corporation, announced this week the completion and title of their first feature for release through the independent market. "Persecution," as was announced exclusively in this department three weeks ago, is the name selected for this spectacle.

After two months' work, Mr. Fischer finally completed "Persecution," cutting and editing this feature from twelve reels to seven, in which form it will appear. It is expected that a release date will be set for "Persecution" within 10 days.

"Persecution" has been adapted to the screen from "The Book of Esther," and it is thought that possibly more people have read this book than any other ever published. Over six million copies of the Bible have been sold within the last two years, and this fact alone will assure "Persecution" of untold publicity.

In the Independent Field

SCENE FROM NEW WARNER SERIAL, "A DANGEROUS ADVENTURE," STARRING GRACE DARMOND

Warner Brothers Change Serial Title to "A Dangerous Adventure"

The title of the Warner Brothers fifteen episode animal serial announced as "Shadows of the Jungle," starring Grace Darmond, has been changed to "A Dangerous Adventure," according to an announcement this week. The serial is being produced at the Warner west coast studios under the personal supervision of Sam Warner. A brief resume of the first seven episodes is declared to reveal the most thrilling scenes ever filmed for a serial production.

The titles of the first seven episodes are: "The Stolen Medal," "The Sacrifice," "The Lion Pit," "Brandon's Revenge," "The Attempted Rescue," "The Traitor," and "Hidden Foes." The locale of the story is laid in the African Jungles, amid wild denizens of uncivilized natives and wild animals stampede, leaving the caravan in the face of a storm that wrecks every inanimate object in its path in addition to killing one member of the party on a mysterious mission into the African wilds.

"The Sacrifice" maintains the suspense created by the first episode, and reveals scenes of the two feminine members of the first part to be thrown into the den of sacred tigers; and the timely sacrifice of a cannibal.

"The Lion Pit" contains a terrific fight between two of the principals, and the horrible fate that faces a man who has fallen into a lion's pit, with two roaring lions charging madly at him.

"Brandon's Revenge" places the heroine in a terrifying predicament perched in a tree in the jungles with a Puma ready to spring upon her. "The Attempted Rescue" contains as highlights the burning torch dance of the natives, the leap through the flames by the man destined to be burned at the stake, and his thrilling escape only to have his foot caught in a steel trap with two snarling and prowling tigers about to leap upon him.

"The Traitor" brings to light the secret chest filled with ammunition and rifles, the heroine's fight with a native, and her fall into the den of lions.

"Hidden Foes" presents a mad dash through the African swamps, in the traps of lions and tigers, the trembling of the earth, followed by an earthquake which swallows the heroine who is attacked by an enraged tiger.

Special Act for "Tarzan"

Billy McKenna, the well known vaudeville author is preparing a novel act for Elmo Lincoln, star of Weiss Brothers' "The Adventures of Tarzan," who will shortly star on a long personal appearance trip. Bert Ennis will accompany him. Louis Weiss, secretary of the Adventures of Tarzan Serial Sales Corporation, already has received a record-breaking number of requests for dates for the popular star. Mr. Ennis will direct the tour with the aid of two experienced newspapermen. A specially constructed sedan automobile will be used by Elmo Lincoln in making many of the stops. Many novel box office stunts have been conceived by Mr. Ennis. Tie-ups already have been negotiated with representative newspapers.

Backer Goes to Capital

Franklyn E. Backer of East Coast Productions, Inc., upon his return to New York from Washington, D. C., where he went late last week, promised to make "an interesting statement of importance to the independent field in general."

From the Showmen's Angle

Charley Dutkin of the Grant Theatre, Philadelphia, always has ranked as a hustler, but the stunt he pulled in connection with the showing of Weiss Brothers' "Adventures of Tarzan" attracted more than usual attention. Charley, ever anxious for maximum returns on his investment, issued membership cards to all children in his neighborhood, after organizing the Grant Tarzan Social Club. Printed directions on the card explain that the attendance at each succeeeding episode will be recorded at the bottom of the card, which is numbered from 1 to 15. If the holder attends every episode of the serial, a pass for the final episode will be given in addition to a handsome prize. The stunt, Dutkin says, is a business-getter.

New Jersey showmen are on their toes for opportune chances of grabbing newspaper space—and they are getting plenty of it, a fact that State rights must appreciates is mutually benefiting them. Take, for instance, "Ashamed of Parents." Following the run at Fox's Terminal Theatre in Newark, N. J., the conservative Sunday Call in its last issue came out with an editorial pointing out the lesson taught by this picture. The result is that the picture, which will pull on its own merit under ordinary circumstances, played to one of the biggest weeks recorded at that house. A fact which Eddie Bonns and Louis Marangella, who, by the way, edited and titled the picture, are telling the world.

Speaking of Bonns reminds us of the exploitation that heralded the coming of "School Days" at the Strand. Two weeks ago we told about Eddie having secured tie-ups on Broadway that the keenest showmen have tried for years to obtain, but in vain. Not satisfied with getting windows at candy shops, booteries, restaurants, soda fountains, haberdasheries, clothiers, etc., etc., Eddie went them all one bettr when he grabbed an undertaker's window. That was a gem. The average showman wouldn't post a window card in a crepe-hangers' window for Rockefeller's mint, but Eddie made the display so attractive that even caskets proved magnetic.

"His Nibs," we predict, will make them stand up and take notice in Ohio. There are several reasons. We'll name three. The first is that the production is first-class entertainment that any showman can cash in on, the second is the presence of "Chic" Sale, one of the best liked vaudevillians on the American stage, and the third, Phil Selznick, who is handling the Ohio distribution. Phil knows how to handle showmen's pictures and his premier trade show in Cleveland recently convinced us that he is going to make "His Nibs" turn in a heavy profit for him. Knowing Ohio, its livewire showmen and the picture we'll be bitterly disappointed if "His Nibs" doesn't top any net profit Phil has made on any picture he has handled thus far.

M. J. Winkler Leaves Warners; Will Market Independent Films

Miss M. J. Winkler has severed her connections with the Warners, with whom she has been actively identified for a number of years, and will branch out in the independent field at the head of her own company. Her plans embrace the formation of a distributing unit with headquarters in New York and production offices in Los Angeles. The company will specialize in the marketing and exploitation of a high-grade independent product.

At the present time Miss Winkler is negotiating for the distribution of a series of feature attractions. The series of "Felix" cartoon comics, animated by the Pat Sullivan Studios, formerly distributed by Paramount Pictures, has been acquired by Miss Winkler. The new series will be of greater length and will consist of twelve issues, one of which will be released each month to State Rights exchanges.

Miss Winkler is well-fortified by experience and ability to direct the sale of independent attractions to State Rights buyers in this country. She numbers among her large circle of friends practically every important indpendent exchangeman and State Rights operator in the country.

Alexander Uses Wireless Phone

A decided novelty in screen presentation was successfully tried out recently by Alexander Film Corporation in connection with the showing of "The Solitary Cyclist," fifteenth of the series of Sherlock Holmes two-reelers. Instead of the customary sub-title wireless telephones were used. The experiment was conducted in the Alexander projection room, each of the spectators being supplied with a wireless telephone receiving apparatus, while the conversational part of the picture was handled by one of the staff who viewed the picture, perfect synchronization thus being obtained. It is said that an unusually realistic effect was thus obtained.

The first general reduction in St. Louis picture theatre admissions was announced by Hector Pasmezoglu, owner of the Delmar, Congress and Criterion theatres, this week. He has cut the adult admissions from 33 to 25 cents, including 2 cents war tax.

"We are making these reductions in the belief that the public is demanding cheaper amusements," said Pasmezogu. "It is being done in spite of the fact that we are still confronted with the same high prices for film, wages of mechanics, projectionists and musicians and everything else necessary for our business.

"We want to act in conformity with the trend in price reduction. It is possible that we may reduce our admissions still further at a later date."

Several of the smaller theatres of the city have cut their prices to 10 cents, a few playing without music. These houses are always crowded. A few weeks ago the New Gem, on Sixth near Market street, opened as a popular price house. It has been doing excellent business.

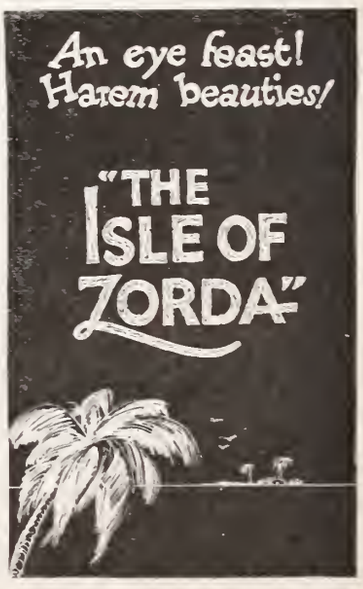
"The Leather Pushers," the first of a series of 2-reel super-feature romances of the prize ring and the social whirl adapted from H. C. Witwer's stories, was given a private screening. Rosenthal spoke on the need for closer co-operation between the newspapers and moving pictures. Several of the newspapermen also made short talks.



Buffalo

Lodowick Jones, attorney and one time reformer, who after harassing hard working tenderloin resort keepers in the old days, finally abandoned the reform industry with the statement that "It didn't pay" and sought new fields in the East, returned to Buffalo last week. He created a sensation when he appeared at the Academy Theatre, asserted his ownership of the house and attempted to eject workmen and officials who were preparing it for its re-opening as a picture house. Jones was put out of the Academy by the police, but he returned the next morning with two attorneys and a detective in reserve. He remained in the theatre from Tuesday until Thursday, the local newspapers giving the situation much publicity the while, much to the satisfaction of Sam Carver, who is operating the house under its new picture policy. Jones' alleged ownership of the Academy property is said to date back some fifteen years, when he is said to have purchased the theatre and lost it through a technicality in the law. The Amalgamated Burlesque company of New York is the recognized owner. Finally after much excitement, Mr. Jones obtained a show cause order in federal court. At the request of Thomas Powell, the time for the answer was extended to February 21, at which time counsel for the defendant will argue that the local federal court has no jurisdiction in the case, as both the defendant and the plaintiff are not residents of this federal district. Jones, it is said, has been defeated in state courts in his contention for the recovery of the Academy. He claims Wilmington, Del., as his legal residence. In the interim, the Academy has re-opened with pictures, Mayor Schwab welcoming the audience on opening night, February 14. Mr. Carver is representing I. H. Herk of New York as manager under the new policy.

Cutting of admission prices still goes on in downtown theatres. Those which have been charging 25 cents are now asking only 10 cents. The newer and better class picture theatres have kept the old charges, but have reduced the children's prices. It was announced last week that the Newman Theatre would follow the lead of the other first-run houses and charge 10 cents for children, but before this admission charge went into effect, the management of the Newman recalled their statement and announced that children's admissions would be 15 and 25 cents.

Louisville

The Majestic Amusement Company has announced a number of high grade Fox and Paramount productions to be shown in the Majestic Theatre, but is sticking to popular prices of 30 cents at night performances. For some weeks the house was operated on a 50-cent-per-seat basis, but the number of shows was reduced and it did not increase box office receipts. The Rialto, operated by the same interests, is doing a very fair business.

In fact general reports show that the very mild winter is making for good business generally in this vicinity. The Walnut, Alamo, Kentucky and National, representing the downtown houses showing pictures, of the better grades, are all doing a nice business, while the smaller theatres and suburban houses are not kicking to any extent. Some houses in working districts have not been over busy, due to slack industrial conditions.

John W. Lunger, New Jersey Hustler Keeps Patrons by Springing Stunts

ABOUT the best asset a manager can have is a personality, and John W. Lunger, who manages the Opera House, Washington, N. J., has that to the last degree, according to a Paramount exploiteer. He fairly oozes stunts, and keeps his town jazzed up.

About his best stunt was advertising "The Woman God Forgot" as "the worst picture ever made." According to him it was so bad that he did not want people to pay for it, so he let them in free and they paid as they left, if they felt like it.

He was not quite certain whether or not his patrons were going to like the old-timer. Either they were going to like it or they were going to dislike it very much. He could not tell which.

They came in out of curiosity. They liked the picture, and it made more money than it would have done had a straight admission been charged and the picture advertised as good. People even stopped to argue with Mr. Lunger about it, and persuaded themselves and those about that it was even better than it really was.

When he played "Forbidden Fruit" he advertised a free taxi service. The town has only two public cabs. He booked these for the night at $1.50 each, and they brought in $12.50, showing a profit of $7.50. This was not much, but a lot of others who phoned for the cabs only to be told they had spoken too late, went in spite of the bad walking. They had their minds all made up to go, so they went in spite of the mud. It had been told in the announcement that the first come would be first served.

Any society or church organization desirous of raising money can work on shares with Mr. Lunger any Monday night. He first takes out the film rental and then splits 50-50. Sometimes he makes a neat profit, always he breaks even and he gets in a lot of people who could not come on a straight amusement appeal. They come "for charity" and eventually get the habit. The Presbyterian Church brought in 1009 admissions.

For "Heliotrope" he hooked the Colgate company for about $50 worth of sample bottles of heliotrope toilet water. For another picture he announced that he would sing. He came on, said he was bashful, and turned out the lights. No one thought he had it in him, and the applause was tremendous. Before the hand-clapping had died out he reached into the wings and brought out a local soloist who had really done the singing.

Around Christmas he had a benefit. Paramount supplied "Straight Is the Way" and he took in $475 and four tons of food, to be given to local poor.

He is at it all the time and keeps his patrons right on their toes. He has been in the same 3,700 town for nineteen years and has not yelped about bad business yet.

Lindlar Lobbies for "Mistress of the World"

The newest Lindlar lobby comes in four parts because the release, The Mistress of the World, is to be shown in four instalments. These come one after another, and to emphasize this fact and also to locate the story, four sections are used.

On the first instalment only the right hand section is mapped, showing the start from Copenhagen, the route across the Atlantic, through the Panama Canal to China and Thibet. The second panel carries "Next week we will go," the third "and then" and the last "Our Journey's End," a question mark is also painted on the three unoccupied spaces.

You cannot see it, because the art department made it very small, but there is a steamer just starting from Copenhagen. The box office is done into a Chinese pagoda, and lettered with the title of the first section, (don't call it an "episode"). Chinese decorations are pendent from the arch, and the posters on the side are done in Chinese characters with the explanation "Meaning Mistress of the World."

The second display carries the travelers across part of Africa, and a pair of horses shows the means of locomotion. In the lobby the box office is changed by the addition of a grass hut and a kettle for cannibalistic feasts. The kettle is not essential. The grass thatch is too easy to overlook. Use that.

In the third display the map is extended to the west coast of Africa and the pedestrians indicate that the adventurers are hoofing it, while the last section gives the return to Copenhagen, and here the essential is a wireless telegraph set, borrowed from some amateur or dealer.

We have it on the best authority that the bird on the banner is the Dove of Peace. It may not look the part, but it really and truly is a dove.

These Ticket Prizes Won Over the Schools

Getting both the day and Sunday schools interested in Little Lord Fauntleroy was the stunt that brought a 200 per cent. increase in business for the Strand Theatre, Salisbury, N. C.

Alex P. Robert had 50 copies of the synopsis struck off on the mimeograph and these were distributed to the public school teachers by the Superintendent of Schools. Each class was required to rewrite the synopsis as its English lesson for the day, and a ticket prize was given by each teacher for the best composition.

That meant one ticket to each class, but a number of classes came down in a body with their tecaher in command, and all but one of the kids paid admission.

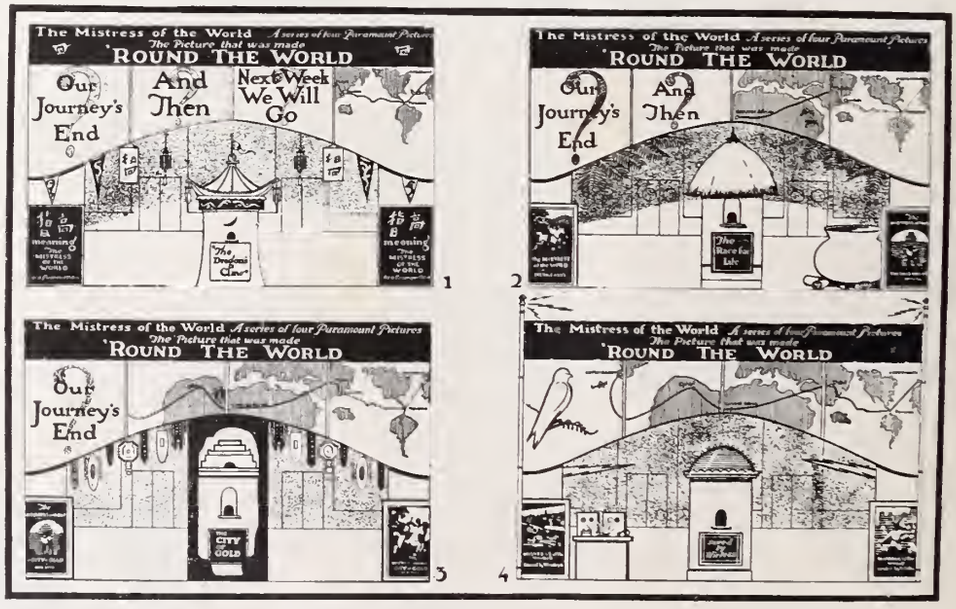
This pleased the school board so well that the Superintendent wrote a note of thanks to Mr. Robert for interesting the pupils in the right sort of play, and offered his co-operation at any future time.

To back this up a few Sunday school teachers were induced to entertain their classes, and those who were not approached had to bring their charges or lose favor.

The picture played to three times the ordinary business at an extra cost of only $5 and some passes. The money was for an open book with a cutout on one side and selling talk on the other, which was used in place of banner over the house front.

Making Them Read

Misspelled words on the billboards for the Jensen & Von Herberg houses in Seattle are one of J. W. Sayres' ways of making them read what is told on the boards. Prizes are given each week for the first reports on the errors and the prize-chasers now follow the bill posters around.



THIS LATEST LINDLAR LOBBY RUNS FOR FOUR WEEKS

It is designed to show the progression of the story in the four-part release, "The Mistress of the World." The box office decoration is changed to further emphasize the fact that this story is in four parts

Selling the Picture to the Public

San Francisco Tied to a Wid Gunning Title

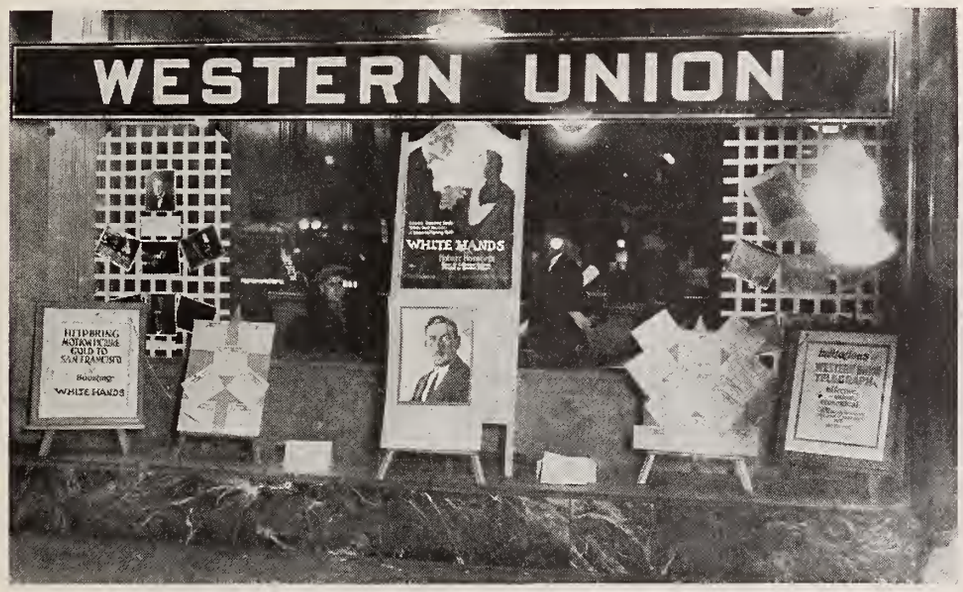
Because "White Hands," in which Hobart Bosworth is starred, was made in San Francisco, the Granada, a Roth & Partington house, was given the first showing, and Nick Ayer had no trouble at all in getting the town boosters solidly behind the production.

THE DRUG STORE WINDOW

The stores contributed windows displays and the Western Union, which had had a taste of hooking up with "The Old Nest," gave the same window to "White Hands," with reproductions of telegrams sent to various prominent persons telling them of the premier of the picture "made in San Francisco." The card on the left reads "Help bring Motion Picture Gold to San Francisco by Boosting 'White Hands'". Stills are shown in the background, and the telegrams are on two easels between the cards and the large panel in the center. The right hand card explains that the display of wires are invitations sent by Western Union to officials to see "White Hands."

A drug store was tied to soaps and lotions with a card telling that "there is nothing like clean White Hands for milady," and a dozen stills were set into the display. A sporting goods store played up stills showing Bosworth and Al Kaufman, an ex-prize fighter, training for some of the scenes in the play. These are only samples of what was done, for most of the stores in the central business district at least let in cards.

Many managers will spend a hundred dollars on exploitation who do not realize that another ten dollars worth of ushers would sell more seats.



HOOKING THE WESTERN UNION TO "WHITE HANDS"

The world premier of the Wid Gunning release with Hobart Bosworth was made at the Granada, San Francisco, because the picture had been made there, and the Boost San Francisco movement got solidly behind the picture for a turnaway

Hyman's Novelties at the Mark Strand

Having had a patriotic overture for Lincoln's Birthday, Edward L. Hyman has avoided repetition for the Washington anniversary by playing a straight overture and making the Washington number a collection of colonial songs in an appropriate setting, so the program at the Mark Strand, Brooklyn, for next week will be opened with the overture to "The Barber of Seville," played straight. The lighting will include a lemon flood from the booth, blue stage lights, amber strips and the house one-half each red and blue.

EDW. L. HYMAN

The second number is Rubinstein's "Waltz Caprice," danced by a soloist behind a white screen, giving a silhouette effect. This idea has been worked before and to such good effect that it is being repeated. A "Bill and Bob" adventure comes next, separated from the Topical Review by Arthur's "A Rose, a Kiss and You," sung as a concert number.

The sixth item is the colonial number already referred to. This shows a colonial drawing room, with a moonlit exterior showing through French windows. A mixed quartet will be dressed in colonial costumes and the selections will be Clay's "I'll Sing Thee a Song of Araby," for tenor; Stout's Lullaby, for contralto; Pinsuti's "I Fear No Foe," for baritone, and "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes," for the quartet, with a dancing interlude. The lighting will be blue and amber, with a shaft of white moonlight through the window. Hope Hampton in "Star Dust" will be the feature, with Larry Semon in "The Show" for the closing number. Stebbins' "Where Dusk Gathers Deep" will be the postlude.

Switched the Contest

Getting hold of new contest ideas is growing to be something of a task, but the Majestic Theatre, Jackson, Mich., found something nearly new for "Over the Hill."

It tied twenty-four merchants to a hoop-up double truck of 28 spaces and took the remaining four spaces for the stanzas of the poem on which the Fox production is based. These were scattered.

The idea was to cut out these four sections, make them into a booklet, decorate it as desired and submit it for judgment. Both cash and ticket prizes were offered for the most attractive books. Some 2,500 entries were received, and many were so artistic that their display made wonderful window work. In most instances the decorations were confined to the cover, but numerous books had each page illuminated with colored sketches.

Split with Classes

In a stunt of this sort it would be advisable to have several classes, by age, or the children will fear the rivalry of their elders. The number of entries indicates the interest the contest aroused and suggests the value to others. A synopsis or other material may be substituted where a poem is not available for use. The main idea is to give them something to mount and decorate.

Lobby Studio Again

The Olympia Theatre, New Haven, used the painter-in-the-lobby stunt to put over John Barrymore in First National's "The Lotus Eater." It's old stuff in some towns, but it always works.

The lobby was cleared, the painter put to work where everyone could see, and he did not work in a hurry, either, for the stunt was planned to stretch. When he was through the completed sections were put over the entrance, and almost everyone in town took a personal interest in the job because they had helped boss it.

The complete painting showed a South Sea shore with a blimp on one side. The title was painted in between the island and the blimp.

If you work this stunt, cut the design into such small sections that they cannot tell until it is done just what the painter is working on, and it will add to the pull of the idea

Selling the Picture to the Public

HOW THE CROWN THEATRE, MOBILE, DRESSED CALIGARI

Ten dollars' worth of paper, ingeniously used, added a third day to the run of the Goldwyn importation. The best stunt was mounting some figures as cutouts and illumination from behind to obtain a silhouette effect

This Window Told What No Man Knows

Borrowing a furniture store window, Phil Gersdorf, who is now located at the Rialto Theatre, Macon, set the window as a bedroom and at the dressing table placed a wax woman, decidedly en negligee, spreading the table with all of the cosmetic aids he could borrow from a drug store. The only advertisement was a card lettered with the title of the picture, "What No Man Knows," and the sly humor put over the sale better and more quickly than a more elaborate argument could have done.

Another good shot was an open letter to a local trial judge, inviting him to come and bring his friends to get some facts about the peculiarities of a woman's might which help him in his work on the bench.

Cost Ten Dollars Earned Much More

The cut-up puzzle has scored again, this time for the Rivoli Theatre, La Crosse. A 11x14 still of "Experience" was painted up to read:

Rivoli
Three days, starting Jan. 25
"EXPERIENCE" with Richard Barthelmess
A Paramount Picture
La Crosse Tribune Puzzle Contest

This was cut up, jig saw fashion, pasted on an oblong card and taken over to the Tribune with ten dollars and five pairs of seats. The newspaper had the cut made and conducted the contest with five cash and five ticket prizes.

It yielded a lot of advertising for the ten spot, but then it helped the newspaper's circulation, so honors were even.

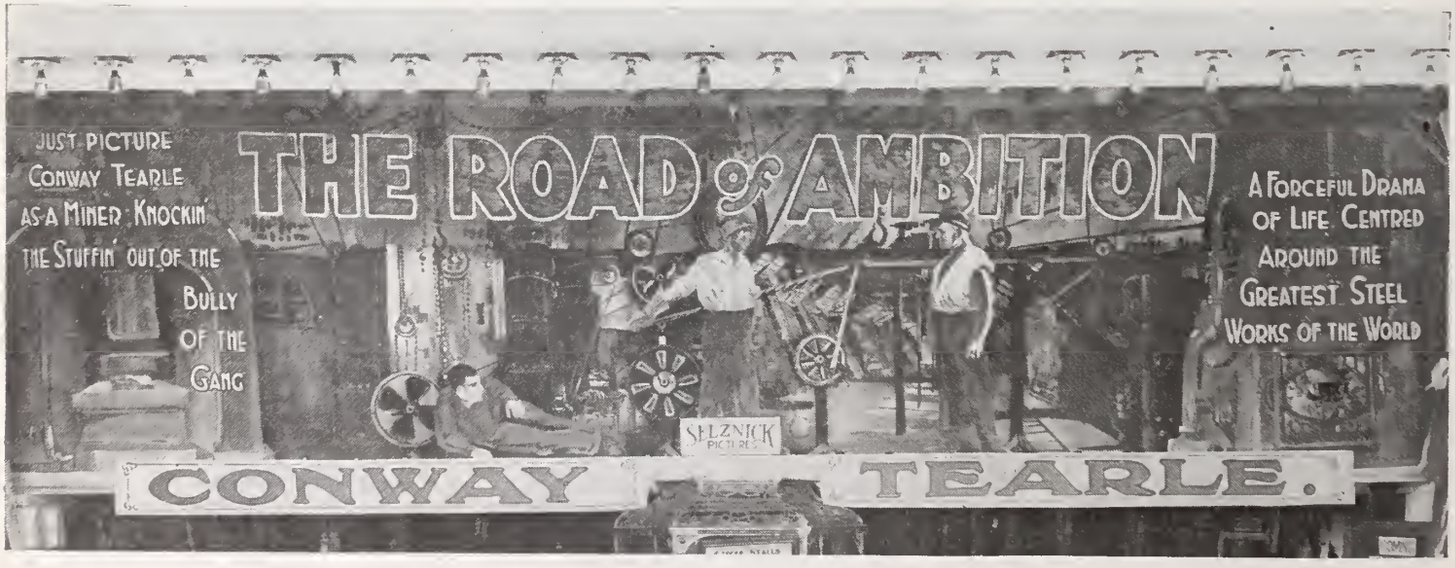
An Animated Display Captured Melbourne

Hoyt's Theatre, Bourke street, Melbourne, is one of the livest exploiteers in Australasia, and we show on this page a typical display from that house on the Selznick production, The Road of Ambition.

A scene in the steel mill was selected for the setting, and elaborately animated. The wheels of the machines in the foreground revolve, the trip hammer to the left works with a metallic clank that can be heard two blocks from the theatre and the men sway toward each other as though about to begin the fist fight suggested by the line "Just picture Conway Tearle knockin' the stuffin' out of the bully of the gang!" A chiffon and light device shows a roaring fire under the boilers, and balances the hammer on the other side.

And this is not an isolated instance of Hoyt activities. The frame is one especially devised for constructing animated displays and forms the foundation of many lobby appeals, though we imagine that few are more pretentious than this elaborate attractor.

It would be interesting to obtain a description of the back of this frame.



JUST PICTURE CONWAY TEARLE AS A MINER KNOCKIN' THE STUFFIN' OUT OF THE BULLY OF THE GANG

AN ANIMATED LOBBY STRIP FROM AUSTRALIA ON SELZNICK'S "THE ROAD OF AMBITION"

This comes from Hoyt's Theatre, Melbourne, and is the most pretentious display yet received from the Antipodes. This is built on a frame designed for just such effects, and motion is given to the men and machinery, with the trip-hammer giving out a clink that can be heard for several blocks and the furnace belching real chiffon fire from the door

Stunt Can Be Worked on Paper or Crockery

Paul Mooney, of the Louis B. Mayer Co., has evolved a two-way stunt for "The Song of Life." Either way it is a winner, and it can also be made to hook up with furnishing stores on dishwashing machines all the way from the tin dishpan to the electrical devices

MOONEY'S PATENT PLATE

It can be printed on paper pie plates and used for distribution or painted on real chinaware and set into windows. In any event it will hit about eighty percent of the feminine patrons just about right, and the women will be certain that the men see the picture, too. Get them and you get all the family. Father may sneak off alone to look at a picture which suggests that it just got by the censors, but when Mother gets an idea that a picure will help her better half, she takes the entire family.

To save you trouble, the text reads: "Every woman just hates dish washing. That's why every woman who sees this picture will hiss in every other woman's ear—'Go and see that movie about the wife who revolted.' A drama of eternal dishes, of mystery and strife. Of woman's discontent and love—and that's The Song of Life."

We think that, as a poet, Mooney is a fine advertising agent, but as he sapiently adds on the plate: "It will get the money."

Essay Contest Helped

"Why is The Conquering Power a great picture?" was the essay stunt sponsored by the Courier-Journal when the Metro picture played at the Riato.

This was a pretty raw appeal in a way, but the paper explained that the question was put "to encourage expression of thought regarding the best films, and the offer of cash prizes is not made with a view to advertising advantage."

Possibly not, but it certainly brought wonderful results on an investment of $25, for it virtually gave the picture the strong editorial endorsement of one of the most influential papers in the state.

Twenty thousand throwaways, distributed by the ushers in the mornings before the house opened, supplemented the wide publicity the newspaper gave the contest.

It was an unusual accomplishment for which the Rialto is to be congratulated.

The Howard Theatre Doubles Its Cutouts

Several times recently we have shown how the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, the chief house of Southern Enterprises, uses lobby displays in the foyer a week in advance of the showing, but nothing has worked better than this display for Mae Murray in the Metro production, "Peacock Alley," which, by the way, was accorded an unusually favorable reception in this house.

In the foyer the previous week the huge vase cutout, with the small figure of the dancer, confronted all patrons as they entered. The following week this, with a companion cutout, were placed either sides of the lobby. These latter vases appear to be smaller, but this is due to the fact that in the lobby they are placed on a slant and are foreshortened.

In addition the lobby carried two cutouts of the dancer, barely discernible in the picture, and a peacock with a spread tail over the box office. On the top row of feathers was lettered "Peacock Alley" and on the next the name of the star. There is such a riot of coloring that the letters can be picked up only with a glass.

Book Design Used for Window Work

A cardboard book, seven feet high, with a red cover and gilt lettering was used as a window display for the First National production of "Star Dust," Fanny Hurst's most sensation story, by the Rivoli Theatre, Portland, Oregon.

THE SEVEN FOOT BOOK

The front is cut out in the shape of a star and backed with one of the lithographs. It would be effective to recess this and light from the back of the book with three or four small globes, or possibly a set of various colors working on a flasher, but the seven foot book alone will gain plenty of attention for the talked about production.

Ibanez vs. Jazz

When the opposition house in Gadsden, Ala., put in The Four Horsemen, A. L. Snell, of the Imperial, hired a jazz band composed of college boys, putting them on for the night show. Then he moved Harold Lloyd in "Never Weaken" above the feature and played to better than usual business instead of taking a loss. The boys were making their jazz band a side line and the six piece orchestra did not cost much.

HOW THE HOWARD THEATRE, ATLANTA, MAKES DOUBLE USE OF "PEACOCK ALLEY" MATERIAL

Several pictures recently have shown how the show house of Southern Enterprises doubled up the material. On the left is a vase which confronted every entering patron the week before the showing of this Mae Murray Metro. On the right is seen the same ornament, with another, in the lobby. Star and title are lettered on the peacock's tail over the box office, but the camera does not show it clearly

Selling the Picture to the Public

DON'T SAY YOU CAN'T EXPLOIT WHEN THIS HOUSE CAN!
The Nelson Theatre, Fairmount, W. Va., is not able to spend a lot on exploitation, but it gets exploitation just the same because it knows that this is the only way to get all the money that a big production can pay a manager

Small Town House Gets Pretentious Lobby Show

Because the Nelson Theatre, Huntington, W. Va., is a small house which cannot afford the money for big exploitation, the management does not lie down on the job. It manages to do it, anyway.

This built up display for "Over the Hill" is home-made, with cutouts from the sheets for figure work because the artist felt it would be better to get good drawing than good perspective. He was not trying to produce a work of art, but to sell a picture, and he did that to the limit. Details are lacking as to the cost, but it is evident that not much money was spent to get a wonderful result.

Department Store Sales Helped by Theodora

Frank Leonard, the Goldwyn exploiter in Buffalo, was drafted to help the Colonial Theatre, Utica, put over the Theodora production, and he helped a lot.

One of the first things he did was to offer two tickets to the girl in each department of a large store who grossed the highest sales. That gave him a chance to splash Theodora all over the place, inside and out, there were cards in the windows, on the doors, on the counters and on the store delivery trucks. About fifty counter cards alone were used. It really brought larger than usual sales, for the papers commented upon the contest and people came out of curiosity and remained to purchase.

Other trucks and a stage line were also bannered, and a pair of seats were offered to anyone bringing in an overcoat. These were later given to the poor. Three of them might have been used to advantage on the Roman citizens who posed on the ballyhoo float with the well wrapped up Empress and her better half.

The telephone call stunt was worked for two days and throwaways in both English and Italian were widely used.

For the Sunday opening the picture was shown in two houses, which helped to increase the word of mouth advertising.

A Student Pre-view

The Fox exchanges are liberal in their art specials, and this enabled the Sigma theatre, Lima, Ohio, to work something new in previews.

Instead of the usual crowd of critics and censors, the pre-view was given the day before the opening to the students in the public schools, a special ten cent ticket being arranged. As several classes were studying the works of Mark Twain at the time, it was easy to interest the principals and to arrange for the attendance of entire classes.

The result was a horde of enthusiastic pluggers who gave the most valuable word-of-mouth advertising.

MAKING ROMAN BOLSHEVISTS A HIT IN UTICA
This was one of the ballyhoos for Theodora, at the Colonial Theatre; and the king had it all over the lower classes when it came to clothes. No wonder Rome fell when they did not give the masses a chance at nice, warm overcoats!

Won Advance Editorial for Theodora Showing

A real achievement was a recent stunt of Fred J. Dolle, of the Alamo Theatre, Louisville.

In advance of the showing of "Theodora," the Times editorially commented upon the coming of the picture and expressed the hope that "it will be accorded the encouragement that will bring emulation," adding that "the best way to dispose of the cheap, the tawdy, the unclean in films is to show appreciation of what is fine and big and beautiful."

For real effect that was worth a full page advertisement on the Goldwyn production, and it cost only effort and diplomacy. Mr. Dolle sold the editor on the idea and received for nothing something he could not purchase.

Peddled in Style

Thomas G. Coleman, of the Strand Theatre, Memphis, put out the money heralds for "Get Rick Quick Wallingford" by dressing his bill peddler in evening clothes, with silk hat and everything.

This man would dash into an office, hand out his bills and rush out again as though his time were worth a million a minute, and he left the recipients of the bills reading them in a receptive frame of mind. It was a personal message from Wallingford.

Mr. Coleman also used the town's letter stunt very successfully, selling business men on the idea of sending their clerks to see the apostle of hustle. It worked as well as it did in Birmingham, and made talk in the offices and stores that brought in more than the salesmen.

"The Son of Wallingford" had played in just before and if Mr. Coleman had it to do all over again he would work harder to tell them this was different.

If the other picture has already played your town, the way to word will be "You have seen 'The Son of Wallingford.' Now see 'Get Rich Quick Wallingford,' by the same author but a smarter story." You can use the same line whether you have the Vitagraph or the Paramount.

Selling the Picture to the Public

Two Part Ballyhoo for "A Connecticut Yankee"

Getting away from the motorcycle knights, the American Theatre, Paterson, used two mounted men to ballyhoo "A Connecticut Yankee" when it played that attraction.

Both men were mounted, the horses being blanketed. One was in correct armor and carried a lance and shield. The other was dressed as "Sir Boss" with a laced coat and a plume in his modern silk hat. He wore trousers, too, of course, but they halted above the knees to show his b.v.d.'s and his socks.

They did not ride together, but would meet each other coming down the street, engage in an altercation and joust, one using his lance and the other the staff he carried. Then they would ride off in opposite directions only to reappear a few blocks away along the main streets.

The little comedy fight did even more to put over the play than the ballyhoo, for it held the attention of the crowd and also conveyed some idea of the humor of the play.

To boom "The Queen of Sheba," the same management contributed a real honest-to-goodness chariot race to the field day of the local Guard regiment. The Armory was large enough to permit two horse chariots to be used and the stunt was a knockout, with a resultant sentiment in favor of the play.

Theodora Took in a Mardi Gras Parade

Mobile is one of the Southern cities still holding to the Mardi Gras celebration, and this gave point to the parade staged by King Brothers when they presented Theodora at their Crown Theatre.

It also made the parade possible, for they were able to borrow some chariots and floats and they put on a street ballyhoo requiring some forty persons and employing a number of horses.

There was no band, but a mounted trumpeter rode ahead and his frequent bugle calls got attention for the turnout, bringing people to their windows and from down the the side streets.

The chief point was the Theodora float in which the daughter of Charles King was enthroned with a retinue of pages and attendants, but there were chariots and slaves carrying banners upon each of which was one of the letters of the title. About a dozen men, taken from the ranks of the unemployed, walked on either side of the pageant distributing handbills for the attraction. The affair was staged by J. W. Hines, who does the construction work for the Mardi Gras.

The house front looked like a dime museum with an excess of paper, including cut outs from two twenty-four sheets, showing the lions, but it helped to bring in the crowds, and for the first time King Brothers were able to stage a profitable run for a week, for Mobile classes as a three day town at best.

Don't Tell Everything Advertised by Phones

Two telephone booths and some wire formed the basis of the lobby display for "Don't Tell Everything" at the Rialto Theatre, Columbus, Ga. W. C. Johnson built the booths and borrowed real telephones from the local company. One showed Elliott Dexter at the phone and this was labeled "Tell Him What You Must, But Don't Tell Everything." The other side showed a cutout Gloria Swanson listening to the revelations. On top of the box office was a cutout of Wallace Reid "listening in." The wires ran from one booth to the other. It might help to have the wires strung so that they appear to enter one ear and pass out of the other. We think that Mr. Johnson's display was a little confusing in that he lettered the lower part of the booths for Nazimova in Camille. It did not look exactly right to see a large "Rudolph Valentino" just below the Dexter cutout.

Another telephone stunt was calling up women asking them if they could keep a secret, saying "Hush. Don't Tell Everything" and hanging up. The idea seemed to take hold and a lot of the women who were stung promptly proceeded to help Johnson out by copying the stunt in an effort to get square with the unknown joker. Johnson sent out only a few of the calls, but the message went over hundreds of wires before the day was out.

Made Triple Appeal on a Lobby Display

Because he advertised "The Girl from God's Country" as "a romance of land, sea and air," C. M. Watson, of the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ga., made a triple display in his lobby. He hung from the ceiling the aeroplane which seems to have been flying around the Southern Enterprises territory. Below he had a platform on which a mechanical automobile ran in circles, while in the center of the track was a toy ship. This was backed by a larger painted cut out ship.

The display was not run continuously, but was worked at intervals. It seemed to attract more attention by working intermittently instead of constantly. The platform was homemade and the use of the toys cost six seats. Many extra tickets were sold in spite of the inclement weather.

Beat the Sheik

John F. Casey, of the Liberty Theatre, Providence, fought "The Sheik" with "Way Down East," using the cardboard walking dolls with very decided success. He writes that they were putting the Griffith production over, but he noticed that one of the featured players in the production was at a drama house, and by announcing a personal appearance on Friday afternoon he played to a packed auditorium on a decidedly off day, and now his matinee record goes to a Friday instead of a Saturday. That's using his head, and it brought the usual cash returns.

Tied to Insurance

E. R. Rogers of the Tivoli, Chattanooga, felt he could use a little extra advertising for A Man's Home, so he tied an insurance agent to the idea that a man's home is not properly protected unless there is insurance to guard against his death. It was worth three tens of extra advertising, and although the Tivoli was not directly mentioned, it helped to back up Mr. Rogers' own space.

Here is an idea good for any house playing this title.

MAKING THEODORA SHOW A PROFIT DOWN IN MOBILE, ALA., FOR THE CROWN THEATRE

On the left is shown the start of a parade requiring the services of forty persons in costume and winding up with a float showing Theodora on her throne. This parade was worked both afternoon and night. The bugler was used to get attention for the parade, which was staged by the man who has charge of the annual Mardi Gras pageant. The other side of the cut shows the house front

"BURN 'EM UP BARNES" HAD A BETTER CAR THAN THIS

But, except for the cycle cops, he did not attract as much attention as did this ballyhoo for the Strand Theatre, Memphis. The boys in the background were carriers for the local paper route, and were guests of the house

Tiny Toddle Car for Burn 'em Up Barnes

The chief exploitation stunt for Burn 'Em Up Barnes at the Strand Theatre, Memphis, was a miniature automobile run through the streets by a professional ballyhoo man. He covered most of the town during the run and his appearance won the laugh that is the essence of ticket selling on a comedy.

Thomas G. Coleman also had 150 oilcloth signs painted up, which were given to the street newsboys with the promise that if they wore them they were good for one admission to the show. That many bannered kids can create a lot of comment in a town the size of Memphis. In addition a special invitation was extended the regular route carriers of the News, and of course the newspaper reciprocated with a write up of the party. The boys carried four strip banners in their march to the theatre.

Used 5,200 Tags

Diamond shaped tags were tied to every auto, lamp post, mail box and store front in the city limits, 5,200 tags being used, and several autos were bannered including a stripped racing car. The best of the news stands were carded.

With very little newspaper work, the attraction was put over for more business than the weather gave Mr. Coleman any right to expect.

An Ornate Display Helped Texas House

Pretentious lobby displays invariably help the pictures they advertise if in no other way than that they suggest that a picture on which so much care has been lavished must be out of the ordinary. It is the same idea as the fancy wrapper for package goods. It does not improve the film, but it does help to sell it.

The Strand Theatre, Waco, Texas., does a line of work strongly suggestive of the displays of O. T. Taylor, and this frame for Norma Talmadge in "The Wonderful Thing" might have been adapted from one of his designs.

It is a cutout from a six sheet set into an ornamental frame consisting of side pillars and a fancy cross piece. Changing the shape of the top and repainting the pillars will permit a variety of designs to be worked out from a comparatively limited supply of material.

It will be noted that the frame is so proportioned as to fit the dimensions of the lobby arch, though it is not set against these pillars, as that would carry the design too far back from the building line.

The top sign appears to be air brush work, though it gives the effect of carved letters.

The lobby is one hundred percent First National, for Ray in "Two Minutes to Go" is the underline and the current comedy is a Mack Sennett. They make a regular art gallery of the place and apparently stick to posters, for no still frames are to be seen.

Rubbered Door Knobs

T. W. Young, Jr., of the Frances Theatre, Dyersburg, Tenn., used door knobs on "Don't Tell Everything," but he made a departure in using rubber bands for the hangers instead of cord. Bands cost a little more than string, but they will grip together, slip on more easily and stay put. A few ounces will equip a lot of hangers.

He also advertised for a woman who would not tell everything, using his screen, and teased with the title in the newspaper.

Threw in the Show

Getting a new angle on "Molly O," the Empress Theatre, Laramie, arranged with the store handling the "Molly O" hats to give one free ticket with each hat purchased, and, of course, the free ticket brought a paid admission, to say nothing of the advertising the store had to give the snow to effect the hook-up.

Got Your P. T. A.?

Gobs Guide Guests

Many of the theatres playing Harold Lloyd in "A Sailor Made Man" have dressed their house staffs in naval uniforms for that engagement, and the idea seems to have pleased.

The Capitol Theatre, St. Paul, dressed its sixteen girls and five men in the bell bottomed trousers and roomy blouses of the gobs, and only two of the sixteen girls rated good conduct stripes. How come?

THIS LOBBY SUGGESTS THE O. T. TAYLOR DESIGNS

It is from the Strand Theatre, Waco, Texas, and was used to advertise Norma Talmadge in First National's "The Wonderful Thing." Such a display cannot but help create a favorable sentiment for the picture it advertises, and it is renewable

Hyman's Christmas Ads Show Unusual Lettering

Edward L. Hyman's ad letterer did an unusually good job on the Christmas ad for the Mark-Strand, Brooklyn. His main title was strong and clear, and the small lettering as cleanly cut as though printed from cast types. It was the best of the Hyman displays in some time and sets a new record even for that house. It is only seventy lines, double, but so well is it displayed that in the page it gives the suggestion of a larger space. This is chiefly because there is less announcement in the space and so there is room for some white to show, and white always gives the suggestion of size. The lower 27 lines look almost as deep as the top 43 because the upper part carries solid text and a cut as well as the signature. This part looks slightly crowded where the lower is neat and open. The feature is given all the display, because it is felt that it is best to sell one thing well and to let the other features ride along with that. Even Larry Semon is not given the usual display because it is felt that on a Christmas bill Jackie Coogan carries the major pull. It must have, for the house did a large matinee business as well as in the evening with the children all out of school and clamoring for amusement.

Folding a Circular Made a Good Teaser

Robbins' Olympic Theatre, Watertown, N. Y., made a useful teaser out of a folder merely through the method of folding. It was a four page sheet, printed on the first and third pages. The first had a ten line "30,000" at the top and below the first third, set diagonally, the additional text, "There are 30,000 people in the beautiful city of Watertown and vicinity who will do exactly the same thing Sunday, December 25, and all the week. Are you with them? Better get in line. They will——." The dash ran clear to the edge of the sheet and indicated a turnover. The third page told that they would all go to the opening of the Olympic, The house also used a neat script invitation for the opening, sending to a selected list of the socially and political elect, with a card good for two admissions. As the opening bill was the Lloyd comedy, "Never Weaken," and one of the versions of "The Little Minister," it was a bill to brag about, especially when backed up by a good musical program. The teaser came from the fact that the circular was so folded that only the 30,000 showed when the slip was removed from its envelope.

Twenty-four Sheet Is Good Lobby Closer

When the Rialto Theatre, Rice Lake, Wis., played "Dangerous Curve Ahead," E. L. Newell, the manager, used a 24-sheet on a movable board to completely close the house entrance when the picture was not showing. Just what he did with it at showing times is not made clear. From the photograph it would seem that the support was a cloth which was rolled up out of the way when it was desired to open the house, and possibly this is a regular feature. It may interest other managers who want to make a big display and who have a house about as wide as the sheet. This is a trifle wider and is lettered on the side to take up the extra space.

A NOVEL IDEA FOR THE DISPLAY OF A TWENTY-FOUR SHEET

Paneled Advertisement Gives a Pretty Effect

Loew's Palace Theatre, Washington, makes an effective use of panels in this display for Agnes Ayres in "The Lane That Had No Turning." Too small a type in the ears spoils some effective copy. These read: "The Nation's Most Beautiful Theatre" and "The Month's Most Popular Picture." That last is a great deal better than "The biggest picture of the season" and similar hook ups. You can stand for its being the most popular picture of the month where the other claim would cover too much ground. The printer has given the display a nice composition. He has played up the lines which need it most and has put a lot of type into the space without making it look too heavy. He does this by keeping down the smaller lines so that they do not overset the star and title. The actual copy for the feature is little more than thirty lines single, but it all gets over. Paneling does not always work as well as this, and heavier rule would have killed this down to almost nothing. It is the light rule work which gives it both charm and distinction, and in this particular form the Washington Post printers seem to lead the country. The majority of printers would use about two point solid rule and make it all look like an obituary notice with the star in a mourning border.

Makes Double Features The Big Week Appeal

Loew's State Theatre, Cleveland, makes a return to the half page spaces to advertise a double feature program, offering ten reels of feature. The space is well displayed, and too much talk is skillfully avoided. It is probable that the regular reading matter covered all the points of the change in policy, and it remained only to put over the titles. The schedule makes clear the showing times, and the patron who wants one of the other of the offerings can pick the most suitable hour for what he may desire to see. We should be sorry to see the State going over to double features permanently, but this may be merely an effort to win back patrons attracted by the opening of another picture house to vaudeville. The best appeal in this display is the fact that a drama and a comedy are offered which make their appeal to the two classes of playgoers. Even the sketches and the lettering carry out the idea, for the drama is given a more sedate letter and the title is illustrated with a half-tone star cut where the comedy has jazz lettering and a breezy line sketch, more in keeping with the subject than the heavier half-tones. Suiting the style of the illustration to the nature of the subject is one of the refinements of advertising, yet it is something which should always be done to get the best results. More than one crisp little comedy has been hurt by having had to carry a ponderous scene cut which does not suggest the light nature of the story, and more than one drama has been sold at a disadvantage because it did not convey in the advertisement the suggestion of its strength. If managers gave more attention to the harmony of their advertising, we believe that they would do a better business, for any business they bring in is that much in addition to the money the story and star will attract without advertising. Each star and, to some extent, each title has a certain value to the box office. This could be counted upon merely through the announcement of the offering. The office of the advertisement is to give the widest publicity to these certainties. If the advertisement can go beyond this and sell the tickets to the men and women who are not attracted by star or story, then advertising is paying a real profit. The star and title can be announced in type and get over. The additional appeal of design and well-written copy pulls in the "velvet."

Makes Full Page Bricks With Very Little Straw

R. D. McKay, of the Strand Theatre, Sydney, N. S., sends in a full and a half page for "Way Down East" and wants us to give them the once over. He adds that he is going to "trouble" us from time to time until he achieves the hundred per cent. advertisement. He will trouble us when he stops, not while he is sending in, because that is what we are here for. It strikes us that Mr. McKay had to do a lot with a very little to do with. Perhaps he did better than he might have done with more cut material at hand, for he has achieved a nice display without overloading the space.

THE SYDNEY FULL PAGE

His half page is even better, for there he uses the three column pumpkin cut, with four of the circular reverses to form a centre panel and very little else. He put the idea over with the full page, which was run on the Thursday before the Monday opening, and ran the half page on Monday instead of Sunday to give him the "today" which is always more definite than "tomorrow." We take it that he used the pull of this page and a half to give him a good reading showing in the Sunday paper. If he did he won a three day showing with two days of large advertisements. In the full page he uses a program cover cut that does not show up. This was made for working on a better grade of paper and it goes into a black and white for news work. It does, however, give him a good reverse title and shows up as well as the two half tones used, but the local paper is not strong on press work and we think it wiser to cut out even coarse screen half-tones in favor of open-line cuts. To offset a lack of cuts, he panels the program. This probably was a makeshift and yet it gives so good a result that we would favor its use even where the cut supply was more generous. With a big production the paneled program gives distinction to a large space. The four small panels in the corners are well done, but most of the selling is achieved in the 24 point used for most of the display. This says enough and not too much or too little. This seems to be intentional and not accidental. Mr. McKay knows how much to write in order to sell his public and he does not overload even where he has an entire page at his command. He knows that the value of the full page is that it permits the use of larger type; not more words. It is a lesson that some persons apparently never learn.

Here Is a Proposition in Advertising Ethics

John W. Creamer, of the Pert Theatre, Gillespie, Ill., sends in some samples of his work, including a two fives for "Our Mutual Friend," and adds that in the copy the panels were marked to go to the left of the space but the printer put them on the right. He wants to know which we think is the better arrangement. Our preference is for the copy as shown, though the printer had no business changing the layout. He is supposed to do as the advertiser tells him and not what he thinks is best. He can suggest a better arrangement, but it is up to the advertiser to assent or dissent. We are educated to do certain things. One of those things is to read from left to right. In a display such as this, the matter on the left gets the greater attention, and in this instance the side head "Could he write?" is a sort of preface to the panel, and should be read first, though we believe that the line opposes the wrong panel and that the bottom box should have been raised to the top or the line dropped to the bottom. The "Could he write?" belongs to the panel starting "He wrote things that were down to earth." It has no bearing upon "The surprise of the year," and so it is out of place. We think that if we had been laying out this display we would have put the lower panel above the upper, and have brought the upper down into the lower left-hand corner, shoving the house signature over to the right. This gives a third, and we think, a better arrangement of the text and provides the display with a better balance. We do not believe that it makes very much difference in a small town. We think the message got over as it was, would have gotten over as it was originally planned and would have sold with the third arrangement. The only point is that the third arrangement would have given a better balanced display and would have brought the four elements of the announcement into a better harmony. We do not feel a very great admiration for that printer, anyhow. In another display he spells January three ways in five trials. He gets it "January" three times and "Junuary" and "Jaunary" once each and speaks of "A mother story that his is the greatest target in all the world." Mr. Creamer has to trust to the weekly paper, for it is all he has, but lately he has cut from three tens to a single ten for the week because he finds that he does not get back the difference in the cost of thirty as against ten in increased attendance. Ten inches sells as well as thirty and he has the good sense to cut down to what will bring him the most money for his investment. That is the trouble with a weekly advertisement, unbacked by a daily issue. It does not last over the week, and the extra money spent might better be put into exploitation or a mid-week throwaway. We think that it would be even better to sell the first two or three days in the newspaper space instead of spreading it over the entire weekly program, playing up the Monday and Tuesday bill and taking merely a line or two for the other four days, and then throwing out paper Wednesday for the remainder of the week. This may not mean a further reduction in the space, for it is necessary to use a certain amount of space to persuade the paper to run the reading notices, and ten inches. probably does not cost more than $2 or $2.50 and it is worth that much to keep the good will of the editor. Apart from that, we think that the cut to ten inches is a good move. Concentrating on the early shows will be still better. Sell the first two days, get them in and you can work the slides for the remainder of the week, but you can't display six shows in any number of inches and get them over the week.

Shea Makes a Change in Sunday Advertisements

After using practically the same display in the Buffalo Sunday papers for something like two years, Harold B. Franklin has made a change in the form of the Saturday-Sunday ads and gets three distinct spaces in which to sell the attractions. The three are 100 lines by eight, with the Criterion getting almost two columns on an upright while the vaudeville house is given a broad white display and the Hippodrome and North Park are combined in a reverse just below. The only thing we do not like about the display is the cutoff between the Criterion and the other two spaces. Its shape makes it so different that the heavy rule design is not needed and a neat double rule would have been better. The same holds good for the border between the vaudeville house and the Hip. It is not needed. The reverse is better than any rule work could possibly be. But this is a first time and we think that Mr. Franklin has already corrected the artist. To see a change in the Shea style is almost like seeing Noah's ark come steaming down the Hudson. It seemed to be a permanency, but we like the new division of the space much better than the old and believe that it will be found more flexible in proportioning space to the value of the attractions at the different houses. It shows up on the page as well as it does in the cut, but we would like to see Mr. Franklin try the effect of a heavier cover line at the top. You will note that a mortise is used for the small type in the reverse ad. You don't catch Mr. Franklin permitting his artist to throw away money with small lettering in the reverse. He knows it does not pay. There is one thing about films. They can't kick at their billing. Look at that vaudeville space with its two headlines and the "added feature," "extra feature" and "special extra attraction." When you have five features and only four fillers, it takes a lot of words to keep them all satisfied. Films can't talk back or leave the bill flat on Monday morning.

Sells Ince Production on a Printed Argument

The Grand Theatre, Topeka, sold the Ince production, "Hail the Woman," on the type argument rather than on title or producer. The two panels shown in the accompanying reproduction are both appeals for the story. That on the left is supposedly written by Ince, and tells how the production went over in Los Angeles at three different tryouts. On the right is the house opinion of the play. This is a six twelves. In a smaller space with much the same layout, but with a different cut to fit the smaller space and with the cast omitted, the text at the left is a reprint from this paper in which the possibility of first running the picture in the drama houses was announced. In this the right-hand panel is given to the same Ince copy used here. This is only a three sixes and was used to follow the original splash, but the same method was employed, since it was felt that by this means the picture could be put over better than through big display lines. It takes a really big picture to live up to this style of advertisement. You must first have something to talk about before you ask a patron to read so many words, but if you have the subject, it will impress if you handle it in this manner. People will feel that so much talk about a production marks a production worthy of being talked about. You can use this treatment only occasionally, but every six months or so you can make a profound impression by abandoning big display lines for the moment and going to type talks. But don't start anything like this unless you are thoroughly sold on the idea yourself. You must first of all be convinced in your own mind that you have a worthy subject or you cannot discuss it in a manner that will be convincing to others. It does not matter whether you are selling pictures or corn-cure. If you give it your personal recommendation you must feel that what you say will be backed up by what you offer. And make a note that sometimes you can make a news item work for you. We do not believe that criticism of out-of-town papers helps much, even if that criticism comes from New York or your own theatrical centre. Few give much credit to criticism. On the other hand a news item is more convincing and carries far greater weight. Look to the news columns for your press material and often you will find something that will sell far better than the most favorable criticism.

Add "Hail the Woman"

Add "Hail the Woman" to the hook-up titles. Greenhalgh, of the Associated Producers' Washington office, dropped down to Richmond and tied-up two pages for the Ince picture at the Bijou Theatre, and you hailed the woman who wore blank corsets or used Dash's bread or John Doe's union suit, and a hotel even hailed the woman tourist. The contest was to form the title as many times as possible from the words in each advertisement, using each letter only once. This ensured a close reading of all the advertisements, which is the argument on which these hook-up pages are generally sold.

THE NEW FORM OF THE SHEA ADS IN BUFFALO

Consensus of Published Reviews

Here are extracts from news available at press hour from publications of the industry boiled down to a sentence. They present the views of Moving Picture World (M.P.W.); Exhibitors' Herald (E.H.); Motion Picture News (N.); Exhibitors' Trade Review (T.R.); Film Daily (F.D.).

Moran of the Lady Letty

(Dorothy Dalton—Paramount—6,360 Feet)

M. P. W.—Distinctive and rousing sea melodrama. There are enough thrills to satisfy the most avid.

T. R.—A real thriller in the nautical line. Registers as a bully melodrama which should make money for the exhibitor.

E. H.—Rugged adventures, finished acting, genuine background and rapid, realistic action lift this high above the crowd.

N.—As good old-fashioned melodrama "Moran of the Lady Letty" is seldom surpassed.

Chasing the Moon

(Tom Mix—Fox—5,092 Feet)

M. P. W.—Tom Mix's activities are accompanied and enhanced by some of the wittiest sub-titles ever written.

N.—Some stunts in this weak effort.

T. R.—The title writer has labored valiantly to lift the subject with a series of comedy captions.

F. D.—Some good stunts but story and comedy is poor.

Julius Caesar

(Anthony Novelli—George Kleine—5,748 Feet)

M. P. W.—Once a masterpiece always a masterpiece—describes George Kleine's film.

F. D.—Splendid production for special and educational showings.

N.—Picture cannot hold the interest at a high pitch throughout. On the other hand, it does offer genuine entertaining incident.

T. R.—This portrayal of the life of the world's greatest military genius has an appeal for every group of spectators.

Billy Jim

(Fred Stone—R-C Pictures—4,900 Feet)

M. P. W.—Mediocre Western.

E. H.—A western drama with no special points of appeal beyond beautiful scenes beautifully photographed.

F. D.—A western of average calibre as far as production is concerned but it lacks the action and thrills usually expected in this type of feature.

T. R.—If there is one thing that stands out above all others in this picture from R-C, it is the beautiful exterior shots of the Canadian Rockies. Does not quite get over.

N.—Hardly suffices to travel feature length.

The Call of Home

(Featured Cast—R. C. Pictures—Six Reels)

M. P. W.—A one scene picture.

T. R.—For a picture of real character it is going to be difficult to find a better one than "The Call of Home."

N.—Well-sustained drama, with excellent flood scenes.

F. D.—Nothing very much to distinguish familiar triangle story.

The Golden Gallows

(Miss DuPont—Universal— 4,808 Feet)

M. P. W.—Weak story and faulty continuity make this Universal feature starring Miss DuPont, below average in interest.

F. D.—The story becomes hackneyed, unconvincing and dry; the director gets careless and allows incomprehensive bits to creep in and his players to do extraordinary things; there is no suspense and the love interest wanes slowly, but surely.

T. R.—Of the late releases starring Miss DuPont, this one is the best one of them all.

N.—Conventional and uninspired.

Boomerang Bill

(Lionel Barrymore—Paramount)

M. P. W.—Entertaining. Retains a decided box office value.

E. H—A man's size production with a bizarre central character made convincingly real by the gifted Lionel Barrymore

N.—As fine a sample of human interest as has been shown in some time.

F. D.—Excellent performance of Barrymore stands out above all else.

T. R.—Lionel Barrymore is seen to good advantage as the star of this crook drama.

Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?

(Featured Cast—Equity)

M. P. W.—In addition to having a title that should prove an excellent box office magnet, this new State right special is in possession of a really splendid human interest story that will not fail to entertain once your patrons are brought inside the house.

T. R.—Has heart interest in abundance, yet it is not of the super-weepy category. The strain of the feelings is lightened at times by situations calling for quiet chuckles rather than laughter.

N.—Frankly "sob stuff" with sure-fire hokum.

F. D.—Old song furnishes excellent title for mother love picture. Theme plus title should make this sure fire.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

A Department for the Information of Exhibitors

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

The box office is the dependable guide for all exhibitors on moving picture productions. In this department your brother exhibitors tell the story of the success or failure of the various releases. Your frank reports on all pictures are solicited for this department. You are helping yourself and others by sending them in. Use the blank printed in this department or, better still, write us that you'd like a free supply of report cards.

Associated Exhibitors

ROAD TO LONDON. Very good program picture, nothing big. Advertising; two newspapers, lobby, sixteen one sheets. Patronage; the best. H. B. Barr, Rialto Theatre, Enid, Oklahoma.

Equity

FORBIDDEN WOMAN. Elegant production, well staged. Lacking story, did not satisfy. Print in poor shape, took an hour and a half to put in shape. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. W. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

First National

BOB HAMPTON OF PLACER. This is the best picture we have shown, from every point of view. In spite of the bad roads we had a full house and they have not stopped talking about it yet. Advertising; one sheet, six sheets, window cards and heralds. Patronage; small town. Attendance; very good. J. F. Schlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, North Carolina.

DINTY. Wesley Barry is a fine actor. He is well liked by both old and young. A very good picture. Advertising; billboard. Attendance; fair. D. D. Purcell, Muse-U Theatre, Cortez, Colorado.

HABIT. A pleasant surprise and patrons all well pleased. Mildred Harris is gaining in popularity here. Advertising; ordinary. Patronage; general. Attendance; fair. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

THE KID. Good comedy. Producer compelled us to buy twelve program pictures to get it. Producer overcharged us on these pictures; never again. If they won't sell you the picture outright, don't take it. Advertising; papers and slide. Patronage; town. Attendance; good. Mrs. J. A. Tranelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

LAST OF THE MOHICANS. Picture did not draw for us. People did not like it and told us so at the door. Some left during the show. Advertising; one three sheet, two sheets, set photos and newspaper. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. Sam Brooks, Liberty Theatre, Hailey, Idaho.

LOVE'S OUTCAST. First Ben Turpin "special." If Mack Sennett himself had anything to do with making this, they ought to bar him from the game. Rotten isn't half strong enough, and it would be an insult to cheese to call it that, and charged for as a "super-special comedy." R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

NOBODY. Good picture, well produced, sensational; no draft, nobody came. Advertising; heavy. Patronage; family. Attendance; fair. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

PECK'S BAD BOY. Best kid picture we ever played and the best drawing card since "The Old Nest." Advertising; six sheet, three sheet, set photos, heralds, slide and newspaper. Patronage; younger class. Attendance; fair. Sam Brooks, Liberty Theatre, Hailey, Idaho.

PLAYTHINGS OF DESTINY. Exceptionally good picture. Everyone pleased. Regret that I did not raise price as it was worth it. Advertising; heralds, one sheets and photos. Patronage; middle class. Attendance; good. F. L. Fox, Tokio Theatre, Morehouse, Missouri.

THE SIGN ON THE DOOR. A picture that will hold your audience from beginning to end. 100 per cent. satisfaction. Advertising; two one sheets, six sheet. Patronage; small town. Attendance; very good. J. F. Schlez, Columbia Theatre, Columbia, North Carolina.

THE SILENT CALL. A sure winner. Book this picture, more favorable comments on this picture than any one we have shown in many a day. Advertising; newspaper, heralds, lobby display. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. Smith & Correll, Portland Theatre, Casselton, North Dakota.

SOWING THE WIND. Very fine picture, above the average and will please very large per cent of woman patronage. Advertising; cards, heralds and newspaper. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. Geo. O. Monroe, Gilbert Theatre, Beatrice, Nebraska.

TWO MINUTES TO GO. Play it up big to school students. Best Ray picture yet. Plenty of action. Advertising; usual. Patronage; better class. Attendance; fair. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

Fox

CHILDREN OF THE NIGHT. A Russell picture always says a good house for us, but his new pictures do not please as much as his older ones where he portrayed the western type. Patronage; middle class. Attendance; fair. M. Oppenheimer, Empire Theatre, New Orleans, Louisiana.

NIGHT HORSEMEN. Good picture. Mix good puller here, but this failed to draw, on account of business depression. Advertising; newspapers, billboards and lobby. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Ray Pfetcher, Isis Theatre, Roseville, Illinois.

PRIMAL LAW. A good program picture, however they should have starred the kid, Frankie Lee, instead of Farnum. Advertising; billboards, handbills, band. Patronage; neighborhood. Attendance; poor. W. L. Landers, Gem Theatre, Batesville, Arkansas.

STRAIGHT FROM SHOULDER. An excellent picture and kept audience in uproar most of the time. Buck Jones improves with every release. Advertising; one sheets, cards, slides. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. John C. Mapes, Knights of Pythias Theatre, Chester, New York.

Goldwyn

CABINET OF DR. CALIGARI. Some will like this, but the greater part will not. Advertising; usual. Patronage; country town. Attendance; fair. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

FOR THOSE WE LOVE. Photography too dark, too many closeups of both Compson and Chaney, did not arrive with our audience. Goldwyn's price was all right, but the picture was just a picture. It takes more than that to make them come in at present. We did not get them in and ran at a loss. Advertising; two column, six inches, two evening papers, full lobby. Patronage; rural town. Attendance; poor. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

OLD SWIMMIN' HOLE. Drew big on a stormy night, and pleased over 90 per cent. Advertising; posters, newspaper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

NORTH WIND'S MALICE. A good picture, drew big crowd for a Minnesota night and at this place, in winter time. Action in the picture was very good, story good. Advertising; newspaper, one sheets, photos and slide. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Ernest M. Cowles, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

WHAT HAPPENED TO ROSA. All about a shop girl trying to get in society to marry a doctor and she succeeds. Children like it, but older people weren't suited. Patronage; all classes. Attendance; fair. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre, Dexter, New York.

Hodkinson

KING SPRUCE. This was my second run on this picture. I would advise all small exhibitors to run good pictures two or three times and still make more money than on cheap six or seven-reel (mostly reels) features. Advertising; one sheet, slides and handbills. Patronage; middle class. Attendance; good. E. H. Haubrook, White Center Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

MAN OF THE FOREST. Cannot fail to please. Book it, if possible. Hodkinson has always sold pictures on their merit. Advertising; newspaper and slides. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Mrs. J. Franelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Metro

THE LITTLE FOOL. This Jack London story is a satisfactory program offering and was enjoyed by my patrons. Advertising; two one sheets and slides. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; fair. Jack Kaplan, Royal Theatre, South Fallsburgh, New York.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

Paramount

AFFAIRS OF ANATOL. A good picture, but rental too high. They get all the profit. If you buy pay only a little more than program price. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. G. S. Bovee, Florence Theatre, Elk Point, South Dakota.

BACK PAY. A splendid production but the action is a trifle slow at times. Six reels would have told the story as well. Advertising; lobby, newspapers, billboards, heralds and organs. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; very good. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre, Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

BEHOLD MY WIFE. Good, very good, but not worth half the money they take away from you for it. Patrons liked it, but didn't have any great run at the box-office and not a soul threw a fit of enthusiasm either during or after the show. Advertising; billboards, newspapers and lobby. Patronage; high class. Attendance; fair. C. A. Pratt, Fox Theatre, Washington, Ia.

THE CALL OF YOUTH. English picture. Poor story and poor acting, pleased no one. Charged us by far too much. Advertising; newspapers and slide. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Mrs. J. B. Franelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

CAPPY RICKS. Good picture. Advertising; big. Patronage; mixed . Attendance; good. E. H. McCarthy, Orpheum Theatre, Fargo, North Dakota.

CONRAD IN QUEST OF HIS YOUTH. Not quite the sort of picture they want Meighan in, although it satisfied most of them . Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte, Michigan.

END OF THE WORLD. A very fine production, except too much cigarette. Advertising; usual. Patronage; regular. Attendance; fair. Geo. C. Poindexter, Broadway Theatre, Hopewell, Virginia.

EXIT THE VAMP. Good picture and star well liked in any picture. Will please 90 per cent. of any audience. Advertising; two newspapers, lobby, sixteen one sheets. H. B. Barr, Rialto Theatre, Enid, Oklahoma.

EXPERIENCE. Excellent picture. Advertising; big. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. E. H. McCarthy, Orpheum Theatre, Fargo, North Dakota.

HUCKLEBERRY FINN. Fair picture, many disappointed with it, film in rotten condition. Advertising; ordinary. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. E. S. French & Son, Memorial Hall, Pine River, Minnesota.

INSIDE THE CUP. The strongest and most appealing picture I have ever played. Pleased everyone. Advertising; program slide, 1 sheets and photos. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. R. S. Moore, Gem Thetere, Snyder, Oklahoma.

JAILBIRD. Good, pleased all. Film was in bad condition. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Thos. L. Haynes, Town Hall Theatre, Old Lyme, Connecticut.

KENTUCKIANS. If I get another one as slow as this one I'll change the name of the theatre to a Pullman car name, and charge sleeper rates. Too slow in development. Monte Blue has by nature too long a face not to allow himself a smile once in a while. Advertising; two papers, two columns, eight inches. Patronage; rural town. Attendance; poor. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

LADIES MUST LIVE. Betty Compson is just as pretty as can be in this. The story is big; no doubt of it. Three of them. You will have to stay awake to get all of it but it is there, and a whale of a picture. Play it, this is something that people should see, has something to it. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

LADIES MUST LIVE. Fair production, lacks pep. Didn't go over, something lacking. Advertising; newspaper, special exploitation, one sheets, three sheets, cards. Patronage; highest class. Attendance; fair. Jno. G. Pierce, Family Theatre, Mahanoy City, Pennsylvania.

OLD FASHIONED BOY. Ray doesn't mean much to me. This is just an ordinary Ray picture. They're all alike. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. L. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, California.

ONE A MINUTE. Fine comedy-drama, lots of pep and good sub-titles, the kind of picture that pleases my patrons. Business bad on account of weather. Advertising; ones, threes, sixes, photos, newspaper. Patronage; mixed. H. D. Wharton, Pastime Theatre, Warren, Arkansas.

PRINCESS OF NEW YORK. Another dark brown pill to swallow on a foreign made picture. Such pictures dissatisfy my patrons. Advertising; sixteen one sheets, two newspapers, lobby. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; poor. H. B. Barr, Rialto Theatre, Enid, Oklahoma.

RENT FREE. Very good picture. Star, Lila Lee, not the woman to play opposite Wallace Reid. Advertising; three 24 sheets, two newspapers, lobby. Patronage; the best. Attendance; good. H. B. Barr, Rialto Theatre, Enid, Oklahoma.

SEA WOLF. A wonderful production with a plot that will be remembered for some time. One hundred per cent. satisfaction. Advertising; program, newspapers, six sheets, ones, photos and slides. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Al. V. Bothner, Majestic Theatre, Troy, New York.

THE SHEIK. Detail, settings, photography and all that make a fine production were incorporated. Pleased. Advertising; like a circus. Patronage; better class. Attendance; good. K. H. Sink, Wayne Theatre, Greenville, Ohio.

THE SHEIK. Satisfaction both ways, exhibitor and audience. One of the best we have played, but not a huge financial success; increased the price ten cents, but rural towns have not the money to spend. This picture is much milder than the novel and Famous Players deserve credit or rather the director does, for this. The "flappers" and the "needle and nod club" were a little disappointed. Attendance; fair. Columbia Theatre, Columbia, Indiana.

THE SHEIK. With Agnes Ayres and Rudolph Valentino, the biggest picture I have run in eight months. Made more good money on it than any picture I ever ran. It sure is a box-office knockout, and picture is there to back up all you say. Attendance; capacity. W. F. Harding, Princess Theatre, Mt. Doro, Florida.

SINS OF ROSANNE. Pleased a poor crowd. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. S. Hables, Reel Joy Theatre, King City, Calif.

TOO MUCH SPEED. A knockout from any angle. Theo. Roberts runs away with show. Whole cast and everything about it good. Another proof that they can make good ones clean. Patronage; small town. Attendance; capacity. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

THREE WORD BRAND. A real Hart production and one of his best. He is well liked here. Advertising; usual. Patronage; regular. Attendance; good. Geo. C. Poindexter, Broadway Theatre, Hopewell, Virginia.

WHAT'S YOUR HURRY. Well liked, a picture that any class will take to. Advertising; posters, one sheets. Patronage; general. Attendance; good. R. Mason Hall, Grand Theatre, North Fork, West Virginia.

THE WHISTLE. A picture that is strong enough on its dramatic merits to be good. Gives Hart a chance to show that he can act without chaps and a gun. Will disappoint only those that expect to see Hart in his customary role of bad man. Advertising; regular posters, star draws here. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; better than average. O. V. Drew, Acme Theatre, Vinal Haven, Maine.

WOMAN GOD CHANGED. Good picture and will please if you make them see it from beginning. I started 7:30 p. m. with comedy, started feature 8 p. m., only one show, which is new way for my patrons. Advertising; advertised big. Patronage; small town. Attendance; capacity. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

Pathe

HALF A CHANCE. I keep a list of all the pictures that have made good in the big downtown houses, when the price gets within my reach I book the picture no matter how old and I always pack my theatre. Have been in the game for years. I don't pay all my money to the film exchanges. Patronage; middle class. Attendance; good. E. H. Haubrook, White Centre Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

Realart

FIRST LOVE. Picture very good. Star, Constance Binney, well liked; business top notch, film in good condition. Advertising; billed heavy. Patronage; family. Attendance; very good. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre, Quincy, Illinois.

THE FURNACE. Exceptionally good picture, rental at fair price. Advertising; newspapers and slide. Patronage; town. Attendance; fair. Mrs. J. B. Fravelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

THE BELOVED VILLAIN. One of the best comedy-dramas we have ever run. Wanda Hawley's pictures are all good. Advertising; photos and one sheets. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. but no fault of the picture. E. A. Oestern, Oestern Theatre, Harper's Ferry, Iowa.

TWO WEEKS WITH PAY. Excellent, just comedy enough in this to make it a dandy little picture. Pleased 100 per cent. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. E. E. Corr, Princess Theatre, Thompson, Iowa.

R-C

AT THE STAGE DOOR. Good. Pleased 100 per cent. Advertising; newspapers. posters, usual display. Patronage; good. Attendance; fair. Elk Theatre, Longview. Texas.

STING OF THE LASH. We can commend this feature very highly; you have all run bigger, but not better; the star's work carries the picture along to a satisfactory climax. Patrons' comments were favorable in the extreme and we are glad to have run this feature. Advertising; two column six inch, two papers, fully lobby. Patronage; rural town. Attendance; fair. Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

Straight from the Shoulder Reports

STING OF THE LASH. Pauline Frederick a winner. This subject very good, can be run as a special. Advertising; sixes, threes, one slide. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Walter Albers, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Selznick

THE DAUGHTER PAYS. A very good picture and pleased nearly all my patrons. Advertising; one sheets, cards, slides. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. John C. Mapes, K. of P. Theatre, Chester, New York.

THE FIGHTER. Good picture, marred by poor engine wreck scene, after being worked up good. Patronage; family. Attendance; fair. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre, Decorah, Iowa.

UP THE ROAD WITH SALLIE. Second time I have played this picture and did more business this time than before. A very pleasing comedy-drama. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

United Artists

DREAM STREET. Well handled, in ten reels, but nothing spectacular. Cast was fine. Advertising; followed "Way Down East." Patronage; best. Attendance; bad, hard rain both days. Geo. B. Hendrickson, Liberty Theatre, Darlington, South Carolina.

THREE MUSKETEERS. A real special. Fairbanks does more acting than usual and still plenty of stunts. Plot well developed, interest sustained and plenty of comedy throughout. Advertising; as usual. Patronage; college students. Attendance; packed 'em in. E. W. Large, Strand Theatre, Ithaca, New York.

Universal

ACTION. One of the best little westerns, Universal is doing the right thing by exhibitors. Stuffed lions on bill got a good round of applause. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre, Pearl City, Illinois.

BRAND OF COURAGE. Universal westerns sure do pull 'em in. A blizzard did not stop them. Advertising; sixes, threes, ones. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Walter Albers, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

CONFLICT. Very good and gave good satisfaction. Log scene is great. Advertising; newspaper and handbills. Patronage; mixed, 3,500 population. Attendance; good. S. R. Peake, Pastime Theatre, Maquoketa, Iowa.

NO WOMAN KNOWS. We believe all our patrons enjoyed this production. The acting of Miss Scott received many favorable comments. Advertising; billboards, newspapers, lobby. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. Ray Pfetcher, Isis Theatre, Roseville, Illinois.

REPUTATION. Personally I thought this a very fine production. Patrons all pleased, but business bad due to depression. Advertising; lobby and programs. Patronage; family. Attendance; poor. James J. Christie, Third Avenue Theatre, Watervliet, New York.

THE UNKNOWN WIFE. Universal does make a good one once in a while and this one surprised me as well as the audience, for the story is good and has a real punch in it. The photography is terribly dark, as usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; poor. Princess Theatre, Thompson, Iowa.

THE WALLOP. A little better than the average Harry Carey, but that's not saying much. His program pictures would make poor two reelers. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. E. E. Corr, Princess Theatre, Thompson, Iowa.

Vitagraph

COURAGE OF MARGE O'DOONE. An excellent production from every angle, should be run as special; pleased 100 per cent. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. W. F. Pease, Centennial Theatre, Lowell, Wisconsin.

A DAUGHTER'S STRANGE INHERITANCE. An old Norma Talmadge that should have been on the dump ten years ago. There ought to be a law whereby we could send an exchange manager to the chain gang for life in Panama during the dry season for bunking us with anything like this. Must be ten years old. Exchange said it was one of Norma's stepping stones to success. It's a wonder she didn't slip and break her neck on this one. Wm. E. Tragsdorf, Trag's Theatre, Neillsville, Wisconsin.

STEELHEART. A pleasing western, plenty of thrills and action. Seemed to please everyone; good story. Advertising; newspapers, posters, slide, special display board with stills. Patronage; mixed. Attendance; good. Jno. W. Creamer, Pert Theatre, Gillespie, Illinois.

Comedies

DYNAMITE (Educational). A first class comedy that kept house in uproar. A good comedy will draw as well as many features. Advertising; posters, newspaper. Patronage; small town. Attendance; good. A. La Valla, Community Theatre, Bethel, Connecticut.

SQUIRREL FOOD (Federated). A dandy, good comedy. A lot of new stunts and Monte Banks is real good. Advertising; regular. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. A. L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

WEDDING BELLS (Educational). About the average Educational. So silly people left the house disgusted. Why put out such pictures? Advertising; one sheet. Attendance; good. Sam Brooks, Liberty Theatre, Hailey, Idaho.

State Rights

OUT OF THE DEPTHS (Pioneer). Medium fair picture, but seemed to please all. Advertising; usual. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. J. F. Pruett, Liberty Theatre, Roanoke, Alabama.

Serials

THUNDERBOLT JACK (Federated). Starts like a typhoon, takes their breath in the first 100 feet and they are lost to themselves to the end of first episode. Looks like a winner. Advertising; special. Patronage; small town. Attendance; fair. A L. Middleton, Grand Theatre, DeQueen, Arkansas.

WINNERS OF THE WEST (Universal). On the second episode, business good. The second episode went extra good. Looks as if it was young to be a winner. Advise any one booking this serial to run the first and second episode together, as the second episode has lots of Indians in it, and good Indian fights went big. Wm. Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

"Penrod"

Wesley Barry Is the Ideal Hero of Booth Tarkington's Boy Stories.

Reviewed by Marguerite Kemp.

Wesley Barry, as the hero of Booth Tarkington's famous and delightful boy stories, has brought "Penrod" to life, the Penrod the author had in mind when he wrote the book. Mr. Tarkington can find no fault with the way his book has been handled, and, on the other hand, Mr. Neilan can thank Mr. Tarkington for the excellent screen material in the book. Then both can take off their hats to the freckled Wesley for his excellent portrayal of a real American boy. The combination of these features promises a positive and unusually gratifying box office success for any exhibitor. It is a First National release.

The picture is a series of incidents in the life of Penrod Schofield, an ordinary boy who may be found in any home in any town of average population, bringing out his moods, his intricate means of amusement—in short, the psychology of the twelve-year-old boy. High lights of the production are Penrod's tragic dancing lesson, as he suffers from prickly heat and a dash of strawberry itch, a circus ground-food orgy, a tar fight in which a dozen youngsters participate, and the pageant which Penrod ruins by his frantic yearning for real masculine attire and his manhandling of the "Childe Sir Launcelot." Another hit is the Great Show, organized by Penrod, featuring Herman and Verman, as the wild tattoed men, and the placid daschund, billed as the "South American Dog, part alligator."

The cast includes a score of children who do their bits remarkably well, either as members of the select dancing class, or dancing the shimmie as taught by the Vamp. With so many lovely little girls available for training, it is too bad Mr. Neilan strikes the only discordant note of the picture by casting Clara Horton as the amber-curled Marjorie Jones, for she is undeniably an older girl conscientiously trying to act childish and slightly overdoing it. The adult members of the cast have been well chosen, and form a typical family with which a misunderstood little boy must grimly contend.

Penrod is good stuff, not the sob stuff of many children pictures, but a real he-boy picture, well acted, and splendidly directed.

The Cast

Mr. Schofield.....Tully Marshall
Mrs. Schofield.....Claire McDowell
Margaret Schofield.....Marjorie Daw
Robert Williams.....John Harron
Marjorie Jones.....Clara Horton
The Vamp.....Lena Baskett

Story by Booth Tarkington.
Scenario by Lucita Squier.
Directed by Marshall Neilan.
Length, 8,037 Feet.

The Story

Penrod Schofield is the president of the American Boys' Protective Association, Local 101, which meets every week to report the wrongs inflicted by disrespectful parents, unkind neighbors and thoughtless policemen. After a hectic summer enlivened by a tar fight and the organization of a Great Show, and whose suffering moments include a cotillion, a pageant, and a feverish acquaintance with a Third Street bully, the boys capture a pair of bank robbers, thereby coming into their own as honored, respected members of the community. Incidentally Penrod becomes the hero of his adored Marjorie Jones.

"'Twas Ever Thus"

The only thing that isn't amusing or understandable about this two-reel Christie Comedy for Educational release is the title. Viora Daniel is featured and rightly so, for her work is of the best. The fun starts when a will decrees that the girl must marry a distant cousin she hasn't met. She revolts and fixes herself up like an old maid to discourage him, only to discover he is an extremely likable chap. When he leaves in disgust, she pursues him. He, having seen her only as a spectacled vamp, for protection acquires a "wife" in the person of a cowboy on his ranch. Then he falls in love with her, but the cowboys won't let up on the joke until a fight reveals the "wife" as most masculine. —S. S.

Official Movie Chat 4

Travel, industry, sports and pastimes, and a good many other subjects go to make up the pictures of this film. The travel scenes take the spectator to Russia, and some of the smaller countries that have been carved out of the former empire of the Czars.

Work in the coal mines of Pennsylvania is shown in the industrial films. One of the features of these is the unusual way coal is loaded into ships at some steamship docks.

High diving into water and into snowbanks are shown among the films picturing sports. —T. S. daP.

"The Broadway Peacock"

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

Pearl White's performance in "The Broadway Peacock" unfortunately has a certain bizarre style that tends to cheapen any effort at serious drama. The love affair of a cabaret queen and a society man is the story which assumes triangular proportions when the poor little protegee of the dancer unconsciously attracts the young aristocrat. Then an unpleasant vindictive scene of a familiar aspect takes place and is followed by repentance and self-sacrifice on the part of the star. Miss White's make up and costumes show a lack of refined taste and if she were more conservative in the love scenes, the effect would be improved.

By far the most enjoyable feature is Doris Eaton. She has only a small role, but is so appealing and sincere, and so successful in her mode of dress that she should make a certain hit.

The Cast

Myrtle May.....Pearl White
Harold Van Tassel.....Joseph Stryker
Rose Ingraham.....Doris Eaton
Jerry Gibson.....Harry Southard
Mrs. Van Tassel.....Elizabeth Garrison

Story and Scenario by Julia Tolsva.
Direction by Charles J. Brabin.
Length, 4,380 Feet.

The Story

Despite the warning of Maude Ranger, a "gold-digger," the cabaret girl becomes madly infatuated with a wealthy young aristocrat, whose mother would have fainted at the very thought of her blue-blooded son even speaking to a girl like Myrtle. Events follow one another rapidly, with Myrtle trying desperately to enmesh the handsome young millionaire. Though distinctly a fitting mate for the young man, Myrtle fails of her purpose because of the antagonistic efforts of the mother's lawyer. Desperate, Myrtle casts aside the instincts of her better nature and becomes a veritable tigress, thirsting for revenge, but repents in time to save her lover's happiness.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

It Was Her First Big Act of Unselfishness, the Time She Took the Poor Orphan Into Her Home—She Did Not Foresee That Her Own Love Affair Was Going to Be a Tragedy—and She Had to Face the Acid Test.

Exploitation Angles: Give it all to Miss White and she will carry it for you, but tell the high lights of the story without indicating the working out, to get interest.

A Vanishing Race

The American Indian, living under civilized rule, but keeping to many of his practices and modes of living of his immemorial past, is shown in this interesting Kineto Review, No. 145. He is shown still hunting and fishing as when he roamed all America at will, and his dress is hardly less picturesque than then. There are also glimpses of Indian family life, with the stolid squaws carrying their tightly swaddled papooses on their backs.

Homes of the Pueblo Indians in New Mexico are also shown. The pictures illustrate their superior culture and industry to the Northern tribes. They are seen cooking, and making baskets in the same ways their antecedents did, still untouched by the white civilization that has thronged around them.—T. S. daP.

"A Doll's House"

The Slamming of a Door That Was Heard Around the World Now On Screen—Nazimova the Star.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

For her first independent production Nazimova chose to present a filmization of Ibsen's famous feminist drama, "A Doll's House." The Scandinavian dramatist wrote the play some forty years ago and the leading role of Nora has been used as a stage vehicle by many stars, including Nazimova, herself, who met with unqualified success in the role not many years past. Her reappearance as Nora on the screen in a picturization of the noted play presents fine box-office possibilities. "A Doll's House" is released by United Artists. Ibsen enthusiasts and those interested in the presentation of Ibsen in this country will surely respond to an announcement of "A Doll's House" presentation.

When Ibsen wrote the words: "The sound of a door is heard from below" as the finishing touch to his now famous drama he made a phrase the echo of which has been heard 'round the world and laid the sound cornerstone of an idea that has developed in the last forty years into the present day status of woman in the home, in the business world, in politics and in the nation's life in general. It marked the first step in the emancipation of woman, in a manner of speaking, and was used as a premise in the feminist movement. It presented an argument that woman was not just a plaything for some man. All of which has contributed unusually wide fame to the drama and its title.

Being purely a psychological drama of the deepest sort, it naturally presented difficulties in screen transcription. The exposition of a psychological problem by visual means is the most difficult thing to be attempted on the screen, and still keep the original in some form intact. It can be said that the producers have done better than could be expected, principally from the standpoint that they have taken no great liberties with the text, and keeping in mind especially that the ending has not been changed. The picture is a screen version of the play in the full sense of the word, and if there are moments that seem to release the tension of the spectator's interest it is no fault of the makers of the film. But the only persons that will allow their attention to sag are those who are not familiar with the play through the stage version or having read it. The others will take enjoyment in filling in the gaps for themselves.

The most prominent quality the film contains is the acting of the cast. Headed by Nazimova, who gives a performance that is an exact visual conception of the Nora that Ibsen intended, it contributes work that is marked with excellence, both in technique and appearance. Another estimable quality the picture embraces is its atmosphere. Charles Bryant is responsible for the direction and he should be most highly commended for his part in the production. The latter portions of the picture are so interesting that they more than make up for the long stretches of absolutely necessary character exposition that appear in the initial stages, and when the crucial moment comes into Nora's life Nazimova does such fine work that she is pardoned for her previous over-flapperishness. And it should be kept in mind that she is attempting the impossible in these portions of the drama. No exact idea of Nora's character at that time in her hectic life may be presented without the spoken word.

The Cast

Torvald Helmer.....Alan Hale
Nora, his wife.....Nazimova
Dr. Rank.....Nigel De Brulier
Anna, a nurse.....Elinor Oliver
Nils Krogstad.....Wedgwood Nowell
Ellen, a maid.....Cara Lee
Mrs. Linden..... Florence Fisher
Ivar.....Phillippe De Lacy
Emmy ..... Barbara Maier

Adapted from Henrik Ibsen's Play.
Scenario by Peter M. Winters.
Directed by Charles Bryant.
Length, 7,000 Feet.

The Story

The celebrated dramatist made use of the title to indicate the character of Nora, the doll-daughter of a man who believed that every woman should be subservient in all ways to her father, and the doll-like child-wife of a man who believes that a husband's every wish and whim should be as law to his wife.

Brought up in this atmosphere Nora finds no difficulty in moulding herself, or allowing herself to be moulded, as her husband might wish. But when the great crisis in her life forced her to depend upon herself, to use her own initiative, she found herself liable to the criminal law in meeting the situation. Then when exposure comes, and her illusions as to her husband are shattered and scattered to the four winds, she finds that the ideals she had built up around him are all false when she learns that he turns against her even though she acted only to save his life, the shock is such that she sees all the error in her upbringing, sees that she has lived the life of a doll-wife; that she has been rearing her own children as doll-children, satisfied merely in dressing them prettily and keeping them physically happy.

Then she realizes that she has been cheated of the right that Ibsen maintains is that of every woman—the right to be educated that her own individuality may have an opportunity of expression; that she may develop her own personality along lines her conscience may dictate. And she leaves the house of her husband, slamming the door.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

She Committed a Crime to Save Her Husband's Life, Her Only Reward Being the Bitter Denunciation When Exposure Came. But Out of It All There Came Her Awakening to the Supreme Duty That Every Woman Owes to Herself.

Exploitation Angles: Nazimova in one of the greatest of her stage characterizations should be self-selling, requiring only ample announcement. Make an extra drive on high schools and literary clubs, and try for a book hook-up. Everyman's library offers the cheapest edition.

"The Splendid Lie"

Grace Davison, the Attractive Feature of Arrow Production.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

Due to a trite story, developed without any mark of distinction, much of this picture's success depends upon the star's personal appeal. The director and photographer have featured her most attractively and for those who are not moved by her role, which is almost certain to command sympathy anywhere, she is sure to have a great personal appeal.

She is seen as one of those sweet, self-sacrificing souls, hated by all members of her sex, but loved, and ofttimes insulted by men. Her true friend is her grandfather who goes to prison for her and fails to receive the money which she is sending because of the evil-interference of a step son. The introduction of the hero is somewhat delayed, but when he does appear in the person of Jere Austin, he is a more than welcome figure, as he breaks the monotony of the girl's unhappiness. The subtitles, quotations from various poets, show considerable care and ambition.

Length, 5,500 Feet.

The Story

Doris Delafield, on a vacation, receives much attention from a young man who calls himself Francis Trainor. She learns, however, from his wife, that he is Dean De Witt, and further that her name is to be used as co-respondent in the divorce suit which is to follow immediately, without giving Doris a chance to explain. She is shunned by all her friends and loses her position, but finds a real friend in Jere Austin, a banker, who gives her a position as secretary to a wealthy woman. The stain on her name is eventually cleared up and with Austin's proposal, she awaits a happier fate.

"Tracked to Earth"

Universal Feature Starring Frank Mayo Is Entertaining But Lacks Plausibility.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

Spectators who are not over-particular regarding the plausibility of a picture-story will probably get considerable entertainment out of "Tracked to Earth," Universal's latest feature, starring Frank Mayo. The theme deals with a man unjustly accused of horse stealing, who finding it impossible not to leave a trail over the sandy wastes, hides in the sand with only his head exposed. He conceals his presence by holding a weed in his mouth, but is finally discovered by the girl in the case.

The story as to how this supposed horse thief, who comes near being lynched, turns out to be a big railroad official, has been stretched out into a five-reeler, with consequent excess footage, much of it being devoted to scenes where the hero is hiding in the sand, to which he even returns in the hope that the girl will return.

An attractive feature of the production is a number of well-photographed sand scenes. Frank Mayo fits the role of the hero, while Virginia Valli gives a good performance.

The Cast

Charles Cranner.....Frank Mayo
Anna Jones.....Virginia Valli
Dick Jones.....Harold Goodwin
Stub Lou.....Duke R. Lee
Shorty Fuller.....Buck Conners
Big Bill.....Arthur Millett
Meenie Wade.....Lon Poff
Zed White.....Percy Challenger

Story by W. J. Neidig.
Scenario by Wallace Clifton.
Directed by William Worthington.
Photographed by Leland Lancaster.
Length, 4,477 Feet.

The Story

Cranner, caught riding a branded horse, is arrested for horse stealing. He escapes by diging a hole through the wall of the building in which he is confined, and hides by burying all but his head in the desert sand. Anna Jones' dog discovers him, but loath to deliver him to the posse, she provides a horse so that he can get away. He remains, however, in the hope of seeing her again. The plan works. He then goes away, but returns later. While in her home the posse comes to the house and he is about to be captured when the sheriff arrives, arrests the real horse thieves and reveals Cranner's real identity. In the meantime, he has succeeded in winning the girl, even though she believed him to be a horse thief.

"Back Pay"

Seena Owen Superb As the Girl With the Crepe de Chine Soul—Paramount Picture Made by Cosmopolitan.

Reviewed by Fritz Tidden.

Fannie Hurst's widely popular short story, "Back Pay," has made a picture of the type that has always been successful with general audiences. That is not to say it is like anything else that has been presented before, but its kind of entertainment follows closely many films that exhibitors have found profitable, and appealing to their clientele. It pulls the heart-strings, it tells a story of the sort that the average picturegoer likes and it points a moral without the appearance of preaching at the onlooker. It is hyper-sentimental in spots, but there are many who like their pictures that way.

But the story, "Back Pay," did not just change itself into a picture by some sort of magic. In picture form it exhibits great care and patience on the part of those effecting the translation, especially on the part of Frank Borzage, who at all times performs his work with that always welcome quality, good taste. Francis Marion has written a script that lays a firm foundation for Borzage's work. The heartrending sentimental scenes in some parts of the progress of the story seem to have been slightly overstressed, but when the picture was seen for review there was apparent sniffling and sometimes audible weeping from some of the audience, so the picture was evidently greatly enjoyed.

Without a competent characterization of the "woman with the crepe de chine soul," "Back Pay" would appear as nothing but a piece of sentimental tosh. It is a most difficult role to keep from being maudlin and to put across with the same result that Miss Hurst did in the original story. Seena Owen was entrusted with the character. The result of her work is a remarkably fine characterization, done with a touch of artistry that is superb and always with restraint and realism. The other members of the cast have been chosen with utmost discrimination and their efforts are gratifying, especially Matt Moore in the role of the country youth and J. Barney Sherry as the millionaire. However, outside of the cast, the most prominent feature of the production is the constant good taste.

The Cast

Hester Bevins.....Seena Owen
Jerry Newcombe, her sweetheart.....
..... Matt Moore
Charles G. Wheeler, a millionaire.....
.....J. Barney Sherry
Kitty ..... Ethel Duray
"Speed" ..... Charles Craig
Thomas Craig.....Jerry Sinclair

Adapted from Fannie Hurst's Story.
Scenario by Frances Marion.
Directed by Frank Borzage.
Length, 6,460 Feet.

The Story

The girl who, to use Miss Hurst's brisk style, has a "crepe de chine soul," cannot bring herself to marry the man she loves and settle down to a humdrum small town life and decides to seek a better lot in New York. Here she falls in with a fast set, satisfies her desire for "crepe de chine," but finds that love is not part of her lot. The country boy goes to war, is awarded a medal for distinguished service and is brought home to die. Her love for him asserts itself and she decides to marry him to make his last hours happy. Then comes the test, when he does die—a life of service or a life of luxury and excitement. She chooses the former and is far happier.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

The Career of a Girl With a Crepe de Chine Soul, Who Went to New York to Get Her "Back Pay" for the Life She Thought She Had Missed. Come and See Her Collect! With Interest! And Then—the Heart Stirring Things That Taught Her What Life Really Is!

Exploitation Angles: Hang this on Miss Hurst, using the players to supplement the appeal of "By the author of Humoresque."

"Glass Houses"

Metro Picture Is Viola Dana at Her Best—A Sufficient Recommendation.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

Viola Dana has something quite to her taste, and it is likely quite to the public's taste, in "Glass Houses." She has an interesting chance to do a character accented with her well-known brand of buffoonery, in addition to a straight role with her equally well-known charm as an ingenue. Not a double role, but a double personality makes this possible in this comedy of purposes and pranks, in which a society girl turns governess to a young man, because she needs the money. Her attempts to appear serious and proper have been smirkingly interpreted by Miss Dana in a remarkably clever way, the more amusing because it puts her own individual stamp on a role that has been often done. This is an important fact and should be earnestly impressed upon the public—that this feature is typical of Viola Dana at her best, and hence, very entertaining.

The story, continuity and direction are examples of adroit workmanship. The final situation, and the funniest, when the newly-wedded pair start pursuing each other about town—the husband, convinced that his wife is a famous crook in disguise, and the bride, equally sure that her husband is insane, both being really innocent—is one of those sure-fire shots that will get everybody. But why has it been titled "Glass Houses"?

The Cast

Joy Duval.....Viola Dana
Billy Norton.....Gaston Glass
Aunt Harriet.....Mayme Kelso
Cicily Duval.....Helen Lynch
Mrs. Vicky.....Claire Du Brey
Orville King.....Ellsworth Gage
The Lawyer.....John Steppling

Story by Clara Genevieve Kennedy.
Scenario by Edith Kennedy.
Direction by Harry Beaumont.
Length, 5 Reels.

The Story

Joy Duval looks for a job for the first time, and gets an unusual one, in being placed as mentor to a young man just out of college. Billy, the young man, steals out one night and is locked out and forced to spend the night in the garage. Joy happens to be out, too, and unaware of Billy's presence, spends the night in the garage also. In the morning, as they enter the house, Billy's aunt takes it for granted they are married and refuses to hear any contradictions. They get married. Billy has reason to believe that the girl is a famous crook, but when he tries to reform her, she fears he is deranged. Just when it gets very much involved, the real lady crook comes upon the scene, and all is serene.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

She Stole Her Own Family's Jewels for Safe Keeping—Her Husband Misunderstood and Feared He Had Married "Angel-Face Ann"—He Tried to Reform Her—She Concluded He Had Gone Insane—the Result Is a Delicious Comedy.

Exploitation Angles: Sell Miss Dana in a role for which she might have been measured. This star sells almost entirely upon her personality, so play that up. Tell what the character is, rather than what the story tells.

"Polly of the Follies"

Constance Talmadge Frolics In Her Usual Entertaining Style.

Reviewed by C. Walter McCarty.

Supported by a talented cast and equipped with a full measure of that physical enthusiasm that has won for her a warm spot in the hearts of countless movie fans, Constance Talmadge, in her latest picture, "Polly of the Follies," puts over some delightful and clever comedy, which is amazingly entertaining. The picture, which goes to Mr. Ziegfeld's well-known institution for its title, tells a story that is a mixture of "Pollyanna" and the feminine version of Horatio Alger, Jr.

The plot development is not—perhaps wasn't meant to be—without some improbabilities, amounting to inconsistencies as usually gauged by strict dramatic rules, but it is uncommonly diverting and entertaining. The story, briefly, concerns a small town girl, thought by the bigoted inhabitants of the community to be "good for nothing," who makes good in Mr. Ziegfeld's production, only to be fired the first night for jumping off the stage to greet her younger brother and a village friend. Of course, love with a very wealthy young man, who is Kenneth Harlan, has entered her life and she takes refuge from the wrath of Mr. Ziegfeld in the young man's arms. Some of the scenes were staged on the roof garden where Mr. Ziegfeld presents his "Midnight Frolics" and these scenes were well handled.

An interlude of the forepart of the picture, in which the vivacious Polly, aided by a few jovial town spirits, gives a show in her uncle's store for a swarm of children, is one of the cleverest bits that has been seen on the screen for some time. So, also, is another eccentric act, mock heroic in tone, which narrates the historical visit of Cleopatra of Egypt to Julius Caesar.

John Emerson and Anita Loos are responsible for the picture, which is done in their usual light and airy fashion (First National).

The Cast

Polly Meacham.....Constance Talmadge
Silas Meacham.....Horace Knight
Jimmy Meacham.....Thomas Carr
Pop Cummings.....Harry Fisher
Daddy Hood.....Frank Lalor
Mr. Jones.....George Fawcet
Mrs. Jones.....Ina Rorke
Hattie Jones.....Mildred Arden

Paul Gordon.....James Gleason
Flo Ziegfeld.....Bernard Randall

Story and Scenario by John Emerson and Anita Loos.

Length, 6,137 Feet.

The Story

The story centers upon the girl who decides to decamp from the old homestead and emulate her thousands of sisters-of-the-gingham-gown in seeking fame in the city. The difference is that Polly actually manages to see Flo Ziegfeld and obtains a tryout for the Follies. After that her experiences in trying to get famous are rather disappointing but an interesting romance starts and she is content to give up a career.

"A Stage Romance"

Dumas' Drama On Edmund Kean Rarely Fascinating—Marks William Farnum's Return—Made by Fox.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

The use of exceptionally plastic and picturesque material—the life of the great stage idol, Edmund Kean, as originally dramatized by Alexandre Dumas is the first reason for commending Fox for the production of this splendid picture. An inclusive chapter from Kean's life, showing his meteoric transition from circus boy to first actor of the day, with an intimate slant on his friendships and love affairs, it should and does have that keen interest always attached to unveiling the personal life of a public favorite.

With this promising foundation for success, the production is built with a beauty and style in keeping with the material and a charming story has been made into a charming picture. The director has read Dumas' creation with delightful appreciation and produced it with fine technique. An accomplished craftsman, too, is responsible for the continuity. It seems that his occasional insertions of obvious melodrama are not always needed to heighten the interest, as there is enough real drama and intrigue in the story, as it stands. For instance, the little crippled girl is perhaps overworked as a sympathy-getter whenever a bit of tension is required, but her personal appeal is so strong that it almost overshadows this fault. She is one of a family of fifteen children—all of whom are used in a christening scene that is a masterpiece from the standpoint of human interest. This offers also one of the rare comedy touches of the piece.

William Farnum could scarcely have made a more favorable return to the screen, after a year's absence, than he does in "A Stage Romance." This fact is one of the best box-office angles, and it should be emphasized that his admirers have a treat in store for them. He proves his ability, in a less physical role than usual, to make a strong human appeal, and in the mad scene in the theatre, his dramatic power is very fine. A tendency of his toward massive gesticulations and facial distortion detracts from some of the less intense scenes which he might have put over more quietly. The supporting cast is excellent.

The Cast

Kean ..... William Farnum
Anna Damby.....Peggy Shaw
Prince of Wales.....Holmes Herbert
Lord Melville.....Mario Carrillo
Count Koefeld.....Paul McAllister
Tom.....Cuyler C. Supples
Countess ..... Myrtle Bonilias
Amy, Countess of Goswill.....Paula Shay
Kitty, the Blonde.....Viva Verome

Mrs. Bob.....Florence Ashbrook
Little Emily.....Ruth D. Goodwin
Solomon ..... Etienne Gerardot

Adapted from the Drama, "Mad Man or Genius," by Alexandre Dumas.
Scenario by Paul H. Sloane.
Direction by Herbert Brenon.
Length, 6,416 Feet.

The Story

The life of Edmund Kean at the zenith of his stage career, at the time of his infatuation with the Countess of Goswill is the basis. The Countess' insincerity, the love of little Anna Danby for him and the big benefit performance which he gives for the crippled daughter of his old circus companion involve him in some highly dramatic situations.

The difficulty of appropriately casting Gareth Hughes has impeded the success of "I Can Explain," to some extent. Obviously, his limitations as a type, must be born in mind, but unless his performance is the nucleus of interest, the object of a keen psycho-analytical study as it was in his first big success, "Sentimental Tommy," it is apt not only to fall flat, but weaken the entire production. This is what happens in "I Can Explain." Cast as a weak character, constantly being unjustly blamed and always unable to defend himself, he has a part that is not unimportant, but at the same time not interesting enough in its bearing upon the story to be worthy of featuring.

The story is farcical in style and has some burlesque touches in playing up South American politics in a way that is not particularly new nor clever. The most pleasant feature of the production is the wealth of beautiful settings, suggestive of that country. The direction is exceptionally good throughout.

Length, 5 Reels.

The Story

Jimmy Berry, partner to Howard Dawson, is constantly accused of flirting with Dawson's wife, although he is merely bent on talking business with her. He is in love with Betty Carson, but Betty's father does not approve. Dawson takes him off to South America to get him away, but Mrs. Dawson gets on the same boat and Jimmy is further invoived. In South America Dawson is subjected to intrigue and imprisonment. He escapes only to be victimized again and further separated from his wife. Berry is unable to convince him of his loyalty until all have escaped and sailed back for America, where Berry marries Betty.

He Always Had a Reason—But the Woman's Husband Wouldn't Accept It—He Was Deported to South America—But the Lady Went Along, Too—He Tried to Explain to the Foreign Executives—But the Only Way He Could Do It Was to Leave the Country.

Exploitation Angles: Work this up from a teaser, taking a prominent space in the personal column or inch scatters, reading: "Betty, 'I Can Explain.' Won't you give me a chance?" Ring the change on "Dawson" and sign them all Jimmy. Then try and get a news story about the mystery the day before you break the news. Then sail in and sell Hughes on his past work and general popularity.

"The Song of Life"

Story of a Wife Who Rebelled Against Washing Dishes, Basis of First National Picture.

Reviewed by Mary Kelly.

A lack of organization is responsible for the more or less uncertain dramatic effect in "The Song of Life." There is pathos, tragedy and humor of the popular sort, but instead of co-operating in an effort to get a decided punch they are found in situations that are strewn rather than built. But while the most obvious fault is with the continuity, a closer analysis reveals that the basic material affords little chance for pointed drama, as it is a protracted, desultory treatise on the mistakes of life with a shining ray of hope only at the end.

The fact, however, that the public has shown a taste for sentimentality on the screen indicates that "The Song of Life" has something that marks it as an audience-picture. The human tendency to enjoy a depiction of suffering and the chance to sympathize with characters who show familiar weaknesses has been recognized here, and capitalized.

"Dirty Dishes" have been used throughout as a symbol of the drab existence which many wives endure—or refuse to endure, according to their taste for rebellion. With a melodramatic opening showing how a baby boy was deserted by his mother a few hours before his father was killed in a railway accident, the action jumps to the time when the lad is grown and married and brought unwittingly into association with hs mother, who saves his wife from makng the same sad mistake which she did. The slight comedy insertions seem rather forced, and the whole is much too long. The most sincere note is the performance of Gaston Glass as the son.

The Story

Mary Tilden, who deserted her young husband and baby boy meets the son later in life when he is grown and finds that his bitterness against his mother is so great that she keeps the truth of her identity from him. She learns that his wife, discontented with the drab duties of married life, just as she, herself, was many years before, is about to leave with another man. When the young husband learns of this, he shoots the other man, and Mary takes the blame, confessing at the same time that she is his mother. Both are saved from prison sentence by the news that the shot was not fatal, and the young wife has learned her lesson.

Program and Exploitation Catchlines:

"Life Was One Continual Round of Dirty Dishes," She Said, and Made This Her Excuse for Taking the Most Unhappy Step of Her Life—Years Later the Chance Came to Atone, and She Did It By Saving Another Woman from the Same Mistake.

Exploitation Angles: Sell this on the strike angle. Urge all women who despise dish washing to come to a mass meeting at your theatre, naming the opening date. Start this with teaser stuff early and let the idea sink in and build up interest. There are splendid chances for hook-ups here. Work them strongly.

PROJECTION

By F. H. RICHARDSON

A Pertinent Question

James O'Tool, Meridian, Mississippi, asks a very pertinent question, the answer to which I would recommend to the careful consideration of all projectionists.

Dear Mr. Richardson: I have three small theatres in small towns in this section of the state. The margin of profit in these houses is small. Sometimes it does not exist at all, though up to this time I have never yet had a week so bad but that they have not at least broken even. But this is so only because I take great pains in the selection of films, use every effort to project them in the best possible way, and so far as possible do repair work of all kinds myself.

I manage this way: I do the projecting, my wife sells tickets, fourteen-year-old son takes tickets (night shows only) and my daughter plays the piano and manages the Edison phonograph. The latter is of the latest type and is really a splendid addition to the show, if intelligently and carefully handled. We have it camouflaged with artificial palms and the effect is made the more realistic, where it can be done—as is the case with many records—by the daughter accompanying the record on the piano, playing very softly.

In this way, and by careful work we make a very comfortable living, showing two nights (no Sunday shows) in each town, making the rounds in our Rolls Royce a la Ford.

A Lot of Fun

And we get a whole lot of fun out of it, too, though the work is both hard and exacting. On Sunday, by special arrangement I select my two shows, which consist of a comic (usually alleged only), a scenic (if I can get one), a cartoon and a feature. On Monday I put the "show" in the best possible condition, which includes cleaning the films as thoroughly as possible.

On the same day the daughter attends to selecting the music and the wife to preparing such advertising as we do in local papers etcetra. Work, yes! But we are all happy, and make others happy by giving them what is, under all the conditions, perhaps a very much better show than is put on by many city theatres.

And now I come to the question I started writing to ask, the foregoing being just the natural "brag" I think most every man indulges in to some extent, or wants to anyhow, if he has something he has worked hard to perfect and of which he is proud.

As I said, in order to keep down expenses I must do my own repairing, so far as possible, and in order to give a really good show it is essential that the projectors be in first class condition and in perfect adjustment. This means that just as soon as an intermittent sprocket begins to show the least signs of undercut it must be replaced, and right here is my main trouble. Of course an intermittent sprocket MUST fit on its shaft very snugly, else it will wobble; also if it fits too tight and is forced on it is more than likely to be sprung out of true, and again the "wobble" is there.

A Source of Expense

This has been a source of great expense and annoyance, and some rather acrimonious discussion between supply dealers and myself. I simply refuse to receive and pay for an intermittent sprocket unless it fits exactly right, and I find that few sprockets do. My plan is when I need to replace a sprockets I have half a dozen sent, select the one which fits (if any there be) and send back the rest. But often not one of the six will be exactly right, which to me means that it may be put on the shaft by means of the fingers alone, but goes on tightly.

My question is: Do you know of any practical way of making a sprocket which is too tight loosen up without loosening too much? Have tried grinding them with flour of emory, but find it invariably makes the fit too loose. I shall thank you cordially for any information you may be able to give.

In closing let me say that your department and the Richardson Handbook are both a God-send to us small-town exhibitors and projectionists. I venture the assertion that when in future days the history of the present has become history, the name of Richardson will outshine most of those names which now shine very brightly.

An Interesting Letter

A most interesting letter indeed. I cannot remember a more really interesting one, taking everything into consideration, and this department gets corking good letters, too.

Let me thank you cordially for the expression of your appreciation of the work I have tried to do the best I knew how. As to future history, why I guess I'll be looking up at the roots then, and of course won't care anything at all about whether my name shines or does not shine. I, for instance, never was able to understand what earthly good it can possibly do anybody to be "honored" AFTER they are dead. My way is to honor them NOW, because after they are dead they are—dead, and that settles that!

But to get back to our subject. Yes, I can tell you how to make a tight intermittent sprocket fit, and fit right, too. I am, hence we are indebted to the Precision Machine Company, manufacturers of the Simplex projector, for this very practical bit of very important information.

First off, wipe the shaft perfectly clean of all foreign matter, then wet it with a GOOD oil. Now shove the sprocket on with a twisting movement. If it can be shoved into place by twisting and shoving with the fingers alone, then all is well. If it sticks, then remove, clean thoroughly, re-lubricate and try again.

You may, or may not have to do this several times, but if you persist you will eventually grind down any slight over-size of shaft, or under-size of sprocket hole, and will have a perfect fit.

Caution

Before shoving sprocket on be sure the edges of pin holes are clean—meaning that they are free of any slightly raised edge of metal, and that there is no dirt or foreign matter adhering to the shaft or hole; also that the oil you use is entirely free from dirt or grit. You are working with a close fit, remember, and a very slight thing may serve to cause the sprocket to stick.

There, Neighbor O'Tool, if you follow the instructions you will find your ghost well laid. Success to you. Your efforts are giving all those village folk an excellent form of amusement, and that is something sadly needed to help in making them satisfied with the small town and the country, instead of rushing off on a crazy, and usually futile, search for amusement among the bright lights of the city—a search which not only ends in regret, or very much worse, but is undermining the very foundation of our existence, which after all rests on the tiller of the soil.

A Question Box

Carlisle A. Anglemire, Nazareth, Pennsylvania, runs up the S.O.S. signal in the following letter:

Suppose you will think me a regular question box, but here goes anyhow: First, as to my equipment. I have two Power's Six B and two Powers Inductors. Current is 110 volt, 60 cycle A.C. My projection room is wired thus: The feeders are No. 6. The projection room main switch is 60 ampere capacity. From this switch the wires connect directly to each projector table switch, and thence to the Inductors. From this you will see I have both lamps connected to a sixty ampere switch. Naturally I blow more fuses than is necessary. Cannot burn both arcs at one time, hence cannot fade in at change-over.

What I want to know is how the room should be wired, and how many and what capacity switches should be used.

The picture seems to jump entirely too much and I am unable to locate the reason therefore. I clean the sprockets before every show; also have put new aperture plates on each projector, but still the picture jumps at every splice. Am now running film about eighteen months old, and every time a patch goes through the picture does a shimmy on the screen. Wrote the Powers Company about it and they said I should loosen the tension, but that did not help any. What is the trouble—and the remedy?

Am an Operator

I am operator at the local Y. M. C. A. We run two nights a week. Have been projecting pictures about three years. Am licensed by the state to run moving picture machines. Hope to be able to call myself a projectionist some day, but at present I am not one, by any manner of means. Have a Richardson handbook, which same I have found to be literally invaluable. Am looking forward to the time I shall have the Fourth Edition, which will be as soon as it is for sale. In conclusion I wish to you a happy and prosperous new year.

Same to You

Same to you, Friend Anglemier. You may not be a projectionist, but in acknowledging that you still have things to learn you advertise the fact that you are headed in the right direction. It is the I-know-it--all chap who never gets anywhere, or at least anywhere worth while.

As to the Power's Company telling you to loosen the tension, why unless you told them something you have not told me I don't quite see how they arrived at the conclusion that excessive tension is the seat of your trouble. If you will turn to page 463 of your Handbook, you will find, in General Instruction No. 9, which begins on that page, how to adjust your tension correctly. I believe the trouble is in the film, and not in the projector, though it is possible it is a combination of both. The aperture plate being worn would have no appreciable effect in causing such a fault.

When Show Is Off

When the show is off, and no audience present, put in a film which has given trouble through jumps at splices. Project it at usual speed, but have one hand on motor switch and the thumb of your other hand all ready to clamp down on the projector flywheel the instant there is a jump, brake the flywheel with your thumb, at the same time pulling the motor switch. Examine the patch carefully. See (a) if it is excessively wide and stiff. If so try and determine whither the jump came when the splice was at the aperture or on the intermittent sprocket. If the latter, then the seat of the trouble is self evident. The splice was too wide and stiff to bend around the sprocket properly. (b) If the splice was crooked or the sprocket holes badly matched, and again try to determine whether or no the jump came when the splice was at the aperture or at the intermittent sprocket.

If the latter, again the trouble analyzes itself. The sprocket holes do not fit the sprocket teeth properly, but are small, on one side at least, and the teeth clamp, or bind in them. Again the trouble is in the film and not in the projector.

Another important point is to carefully examine the intermittent sprocket teeth, using a condenser lens as a magnifier. See general instruction No. 8, page 462, of your Handbook, with regard to this.

Also pay particular attention and see if the narrow, properly made splices do or do not go through without causing trouble. Personally, as I said, I think the trouble is in the film, or maybe partly also in the worn condition of the teeth of your intermittent sprocket, though it is possible a stiff splice in the film might cause a jerk which would bring about a jump through or by reason of wear elsewhere in the mechanism, though hardly.

Will you please advise me as to what result you get from the test suggested. Remember, though that very wide or very stiff patches or crooked ones almost inevitably will cause movement of picture on the screen.

As to the wiring, why it depends on what amperage you use at the arc, but inasmuch as you presumably have sixty ampere maximum capacity inductors, I shall figure on that. All-right! Your sixty ampere arc will most likely be about 40 volts, hence the maximum wattage at the arc will be 60x40=2,400 plus the loss inherent in the inductor, which we are entirely safe in taking at a maximum of ten per cent. The total wattage consumed from the line will therefore be 2,400+240=2,640 watts, and since the primary amperage will be equal to the secondary wattage (including loss) divided by line voltage, we have 2,640÷110=24 amperes taken from the line, or 48 amperes if both arcs are burning. There, therefore, is no reason why you cannot burn both arcs at once, since your wires have sufficient capacity, as also have the switches, and the fuses if they are 60 ampere, as they probably are.

If you have a voltmeter you can verify this by actually measuring the voltage of your arc, which doubtless may not be just forty. Anyhow, whatever it is, just multiply it by the amperage you use at the arc, add 10 per cent. and divide the result by the line voltage. The final result will be the amperage taken from the line by that arc. I might remark that if you are blowing sixty ampere fuses, and those fuses are on the primary, something is wrong.

E. S. Porter Tells About Simplex's High Intensity Projection Lamp

AN announcement has been issued by Edwin S. Porter, president of the Precision Machine Company, regarding the development, designing and building of the new Simplex-Sun-Light arc high intensity projector lamp which is now ready for the market and which constitutes a welcome accessory to the modern projection room.

"Many people," says Mr. Porter, "are apparently under the impression that the high intensity arc is something which has been developed in the past year, but such is not the case. The high intensity arc has been in use for some seven years and played a most important part in the great war, for it was the Sperry Gyroscope Company, of Brooklyn, who having advanced so far in searchlight work were selected by the United States Government to equip the United States Navy with Sperry high intensity searchlights which played so important a part in our naval transport work in bringing troops and supplies to France.

Sperry to the Fore

"In actual warfare, wherever a searchlight was used by United States forces on land or sea, it was the Sperry high intensity searchlight that was used exclusively, thus making it the only American light of its kind used abroad which can be interpreted as a splendid tribute to the engineers of the Sperry Company.

"It might be of interest also, to know that the searchlight which is now nightly projecting a beam of light seven miles straight up into the heavens is a Sperry light which is now being tested out in Brooklyn, and receiving the close attention of lighting experts as well as military and naval men from every country in the world.

"The tremendous strides taken by the Sperry organization in high intensity work attracted the attention of J. Justice Harmer, president of the Sun-Light Arc Corporation, who so arranged matters that his company was granted exclusive rights to the Sperry high intensity lamp in the motion picture field. The Sun-Light Arc Corporation has undoubtedly revolutionized studio lighting through the installation of its Sun-Light arc units which produce in the studios practically the same lighting results as are obtained through the use of real sunlight in exterior work.

Of Interest to Exhibitors

"And now we come to the period which interests the projector users. Immediately following the war, a lamp of original design for projector use was developed by the Sperry Company, whose experience, facilities and data provided them with everything that was needed to produce an ideal motion picture arc lamp.

"Together with the engineers of the Sun-Light organization they worked along altogether different lines than had been followed by others. The idea that was always before them was to produce a lamp that could be used on varying amperage and that would be readily adjustable as is the present type of carbon arc lamp and yet strong and rugged enough to withstand high amperage.

"Fourteen months before any other theatre had installed any kind of high intensity lamp one of the new Sperry Sun-Light lamps was quietly placed in the New York Capitol Theatre projection room where its work was carefully checked up, and this lamp was soon followed by three of similar design. So well did they do their work that Samuel Rothafel, the manager of the Capitol, wrote a strong letter of endorsement after having used these lamps for a year and watching them function.

Announcement Deferred

"Yet no announcement had been made of this marvelous lamp, although hundreds of men interested in projection had visited the Capitol projection room, and after watching the results invariably requested details as to when this type of lamp could be had for the general market. At this time, no commercial lamp had yet been announced that would operate on anything but a certain fixed amperage.

"Meanwhile the Precision Machine Company had become interested in the Sun-Light arc high intensity lamp (which name was given the Sperry lamp when Mr. Harmer's organization procured the motion picture rights to it). Having, through experience in projector building, a most comprehensive knowledge of modern projection room requirements, I incorporated some Simplex ideas into the lamp which is today known as the Simplex Sun-Light arc high intensity lamp, and which, according to all who have seen it work, can well be declared an achievement in projector lighting.

Weaknesses Eliminated

"This lamp, I claim, has completely eliminated all weaknesses. Its construction is extremely rugged, all contact units being of such type and design that tend to greatly strengthen their efficiency, as well as promote long service. A striking and unusual feature lies in the fact that it can be used on any amperage between seventy and one hundred and twenty.

"Another departure is noted in the fact that instead of being operated in a fixed position the Simplex-Sun-Light arc is equipped with every adjustment handle that is found on the ordinary carbon arc lamp, which permits for the focusing, centering and adjusting of the light.

"The 'positive head,' which is the technical term for the unit which holds the positive carbon, is readily removable and fastened in a manner which permits of quickly exchanging this head. The contact through which the current enters the positive carbon is a distinctive feature inasmuch as it is operated by a finger clamp which easily lifts up, yet it is so constructed and located that it sets into its seat in a floating position to compensate for any irregularity in the carbon and at the same time affords a perfectly tight contact.

"All springs used in the lamp are far removed from the heat sources, while the motor which operates the lamps is outside of the lamphouse.

Types A and C

"In the type 'A' lamp, the regular Simplex motor which drives the projector is used in conjunction with the new Simplex arc control, while in the type 'C' lamps the motor is located on the outside of the rear end of the lamphouse. The many advantages obtained through having the motor away from the inside of the lamphouse can be readily recognized.

"The feeding mechanism of both types of lamp is a revelation to all who have followed high intensity lighting, for these units are of such positive but simple construction that they eliminate complication of mechanism and absolutely undivided attention while running.

"The Simplex-Sun-Light arc projection lamp has already been installed in many of the Loew Theatres (this circuit having adapted this type of lamp exclusively) and already almost one hundred of these lamps are operated in and around New York City with most satisfactory results. Both Mr. Harmer and myself are agreed that we did well to wait until we had a 100 per cent. unit to offer to the industry before placing the reputations of our respective organizations behind our lamp."

It Can't Be Done Successfully Today Without Some Practical Experience

WE are in receipt of the following communication from a gentleman, who, at present, is successfully conducting a meat market:

Moving Picture World:

As I am intending to remodel a building I purchased lately for a moving picture house, I would like your advice as to how to operate.

The building will be forty-four by ninety feet, with a nice front and lobby.

I have been in business for a long time, but the picture business is new to me.

Will you please write and tell me all about how to rent the films.

I overheard a salesman trying to rent or book a picture to an operator of a moving picture house and it sounded like they were trading horses or mules. Is it the only way to bargain for a film?

The best advice that we can give you is about the same kind of an advice that you would give to a motion picture exhibitor who wanted to quit his own game and become a butcher, to learn as much as you possibly can of the new business before starting out for yourself.

It requires just as much knowledge, experience and ability to run a picture house as it does to run a meat market, and the experience must be gained at first hand.

If you had started out to run a meat market, knowing as little about it as you do about the picture business at present, you would never have been able to accumulate the building which you are now remodeling for a picture house.

Get a job as an usher, a ticket seller or a handy man around a picture house and keep your eyes and ears wide open and watch how everything is done and try and find out why. At the same time, provide yourself with a copy of Richardson's Handbook, Hallberg's Picture Theatre Electricity and Sargent's Picture Theatre Advertising, and study them while you are getting practical experience in the theatre.

Pay the Projectionist

If possible, get some projectionist to let you act as his assistant and pay the projectionist to teach you everything that he knows. Not that you will project your own pictures, but the more you know about practical projection, the better show your house will put on.

Your observations regarding the methods by which films are sometimes booked are, unfortunately, true, but after you have induced your boss to trust you with this part of the business, you will probably discover the reason for this condition of affairs.

The best thing for you to do with the new building would be to rent it to someone as a picture show, while you are learning the business.

Would Head for a Loss

From the fact that the MOVING PICTURE WORLD already has three subscribers in your town, we know that you will be up against competition and you would be simply riding for a fall if you should open up a show on your own hook in your present state of inexperience.

After comparing the price per pound which we are paying our own butcher for meat with the price of admission to some mighty good shows, we don't know but that the best advice which we could give you would be to keep right on selling meat instead of admissions. However, if you are determined to go forward, MOVING PICTURE WORLD will help you as it helps all exhibitors, great and small, to the best of its ability.

Algase Adding New Houses to His Chain

A. A. Algase, president of Pacific Coast Theatres, and vice president of the North West Theatres Company, of Seattle, operating a chain of moving picture theatres in the Northwest and North Central Washington, will open his new thousand seat "Rialto Theatre" at Wenatchee, Washington, exclusively for pictures, on March 1.

The Rialto building is a reinforced concrete and brick structure and absolutely fireproof. A $19,000 Wurlitzer organ is used. The cost of building and furnishings represent over one hundred thousand dollars.

A. A. Algase, who has been a moving picture exhibitor and builder for seven years, contemplates building two more new houses this year, one in Vancouver, Wash., and one in Astoria, Ore. Work on these will commence May 1, 1922.

The Rialto Theatre, of Wenatchee, will be under the management of F. E. Wesp, who has been associated with A. A. Algase Theatres for several years.

A good summer business doesn't just happen

You've got to go after it.

And you need something more than good pictures, too.

You've got to have comfort — cool, restful, satisfying COMFORT.

And cool comfort don't jesust happen. It takes a Monsoon Cooling System to give it to you RIGHT — silently, efficiently, and as long as your theatre stands.

Monsoon Cooling System proves in hundreds of theatres every summer that it quickly pays for itself.

Here's how one exhibitor got it.

Canandaigua Playhouse Will Open on March 3

William J. McFarlane, mayor of Canandaigua, will open the Playhouse in that western New York city on Friday, March 3. He has invited all exhibitors and exchangemen in the territory to be present.

A celebration party will follow the opening performance. The Playhouse will have a seating capacity of 1,200 and cost $100,000. An $18,000 organ is one of the features of the theatre.

The Canandaigua Theatres Corporation will operate the house. The policy will be pictures and vaudeville.

Bridgman's New Theatre Boasts Two Simplexes

The new Bridgman Theatre, Bridgman, Mich., built by F. W. Gart and O. A. D. Baldwin, of Bridgman, was formally opened on January 20. The house seats 300, is forty feet wide by one hundred feet long, and cost $40,000.

The projection room equipment, which was installed by the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company, of Detroit, Michigan, exclusive distributors for the Simplex products in Michigan, consists of two Type "S" motor driven Simplex projectors equipped with Snaplite lenses. R. O. Bassett is the projectionist.

Bradford House Leased

Craniedas & Company of Brooklyn, who are interested in the control of the Haven Theatre in Olean, N. Y., will take over the lease of the Bradford Theatre in Bradford, Pa., on May 1. Lease of the house was obtained from Charles Samuels of Jamestown and Mose Reis of New York, owners. The theatre will be redecorated by the new operators.

Monsoon Moves

In order to render more efficient service to the exhibitor, the Monsoon Cooling System, Inc., has removed its offices from 1476 Broadway, New York City, to quarters in its factory building, 71 North Sixth street, Brooklyn.

The consolidation of office and factory will make for even better service all along the line and expedite orders considerably.

The office telephone number in future will be Greenpoint 6331.

One for Orchard Park

Cola W. Lyon of Orchard Park and Douglas Morris of Buffalo have organized the Orchard Park Amusement Company, to conduct a motion picture theatre and community recreation center in Orchard Park, N. Y. The plans call for a $25,000 building, with an auditorium seating 500.

New Park to Open

The New Park Theatre will open in Hammondsport, N. Y., about April 1. The Park at present has quarters in the town hall. Its new location will be in the Wood block, which is now undergoing alterations.

VOLUME LIV JANUARY—FEBRUARY, 1922

Index to Reviews and Consensus on the Photoplays

Appended is a list of subjects announced or released during the two months ending February 28, 1922, and upon the majority of which have been published reviews and consensus of published reviews. This list is as accurate as it is possible to make it with the information received from the companies whose productions are included. Should any of our readers detect errors we shall be pleased to have our attention called to them so that we may correct our card-index. The letter before the folio indicates the page where the review or consensus can be found. "R" stands for Reviews, which also include Advertising Aids; "C" for Consensus of Reviews published in the Trade Papers. Where reference letter is omitted it signifies that none was published. Of the later releases where letters are omitted the missing information will probably be published in the next volume.

N. B.—Reviews of episodes of serials or series are indexed in connection with general title of such serial or series and not under title of each episode. Date shown for Pathe subjects indicates the week during which they were released. Unless otherwise specified all subjects listed are five-reel dramas.

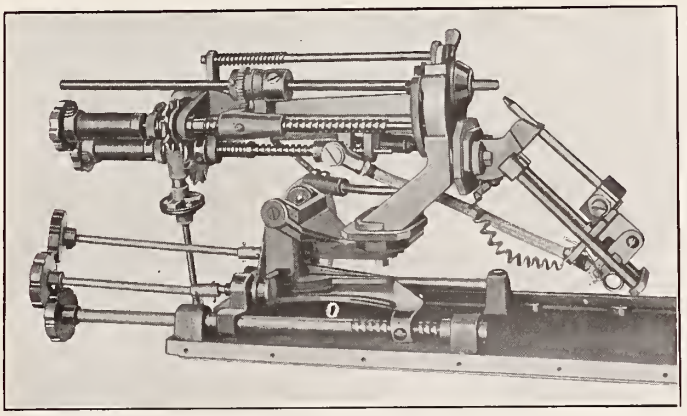
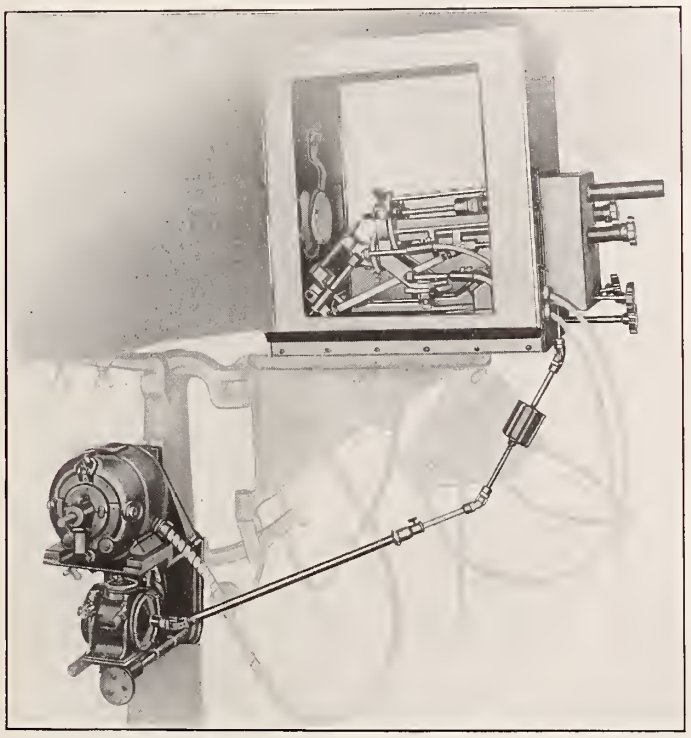
HERE IT IS!



Simplex Sun-Light Arc
High Intensity Projector Lamp



Showing Simplex Sun-Light Arc High Intensity Projector Lamp with Simplex Mechanical Arc Feed

THE
HIGH INTENSITY PROJECTION
ARC LAMP DIFFERENT AND BETTER than any other because

IT functions perfectly on any amperage from 70 to 120.

IT has every adjustment that the regular carbon arc lamp uses.

IT has no motor inside of lamp house.

IT is built to withstand heat and for long service.

IT is marketed only after the most rigid tests extending over a period of years.

100 SIMPLEX-SUN-LIGHT ARC LAMPS ARE NOW OPERATING IN AND ROUND NEW YORK CITY.

BUILT AND DEVELOPED JOINTLY BY THE PRECISION MACHINE CO. AND SUN-LIGHT ARC CORP.

THIS IS THE LAMP WHICH MADE THE CAPITOL THEATRE, N. Y. C., SCREEN LIGHTING THE TALK OF THE INDUSTRY.

REMEMBER

The superiority of this lamp is backed up by the reputation of its builders only after several years of strict and severe tests.
